[b] (Ala. 1845) Where one partner had been introduced as a witness to support a deed of assignment conveying the partnership property, and had sworn that the deed was fairly made and for the payment of the partnership debts, he may be asked, on the cross-examination, whether one of the debts provided for in the deed was not a debt created by himself for the purpose of raising money to put into the partnership.—Peake v. Stout, 8 Ala. 647.

[c] (Ala. 1887) In an action for the price paid for a mare sold to plaintiff as sound, and alleged to be unsound, it is admissible to ask plaintiff on cross-examination what work the mare had done while in his hands, and it is not error to permit him to answer the question, "Did you treat the mare well or ill?" subject to having the details of the treatment called out on cross-examination.—Whitworth v. Thomas, 83 Ala. 308, 3 South. 781, 3 Am. St. Rep. 725.

[cc] (Cal. 1859) Very great range should be allowed to cross-examination, and much left to the discretion of counsel.—Jackson v. Feather River & G. Water Co., 14 Cal. 18.

[d] (Colo. 1890) The admission by defendant, on cross-examination, of the existence of prejudice against plaintiff, does not preclude an inquiry into the extent of such ill feeling.—Stewart v. Kindel, 15 Colo. 539, 25 Pac. 990.

[dd] (Conn. 1893) In an action for the price of glass bulbs for incandescent lamps supplied to manufacturers of such lamps, defendants alleged that most of the bulbs supplied after a certain date were defective, and that by reason thereof their business and reputation had been damaged. Plaintiff denied the defect, and alleged that, if defendants' business had fallen off, it was due to other causes, partly to an infringement suit begun by Edison against defendants. Defendants' manager testified to the loss of business, and, on cross-examination, that no injunction had issued against them. Held, that he could be asked whether suit had been begun and an injunction applied for.—Thill v. Perkins Electric Lamp Co., 63 Conn. 478, 29 Atl. 13.

[e] (Fla. 1895) A witness cannot be cross-examined on evidence that has been stricken out.—Jones v. State, 35 Fla. 289, 17 South. 284.

[ee] (Ill. 1892) It is proper to cross-examine a witness as to his antecedents, but undue prolixity will be prevented.—Toledo, St. L. & K. C. R. Co. v. Bailey, 43 Ill. App. 292.

[f] (Ind. 1878) A witness for the contestants of a will, who has testified in chief, without objection, that testator's sister, who was without means and for whom testator made no provision, had removed to another state to live with her brother at his request, may be asked on cross-examination whether the brother is not regarded as a very wealthy man.—Coryell v. Stone, 62 Ind. 307.

[ff] (Ind. 1891) In an action for personal injuries caused by plaintiff, a customer in defendant's store, falling through a trapdoor in front of the counter, where defendants have attempted to prove by a witness that it would be impracticable to put a railing around the trapdoor, it is proper to ask the witness on cross-examination whether the trapdoor could not have been placed back of the counter.—Brosnan v. Sweetser, 127 Ind. 1, 26 N. E. 555.

[g] (Ind. 1893) There is no impropriety in an inquiry on cross-examination as to whether the witness understood the meaning of a question put to her on her examination in chief.—Pence v. Waugh, 135 Ind. 148, 34 N. E. 860.

[gg] (Iowa, 1859) Where, on the trial of a party charged with stealing a horse, a witness states that he is possessed of the signs and tokens by which horse thieves are known and recognized by each other, it is not error for the court to refuse to compel the witness to disclose the said signs and tokens.—State v. Wilson, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 407.

[h] (Iowa, 1888) In an action for personal injuries caused by the backing of defendant's train in response to a signal from an unknown person, the conductor having testified that while standing on the depot platform he heard the bell ring, and it caused him to turn and face the engine, it is error to permit him to state, on cross-examination by plaintiff, that the ringing of the bell surprised him, and that he was not expecting it; such evidence having a tendency to show that the act was unusual and surprising, and therefore tending to show negligence.—Gadbois v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 75 Iowa, 530, 39 N. W. 871.

[hh] (Iowa, 1889) Plaintiff was a laborer employed by the defendant corporation in its stone quarries, and was injured by a defective appliance connected with a tramcar on which he attempted to ride down an incline. Held that, on cross-examination of plaintiff, it was error to exclude inquiry as to whether he did not know and had not been advised of the danger of riding on the car.—Wilson v. Dunreath Red Stone Quarry Co., 77 Iowa, 429, 42 N. W. 360, 14 Am. St. Rep. 304.

[i] (Iowa, 1890) It was error to allow plaintiff, on cross-examination, to be asked whether she were willing that physicians who had treated her for 15 years before the injury should disclose her communications to them as to her condition of health.—McConnell v. City of Osage, 80 Iowa, 293, 45 N. W. 550, 8 L. R. A. 778.

[ii] (Iowa, 1891) A witness testified to plaintiff's possession, about two years before, of four watches; that she had disposed of two and retained two, one of which was lost from the trunk. On the cross-examination the witness was asked to state the difference between the watch lost and the other watches. Held, that an objection to the question was properly sustained.—Davis v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 49 N. W. 77, 83 Iowa, 744.

[jj] (La. 1841) A witness, once admitted, may be cross-examined and give evidence in favor of, as well as against, his interest on the points to which he is called to testify.—Hart v. New Orleans & C. R. Co., 1 Rob. 178, 36 Am. Dec. 689.

[k] (Me. 1878) Where a witness for the plaintiff in a libel suit has testified as to threats made by the defendant in his presence, it is competent to ask him on cross-examination whether he really thought that the defendant intended to execute such threats.—Stacy v. Portland Pub. Co., 68 Me. 279.

[l] (Mass. 1882) In suit against a city for injuries received by falling over a gas pipe which projected above the sidewalk, a witness for defendant, who was present at the time of the accident and made a measurement of the pipe, testified that he had been in the employ of a gas company for several years, and that he had charge of this particular pipe. Held, that defendant had no ground of exception to the admission of a question, on cross-examination, as to what became of the pipe; the judge ruling that plaintiff was only entitled to the evidence to show what had become of the pipe, and to explain his failure to produce more accurate measurements of its height above the ground.—Donnelly v. City of Fall River, 132 Mass. 299.

[ll] (Mass. 1896) On a trial for robbery, a witness who, in testifying as to an alibi, has stated that he thought of defendant when his attention was called to the robbery, the day after it occurred, may be asked on cross-examination whether he then associated defendant with the robbery.—Commonwealth v. Flynn, 165 Mass. 153, 42 N. E. 562.

[m] (Mich. 1868) In an action against a railroad company for an injury, a witness for the plaintiff, on cross-examination, testified that he had made a written statement about the accident. He was then asked, "Would you recognize a copy of the statement, if it was read over to you?" Held, that the question was not proper cross-examination.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99.

[mm] (Mich. 1868) Where, in an action against a railroad company for an injury caused by an engine, a witness testified to seeing the accident from a point near the platform of the station, it was proper, on cross-examination, to ask him what obstructions were there to prevent seeing the train from the point where the injured party crossed the track, as well as from the platform, since a witness may be cross-examined as to any facts having a tendency to affect or qualify the evidence he has given in chief, whether or not it points to the same circumstances about which he has testified.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99.

[n] (Mich. 1885) A witness, who has testified that he thought the man he saw at a certain place was defendant, may be asked on cross-examination if there is any doubt existing in his mind that the man seen was defendant.—People v. Wallin, 55 Mich. 497, 22 N. W. 15.

[nn] (Mich. 1888) In an action for slander, where plaintiff has testified that there had been divorce proceedings between himself and his wife, defendant's daughter, and that defendant was hostile towards him on that account, it is proper to ask him, on cross-examination, if he had not been compelled to pay $500 for the support of the child of such marriage, and if he had not threatened to get it back.—Hitchcock v. Moore, 70 Mich. 112, 37 N. W. 914, 14 Am. St. Rep. 474.

[o] (Mich. 1891) Where a witness for plaintiff testified that there had been no payments or credits on the mortgage in suit, it was proper for defendant to ask him on cross-examination what he knew, if anything, about a former suit for the same debt.—Hamilton Provident & Loan Soc. v. Northwood, 86 Mich. 315, 49 N. W. 37.

[oo] (Mich. 1891) In an action against two persons for money alleged to have been loaned them as partners, it being a theory of the purchasing partner that, when he and the retiring partner went into business, the latter had no money, and that a portion of the money sued for was borrowed by him to pay the money borrowed by him with which to go into business, and he having been sworn on behalf of plaintiff, and there being nothing in the books to show for what it was used, and no testimony that any of it was used for the benefit of the firm, it was proper to allow the purchasing partner a liberal cross-examination of the witness and to ask him if he did not know at the time he went into business that he had no money for that purpose.—Coller v. Porter, 88 Mich. 549, 50 N. W. 658.

[p] (Mich. 1895) In an action for the death of a railroad employé while performing work outside his employment, under the alleged orders of defendant's roadmaster, the latter may be asked on cross-examination whether he directed deceased to do the work.—Walker v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 104 Mich. 606, 62 N. W. 1032.

[pp] (Mich. 1895) Defendant, in an action for lumber sold, involving the issue whether plaintiff and K. were partners, died pending an appeal from the justice to the circuit court. At the trial in the latter court, the justice (a witness for plaintiff) testified that deceased testified before him that he knew that the lumber belonged to plaintiff, and that he had made plaintiff payments on it. Held, that on cross-examination it was proper to allow the witness to state that deceased testified that he had paid the entire bill for building the house, that he let the entire job—work and materials—to K., and supposed plaintiff was in partnership with him.—Reiser v. Portere, 106 Mich. 102, 63 N. W. 1041.

[q] (Minn. 1896) It is error to refuse to permit a witness to be cross-examined on a material point.—Lynch v. Free, 64 Minn. 277, 66 N. W. 973.

[qq] (Miss. 1888) In an action for ejection from a train, defendant contended that plaintiff did not produce his ticket within a reasonable time when requested, that he had sold his ticket to another, and that he refused to pay his fare. Plaintiff testified that he had not sold or given away his ticket on the train, and that he had it after he left the train. Held, that plaintiff was properly asked, on cross-examination, what became of his ticket.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Maybin, 66 Miss. 83, 5 South. 401.

[r] (N. H. 1858) Where, in assumpsit on a warranty for an alleged unsoundness of a horse sold, plaintiff's witness has testified, on direct examination, that he heard the horse cough, and asked defendant if he had not got the heaves, or a heave cough, it is competent for defendant to ask the witness whether he ever saw anything about the horse that indicated the heaves.—Spear v. Richardson, 37 N. H. 23.

[rr] (N. Y. 1864) A witness cannot be required to put a question to a person in court to elicit information; e. g., as to the full name of a person of which she professes to be ignorant.—Wehrkamp v. Willet, 4 Abb. Dec. 548.

[s] (N. Y. 1889) It having been suggested that the property was stolen, it was proper, on cross-examination of the person who had charge of it, to ask him if any effort had been made to trace out the theft.—Williamson v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. (24 Jones & S.) 508, 4 N. Y. Supp. 834.

[ss] (N. Y. 1889) In an action to recover for legal services rendered to defendant's testator, plaintiff offered no evidence of his cause of action, claiming that it stood admitted by the pleadings. Defendants set up a note as a counterclaim, and produced a witness to prove its consideration. Held, that the court properly refused to permit plaintiff to ask the witness on cross-examination if he knew who was testator's legal adviser; plaintiff having neither announced an intention to abandon his position nor stated how the answer to the question would tend to show that he had rendered the services sued for.—Moissen v. Kloster, 114 N. Y. 638, 21 N. E. 1050.

[t] (N. Y. 1891) In an action for personal injuries caused by a defective highway, defendant set up in defense want of funds in the hands of the commissioners for repairs, and a commissioner called by defendant testified on the subject of such funds. Held not error to permit on cross-examination, the question: "Did the board, in the spring of 1889, call for the appropriation money to be voted at town-meeting?"—Clapper v. Town of Waterford, 62 Hun, 170, 16 N. Y. Supp. 640, judgment reversed (1892) 131 N. Y. 382, 30 N. E. 240.

[tt] (N. Y. 1892) Defendant's foreman having merely stated that it was his "understanding" that he was told to use the "elevators," rather than one only, it was permissible to ask him on cross-examination if he did not understand the direction to refer to the freight elevator.—Ferris v. Aldrich, 64 Hun, 639, 19 N. Y. Supp. 353.

[u] (Or. 1886) In a criminal prosecution, it was proper to ask a witness on cross-examination: "Have you, since the murder of that man, participated in a meeting of the Masonic lodge, in which his murder was discussed, and at which time you laid the plans and discussed the means by which you could secure the accused's conviction? And did you not at the same meeting threaten with vengeance any man who was a member of that body who would assist in any way the accused to establish his innocence?" Such questions had a direct tendency to show the witness' feeling, and on a cross-examination in a capital case great latitude must be allowed.—State v. Mah Jim, 13 Or. 235, 10 Pac. 306.

[uu] (Pa. 1869) Every proper question calculated to show the bias of a witness, or his capacity or intelligence, or the want of it, is admissible.—Yeager v. Weaver, 1 Leg. Gaz. 156.

[vv] (Pa. 1891) In an action against an insurance company to recover the amount of a loss by fire, the question was as to whether a contract of insurance had been renewed; and it appeared that, after the fire, an agent of defendant received from plaintiff a check for the premium, which he retained for two weeks without objection. Held that, the agent having testified that there was no agreement of insurance, it was not exceeding the limits of proper cross-examination to ask him whether he would not have insisted upon the payment of the check if no fire had occurred.—Long v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co., 137 Pa. 335, 20 Atl. 1014, 21 Am. St. Rep. 879.

[w] (Tex. 1887) In an action between persons claiming under different attachments, where appellee has alleged that plaintiffs in the writ under which appellants claim had notice of the prior levy, and appellants have called the attorney for such plaintiffs, who testifies that he wrote the levy and return on the prior writ, and that at that time the return only described a "storehouse and lots," whereas now the numbers of the lots had been interlined, he may testify on cross-examination that he knew at the time the property intended to be seized, and its proper description.—Riordan v. Britton, 69 Tex. 198, 7 S. W. 50, 5 Am. St. Rep. 37.

[ww] (Tex. 1888) In an action on a note given for sheep, which defendant claimed were infected, he testified that a large number of them had died. Held proper to ask him, on cross-examination, how many of the sheep he had sold to a third person.—Labbe v. Corbett (Sup.) 6 S. W. 812.

[x] (Tex. 1896) Where the prosecuting witness was permitted to testify that he thought defendant shot him because of his having been a witness in a certain case, it was error to refuse to permit defendant to cross-examine the witness as to whether defendant was a party to or connected with such case.—Plew v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 366.

[xx] (Vt. 1868) In an action against a railroad company, where the condition of its track at the time of an accident was in issue, defendant, to contradict the testimony of plaintiff's witness as to its condition both before and after the accident, introduced a witness who could testify only as to its condition after the accident. Held, that it was competent for plaintiff to show, upon the cross-examination of one of defendant's witnesses, that a section foreman of defendant, within knowledge and reach, was with plaintiff's witness on both occasions when he saw the track, and to argue, from defendant's neglect to call him, that the testimony was true.—Beattie v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 41 Vt. 275.

[y] (Vt. 1888) Where defendant's bail in behalf of defendant has testified that, when he bailed him, he advised defendant to go away to escape a civil suit, and that he then believed he would come back, there is no error in allowing the inquiry, on cross-examination, as to what he thought about defendant's coming back after he had got a bench warrant for him, though its materiality is not apparent.—State v. Flint, 60 Vt. 304, 14 Atl. 178.

[z] (Vt. 1894) Where plaintiffs claimed a certain line as the boundary between their land and that of defendant, plaintiffs may bring out, by cross-examination of defendant, in order to show that they had made claim of title up to such line, that defendant knew that they so claimed, though plaintiffs had previously put in testimony on the same point.—Swerdferger v. Hopkins, 67 Vt. 136, 31 Atl. 153.

[zz] (Wis. 1878) In a suit by heirs to avoid irregular executors' sales of their ancestor's lands, it is proper to exclude the testimony on cross-examination of one of the heirs, who executed a release and quitclaim of the property sold, as to what he would have done at the time of the release if he had supposed that the sale could be avoided.—O'Dell v. Rogers, 44 Wis. 136.

Value of property, see post, § 945.

[a] (Ala. 1884) On a trial for murder, one who was present at the killing, and who has testified that he did not hear a certain remark made by deceased as he rode up to the place where defendants were, may be asked on cross-examination, "Were you in a position where you could have heard?"—Tenney v. State, 77 Ala. 33.

[b] (Ala. 1888) A witness having stated on re-examination that a hog killed and cleaned at the house of the alleged thief was the stolen hog, was properly asked, on cross-examination, as to how he knew it was the stolen hog.—Tate v. State, 86 Ala. 33, 5 South. 575.

[c] (Cal. 1889) By Code Civ. Proc. § 2048, a witness may be asked, on cross-examination, as to any matter bearing directly or indirectly on any portion of his testimony in chief. In an action involving the right to water between upper and lower riparian owners, a witness for plaintiff testified, concerning the stream in controversy, that he knew where it crossed a certain lane. Held, that he might be asked if it was not from the fact that the creek did cross at that point, and washed sand on plaintiff's land, that the controversy between him and defendants arose, as the question tends as well to test the witness' knowledge as to the facts stated by him on direct examination, as also his credibility.—Sharp v. Hoffman, 79 Cal. 404, 21 Pac. 846.

[d] (Ind. 1885) It is competent for the cross-examining counsel to ask a medical witness what method he pursued in making an examination of an injured person, and also to ask questions for the purpose of testing the knowledge and skill of the witness.—Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Falvey, 104 Ind. 409, 3 N. E. 389, 4 N. E. 908.

[e] (Ind. 1892) Plaintiff and defendant were partners. Plaintiff sold his interest in their business to defendaut. In an action for the balance due on such sale defendant alleged that plaintiff, whose business it was to state an account, omitted in such statement an indebtedness of the firm. In the deposition of plaintiff it was asked him on cross-examination how he ascertained the indebtedness of the firm, and he answered that it was ascertained from the firm books. Held, that such question was not within the bounds of legitimate cross-examination.—Christie v. Henley, 5 Ind. App. 59, 31 N. E. 579.

[f] (Mich. 1894) In an action of trespass for having unlawful carnal knowledge of plaintiff (defendant's servant) without her consent, where defendant's wife testified that plaintiff, while a member of the family, had morning sickness, it was competent to ask her, as affecting her credibility, at what stage of pregnancy morning sickness occurred.—Hart v. Walker, 100 Mich. 406, 59 N. W. 174.

[g] (N. Y. 1893) In an action for defendant's refusal to accept the bust of a person which he ordered, on the ground that it is not a good likeness, where a witness has testified that it is a good likeness, it is proper, on cross-examination, for the purpose of testing his knowledge, to hand him a picture, and ask him if it is a picture of such person.—Schwartz v. Wood, 67 Hun, 648, 21 N. Y. Supp. 1053.

[h] (Vt. 1888) A witness having testified that he heard a team pass a house where he was stopping on the night of the previous attempt to fire the building, and the evidence having showed that the team passed when he was with a certain other person, it was competent to ask witness, to test his accuracy, whether this was the only night on which he heard a team pass.—State v. Ward, 61 Vt. 153, 17 Atl. 483.

Cross-examination of party, see post, § 968 [c, d].
Drawing out whole of transaction or conversation on redirect examination, see post, § 1002.
Right to show whole statement in order to sustain witness or rebut evidence of inconsistent statements, see post, § 1263.

[a] Where, on direct examination, a portion of a conversation is drawn out, the other party, on cross-examination, is entitled to have the whole conversation detailed.
—(Cal. 1866) People v. Strong, 30 Cal. 151;
(Ga. 1881) Betts v. State, 66 Ga. 508;
(Ind. 1872) Metzer v. State, 39 Ind. 596;
(Iowa, 1859) Gaddis v. Lord, 10 Iowa, 141;
(Neb. 1888) Campbell v. Holland, 22 Neb. 587, 35 N. W. 871.

[b] (U. S. 1892) In an action on a life policy excluding from the risks assumed the death of assured by his own hand, sane or insane, where the defense was suicide, defendant's secretary, as a witness for defendant, testified that he understood from plaintiff's agent, when the proofs of loss were submitted, that deceased met his death by inflicting a pistol shot, and was asked on cross-examination if he had not stated at such time that, if it depended upon him, the loss should be paid without delay. Held, that the question was relevant, as calling for a portion of the conversation, part of which the witness had given.—Home Ben. Ass'n v. Sargent, 142 U. S. 691, 12 Sup. Ct. 332, 35 L. Ed. 1160, affirming Sargent v. Home Ben. Ass'n (C. C. 1888) 35 Fed. 771.

[c] (Ala. 1851) Where part of a transaction has been elicited from a witness on the direct examination, the opposite party has the right, on the cross-examination, to inquire into all the facts and circumstances connected with it, although they might not be admissible as independent testimony.—Lanier v. Branch Bank at Montgomery, 18 Ala. 625.

[d] (Fla. 1891) In a prosecution for trespass for destroying plaintiff's ginhouse, plaintiff claimed that defendant hired a third person to burn the gin. Defendant, on cross-examination of a witness, asked him whether such third person owed him anything, and whether he had not told such third person that, if he would pay him a certain sum and burn the gin, the witness would give him a certain sum. Such witness was examined in chief as to conversations between him and such third person in reference to the burning of the gin, and with reference to what defendant had said to such third person regarding the same. Held, that such cross-examination was proper, as the defendant was entitled to a full exposure of the entire conversations relating to the subject.—Williams v. Dickenson, 28 Fla. 90, 9 South. 847.

[e] (Ga. 1879) Where a witness, who was an administrator, testifies to some facts touching his administration, he may, on cross-examination, be fully questioned in regard thereto.—Barker v. Blount, 63 Ga. 423.

[f] (Ind. 1877) One who has testified on his direct examination to testimony given by a witness on a former trial may be asked, on cross-examination, to state the whole of such testimony; and the court should not require the cross-examining counsel to state what he expects to prove by this question.—Harness v. State, 57 Ind. 1.

[g] (Ind. 1883) A witness, testifying that another witness had on another trial testified to certain facts, may be cross-examined as to what other facts the witness testified to on the former trial.—Carey v. Richmond, 92 Ind. 259.

[h] (Mich. 1862) The object of cross-examination is to elicit the whole truth of transactions supposed to have been partially explained; and any question tending to fill up designed or accidental omissions of the witness are proper.—Chandler v. Allison, 10 Mich. 460.

[j] (Mich. 1868) When a party places a witness on the stand to testify to facts which tend to support his side of the issue, and questions him concerning such facts, it is the right of the opposite party, on cross-examination, to go as fully into the subject as may be necessary to draw from the witness all he may know about the transaction concerning which he has testified, and to put before the jury any pertinent facts which will have a tendency to controvert the testimony which has been given by the witness in favor of the party calling him.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99.

[k] (Mich. 1875) In an action against a railway company for negligently transporting hay, whereby it became wet and damaged, in which evidence of its condition at a distant port, from which it was shipped by vessel to the place of delivery to defendant, is admitted as evidence of its condition at the port of delivery, it is proper, on cross-examination, to inquire into the mode of transhipment, the manner of its storage, the weather, and the condition of the hay upon its arrival.—Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Langton, 32 Mich. 251.

[l] (Mich. 1895) Where, in a trial for bribery, the testimony of a state's witness showed that he had instigated another to advise defendant to sell his vote, and had then concealed himself with officers for the purpose of detecting the same, defendant could cross-examine as to witness' connection with the case, and the names of all who were concerned in the alleged detection.—People v. Liphardt, 105 Mich. 80, 62 N. W. 1022.

[m] (Mo. 1884) Where a married woman testifies to what occurred before the notary who took her acknowledgment to a deed, it is competent to cross-examine her as to all that occurred in reference to the matter.—Drew v. Arnold, 85 Mo. 128.

[n] (Neb. 1884) On cross-examination of a witness who was present and an active participant in the main transaction involved in a cause on trial, and about which he testifies, the cross-examining counsel should be permitted to inquire into all the relevant surrounding facts and circumstances which form a part of the transaction.—Fossbinder v. Svitak, 16 Neb. 499, 20 N. W. 866.

[o] (N. Y. 1895) In an action by an executor to recover money delivered to defendant by testator for certain purposes, plaintiff testified that he demanded that defendant account for the money, and that defendant admitted that testator had delivered the money to him. Held, that it was proper to permit defendant, on cross-examination of plaintiff, to bring out the balance of the conversation, to the effect that defendant also related the circumstances of the delivery of the money given him by testator, and what testator directed him to do with it.—Todd v. Vaughan, 90 Hun, 70, 35 N. Y. Supp. 457.

[p] (Pa. 1827) Where, in an action of debt on a sealed note, plaintiff desired to show an agreement by defendants that the note was to be drawn payable with interest, and that payments made on account were appropriated to the interest, but such evidence was not admissible, the plaintiff could not, by cross-examination of a witness for the defendant, elicit such agreement, though it was a part of the conversation of which the witness had given evidence.—Reichart v. Beidleman, 17 Serg. & R. 41.

[r] (Tex. 1888) Defendant's witness, deceased's attending physician, in answer to a question why he thought, several hours after the injury, that deceased was not mortally wounded, gave a part of a conversation with deceased at that time relating to the shooting. Held, that the state, on cross-examination, was not entitled to the whole conversation and the statements made by deceased, the conversation not being called for by defendant's question.—Irby v. State, 25 Tex. App. 203, 7 S. W. 705.

[s] (Tex. 1891) In an action for damages for refusal to allow plaintiff to build a house for defendant, according to a contract, there was evidence that the parties had abandoned the original contract, and entered into a new one, and plaintiff was permitted to testify in regard to the proposed new contract. Held, that it was error to refuse to allow defendant, by cross-examination and by other testimony, to show all that was said and done relative to the new contract.—Yarborough v. Davis (Sup.) 15 S. W. 713.

Limitation of cross-examination to subject of direct examination, see post, § 951.

[a] (Conn. 1888) A legatee called by contestant testified that he and another legatee arranged that one of them should always be in the house with testatrix when their uncle was there; that their uncle had procured an indorsement from her without their knowledge, and they did not intend that he should get any more. Held that, on cross-examination, witness might be asked, for the purpose of refreshing his memory, and of proving that the arrangement was made 10 years before the will, and in the lifetime of testatrix's husband, whether he did not know that the uncle had procured indorsements from testatrix's husband to the latter's loss.—Appeal of Dale, 57 Conn. 127, 17 Atl. 757.

[b] (Neb. 1889) In a bastardy proceeding complaining witness testified that defendant had sexual intercourse with her on a day named. Defendant, while testifying in his own behalf, denied that he had intercourse with her on that day. Held, that any question relating to the situation of plaintiff and defendant while together on that day, or about that time, was proper on cross-examination.—Planck v. Bishop, 26 Neb. 589, 42 N. W. 723.

[c] (Neb. 1891) Where complainant in a bastardy proceeding has testified that she was unmarried at the beginning of the action, it is proper to prove, on cross-examination, any fact or circumstance tending to show that she was married when the suit was instituted.—Olson v. Peterson, 33 Neb. 358, 50 N. W. 155.

[d] (Tex. 1858) Where it is necessary to prove the time of the indorsement of a note, and plaintiff swears on his voir dire that only he and the defendant know the time, the defendant's counsel can cross-examine him as to his means of proving the time by some one else.—Johnson v. Ward, 21 Tex. 475.

[a] (Ala. 1888) Where a witness testified that he had built a certain house, he was properly asked, on cross-examination, if he did not know that another person built that house.—Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Copeland, 86 Ala. 551, 6 South. 143, 4 L. R. A. 848.

[b] (Ala. 1889) It is improper to ask a witness if a certain portion of his testimony is as truthful as the balance.—Rains v. State, 88 Ala. 91, 7 South. 315.

[c] (Iowa, 1888) A witness, asked, on cross-examination, in language hardly proper, whether his testimony was not false, resented the question. He was then asked whether certain statements made by him were not false. Held, that the court, to prevent unseemly scenes between counsel and witness, properly sustained an objection to the latter question, and stopped the course of the examination.—Baldwin v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. Ry. Co., 75 Iowa, 297, 39 N. W. 507, 9 Am. St. Rep. 479.

[d] (Mich. 1891) In a criminal case defendant's wife testified that she was present when the alleged crime was committed, and the prosecuting attorney thereupon asked her: "Is it not a fact that you were not there at all?" "Has this been written out?" "Is it not a fact that you and your husband have concocted the whole story?" "You have been a witness for your husband in every lawsuit he has had, have you not?" Held, that such questions were improper, as reflecting on the character of the witness.—People v. Cahoon, 88 Mich. 456, 50 N. W. 384.

[e] (Neb. 1880) The answer of a witness on his direct examination, however positive it may be, does not preclude the adverse party, upon cross-examination, from requiring him to deny or reaffirm his previous statement, or from stating the circumstances connected therewith which tend to disprove it.—Stanton County v. Canfield, 10 Neb. 389, 6 N. W. 466.

[f] (N. Y. 1894) It is not competent to ask the witness on cross-examination whether certain testimony given by him was true.—Frankel v. Wolf (Com. Pl.) 7 Misc. Rep. 190, 27 N. Y. Supp. 328.

[g] (Ohio, 1863) Where a witness in his examination in chief testifies to the existence of a material fact, which, when established, is conclusive between the parties, questions which call upon the witness to reaffirm, qualify, or deny his statement in chief as to the existence of such fact are within the just limits of a cross-examination, and it is error to exclude them.—Phillips v. Elwell, 14 Ohio St. 240, 84 Am. Dec. 373.

[h] (Wash. 1895) When, in a prosecution for murder, a witness, in testifying as to the beginning of the difficulty between defendant and deceased, uses very loose language, it is error to refuse to permit him on cross-examination to be asked whether he is testifying by guess or by what he knows.—State v. Rutten, 13 Wash. 203, 43 Pac. 30.

Cross-examination as to irrelevant, collateral, or immaterial matters in general, see post, §§ 955–957.

—— of accused in criminal prosecutions as to facts inconsistent with testimony, see post, § 981.

[a] (Ala. 1889) Where defendant, on the trial of a claim of exemption, testified that he had invested about $3,000 in lands, it was competent for plaintiff to ask him on cross-examination, for the purpose of testing the truth of his explanation, where the lands were located, and whether any deeds were executed for them.—Davis v. Hays, 89 Ala. 563, 8 South. 131.

[b] (Ala. 1893) In an action for wrongful attachment, where there is evidence that there was a conspiracy between plaintiff and another to defraud creditors by false transfers or sales shortly before the attachment, such other, a witness for plaintiff, having testified that plaintiff's credit at a bank, of which witness was a member, was good before the attachment, and after the attachment was destroyed, it is proper for defendant to ask on cross-examination if plaintiff had not been refused credit at the bank just prior to the attachment.—Little v. Lichkoff, 98 Ala. 321, 12 South. 429.

[c] (Cal. 1896) Unless apparently done in bad faith, for the sole purpose of prejudicing him with the jury, a defendant, when on the stand as a witness in his own behalf, may properly be asked by the prosecution in cross-examination questions which, if answered in the affirmative, will tend to impeach statements made in his direct examination.—People v. Foo, 112 Cal. 17, 44 Pac. 453.

[d] (Colo. 1891) In an action on a note purporting to have been made by defendant and one S., defendant pleaded nonexecution, and it appeared that his name had been signed by S. S. testified that defendant authorized him to sign his name, and on his cross-examination defendant's attorney asked him whether, shortly before his arrest for forging defendant's name to various notes, he did not ask defendant to receive money for him, and apply it on the notes, so as to avoid an exposure, and whether he did not on account of the exposure threaten suicide, etc. Held, that the questions should have been allowed, though the witness had testified as to some of the facts sought to be brought out.—Lothrop v. Roberts, 16 Colo. 250, 27 Pac. 698.

by contact with defendant's street car while alighting therefrom, it was proper to ask a witness, who testified that electricity could not be transmitted to a trail car in such quantities as to cause personal injuries, whether the metal railings around all defendant's cars were not blistered by leakage of electricity; and the question is not objectionable for not being limited to the car by which plaintiff was injured, and to the time of the accident, when the witness testified that he did not know of the injury till the day after it happened, nor what car caused it.—Denver Tramway Co. v. Reid, 4 Colo. App. 53, 35 Pac. 269.

[f] (Ill. 1884) Where a railroad agent has testified that $33 was the schedule rate per car for freight between certain points, he may be asked on cross-examination whether the company had ever received that amount for a car of freight between said points.—Black v. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co., 111 Ill. 351, 53 Am. Rep. 628.

[g] (Ill. 1889) Where the surviving member of a firm denied the execution of an acceptance on examination in chief, it is proper to ask him, on cross-examination, by way of impeachment, as to whether the firm's bank had ever, to his knowledge, made payments to the payee of the acceptance on account of the drawer.—Bruner v. Nisbett, 31 Ill. App. 517.

[h] (Ill. 1895) Where a physician, on his direct examination, testified as to the value of services while attending smallpox patients, it is not reversible error to allow him, on cross-examination, in reply to the question, "Would you take a case like that out there in the pest house for twice the regular charges?" to state that he would not take such a case outside his family patients at any figure, as it was presented as going to the witness' credibility.—Winnebago County v. City of Rockford, 61 Ill. App. 656.

[i] (Kan. 1888) In an action against a railroad for personal injury, where the issue was whether the train dispatcher was negligent in giving an order to a conductor to meet another train composed of two sections, and to establish the negligence of the train dispatcher the conductor testified that, until he saw the second section of the train he had orders to meet, he had no knowledge that said section was on the road, held, that on cross-examination it was competent to ask him if he understood the signals carried by the first section; if, by those signals, he knew there was a second section following, which had the right to the road; and if he had the right to leave the station in the face of the signals carried by the first section.—Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Kanaley, 39 Kan. 1, 17 Pac. 324.

[j] (Mass. 1896) Where a witness, testifying to the value of his farm, testified as to other farms in the vicinity, their improvements, and that it was a good neighborhood, it was proper to permit counsel, on cross-examination, to show that the house nearest his own was so occupied as to affect the neighborhood unfavorably, as a place of residence.—Buck v. City of Boston, 165 Mass. 509, 43 N. E. 496.

[k] (Mich. 1866) In an action of trespass on the case, based on a special agreement, a witness in his direct examination had stated that he had delivered to the defendants all of certain notes, etc., which he had agreed by his contract to deliver. His testimony was to prove the performance of the condition of the contract. Held, that the defendants could cross-examine him to show that his statement in the first examination was incorrect, and that he had not delivered as he contracted to.—Thompson v. Richards, 14 Mich. 172.

[l] (Mich. 1884) Where, in an action for personal injuries, a physician testifies that, when he examined plaintiff after the accident, there was no sign of any hurt, he may be cross-examined as to what plaintiff said when, on touching him, the physician asked him if he felt pain.—Joslin v. Grand Rapids Ice & Coal Co., 53 Mich. 322, 19 N. W. 17.

[m] (Mich. 1892) In an action by a purchaser of goods against a foreign manufacturer, for failure to deliver them at the time specified in the contract of sale, defendant's managing agent, who has testified that the order was not filled for lack of manufacturing capacity, and that he was unwilling to extend credit to the purchaser, may be cross-examined with a view of showing that the failure to fill the order was due to the fact that defendant had entered into a combination with other manufacturers not to sell goods to American houses for a certain time.—Austrian & Co. v. Springer, 94 Mich. 343, 54 N. W. 50, 34 Am. St. Rep. 350.

[n] (Minn. 1883) In an action against a railway company for an injury alleged to have been caused by running a train at too great a speed, one of the brakemen on the train testified that, at the place where the accident occurred, the train was running about as fast as it could go, and that trains generally went slowly there. Held, that it was proper to ask him, on cross-examination, if it was not customary on trains on which he was employed to run with considerable speed at that point to overcome the grade.—Ransier v. Minneapolis & St. L. Ry. Co., 30 Minn. 215, 14 N. W. 883.

[o] (Mo. 1894) In cross-examining a witness to show that he was at a certain place other than that testified to by him, it is error to ask him if he was at such place, attending a divorce for adultery, the object being merely to get a discreditable matter before the jury.—Ephland v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 57 Mo. App. 147.

[p] (N. Y. 1862) Where plaintiff testified, on direct examination in an action for falsely warranting the soundness of a horse, that the horse was worth but $125 when he bought him, and would have been worth $500 if he were as warranted, the defendant on cross-examination may impeach such testimony by showing that he sold the horse in less than three months after he bought him for $400, which was the amount paid; there being no pretense of any change in the horse from the time of his purchase to the time of sale by plaintiff.—Springsteed v. Lawson, 14 Abb. Prac. 328; Springstead v. Same, 23 How. Prac. 302.

[q] (N. Y. 1877) The general rule that, when general reputation is relied upon, it is not competent to give in evidence specific acts, either to sustain or to overthrow such general reputation, is subject to the exception that, when a witness testifies as to general reputation of a physician as to skill, he may be asked, on cross-examination, in order to lessen the effect of his testimony as to general reputation, or to show a bias in favor of the party calling him, whether he has not heard reports tending to contradict the purport and effect of his testimony.—Carpenter v. Blake, 10 Hun, 358.

[r] (N. Y. 1877) A scow partially loaded with cattle belonging to plaintiff, while being towed by defendant's tug, was partially swamped, and some of the cattle lost. In an action for damages plaintiff's evidence tended to prove that the injury was caused by the improper speed of the tug. Defendant gave evidence showing that it resulted solely from the unsafe condition and improper management of the scow. Plaintiff proved by the owner of the scow that she was capable of carrying a heavier load than she had at the time, and that there was no difficulty in towing her at a safe speed, and that she had frequently been towed since the accident. Held, that it was proper on cross-examination to ask the witness how many times the scow had been sunk by accident, as qualifying the witness' testimony on the direct examination, and also discrediting him.—Baird v. Daly, 68 N. Y. 547.

[s] (N. Y. 1890) In an action for the rent of a barn, where defendants claimed damages by reason of plaintiff's misrepresentations as to its custom, a witness for plaintiff, on his direct examination, was permitted to testify that he had leased the barn for the previous year, and that he considered it was worth the rent he paid for it. Held, that it was competent for defendants to show upon cross-examination that in a certain other year he had lost on the rent of the barn.—Fonda v. Lape, 56 Hun, 639, 8 N. Y. Supp. 792.

[u] (N. C. 1881) A witness for defendant, sued on a note, whose testimony supports the allegation of the answer that it was obtained by fraudulent representations that a debt of a third person, sold to defendant and constituting the consideration for the note sued on, had been prosecuted to judgment, when it was only secured by a note, may be asked in cross-examination whether defendant did not on the same day purchase another and wholly unsecured note of such third person.—Gilmer v. Hanks, 84 N. C. 317.

[v] (N. C. 1883) Where, in ejectment, fraud in a deed is alleged, and a witness denies knowledge of the insolvency of the grantor, he may be asked, to discredit his testimony, whether the grantor was not commonly believed by his neighbors to be insolvent.—Perry v. Jackson, 88 N. C. 103.

[w] (S. C. 1831) A witness, on cross-examination, may be asked irrelevant questions, with a view of obtaining from him inconsistent and contradictory answers for the purpose of impeaching or destroying his credit.—Jones v. McNeil, 2 Bailey, 466.

[x] (Tex. 1892) In an action for damages to land from the overflow of a river, caused by a railroad embankment, a witness having testified that the land was practically worthless after the overflow, it was proper, as a test of his credibility, to inquire as to the price of certain adjacent lands, sold by him about two years after the overflow.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Hepner, 83 Tex. 136, 18 S. W. 441.

[y] (Tex. 1895) On cross-examination, it is proper to ask witness a question to prove that he may have been mistaken as to his having heard a bell ring, as he testified.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Younger, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 141, 29 S. W. 948.

[z] (Wis. 1888) In an action on an agreement to support an indigent relative, one defendant, a brother of the indigent person, testified that the agreement was made with his father, who was a codefendant, and not with either of the other defendants. Held, that the witness was properly asked on cross-examination if his father had not distributed his property among his children, as if he (witness) had received a portion of his father's estate he would have been more likely to assume the alleged obligation.—Kenyon v. Kenyon, 72 Wis. 234, 39 N. W. 361.

[a] (Ind. 1890) In an action on a building contract for extra work ordered by the architect, where the architect testifies, on direct examination, that he made no contract with the plaintiff, it is proper to ask him, on cross-examination, if he did not order different columns from those called for in the plans, and whether plaintiff put in such different columns, and whether he had been paid therefor.—Gibson County Com'rs v. Motherwell Iron & Steel Co., 123 Ind. 364, 24 N. E. 115.

[b] (Iowa, 1892) Where the conductor of a train testified that he did not employ plaintiff as a brakeman, testimony on his cross-examination that he gave plaintiff 25 cents to buy his breakfast is admissible as relating to the question of employment.—Fox v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. Ry. Co., 86 Iowa, 368, 53 N. W. 259, 17 L. R. A. 289.

[c] (Mass. 1859) In an action for an injury to the plaintiff's property by the defendant while in his service, the plaintiff, if a witness in his own behalf, may be asked on cross-examination whether he did not settle with the defendant for his services during the period in question without making any claim for the alleged injury.—Miller v. Stevens, 79 Mass. (13 Gray) 282.

[d] (Mass. 1861) If, in an action by an assignee of an insolvent to recover the value of property illegally conveyed by him, an attorney at law, called by the defendant, has testified in chief that he introduced the insolvent to the defendant by a letter of introduction in which he highly recommended his credit and character, and that he had acted as counsel for the insolvent for some time and did not suspect his insolvency, it may be shown, by way of cross-examination, that he has presented to the assignees a bill against the insolvent for professional advice in business matters at various times shortly before his failure, and before the date of his letter of introduction, and the bill itself may be introduced in evidence as a part of the cross-examination.—Tapley v. Forbes, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 20.

[e] (Mich. 1896) On a trial for assault, a witness for defendant testified that he witnessed the assault, which was made by one M., and not by defendant. Held, that it was competent to show, on cross-examination to discredit the witness, that he was present at the preliminary examination of M. and the defendant, and heard M. testify that he did not commit the assault, and permitted M. to be discharged and defendant bound over without disclosing his knowledge.—People v. Wirth, 108 Mich. 307, 66 N. W. 41.

[f] (Neb. 1882) In an action for deceit in the sale of real estate, when plaintiff has testified as to the unprofitableness of the business, it is proper to ask him on cross-examination if he had not advertised the property for sale as commanding large profits as a railroad eating house.—Markel v. Moudy, 13 Neb. 322, 14 N. W. 409.

[g] (Neb. 1882) Where a witness testifies that real estate is of a certain value, it is competent to show by him on cross-examination that he had written a policy of insurance on the property at a much higher figure.—Markel v. Moudy, 13 Neb. 322, 14 N. W. 409.

[h] (Pa. 1896) In an action for damages to property resulting from the alleged wrongful eviction of plaintiff from leased premises, where the issue was whether plaintiff or his father was the lessee, and the father had testified that he had taken a lease which was afterwards canceled, and an oral lease made with the plaintiff, it was proper to show on cross-examination that the father had insured the property on the leased premises in his own name.—Dosch v. Diem, 176 Pa. 603, 35 Atl. 207, 38 Wkly. Notes Cas. 533.

[i] (R. I. 1885) In an action for personal injuries against a town, charging negligence in leaving a hitching post so as to render the highway dangerous, a surveyor of the highway called by defendant testified that the situation of the post was not such as to make the highway unsafe. On his cross-examination he testified that he had ordered the post removed. Held not error, since the object of the testimony was to discredit the witness by showing that his conduct was inconsistent with his evidence on his direct examination.—Yeaw v. Williams, 15 R. I. 20, 23 Atl. 33.

[j] (R. I. 1888) On indictment for keeping a place for the illegal sale of liquors, and for the resort of disorderly persons, a witness who testified to the good character of the place, and that he saw no intemperate, idle, noisy, dissolute, or disorderly persons, nor knew of any disturbances there, may be asked, on cross-examination, whether he drank liquors or whisky there.—State v. Brady, 16 R. I. 51, 12 Atl. 238.

[k] (Tex. 1896) In an action for death of a person, caused by explosion of the boiler of a locomotive, it was proper to allow a person who had testified to the good condition of the boiler and flues to be asked, on cross-examination, if after plaintiff's attorney had asked him not to do so, he did not ship them to another place.—Tyler S. E. Ry. Co. v. Rasberry, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 185, 34 S. W. 794.

[l] (Wis. 1859) In proving the contents of a lost note in an appeal case, the counsel, who had tried the case for the defendants below, had testified that he then saw a material alteration, sufficient to avoid the note. The question whether, at the previous trial, he had objected to the note being offered in evidence, was allowed to be put, in order to raise the discrediting inference that he did not then notice any such alteration.—Conkey v. Post, 7 Wis. 131.

[m] (Wis. 1890) In a prosecution for murder committed in pursuance of a conspiracy, it was proper for the state, on cross-examination of one of the alleged conspirators, to ask him if he attended the funeral of the deceased, his neighbor, as a negative answer would tend to discredit his testimony.—Holtz v. State, 76 Wis. 99, 44 N. W. 1107.

[a] (U. S. 1845) Where a witness, in his direct examination, had testified that a certain person was reputed to be a man of large property, counsel were permitted, in cross-examination, to ask in what such property was reputed to consist.—United States v. Flowery, Fed. Cas. No. 15,122 [1 Spr. 109].

[b] (Mich. 1886) In trover for machinery and tools taken by a sheriff under a writ of attachment as the property of another, the embarrassed condition of defendant in attachment is a material circumstance, and may be shown on cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses.—Adams v. Kellogg, 63 Mich. 105, 29 N. W. 679.

[a] (U. S. 1895) One who is alleged to have caused a loss by the negligent doing of certain work, and who testifies, in an action for such loss, that he did the work properly, and in the same manner that he did similar work at another place, may be cross-examined as to the way in which he did such other work, and contradicted by showing that he did it negligently.—Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Watts, 66 Fed. 460, 13 C. C. A. 579, 25 U. S. App. 214.

[b] (Ala. 1893) Where, in an action by a brakeman for injuries received while coupling cars, defendant has asked questions tending to show that a piece of board, used by plaintiff in an unsuccessful attempt to make the coupling, was not a suitable one, plaintiff may ask a witness on cross-examination what kind of sticks defendant furnished its employés, for the purpose of showing that the one attempted to be used was as good.—Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Hissong, 97 Ala. 187, 13 South. 209.

[c] (Conn. 1875) When the date of a transaction is in issue, the court may allow examination and cross-examination of witnesses as to dates of other transactions not in themselves material, but so connected with that in dispute as to enable witnesses to fix the latter.—Harris v. Rosenberg, 43 Conn. 227.

[d] (Me. 1855) One called as a witness in an action on a warranty of soundness in a horse, but not as an expert, was asked on cross-examination, after having testified to appearances he had noticed in the horse, if he had not noticed such appearances in other horses which had been driven hard. Held, that the testimony from him as to other horses was inadmissible.—Moulton v. Scruton, 39 Me. 287.

[e] (Mass. 1892) On appeal to the county commissioners from an assessment of lands, the erroneous admission of evidence as to the selling price of numerous other tracts not similarly situated cannot be justified on the ground that it was elicited on cross-examination of witnesses who had testified in chief as to the value of the lands in question, and that it tended to show the reasons on which their opinions were based.—Haven v. Essex County, 155 Mass. 467, 29 N. E. 1083.

[f] (Mich. 1895) In an action for injuries from a dog bite, a witness for plaintiff, who testified that the dog had once chased him about defendant's store till defendant quieted it, could not be cross-examined as to whether he did not know that boys used to play with the dog, and get it to chase them, he testifying that he had not been present while boys were playing with the dog.—Kennett v. Engle, 105 Mich. 693, 63 N. W. 1009.

[g] (Miss. 1856) A witness may properly be cross-examined as to confessions by defendant to third parties, which he asserts having heard, of a similar character to those made by the defendant to himself. It is therefore error in the court to refuse a cross-examination.—Dick v. State, 30 Miss. 631.

[h] (N. H. 1858) In assumpsit on a warranty for the alleged unsoundness of a horse sold, it is competent for the defendant, on cross-examination of a witness, who has testified that the horse had a cough for about two years in the foddering season, when kept on hay, to inquire whether other horses, owned and kept by the witness, and appearing well and free from disease, would not cough when kept on hay in the winter, as this horse did.—Spear v. Richardson, 37 N. H. 23.

[i] (N. J. 1895) Where a plaintiff had testified that defendant's cattle had committed several trespasses, and injured his crops, it was proper to ask him on cross-examination whether, during the period covering these trespasses, the cattle of other persons had not also trespassed, and injured his crops.—Green v. Skoqvist, 57 N. J. Law (28 Vroom) 617, 31 Atl. 228.

[j] (N. Y. 1888) When defendant's foreman has testified as to the way in which he fixed the hoisting machine by which plaintiff was injured, and that he had so fixed the machine in another brewery where he worked, it is competent to ask him, on cross-examination, what sort of a machine they had in the brewery where he worked before.—Radman v. Haberstro, 49 Hun, 605, 1 N. Y. Supp. 561, judgment affirmed (1890) 119 N. Y. 659, 23 N. E. 1150.

[k] (Tex. 1895) Where an issue of competency is raised, involving the care of defendant's car inspector, who testified that one of his reasons for knowing that he inspected the car in question was that he invariably performed that duty before the car left L., a question on cross-examination, whether he performed that duty at different times within five months subsequent to the day in question, was proper, both to show omissions of duty and to test his memory.—Cunningham v. Austin & N. W. Ry. Co., 88 Tex. 534, 31 S. W. 629.

[i] (Tex. 1896) In a prosecution for playing cards at a public place, it is error to permit the state to prove by a witness for defendant, on cross-examination, that defendant has been convicted of gambling, in the same court, on a former occasion.—Goldstein v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 289.

Cross-examination of party, see post, §§ 968–973.

Irrelevant statement, see post, § 956 [1].

[a] (U. S. 1896) A witness who testified that he had done a particular act was asked, on cross-examination, whether at a particular time and place he had not said that he had not done it. After answering this question, he was asked if, on the same occasion, his wife had not stated that he had not done it. Held, that this question was properly excluded, since his failure to do the act could not be proved, as an independent fact, by the wife's declarations; and that, if the intention was to contradict the witness, or lay the foundation for impeaching his testimony, the court should have been distinctly so informed.—McDowell v. United States, 74 Fed. 403, 20 C. C. A. 476, 42 U. S. App. 1.

[b] (Cal. 1889) By Code Civ. Proc. § 2048, a witness may be asked, on cross-examination, as to any matter bearing directly or indirectly on any portion of his testimony in chief. Held, in an action involving the right to water between upper and lower riparian owners, that a witness who states that plaintiff's grantor claimed half the water of the creek may be asked if said grantor did not tell witness that he had sold the water to one of the defendants, as the question bears on the character and extent of plaintiff's predecessor's interest to the water in dispute.—Sharp v. Hoffman, 79 Cal. 404, 21 Pac. 846.

[c] (Cal. 1892) In an action involving the question whether a sale was fraudulent, a witness having testified in chief that he never heard the vendor, during a certain time, make any statement as to the ownership of the property, it was proper to ask him, on cross-examination, if the vendor did not, in a particular conversation during that time, tell him the horses belonged to plaintiff.—Freeman v. Hensley, 30 Pac. 792.

[d] (Dak. 1882) A witness for the prosecution in a murder case testified in rebuttal that a certain witness for defendant had told him that he arrived at the place where the crime was committed about five days thereafter, which defendant's witness had denied. Held, that it was error to refuse to allow the witness for the prosecution, on cross-examination, to state whether defendant's witness had not told him in the same conversation that he was present at the murder, and detailed the facts of the killing as he saw them.—United States v. Knowlton, 3 Dak. 58, 13 N. W. 573.

[e] (Ill. 1884) Where defendant's agent has testified to certain declarations made by him to the plaintiff when the latter signed the contract in controversy, he may be asked on cross-examination whether he told plaintiff at the time what the contract was.—Black v. Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co., 111 Ill. 351, 53 Am. Rep. 628.

[f] (Ill. 1892) In an action against a wrecking company for the alleged negligent death of an employé, where an employé of and stockholder in said company is called by plaintiff to testify against his interest, he may, on cross-examination, be asked what deceased said when about to take the step which resulted in his death, since that was a part of the res gestæ.—Dunham Towing & Wrecking Co. v. Christiansen, 44 Ill. App. 523.

[g] (Ill. 1893) Where one of the charges of negligence is that the conductor did not stop the car in time, and he has testified on direct examination that he applied the brake as quickly as he could, and did all he could to stop the car, it is proper to ask him on cross-examination whether he had not stated that he forgot to put on the brake, and that he could have stopped the car if he had not lost his head; and, such cross-examination being pertinent to the issues, the answers of the witness thereto are not conclusive.—Central Ry. Co. v. Allmon, 147 Ill. 471, 35 N. E. 725, affirming (1892) 45 Ill. App. 389.

[h] (Ind. 1891) A defendant, accused as accessory before the fact, has not the right, on the cross-examination of a coroner who held an inquest over the murdered body, and before whom accused made a statement on oath, reduced to writing and signed by him, and certified by the coroner, to inquire whether the statements of the accused were all reduced to writing, since, the statements being authenticated by the coroner and being identified by him, they were properly admitted in evidence.—Sage v. State, 127 Ind. 15, 26 N. E. 667.

[i] (Iowa, 1880) In an action to recover specific personal property, cross-examination as to whether the plaintiff had not told a certain person that the property belonged to the defendant, to which the reply was that he had not, is not prejudicial to the plaintiff, although it may have been improper.—Osborn v. Ratliff, 53 Iowa, 748, 5 N. W. 746.

[j] (Iowa, 1888) In an action for the price of some bucks sold, defendant pleaded breach of warranty, in that the bucks were diseased, and introduced a witness to prove the disease. On cross-examination he was asked if he had not made statements in a letter implying that the disease was the result of change of climate after the sale, and if he did not think, when he wrote the letter, that that was the cause. Held competent and relevant.—Bothwell v. Farwell, 74 Iowa, 324, 37 N. W. 392.

[k] (Iowa, 1896) A witness jointly indicted with defendant for rape having testified that prosecutrix not only consented to the intercourse, but virtually seduced witness and defendant, he could be asked on cross-examination whether he did not ask a certain person, shortly before the alleged rape, if he could not inform witness and defendant where they could obtain sexual intercourse, as it was legitimate cross-examination.—State v. Philpot, 97 Iowa, 365, 66 N. W. 730.

[l] (Me. 1861) On the trial of a person indicted for making and uttering a forged deposition to procure a divorce by the respondent from his wife, no exceptions lie to the refusal of the presiding judge to allow the respondent, on cross-examination of the person whose signature to the deposition is alleged to be forged, to ask whether the statements in the deposition are not true.—State v. Kimball, 50 Me. 409.

[m] (Mich. 1887) In an action to recover the costs, expenses, and damages sustained by an evicted tenant in taking an appeal in an action of ejectment, the plaintiff claiming that he had taken such appeal relying on the promise of defendant to pay such costs, expenses, and damages, the commissioner before whom said action of ejectment was tried testified that he advised this defendant that he was responsible to plaintiff if evicted. Held that, on cross-examination, it was proper to examine him in full as to the circumstances under which such advice was given.—Cummerford v. Paulus, 66 Mich. 648, 33 N. W. 741.

[n] (Mich. 1891) In an action for personal injuries, caused by a collision at a railroad crossing, it is competent, on cross-examination of witness for plaintiff, to ask him whether plaintiff, the evening after the accident, did not say that he had seen the engine before it struck him.—Thomas v. Chicago & G. T. Ry. Co., 86 Mich. 496, 49 N. W. 547.

[o] (Mich. 1892) In replevin for property seized under an attachment, the attachment creditor testified that when he talked with the debtor and wife, about a week before the attachment, he did not tell them how much the debtor owed him, because he did not know; and that he had never figured out such indebtedness at all. He was asked on cross-examination if he did not swear in the affidavit of attachment that the debtor owed him $100, as near as he could estimate; and that, if he never did any figuring on the account, how he came to swear to the affidavit? On objection, counsel said: "I will not insist upon the question. Both statements are before the jury." Held, that counsel could ask these questions, and, when objected to, could withdraw them; and that, since the bill of particulars and the statement of the attachment creditor were both in evidence, the remark of counsel was true.—Daniels v. Weeks, 90 Mich. 190, 51 N. W. 273.

[p] (Mo. 1884) In an action involving the validity of a deed, the wife of a grantor testified that at the time of taking her acknowledgment the notary did not acquaint her with the contents of the deed. Held, that it was competent to ask her on cross-examination whether, at the time of taking such acknowledgment, she was acquainted with the contents of the deed and had so informed the notary.—Drew v. Arnold, 85 Mo. 128.

[q] (Mo. 1890) In an action attacking a fraudulent conveyance, it is proper to ask, on cross-examination, the husband and agent of the grantee if he had not said that "this was not the first sale he had had attacked as a 'humbug sale.' "—Meyberg v. Jacobs, 40 Mo. App. 128.

[r] (N. Y. 1893) Where defendant's counsel drew from a witness a statement that one S. said that "he came from defendant," the prosecutor was properly permitted to ask what language S. used to convey the idea that "he came from defendant."—People v. Johnson, 140 N. Y. 350, 35 N. E. 604.

[s] (N. C. 1871) A witness cannot be asked, on cross-examination, whether he made the same statement before the grand jury as on his examination in chief at the trial, when the object of such question is not to lay a foundation for impeaching the credibility of the witness.—State v. Parker, 65 N. C. 453.

[t] (S. C. 1891) It was not prejudicial error to ask a witness for the defense, on cross-examination, whether he had not told a person named that when he heard the report of the gun he knew the deceased was dead, when the question was answered in the negative.—State v. Merriman, 34 S. C. 16, 12 S. E. 619.

[u] (Vt. 1889) Where a witness for defendant testifies as to certain statements made by plaintiff's agent, it is not proper cross-examination to question him as to statements made by the agent in favor of his principal after the expiration of the business of the agency.—Cushman v. Somers, 62 Vt. 132, 20 Atl. 320, 22 Am. St. Rep. 92.

Inquiry on cross-examination as to conversation between witness and another person to discredit or test reliability of witness, see post, § 1107.

[a] (Ill. 1883) A party suing in a representative capacity cannot, by a misuse of his right of cross-examination, call out conversations of the adverse party, and then cut the latter off from the right of giving his version of such conversations, by claiming that the witness who testified to them was the witness of the adverse party.—Stevens v. Brown, 12 Ill. App. (12 Bradw.) 619.

[b] (Iowa, 1889) Two persons, jointly indicted with defendant for murder, having had no communication with each other, gave the same account of the killing at the time of their arrest. Held, that a refusal to allow defendant to ask one of such persons whether he did not have a private conversation with the other at a place named, two or three days after the murder, was proper, as the question was not proper cross-examination.—State v. Munchrath, 78 Iowa, 268, 43 N. W. 211.

[c] (Iowa, 1892) Defendant, indicted for stealing flax belonging to two persons, admitted the taking, claimed that his brother, from whom it was taken, owed him, and that he took it with his consent, and that he had no knowledge of the interest of any one else in the property. The brother testified to the ownership of the property; that it was taken; and that he sued out a warrant for defendant; and on cross-examination he stated that he owed defendant, and had told him he would pay him out of the flax—either let him have the flax or the money. Held, that though it was material to explain why defendant's brother sued out the warrant, defendant should have done so by calling his brother as his own witness, and it was not error to exclude his answer as to whether at the time of the taking he remembered the conversation, the matter not being strictly cross-examination.—State v. Larson, 85 Iowa, 659, 52 N. W. 539.

[a] (Ala. 1893) Where the evidence in an action against a railroad company for negligently killing plaintiff's mules showed that the mules were appraised in plaintiff's presence, but not at his demand, and that the appraisement was not in writing, as required by Acts 1888–89, p. 808, and did not show what was said or done by any one at the time, it was proper to refuse to allow defendant to ask plaintiff, on cross-examination, "What were the mules appraised at?" —Birmingham Mineral R. Co. v. Harris, 98 Ala. 326, 13 South. 377.

[b] (Cal. 1893) Where a life insurance agent was called to testify that the mortuary tables in an encyclopedia are in general use, and was not asked on his examination in chief to whom the tables applied, but stated on cross-examination that they applied only to insurable persons, it was not proper cross-examination to ask him "what insurable persons are."—Townsend v. Briggs, 32 Pac. 307.

[c] (Ill. 1886) When the defendant claimed to have made a payment with funds received from a certain person, who testified that he had given the defendant such funds, the plaintiff may interrogate that person as to when and how he received such money.—Bressler v. People, 117 Ill. 422, 8 N. E. 62.

[d] (Ill. 1896) On a prosecution of Chinese for robbery, there was evidence that defendants, on the day before the robbery, came to complainant and demanded $50 as taxes for a Chinese club. A witness for defendants testified as to the objects of the club on his cross-examination. Held proper to permit him to be asked if there was not a "fan-tan" gambling apparatus in the club rooms, and also a "bung-loo" apparatus, and appliances for opium smoking, where he denied that there was anything of the kind.—Goon Bow v. People, 160 Ill. 438, 43 N. E. 593.

[e] (Ind. 1885) On cross-examination, counsel may enter into details. It is error to compel them to stop with a mere general statement.—Hyland v. Milner, 99 Ind. 308.

[f] (Iowa, 1890) Where a witness testifies, on direct examination in a murder case, as to the purchase of a revolver by defendant, it is proper to ask him on cross-examination to whom the purchase was charged in his books.—State v. Row, 81 Iowa, 138, 46 N. W. 872.

[g] (Kan. 1881) In an action of replevin, plaintiff, in support of his title, introduced the testimony of a witness who declared himself to have been, on the day of the levy, in possession of the goods as plaintiff's agent. To weaken the presumption of title flowing from such possession, defendant, on cross-examination, sought to inquire into the length of time that such possession had continued, and the circumstances under which it had originated. Held, that these inquiries were within the limits of a cross-examination.—Blake v. Powell, 26 Kan. 320.

[h] (Md. 1873) In an action for malicious prosecution in having the plaintiff indicted on a charge of obtaining stocks under false pretenses, a lawyer testified, in rebuttal of the presumption of malice, that, with all the facts laid before him, he had advised the defendant that the plaintiff had been guilty of obtaining them under false pretenses. Held, that the cross-question, "What were the facts upon which that advice was based?" was proper to test the good faith of the defendant as to the extent of the disclosure.—Cooper v. Utterbach, 37 Md. 282.

[i] (Md. 1894) A policy provided for submission to appraisers, in case of disagreement, and that, if the appraisers properly performed their duties, their award was binding. After the policy and other evidence touching the fire and plaintiffs' loss were admitted, a witness for plaintiffs stated that defendant and plaintiffs agreed to enter into an appraisement of the loss. Held, that it was error not to permit such witness, on cross-examination, to identify certain papers as such agreement, and the award of the appraisers.—Caledonian Ins. Co. of Scotland v. Traub, 80 Md. 214, 30 Atl. 904.

[j] (Mich. 1883) Where, on the prosecution of the mortgagor of a chattel for secretly removing it without paying a note thereby secured, he testified that the note was paid, and that it was included in a settlement, which was denied by the mortgagee, it was permissible to ask the latter on cross-examination as to the particulars of the settlement.—People v. Long, 50 Mich. 249, 15 N. W. 105.

[k] (Minn. 1885) At the trial of an action for personal injuries a medical witness for defendant testified that plaintiff would recover permanently from the injuries, except a slight lameness. Held, that on cross-examination it was proper to ask him whether the injury was likely to produce and be followed by specified diseases, in order to ascertain what the witness meant by permanent recovery.—Kelly v. Erie Telegraph & Telephone Co., 34 Minn. 321, 25 N. W. 706.

[l] (Mo. 1863) In an action of forcible entry and detainer, the sheriff testified that he held possession of the premises and delivered the possession to the complainant. Held, that the defendant could, on cross-examination, inquire into the facts and circumstances on which the statement was based, with the view of showing the character of the possession.—Coates v. Hopkins, 34 Mo. 135.

[m] (N. Y. 1889) In an action for injuries received by plaintiff by being thrown from defendant's car, where the driver had testified for defendant that he was taking his car down as he usually did, plaintiff was properly allowed to ask him if he usually walked his horse across J. street, and also to cross-examine him on his schedule time.—Murray v. Brooklyn City R. Co. (City Ct. Brook.) 7 N. Y. Supp. 900.

[n] (N. Y. 1891) A witness for plaintiff testified that she was a passenger in the same car, sitting next to plaintiff, and was thrown off the seat by the collision, and some person fell on her, and she was bruised. Held, that she could not be asked, on cross-examination, whether she was not bruised on the side next to plaintiff, as bearing on the nature and extent of plaintiff's injuries; there being no proof that plaintiff was the person who fell on her.—Wynn v. Central Park, N. & E. R. R. Co. (Com. Pl.) 14 N. Y. Supp. 172, judgment reversed (1892) 133 N. Y. 575, 30 N. E. 721.

[o] (Or. 1889) Where defendant called a witness who gave evidence material to the defense, and testified, on cross-examination, that he gave money himself to assist the defense, and procured money from others for the same purpose, it was not competent, either on the cross-examination of the same witness, or by making him the state's witness, to prove the names of the particular persons, who were not witnesses in the case, who contributed money, or that they were saloon keepers or gamblers.—State v. Olds, 18 Or. 440, 22 Pac. 940.

[p] (Or. 1894) In an action for money alleged to have been collected by defendant as plaintiff's agent, after defendant testified to having given the money to plaintiff's husband for her, the husband testified that the money received by him from defendant was not on plaintiff's account, but was money due him on account of a partnership existing between himself and defendant, and collections made by defendant, as receiver and otherwise, on accounts due witness and one A. as partners. On cross-examination the husband was asked to state "what partnership existed between witness and defendant, and between witness and A., when it was, its nature and business, when defendant was receiver, for what this money was collected by defendant, and when." Held, that it was error to exclude the answer to such question.—Sayres v. Allen, 25 Or. 211, 35 Pac. 254.

[q] (Pa. 1895) The court may refuse to compel a witness, on cross-examination in an action for slander, to disclose the names of women whom he has testified that he has met at plaintiff's house for purposes of illicit intercourse, where the purpose of the cross-examination is merely to prepare the way for calling the women in rebuttal, and the women are at the time leading respectable lives.—Naguszewski v. Kampa (Com. Pl.) 8 Kulp, 164.

[r] (Tex. 1895) One party having introduced evidence that a certain person signed a paper without reading it, the other party is entitled to question him as to the circumstances under which he signed it, and why he did not read it.—White Sewing Mach. Co. v. Hicks (Civ. App.) 33 S. W. 137.

[a] (Cal. 1892) The fact that a witness, on an indictment for the larceny of cattle, makes voluntary statements as to the acts of defendant with reference to certain other cattle, does not give defendant the right to cross-examine on such matters.—People v. French, 95 Cal. 371, 30 Pac. 567.

[b] (Ind. 1891) Where, in an action against a county for injuries occasioned by the breaking down of a bridge, one of plaintiff's witnesses volunteers the statement that parties living in the neighborhood thought the bridge unsafe, and complained of it, and plaintiff does not have the statement stricken out, defendant may cross-examine the witness with reference to the statement volunteered.—Apple v. Marion County Com'rs, 127 Ind. 553, 27 N. E. 166.

[c] (Kan. 1896) Where a voluntary statement is made by a witness upon immaterial matter, though such statement is not objected to, it is not error for the court to refuse to permit a cross-examination with regard to the matter referred to therein.—Cone v. Smyth, 3 Kan. App. 607, 45 Pac. 247.

[d] (Ky. 1892) Upon trial for assault with a dangerous weapon, the accused, after he had been examined by his counsel and directed to take his seat, announced to the jury that he was a peaceable citizen and had no idea of shooting the prosecuting witness, whereupon the state's attorney asked him whether he had had trouble with many other neighbors. Held that, although this method of cross-examination was improper, yet, as the defendant had placed his character as a peaceable man in issue, the error was not sufficient to reverse the judgment.—Taylor v. Commonwealth, 18 S. W. 852.

[e] (Mo. 1891) Where defendant in his cross-examination volunteers the statement that he went away, it is proper to allow him to be asked when he went away.—State v. Adams, 108 Mo. 208, 18 S. W. 1000.

[f] (Wis. 1882) Where an improper statement by a witness as to what was said by another witness on a former trial is made of his own motion, and not called out by the party in whose behalf he appears, the adverse party is not entitled to cross-examine on that subject.—Brusberg v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. Ry. Co., 55 Wis. 106, 12 N. W. 416.

[a] (Ind. 1868) Where the validity of a deed from a father to his son was in issue between heirs, and the son testified that on taking the deed he had given his father a bond for $1,500, conditioned that such part thereof as should not be paid at the father's death should not be enforced, which was kept by the father until his death, it was held proper to show on cross-examination that the actual consideration of the conveyance was an agreement of the son to maintain the father during his life, whereof the bond was intended as a security.—Huckleberry v. Riddle, 29 Ind. 454.

[b] (Kan. 1889) In an action against a sheriff for the value of goods seized by him under an attachment and sold, plaintiff claimed to have bought the goods from the debtor prior to the levy of attachment, and to have paid for the same by the execution and delivery to the insolvent debtor of two notes, signed by himself, one for $1,100 and the other for $1,200, and that the $1,100 note was delivered to parties who had indorsed for the insolvent debtors as collateral security for such indorsements. Held, that it is error for the trial court, when one of such persons was on the witness stand, to refuse to permit the attorney for the sheriff to ask him if the note was paid, and how paid, and by whom paid; and it is also error to refuse to make the purchaser answer questions as to whether or not there was also an understanding between him and the insolvent debtor that, if he lost this suit, he would not have to pay the $1,200 note, and as to whether the $1,200 note was paid, or was to be paid.—De Ford v. Orvis, 42 Kan. 302, 21 Pac. 1105.

[c] (Mich. 1873) In assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, where a witness on direct examination testified to a sale of the articles without any agreement as to the price, it may be shown on cross-examination that they were furnished by virtue of a special contract.—Wilson v. Wagar, 26 Mich. 452.

[d] (Mich. 1876) In an action for services by plaintiff in purchasing and shipping sheep for defendants, where a witness had given evidence tending to show the purchase by plaintiff from him of certain specified sheep for defendants, it was error on cross-examination to exclude inquiry as to who paid him for such sheep.—Parker v. Grinnell, 34 Mich. 199.

[e] (Mich. 1878) In an action against a married woman for goods claimed to have been sold her to be used in business, she and her husband may properly be cross-examined concerning their habit of purchasing goods and doing business.—Altman v. Young, 38 Mich. 410.

[f, g] (Minn. 1873) Where a witness testifies as to the sale and delivery of a reaper, for the price of which the action was brought, on cross-examination it may be shown that notes were given therefor, and such notes may be introduced in evidence.—McCormick v. Miller, 19 Minn. 443 (Gil. 384).

[h] (Pa. 1853) Where, in case of an alleged conveyance of land, a witness has been examined as to acts of ownership by the grantor after the conveyance, it is competent to cross-examine him as to acts of ownership by the grantee over the same land.—Covanhovan v. Hart, 21 Pa. (9 Harris) 495, 60 Am. Dec. 57.

[i] (Utah, 1877) On the issue whether certain personal property had been purchased by defendant, it is proper, on cross-examination, to ask a witness, who has testified to making such sale, whether the mode or manner of making it was the one usually adopted by him.—Burton v. Winsor Utah Silver Min. Co., 2 Utah, 240.

[j] (Wis. 1891) In replevin against a sheriff who had seized property which is claimed by plaintiff under two bills of sale from one M., one of the attorneys for M. and a witness to one of the bills of sale was asked by defendant, "What was the consideration of the bill of sale?" Held, that this was a proper question.—Weadock v. Kennedy, 80 Wis. 449, 50 N. W. 393.

Facts inconsistent with testimony as to value, see ante, § 936.

[a] (Ala. 1872) A witness, called, without objection, to prove the value of the hire of certain slaves in 1863 in lawful money, from facts in evidence, and his general knowledge of such matters, after stating his estimate, was asked on cross-examination how he arrived at his opinion. The court sustained an objection to the question. Held not error, because the question was too indefinite.—Booker v. Adkins, 48 Ala. 529.

[b] (Iowa, 1889) In an action to recover damages for a breach of contract for the sale of land, where witnesses have testified as to the value of the land at the time the contract should have been performed, it is proper to ask them, on cross-examination, the value of the land at the time of trial, to test the worth of their opinions.—Damon v. Weston, 77 Iowa, 259, 42 N. W. 187.

[c] (Iowa, 1896) In an action for the use of land and for trespass by such use it is proper to allow plaintiff to ask witnesses testifying on cross-examination to the rental value of the land what the value of the land is.—Jenks v. Lansing Lumber Co., 97 Iowa, 342, 66 N. W. 231.

[d] (Kan. 1872) Where a witness on his examination in chief has given his opinion with regard to the value of certain land, he may afterwards be cross-examined in full with regard to his reasons for such opinion. Great latitude should generally be allowed on cross-examination.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Haines, 10 Kan. 439.

[e] (Kan. 1872) On cross-examination a question is proper which enables the jury to see on what basis the witness has made his estimates of value, or which connects the general estimates of value and damages with the particular premises and injury.—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Blackshire, 10 Kan. 477.

[f] (Minn. 1888) Where the company's witnesses had stated their opinion of the difference in value of a farm before and after a right of way was taken across it, it was proper, on cross-examination, in order to test the value of their opinions, to ask if in their judgment it would make any difference that the owner had no right to cross the right of way.—Sigafoos v. Minneapolis, L. & M. Ry. Co., 39 Minn. 8, 38 N. W. 627.

[g] (N. Y. 1893) In an action by a lessee to restrain the operation of an elevated railroad in front of the premises and for damages, where a former tenant of the property in question, called as a witness by plaintiff, testified on cross-examination that the road increased his business, it was error to exclude, on the ground that it was immaterial, the question, "How much rent more, in your opinion, was it worth on account of the road being there?"—Odell v. Metropolitan El. R. Co. (Super. N. Y.) 3 Misc. Rep. 335, 22 N. Y. Supp. 737.

[h] (N. Y. 1893) In an action on a policy of marine insurance, a witness who has testified for defendant company as to the condition of the vessel when purchased by him after the stranding, and the amount expended by him for repairs, to show that it could not be regarded as a constructive total loss, may, on cross-examination, be required to state the amount received by him on its resale.—Murray v. Great Western Ins. Co., 72 Hun, 282, 25 N. Y. Supp. 414, judgment affirmed (1895) 147 N. Y. 711, 42 N. E. 724.

[i] (Pa. 1892) Where a witness for plaintiff put a value on plaintiff's farm, it was proper for defendant to ask him, for the purpose of testing his knowledge and fairness, if he did not know of sales of farms in the same vicinity at a much less price than he put on plaintiff's land.—Lentz v. Carnegie Bros. & Co., 145 Pa. 612, 23 Atl. 219, 27 Am. St. Rep. 717, 29 Wkly. Notes Cas. 292.

[j] (Tex. 1895) Where a witness has testified as to the reasonable value of separate tracts of land, he may be cross-examined for the purpose of testing his intelligence, and the worth of his testimony as to the value of the whole number of tracts when sold in bulk.—Dittman v. Weiss (Civ. App.) 31 S. W. 67.

Cross-examination based on testimony as to execution and amount due, see post, § 954.

[a] (Cal. 1890) Where plaintiff's indorser has testified that he took the note sued on in good faith, and for value, it is error to refuse permission to cross-examine him as to whether he knew that the consideration for the note was illegal at the time he bought it, and whether at that time he did not know that the maker had warned all persons in a newspaper notice from purchasing it, on account of its illegality.—Graham v. Larimer, 83 Cal. 173, 23 Pac. 286.

[b] (Or. 1895) Where plaintiff testifies that a note and mortgage executed by S. were given him for work performed for S., defendant, who contends that they were without consideration, should be allowed to ask him, on cross-examination, when he commenced work, when he quit, what time he worked between those dates, what wages he was to receive, and how much he had been paid above the amount covered by the note.—Maxwell v. Bolles, 28 Or. 1, 41 Pac. 661.

[c] (Or. 1896) While the indorsement of a note by the payee imports a consideration, and the holder may rest on the presumption until evidence of the illegality of the note is produced, yet if, where such illegality is pleaded, he testifies in chief that he gave a consideration for the note, such testimony is material to the issues made, and the defendant is entitled to cross-examine in regard to the consideration.—Kenny v. Walker, 29 Or. 41, 44 Pac. 501.

[d] (Pa. 1879) Where the indorser of a note has been notified that he will be required to prove the consideration paid by him for the note, and he takes the stand to prove that he is a bona fide holder, it is proper, on cross-examination, to ask such questions as will tend to discover whether he knew that the note was originally obtained without proper consideration.—Moore v. Hershey, 90 Pa. 196.

§ 947. Ownership or interest in property.

[a] (Ala. 1845) Plaintiffs claimed title under their grandfather, who purchased the slave in question in 1833 at a sale under execution against the estate of their father. In 1839 the father made a deed of trust, embracing the slave, to a trustee, to secure the trustee and others for liabilities incurred and to be incurred as the sureties of the grantor, with a power of sale to reimburse them for advances. In 1841 the trustee sold the slave to defendant. Held, that it was competent for defendant to ask the father, who was examined as a witness for plaintiff, the following questions, viz.: If the trustee, at a time and place designated, did not ask him, in the presence of a third party, if there were other liens than the trust deed on the slave. If there were not other liens on the slave when the above inquiry was made. If he did not, after the trust sale in 1841, in the presence of certain persons, admit that he owed the trustee a balance of $1,500.—McBride v. Thompson, 8 Ala. 650.

[b] (Ala. 1881) A witness who testifies to the fact of ownership of personalty may be cross-examined with respect to the particular facts constituting the basis of the claim of ownership.—Daffron v. Crump, 69 Ala. 77.

[bb] (Cal. 1888) Where the answer admits plaintiff's ownership of the note sued on, and the bill of exceptions recites that it is proved that the note was executed by defendant, and indorsed and delivered to plaintiff before suit, refusal to allow defendant to cross-examine plaintiff to show by him that he is not the owner of the note is not error.—Braly v. Henry, 77 Cal. 324, 19 Pac. 529.

[c] (Iowa, 1883) A witness who has testified to owning land may, for the purpose of testing his truth and accuracy, be asked on cross-examination how he acquired ownership.—Wallace v. Wallace, 62 Iowa, 651, 17 N. W. 905.

[d] (Neb. 1880) In replevin by a wife of property levied upon as the property of her husband she testified on her direct examination that she owned the property. Held, that on her cross-examination she could be asked how much money she had at the time of her marriage, and who worked the farm that she claimed.—Koch v. Rhodes, 10 Neb. 445, 6 N. W. 767.

[e] (Wash. 1894) Where, in an action by a husband alone for injuries to his land, he testifies on cross-examination that he purchased the land with his separate money, it is not error to refuse to permit him to be further cross-examined as to his ownership.—Koch v. Sackman-Phillips Inv. Co., 9 Wash. 405, 37 Pac. 703.

[a] (U. S. 1895) A witness who testified on direct examination that he knew who put in a railroad crossing, and when the same was put in, could be interrogated on cross-examination as to how the crossing came to be put in.—Reynolds v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 69 Fed. 808, 16 C. C. A. 435, 32 U. S. App. 577.

[b] (Ala. 1857) A witness for defendant, having testified to what took place at an interview between the parties at plaintiff's house, may be asked, on cross-examination, how he happened to go with the defendant to plaintiff's house.—Thomason v. Dill, 30 Ala. 444.

[c] (Cal. 1891) On a trial for murder, where a witness for the prosecution testifies that shortly after the shooting he went to the scene of the homicide, and took his rifle with him, and that he was sorry defendant got into the trouble, it is proper, in order to show the state of the witness' mind, to ask him, on cross-examination, why he took his rifle, and if he expressed his sorrow by going towards the house with a rifle.—People v. Thomson, 92 Cal. 506, 28 Pac. 589.

[d] (Cal. 1892) Where it was attempted to show by a witness that he was induced to leave home to avoid testifying, defendant had a right to ask him, on cross-examination, if the true reason why he left home at that time was not on account of his father.—People v. Dixon, 94 Cal. 255, 29 Pac. 504.

[e] (Cal. 1895) On a prosecution for rape of one who lived with defendant and his wife, prosecutrix having testified that the wife went out and left her alone in the house with defendant, and that she was afraid of him, she could be asked why she did not go out with the wife.—People v. Knight, 43 Pac. 6.

[f] (Ind. 1878) On a will contest on the ground of testamentary incapacity and undue influence, the scrivener of the will, who testifies as to the manner in which it was procured to be drawn and executed, and that he voluntarily returned it to testatrix, who had left it in the possession of the witness, may be asked on cross-examination his reasons for returning it, and what he said to testatrix as to making the will.—Coffman v. Reeves, 62 Ind. 334.

[g] (Mass. 1855) It is no ground of exception that the presiding judge refused to allow a witness, who had testified that he had formerly been known by another name, to be asked on cross-examination why he had then given that as his name.—Commonwealth v. Quin, 71 Mass. (5 Gray) 478.

[h] (Mich. 1884) In an action against a newspaper company for publishing a libel charging plaintiff with murder, it was permissible to ask the managing editor on cross-examination what was the object of the publication, whether the newspapers had any feeling against plaintiff, and whether he personally believed the publications to be true, when he had testified on his examination in chief that he had had conversations with the reporter and city editor before the articles were published.—Peoples v. Detroit Post & Tribune Co., 54 Mich. 457, 20 N. W. 528.

[i] (N. Y. 1845) Where a witness for the plaintiffs proved a demand of the defendant and his refusal to pay over certain moneys, it was held that the defendant had a right to ask the witness what reason he gave for his refusal.—Bennett v. Burch, 1 Denio, 141.

[j] (Or. 1896) Where a witness was asked, on direct examination, as to the whereabouts of a certain receipt, to show the nonproduction of the same by defendant after it had been notified to produce it, so as to permit secondary evidence of its contents, the witness could not state, on cross-examination, how the receipt came to be given to defendant.—Schreyer v. Turner Flouring Mills Co., 29 Or. 1, 43 Pac. 719.

[k] (Pa. 1892) On a question as to whether a judgment note is a forgery, examination of an almanac by the owner of said note, or by some one for her, on the very day it purported to have been signed, in order to fix the day of the week, is unusual, at least, and cross-examination, therefore, demanding why the examination had been made, is proper.—Thomas v. Miller, 151 Pa. 482, 25 Atl. 127, 31 Wkly. Notes. Cas. 177.

4. LIMITATION OF CROSS-EXAMINATION TO SUBJECTS OF DIRECT EXAMINATION.

LIMITATION AS TO PARTICULAR SUBJECTS OF INQUIRY, § 950.
—— TIME OF OCCURRENCE OR CONDITION, § 951.
—— PRIOR CONVERSATIONS OR STATEMENTS, § 952.
—— INTRODUCTION OF MATTERS IN DEFENSE OR REBUTTAL IN GENERAL, § 953.
—— CROSS-EXAMINATION AS TO CONSIDERATION BASED ON TESTIMONY AS TO EXECUTION AND AMOUNT DUE, § 954.

Limitation of cross-examination of accused in criminal prosecutions to subjects of direct examination, see post, § 982.

—— of one's own witness as to inconsistent statements to matters subject of direct examination, see post, § 1217.

Limitation to subjects of direct examination on cross-examination of party, see post, § 971.

Right to contradict testimony of one's own witness cross-examined as to matter not subject of direct examination, see post, § 1270.

[a] The right to cross-examine is limited to matters stated by the witness in his direct examination.

[b] (U. S. 1840) If a party wishes to examine a witness of the opposite side with regard to new matter not introduced by the opposite party, he must make the witness his own by introducing him in a subsequent part of the cause.—Philadelphia & T. R. Co. v. Stimpson, 39 U. S. (14 Pet.) 448, 10 L. Ed. 535.

[c] (Ga. 1895) Under Code, § 3864, preserving the right to cross-examine, a witness may be cross-examined as to all material matters in the case, though he was called merely in rebuttal, and had not on direct examination testified to the particular facts sought to be elicited on the cross-examination.—News Pub. Co. v. Butler, 95 Ga. 559, 22 S. E. 282.

[d] (Ind. 1886) The cross-examination must be confined to the subject of the direct examination, but this rule does not restrict the cross-examining counsel to the specific matters asked for on the direct examination.—Boyle v. State, 105 Ind. 469, 5 N. E. 203, 55 Am. Rep. 218.

[e] (Ind. 1887) In an action to recover property alleged to have been obtained by fraud, plaintiff had on direct examination opened the whole subject of defendant's fraud, and his financial condition. Held, that the cross-examination was not confined to the line followed by the direct examination, but might include any phase of the subject.—Vogel v. Harris, 112 Ind. 494, 14 N. E. 385.

[f] (Ind. 1895) A court reporter who testifies as to certain testimony given by defendant on a former trial cannot be cross-examined as to other testimony of defendant, which is in no way explanatory of that given on direct examination.—Siberry v. State, 149 Ind. 684, 39 N. E. 936.

[g] (Ind. 1896) Where a general subject has been opened up on the original examination, the cross-examination is not limited to matters particularly brought out by the original examination, but may extend to all phases of the subject so opened up.—Gemmill v. State, 16 Ind. App. 154, 43 N. E. 909.

[h] (Kan. 1872) A witness cannot on cross-examination be questioned with regard to a matter which does not tend to impeach, rebut, explain, modify, or in any manner qualify anything that he has testified to on his examination in chief.—Sumner v. Blair, 9 Kan. 521.

[i] (Kan. 1887) On cross-examination of a witness he cannot be questioned upon a matter not examined on in chief, except where such questions tend to show interest, bias, or prejudice, or to explain, modify, or qualify former statements.—Lawder v. Henderson, 36 Kan. 754, 14 Pac. 164.

[j] (La. 1880) It is error to restrict the counsel of the accused, in his cross-examination of a witness for the state, to the matters brought out on the direct examination.—State v. Thomas, 32 La. Ann. 349.

[k] (La. 1893) Witness for defendant cannot be cross-examined as to matters not testified to by him on direct examination, though these facts had been testified to by several witnesses on both sides, and the testimony was only cumulative.—State v. Taylor, 45 La. Ann. 1303, 14 South. 26.

[l] (Me. 1873) Although, according to practice in this state, the cross-examination of a witness is not confined to matters inquired of in the examination in chief, an exception to a ruling limiting it to such matters will not be sustained, where it is evident that the excepting party was not prejudiced by the ruling.—Inhabitants of Falmouth v. Inhabitants of Windham, 63 Me. 44.

[m] (Mich. 1861) On cross-examination, the questioning party should not go into an affirmative or independent case, or examine the witness on the merits, but should confine himself to controverting the prima facie case, which the direct evidence tends to prove; and the rule for cross-examination of witnesses, that a party has no right to cross-examine as to matters not connected with any subject mentioned in the examination in chief, is affirmed.—Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381.

[n] (Mich. 1876) The cross-examination of a witness cannot properly be confined strictly to the precise subjects called to his attention in his direct examination, but should be allowed to extend to any matter not foreign to the subject-matter of such examination, and tending to limit, explain, or modify the same.—Haynes v. Ledyard, 33 Mich. 319.

[o] (Mo. 1840) If a witness is sworn and gives some evidence, however formal and unimportant, he may be cross-examined in relation to all matters involved in the issue.—Page v. Kankey, 6 Mo. 433.

[p] (Mo. 1885) Where the state introduces a witness and examines him, defendant may cross-examine him as to all matters involved in the case, no matter how formal or unimportant the examination in chief may have been.—State v. Brady, 87 Mo. 142.

[q] (Mo. 1892) A witness called to prove any fact may be cross-examined on the whole case; and the court's refusal to allow cross-examination on any point except that given in chief is presumably prejudicial, since the party may so have been deterred from cross-examining other adverse witnesses, and he cannot be obliged to make the attempt, and save an exception in each case.—Walter v. Hoeffner, 51 Mo. App. 46.

[r] (Mont. 1893) In an action by a servant for personal injuries resulting from the incompetency of H., a coservant, plaintiff called H. as a witness, stating that "the witness would refer to the time and place plaintiff fell, for the purpose of fixing the time and place of other events in connection with the case, and does not wish to make the witness his witness as to the acts he was doing at the immediate time of the fall." H. then testified to facts connected with plaintiff's fall. Held proper to allow H. to be cross-examined as to the entire case.—Jorgenson v. Butte & Montana Commercial Co., 13 Mont. 288, 34 Pac. 37.

[s] (Neb.) A party desiring to examine opponent's witness on new matter must make the witness his own.—(1882) Boggs v. Thompson, 13 Neb. 403, 14 N. W. 393; (1894) Hurlbut v. Hall, 39 Neb. 889, 58 N. W. 538.

[t] (N. J. 1878) Where hearsay evidence, competent as to one of the contestants of a will, is admitted, its admission will not justify his cross-examination upon other hearsay matters relating to another contestant.—In re Lewis' Will, 29 N. J. Eq. (2 Stew.) 279.

[v] (N. D. 1896) The rule that the cross-examination of a witness, except as to matters affecting credibility, must be confined to the subjects to which the direct examination was addressed, does not limit the cross-examination to the particular facts to which the witness testified on direct examination, but a subject once opened may be exhausted.—State v. Pancoast, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052, 35 L. R. A. 518.

[w] (Pa. 1865) Although the rules of evidence require that the inquiry on subjects introduced on cross-examination should be restricted to the extent of the examination, and that no party should be allowed by his own declarations to make evidence for himself, they are not to be strained so as to dissever occurrences clearly allied to each other, or to exclude declarations that are fairly part of the res gestæ.—Rhodes v. Commonwealth, 48 Pa. (12 Wright) 396.

[x] (Pa. 1866) Cross-examination should be limited to what has been directly testified to by the witness, but injury must be shown to have resulted from undue latitude, or judgment will not be reversed on that account.—Helser v. McGrath, 52 Pa. (2 P. F. Smith) 531.

[z] (S. C. 1894) Where a decedent's representatives have introduced a witness on the subject of transactions with decedent, he may be cross-examined as to the entire matter.—Brown v. Foster, 41 S. C. 118, 19 S. E. 299.

[xx] (S. D. 1893) A cross-examining cannot go beyond the subject-matter of the examination in chief, except to show bias, or to lay a foundation for impeachment.—Wendt v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 4 S. D. 476, 57 N. W. 226.

[a] (Ala. 1893) In an action against a railroad company for the death of a brakeman, where the conductor testifies that he was informed by decedent before the accident that the brakes were out of repair, he may testify on cross-examination that it was not his duty to repair brakes, and that they were at no place, after he received such information, and before the accident, where the brakes could have been repaired.—Perdue v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 100 Ala. 535, 14 South. 366.

[b] (Cal. 1890) Where a director of a corporation which unlawfully appropriated water has testified, on his direct examination, that the corporation had used the water without interruption, it is error to exclude a question asked on cross-examination as to whether or not he had received notice from his agent that the diversion of the water had been interrupted.—Last Chance Water Ditch Co. v. Heilbron, 86 Cal. 1, 26 Pac. 523.

[c] (Cal. 1891) In an action for personal injuries, it is competent for defendant to ask plaintiff, on cross-examination, whether she called a doctor on the night of the accident; she having testified in her own behalf as to her injuries, and the pain she suffered.—McFadden v. Santa Ana, O. & T. St. Ry. Co., 87 Cal. 464, 25 Pac. 681, 11 L. R. A. 252.

[d] (Cal. 1895) A witness who, on suit for divorce for nonsupport for a year prior to the action, testifies that he has supported the plaintiff during the time, cannot on cross-examination be questioned regarding separate property of the plaintiff of which he has had charge.—Terrill v. Terrill, 109 Cal. 413, 42 Pac. 187.

[e] (Cal. 1895) Where, on a prosecution for rape, prosecutrix testified that she was 7 years of age when she came to the state, and that at the time of trial she was 10 years of age, and on cross-examination stated that she did not know when she came to the state, she could be asked by defendant what she gave as her age to her school teacher after coming to the state.—People v. Knight, 43 Pac. 6.

[f] (Colo. 1892) In an action against one of two partners interested in the sale of a mine to recover compensation for services rendered, payable in event of a sale thereof, employment of plaintiff and a partnership were questions directly put in issue on the pleadings. The other partner, called on behalf of plaintiff, proved plaintiff's employment, and the compensation payable, and in cross-examination gave evidence of receipt by him from defendant of his share of proceeds of said sale. Held, that the admission of this evidence on cross-examination, although objectionable, tended to establish existence of partnership, and was admissible.—Osbiston v. Kaufman, 1 Colo. App. 333, 29 Pac. 748.

[g] (Conn. 1880) A defendant, for the purpose of proving his own insanity, introduced evidence that his sister had been insane. The counsel for the state, against defendant's objection, was allowed to inquire what caused her insanity, in order to show that it was not hereditary. Held to be no error.—State v. Hoyt, 47 Conn. 518, 36 Am. Rep. 89.

[h] (Fla. 1882) In a murder case, where it appeared that deceased was shot by defendant in a scuffle, it was error not to permit a witness, testifying to the scuffle and the shooting, to be cross-examined as to whether he noticed any marks of violence about the person of defendant, though the witness did not testify as to any such marks on the direct examination. —Savage v. State, 18 Fla. 909.

[hh] (Ill. 1882) When a witness is called simply to prove handwriting, he cannot be cross-examined as to other matters.—Hurlbut v. Meeker, 104 Ill. 541.

[i] (Ill. 1885) In an action against a railroad company to recover for personal injuries, the duty of section men and foremen of the track to avoid and prevent accidents is proper matter for cross-examination, upon direct testimony that it is each section man's duty to look after himself.—Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. McGrath, 115 Ill. 172, 3 N. E. 439.

[ii] (Ill. 1891) In an action against a city for injuries caused by the defective condition of a walk, a witness for plaintiff who has testified to seeing plaintiff fall, but not as to the condition of the walk, cannot be asked on cross-examination as to such condition.—City of Mt. Vernon v. Brooks, 39 Ill. App. 426.

[j] (Ind. 1891) In an action for damages for injuries to a passenger, it being contended by plaintiff that the train at the time of the accident was being run at a great and unusual rate of speed, a witness called by plaintiff testified that he was near the track immediately before the accident, and that his attention was directed to the speed of the train. On cross-examination, defendant asked him to state what the speed of the train was with reference to the speed ordinarily run there by the trains. Held, that the question was properly excluded, on the ground that it was not cross-examination, and for the further reason that there was no evidence that the witness had observed the speed of other trains at the same place.—Pennsylvania Co. v. Newmeyer, 129 Ind. 401, 28 N. E. 860.

[jj] (Ind. 1893) In a murder case, it is not error not to permit defendant to prove, by cross-examination of the state's witnesses, that deceased had the reputation of being a strong, quarrelsome man, ready to fight at any time, where such reputation is not referred to in their evidence in chief, especially where, under the theory on which the case is tried, such evidence is immaterial.—Davidson v. State, 135 Ind. 254, 34 N. E. 972.

[k] (Iowa, 1880) In an action for injuries caused to plaintiff's leg by a defective sidewalk, her husband, on cross-examination, stated the circumstances of an injury to plaintiff's leg by falling on certain stairs, and said that the hired girl got breakfast for him on a certain morning after this injury. No reference was made to this injury on the examination in chief. Held, that a further question as to the name of the hired girl was properly excluded.—Garlick v. City of Pella, 53 Iowa, 646, 6 N. W. 3.

[kk] (Iowa, 1881) In a proceeding to determine whether or not attached property is exempt, it is not proper cross-examination to ask a witness if the owner had not waived the provisions of the law exempting the property when the matters have not been touched upon in the examination in chief.—Pellersells v. Allen, 56 Iowa, 717, 10 N. W. 261.

[l] (Iowa, 1887) Witnesses testified, on direct examination, as to occurrences in a bank and at their home, and it appeared that they were also at a lawyer's office, and that at these places business connected with the subject in controversy was transacted. Held, that cross-examination as to what occurred at the lawyer's office, which was not touched upon in the direct examination, was properly refused.—Krager v. Pierce, 73 Iowa, 359, 35 N. W. 477.

[ll] (Iowa, 1889) In an action on a note, where a witness has testified that he saw defendant sign the note, it is improper to ask him, on cross-examination, if he had any other transaction with defendant on the same day, and his answer to such question is properly stricken out. — McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Jacobson, 77 Iowa, 582, 42 N. W. 499.

[m] (Iowa, 1894) On a trial for forging an indorsement on a draft, where the cashier of the bank, who sold it, was asked for the facts of purchase, the court properly refused to allow defendant to show by him, on cross-examination, that, a week after purchasing the draft, the buyer ordered payment stopped, when the witness had not been interrogated in that regard in his examination in chief.—State v. Farrington, 90 Iowa, 673, 57 N. W. 606.

[mm] (Kan. 1890) In an action against a city for personal injuries caused by a defective sidewalk, a question on cross-examination as to whether the street, at the place where the accident occurred, was not lighter than elsewhere, is properly excluded when there was nothing said in regard to light in the direct examination of the witness.—City of Atchison v. Rose, 43 Kan. 605, 23 Pac. 561.

[n] (La. 1889) When the witness of the accused has been questioned as to the physical power and prowess of the deceased, questions by the state on cross-examination, relative to like qualities of the accused, are germane and responsive to the subject-matter of the examination in chief.—State v. Johnson, 41 La. Ann. 1076, 6 South. 802.

[nn] (Mass. 1854) In an action against an alleged inhabitant of a town to recover taxes, one of the assessors of the town, called by defendant, having been excluded from testifying that the defendant gave him notice that he was going to remove from the town, it was error to allow him to state on the cross-examination that he had not, in a certain conversation, acknowledged that he had been given such notice, since, not having testified to the fact, he could not make statements about the fact.—Cole v. Inhabitants of Cheshire, 67 Mass. (1 Gray) 441.

[o] (Mass. 1877) On an issue as to whether an insured vessel was lost by inherent weakness or a peril insured against, a witness, called by plaintiff to prove that the vessel was seaworthy when she left port, cannot be cross-examined as to the age of the vessel by the defendant, upon whose admission of her seaworthiness plaintiff waived examination of the witness.—Swift v. Union Mut. Marine Ins. Co., 122 Mass. 573.

[p] (Mich. 1861) In ejectment for land reserved by a treaty, a witness on direct examination was not asked any question as to either of certain individuals, and he did not mention them in his testimony. He was asked to whom individual reservations were made at the treaty, and the answer made no mention of one O.; but on his cross-examination he stated that O. got the land at the treaty. Held, that the court erred in refusing to let the defendant's counsel ask such witness on his cross-examination whether O. was related to an individual not mentioned in his direct examination, on the ground that it was irrelevant to the subject-matter of the direct examination.—Compau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381.

[pp] (Mich. 1861) The issue being upon the identity of an Indian claiming an interest in reserved land, and the plaintiff having interrogated his witnesses as to the names and relationship of a number of the reservees, the questions, "Was this O. any relation to T.?" and "What band did her mother belong to when she was born?" were held to be competent on cross-examination.—Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381.

[ppp] (Mich. 1872) In replevin, the questions whether plaintiff had sold other property to bring himself down to the exemptions, or

[i] (Kan. 1895) In replevin by a wife to recover property seized by a creditor of the husband, where the husband testified for plaintiff only as to the demand and the bringing of suit, he could not be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him concerning the property.—Butler v. Cooper, 3 Kan. App. 145, 42 Pac. 839.

[j] (Mass. 1855) On the trial of an action of tort for filling up and obstructing a brook, a witness, who has testified that he filled up the brook by orders of defendant, cannot be asked by defendant, on cross-examination, whether defendant, at the time of giving such orders, did not tell the witness that plaintiff had dug it out.—Ashley v. Wolcott, 69 Mass. (3 Gray) 571.

[k] (Mass. 1877) In a suit by an administratrix for an injury, resulting in the death of her intestate, sustained by falling through a platform in defendant's foundry, a witness, who testifies that deceased, as he and the witness were proceeding to deceased's house in a hack, stated that a fellow servant was to blame for the accident, but does not testify concerning the condition of the platform, cannot be asked on cross-examination whether he did not state in the presence of others, after helping deceased into the house, "that the platform had not been safe for six weeks previously."—Boyle v. Mowry, 122 Mass. 251.

[l] (Mich. 1887) In an action of trespass against defendants for inciting men to go upon the premises of plaintiff, a question asked of a witness on cross-examination by defendant's counsel, as to what defendant said to a meeting of men about observing the law, held properly excluded, as plaintiff had given no evidence in regard to the meeting.—Webber v. Barry, 66 Mich. 127, 33 N. W. 289, 11 Am. St. Rep. 466.

[m] (N. Y. 1860) Cross-examination of a witness as to a conversation had by him must be limited to that particular subject of the conversation which was brought out on the direct examination, and the whole conversation cannot be elicited.—Greaton v. Smith, 1 Daly, 380.

[n] (N. Y. 1881) Where a witness in a criminal case has testified to a conversation with the prisoner, he may not be asked on cross-examination relative to statements made by the prisoner in another and entirely different conversation.—Moett v. People, 85 N. Y. 373.

[o] (N. Y. 1896) Where plaintiff in an action on an insurance policy covering mortgaged goods called defendant's agent who had issued the policy, merely to prove the authority of the agent, it is not proper cross-examination for defendant to ask the agent if he did not tell plaintiff that he would have to take his chances as to the validity of the policy.—McGuire v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 7 App. Div. 575, 40 N. Y. Supp. 300.

[p] (N. C. 1891) On a prosecution for larceny, a witness for the state testified that on one occasion there was a two-dollar bill in the cash drawer when he went to dinner; that defendant was the only clerk left in the store; and that when witness returned the bill was gone. It was not shown that defendant was charged with taking the bill. Held, that a question, on cross-examination, as to whether, on witness' return to the store, he asked defendant what had become of the bill, and what his reply was, was properly ruled out.—State v. Rhyne, 109 N. C. 794, 13 S. E. 943.

[q] (Pa. 1844) A subscribing witness was called by plaintiff to establish the execution of articles of agreement. Held, that defendant might ask the witness what was said at the time of the execution of such articles.—Markley v. Swartzlander, 8 Watts & S. 172.

[r] (Tex. 1873) On a trial for murder, the declarations of the defendant, made at the time of the killing, to the deceased, charging him with having insulted the wife of defendant, are not admissible in evidence for the defendant on cross-examination, as part of the res gestæ, in the absence of direct testimony that such insult was given.—Bassham v. State, 38 Tex. 622.

[s] (Tex. 1893) On trial for arson, where defendant's wife was sworn on his behalf, it was error to allow the question, on cross-examination, "Did you not, on the night of the fire, after it had broken out, state you had a presentiment that something was going to happen?" the matter not being raised on direct examination.—Bluman v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 43, 21 S. W. 1027, 26 S. W. 75.

—(Ga. 1859) Brown v. State, 28 Ga. 199;
(Minn. 1887) Sterling v. Bock, 37 Minn. 29, 32 N. W. 865;
(Mo. 1841) Rucker v. Eddings, 7 Mo. 115;
(N. J. 1857) Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 463, affirmed (1857) Id. 601;
(Pa. 1841) Castor v. Bavington, 2 Watts & S. 505.

[b] (Ariz. 1874) In ejectment for a mining claim, plaintiffs' grantor, who has testified in chief that she located the claim, may be cross-examined as to whether or not she then knew of defendants' prior location of the premises, and whether or not she had removed their notice of location, as such cross-examination is not calling out new matters of defense, but is simply showing that the title is not in plaintiffs, but in defendants.—Rush v. French, 1 Ariz. 99, 25 Pac. 816.

[c] (Ariz. 1874) In ejectment for a mining claim, plaintiffs, after testifying in chief as to their purchase of the claim from the second locator, may be cross-examined as to their knowledge, at the time of their purchase, of defendants' prior location, of its record, and of the fact that defendants had done work on the claim, as these facts all go to prove title in defendants, in direct denial of plaintiffs' allegation that the title is in them.—Rush v. French, 1 Ariz. 99, 25 Pac. 816.

[d] (Cal. 1855) Where the plaintiff set up his right to the property by virtue of a conveyance, which was shown to be a mortgage, it was held that the defendant, on cross-examination, may show that the mortgage has been satisfied.—Chenery v. Palmer, 5 Cal. 131.

[e] (Cal. 1859) The question was whether by defendant's negligence plaintiff's land had been flowed. Plaintiff's witness stated that on one occasion he saw a great deal of water come over defendant's dam. Held, that it was not proving a defense, but denying the apparent meaning of plaintiff's proof, and therefore competent, on cross-examination, to ask that witness "whose water it was that he saw coming over the flume."—Jackson v. Feather River & G. Water Co., 14 Cal. 18.

[f] (Cal. 1859) It is always competent on cross-examination to disprove the case made by the witness' examination in chief.—Jackson v. Feather River & G. Water Co., 14 Cal. 18.

[g] (Cal. 1895) In an action on a note for the price of a harvester, a subsequent contract pleaded by defendant in avoidance, whereby the payees were to extend the time of payment until the next harvest, and put the machine in working order, cannot be shown on plaintiff's cross-examination.—Haines v. Snedigar, 110 Cal. 18, 42 Pac. 462.

[h] (Ga. 1873) Where two factors' liens are foreclosed on the same property, one of which is founded on a lien contracted orally, on motion to subject money in the sheriff's hands raised by the sale of the property, and the affidavit of the creditor foreclosing the oral lien does not disclose the date thereof, and he offers himself as a witness to prove his lien to be older than that of the other creditor, the latter may cross-examine him and show, if he can, that the latter contract did not create a lien.—Franklin v. Norton, 47 Ga. 643.

[i] (Ill. 1887) On the trial of an action against a railway company for loss of goods, plaintiff, after defendant had closed its case, called in rebuttal the contracting agent of defendant, and who had already testified in behalf of defendant, and showed him a duplicate of the bill of lading, merely for the purpose of refreshing his memory as to the date and place of shipment. Thereupon, on cross-examination, defendant offered to show by the bill of lading that the risks of injury during transportation were especially excepted to and assumed to be borne by the shippers, and that the same was known to the agent of plaintiff who made the contract for shipment. Held that, as this was a new theory, which had neither been set up by the pleadings, nor suggested in any of the evidence thus far introduced, the subject was not proper cross-examination, and the offer was properly refused.—Erie & Pacific Despatch v. Stanley, 123 Ill. 158, 14 N. E. 212, affirming 22 Ill. App. 459.

[j] (Ind. 1847) An action of assumpsit for work and labor, etc., was commenced in the circuit court, the plaintiff claiming $1,500 damages. The pleas were the general issue, the statute of limitations, and a set-off. The plaintiff, on the trial, proved by a witness the performance of service for the defendant by feeding and taking care of the latter's cattle. Held, that the defendant might, on cross-examination, ask the witness whether, at the time of said service, the plaintiff was not using the cattle for his own benefit.—Dayton v. Hall, 8 Blackf. 556.

[k] (Ind. 1884) In a suit for bastardy, inquiries of the relatrix as to the color of the child's hair and eyes are not admissible on cross-examination, being evidence of an affirmative nature.—Hull v. State, 93 Ind. 128.

[l] (Ind. 1887) Though, in an action for damages, the burden of proving facts in mitigation is on defendant, plaintiff cannot be cross-examined as to those facts, unless the matter has been gone into on the direct examination.—Cincinnati, I., St. L. & C. Ry. Co. v. Lutes, 112 Ind. 276, 14 N. E. 706.

[m] (Ind. 1888) In an action on a guardian's bond, it is not competent to show by plaintiff's witness on cross-examination that defendant did not execute the bond.—Britton v. State, 115 Ind. 55, 17 N. E. 254.

[n] (Iowa, 1888) Plaintiff's husband testified on her behalf that the hay destroyed belonged to his wife. Held that, having testified on cross-examination that he stacked the hay for plaintiff; that he worked for her for his board, clothes, and spending money—it was proper to refuse to permit defendant to ask him the terms and conditions of the contract, though defendant had pleaded that plaintiff was not the real party in interest. Such evidence was part of defendant's case, which could not be introduced by cross-examination.—Bullis v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 76 Iowa, 680, 39 N. W. 245.

[o] (Mich. 1878) An architect, suing for the value of some plans, showed that he had delivered them, at defendant's request, to a third person, who swore that defendant had sent him for them. Held that, on the cross-examination of this witness, the question whether the defendant had not demanded the plans of him, and he had refused on the ground that he owned them, was properly excluded, as neither impeaching nor tending to show, as against the plaintiff, that he had really bought the plans.—French v. O'Connor, 39 Mich. 106.

[p] (Nev. 1872) Although, under the rules for cross-examination as followed by American courts, a defendant cannot, on cross-examination, draw out proof of "new matter," all such particular facts may be elicited as tend to disprove the essential or ultimate facts in the plaintiff's case, which the direct examination tended to prove.—Ferguson v. Rutherford, 7 Nev. 385.

[q] (N. Y. 1830) On an inquest at the circuit court, the defendant may cross-examine the plaintiff's witnesses, to overthrow what has been testified to on the direct examination; but he cannot, by the plaintiff's witnesses, establish a defense defeating a right to recover.—Hartness v. Boyd, 5 Wend. 563.

[r] (N. Y. 1891) In an action on a note, wherein the defense was the statute of limitations, plaintiff called defendant as a witness. On cross-examination of defendant, his counsel asked him whether he had made the last payment indorsed on the note, and whether he had made any payment to any person after a certain date to be applied on the note in question. Held, that answers to these questions were properly excluded, on the ground that they related to matters not inquired into on the direct examination.—Briggs v. Gardner, 60 Hun, 543, 15 N. Y. Supp. 335, 21 Civ. Proc. R. 42.

[s] (Pa. 1851) In an action against a sheriff for an alleged wrongful levy and sale, where the sheriff has given evidence to show that the sale of the property in dispute to plaintiff shortly before the judgment on which the levy was made was fraudulent, evidence to show that plaintiff assumed or paid the debts of the seller in pursuance of the contract of sale, while proper in rebuttal, cannot be brought out by cross-examination.—Helfrich v. Stem, 17 Pa. (5 Harris) 143.

[t] (Pa. 1851) It is not error to refuse to permit defendant to introduce his defense by cross-examination of plaintiff's witness as to a matter to which the witness had not been examined.—Mitchell v. Welch, 17 Pa. (5 Harris) 339, 55 Am. Dec. 557.

[u] (Pa. 1862) Where, upon the trial, the commissioner, appointed by agreement to report the quantity of coal mined by defendant, had produced and identified his report, having been called for that purpose only, he could have been cross-examined by the defendant as to its identity, but not as to the basis on which it was made; to obtain evidence of the contents of the paper, the defendant should have called the witness in chief.—Tiley v. Moyers, 43 Pa. (7 Wright) 404.

[v] (Pa. 1880) In a suit for injuries received by falling into an excavation, defendant on cross-examination cannot properly ask the plaintiff whether she had not agreed to waive her right to damages for a consideration, as a party will not be permitted to lead out new matter constituting his own case on cross-examination.—Monongahela Water Co. v. Stewartson, 96 Pa. 436.

[w] (Pa. 1883) In an action for the price of coal, wherein plaintiff's witness had testified as to the amount of coal mined, held, that he could not be asked on cross-examination whether the coal had been paid for, as this was new matter pertinent to the defense.—Hughes v. Westmoreland Coal Co., 104 Pa. 207.

[x] (Pa. 1890) In an action for damages for running over plaintiff's intestate at a crossing, there was evidence that a foreman of a gang of workmen made gestures in the direction of deceased when he was driving towards the track. Held, that the omission of plaintiff's witnesses, when testifying in chief, to mention the gestures of the foreman did not make them new matter of defense, and they might be brought out on cross-examination.—McNeal v. Pittsburgh & W. Ry. Co., 131 Pa. 184, 18 Atl. 1026, 25 Wkly. Notes Cas. 181.

[y] (Pa. 1896) In an action for the death of plaintiff's decedent in a collision at a railway crossing, plaintiff examined his witnesses as to the location of the track with respect to the road along which decedent was passing and surrounding objects, and as to whether the night was dark, for the purpose of showing that the crossing was dangerous. Held, that defendant, on cross-examination, could bring out the fact that the train was plainly visible from the place where it became decedent's duty to look for approaching trains, so as to entitle it to a nonsuit on the ground that decedent failed in such duty.—Sullivan v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co., 175 Pa. 361, 34 Atl. 798.

[yy] (S. C. 1890) In trespass for entering and taking iron rails which defendant had leased to plaintiff, defendant alleged a license to enter and take them upon condition broken under the contract. Plaintiff on cross-examination admitted her signature to the agreement, and that she claimed under it. Held, that defendant could establish its defense by cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses.—Willoughby v. Northeastern R. Co., 32 S. C. 410, 11 S. E. 339.

[z] (Wis. 1884) Plaintiff proved his ownership of a note in suit by assignment. Defendant offered no evidence on the subject, but when plaintiff was testifying in rebuttal upon other matters attempted to show by cross-examination that plaintiff was not the owner, but was attempting to collect the note by collusion with others. Held not proper cross-examination.—Parker v. Kelly, 61 Wis. 552, 21 N. W. 539.

[zz] (Wis. 1893) In an action by one claiming to have been ejected from defendant's train, defendant claimed that the son of plaintiff, and not plaintiff, had been ejected. Held, that it was error not to allow defendant to cross-examine the son as to whether he had had any trouble with defendant's conductor, what he had said to the conductor, whether he had been put off the train, and whether, during the few minutes prior thereto, he had not been engaged in a conversation or wrangle with the conductor.—Washburn v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 84 Wis. 251, 54 N. W. 504.

§ 954. —— Cross-examination as to consideration based on testimony as to execution and amount due.

[a] (Cal. 1882) One calling a witness to testify merely to the execution of a bill of sale may object to the witness being interrogated, on cross-examination, as to the consideration of the bill of sale.—McFadden v. Mitchell, 61 Cal. 148.

[b] (Ill. 1895) Where a witness testifies as to the amount due on a note, he cannot be cross-examined as to the consideration thereof.—Evans v. Murphy Varnish Co., 59 Ill. App. 87.

[c] (Iowa, 1883) Where plaintiff, in an action against an estate on a note, has testified that it was signed by the decedent, he may be cross-examined as to the consideration on which the note was based, as touching remotely upon the question whether the note was in fact signed by the decedent; also as to why, when, and where the note was signed.—Glenn v. Gleason, 61 Iowa, 28, 15 N. W. 659.

[d] (Minn. 1875) Upon an issue as to the execution of a note, a witness testifying as to its execution may be cross-examined as to all the circumstances connected therewith, including the alleged consideration, and defendant may, for impeachment, contradict him as to every point sworn to by him.—Lamprey v. Munch, 21 Minn. 379.

[e] (S. D. 1895) A witness called by plaintiff in an action on a note, who testified solely to the execution of the note, could not be cross-examined as to the consideration of the note, failure of which was pleaded in defense.—First Nat. Bank v. Smith, 8 S. D. 101, 65 N. W. 439.

[f] (Wis. 1885) Where a note sued on is alleged to be a forgery, and the payee testifies, in behalf of the holder, that defendant executed the note in her presence, she cannot be cross-examined by defendant to show that the note was without consideration.—Youmans v. Carney, 62 Wis. 580, 23 N. W. 20.

5. CROSS-EXAMINATION AS TO IRRELEVANT, COLLATERAL, OR IMMATERIAL MATTERS.

PARTICULAR MATTERS AS SUBJECTS OF CROSS-EXAMINATION, § 956.
CROSS-EXAMINATION AS TO IMMATERIAL TESTIMONY IN CHIEF, § 957.

Cross-examination of party as to irrelevant, collateral, or immaterial matters, see post, § 972.
Discretion of court as to cross-examination on irrelevant, collateral, or immaterial matters, see ante, § 926.
Irrelevant, collateral, or immaterial matters on redirect examination, see post, § 1004.

[a] (U. S. 1853) Impertinent inquiries in examining a witness, having no bearing upon the case, should not be allowed.—Day v. Boston Belting Co., Fed. Cas. No. 3,673.

[b] (Ala. 1857) A witness may be asked, on cross-examination, questions which would not be relevant or pertinent on his examination in chief.—Winter v. Burt, 31 Ala. 33.

[c] (Ill. 1891) A witness should not be interrogated upon cross-examination as to a matter upon which a party in interest bases no claim, or one which calls for an argumentative reply.—Truesdale Mfg. Co. v. Hoyle, 39 Ill. App. 532.

[d] (La. 1836) Much latitude is allowed on cross-examination which may extend to points irrelevant.—Hall v. The Chieftain, 9 La. 318.

[e] (La. 1885) A subject-matter, although not strictly pertinent, which has been opened up on examination in chief, may be pursued by the other side on cross-examination.—State v. Melton, 37 La. Ann. 77.

[f] (Me. 1838) Improper or irrelevant testimony cannot become admissible merely by being introduced by the cross-examination of a witness.—Norton v. Valentine, 15 Me. (3 Shep.) 36.

[g] (Me. 1842) On the trial of an indictment for a criminal offense, the presiding judge is not obliged to permit the introduction, even on cross-examination, of a collateral fact which may occasion a new and distinct issue.—State v. Whittier, 21 Me. (8 Shep.) 341, 38 Am. Dec. 272.

[h] (Mass. 1889) Where defendant's witness is asked, on cross-examination, as to the value of plaintiff's real estate, as to which he had not testified in chief, plaintiff cannot cross-examine him on collateral matters to show that his opinion was of no value.—Roberts v. City of Boston, 149 Mass. 346, 21 N. E. 668.

[i] (Mich. 1872) On cross-examination, a question calculated to draw out a fact which may be rendered material by further evidence is competent, although not accompanied by an offer to introduce such other evidence.—O'Donnell v. Segar, 25 Mich. 367.

[j] (S. C. 1831) A witness cannot, on his cross-examination, be asked irrelevant questions, with a view of calling other witnesses to contradict his answers; but he may be asked irrelevant questions with a view of obtaining from him inconsistent and contradictory answers, and of thus impeaching or destroying his credit.—Jones v. McNeil, 2 Bailey, 466.

[k] (Tex. 1884) The rule that only such evidence as is material to the matter in issue shall be introduced governs both in direct examination and cross-examination; but it is not applied with the same strictness in cross-examination as in the examination in chief.—Evansich v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co., 61 Tex. 24.

[a] (Ala. 1890) In an action against a railroad company for personal injuries caused by a low bridge, cross-examination of different railroad officials, who have testified as to the use and usefulness of whipping straps as signals, as to whether or not they had adopted whipping straps as warning signals after being mulcted in consequence of injuries by low bridges, is incompetent, as it multiplies the issues, and has a tendency to mislead the jury.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hall, 91 Ala. 112, 8 South. 371, 24 Am. St. Rep. 863.

[b] (Ala. 1891) In a criminal case, on the cross-examination of a witness for the state, where it is not proposed to show that he has been before examined in the case, or in any case connected with or resembling it, it is not error to exclude a question as to how many times he has been a witness in court.—Mitchell v. State, 94 Ala. 68, 10 South. 518.

[c] (Ala. 1893) On the trial of a prosecution for the larceny of a sum of money, the witness, M., one of the parties from whom the money was alleged to have been stolen, after she had testified in chief that she had money of her own, was asked on cross-examination, "Where did you keep the money that belonged to yourself?" Held, that the question, being as to irrelevant and immaterial matters, was properly excluded.—Martin v. State, 104 Ala. 71, 16 South. 82.

[d] (Ga. 1884) In a prosecution for using obscene language in the presence of a female, her husband being the prosecutor, she cannot be asked if the prosecutor had not offered to stop the prosecution if the accused would pay a sum of money.—Howard v. State, 73 Ga. 88.

[e] (Ind. 1881) A witness in a trial for murder, who has testified about dressing the wounds of deceased, cannot be asked on cross-examination whether one of the surgeons who dressed the wound was drunk, as it was improper on a cross-examination to enter into such a collateral matter affecting not the witness himself, but another person.—Batten v. State, 80 Ind. 394.

[f] (Ind. 1882) On the question of the utility of a proposed highway as affected by the actual condition of another highway not far distant as testified to by a witness, it is not proper on cross-examination to ask him questions relating to the causes of its defective condition, and why it has been so poorly worked.—Hagaman v. Moore, 84 Ind. 496.

[g] (Iowa, 1871) Plaintiff alleged that he had paid defendant $500 on account, but that on final settlement the payment was by mistake counted as $50, and on trial plaintiff produced his bookkeeper, who testified that the mistake occurred in copying the item from the book to a separate piece of paper in making a statement of plaintiff's account, and this item was exhibited to the jury. Held, that defendant's counsel was entitled, on cross-examination, to ask the witness questions as to the other items of charge and credit in the account with a view of showing that the books were improperly kept, and that if properly kept would show a balance due defendant.—Upton v. Knoll, 32 Iowa, 121.

[h] (Iowa, 1895) Where a witness on a trial for rape testified that the prosecutrix came to his house, and stated that she had been raped, questions as to whether she came to his house one evening to get in, when the marshal drove her away, and as to whether she had stayed there several nights, were not within the scope of cross-examination.—State v. Case, 96 Iowa, 264, 65 N. W. 149.

[i] (Iowa, 1895) On cross-examination by defendant's counsel of one jointly indicted with defendant, it was proper to exclude a question as to whether the witness thought it would benefit him to tell "that stuff."—State v. Weems, 96 Iowa, 426, 65 N. W. 387.

[j] (La. 1890) In proof of an alibi, a witness testified that on the evening before the commission of the crime the accused crossed his ferry and recrossed the next morning. Held, that he could be cross-examined as to other ferries and their distance from the place of the killing.—State v. McFarlain, 42 La. Ann. 803, 8 South. 600.

[k] (Mass. 1872) In an action on an award determining the amount to be paid annually for flowing land, one of the arbitrators testified, without objection, that they estimated the damages caused by flowing in summer only. Held, that no exception lay to the refusal of the judge to allow him to be asked on cross-examination why he did not so specify in the award, if the bill of exceptions did not show that the question was material.—Wood v. Willis, 110 Mass. 454.

[l] (Mich. 1863) Where in an action of divorce evidence is given to establish adultery at the time stated, and the alleged particeps criminis denies its commission, he cannot be asked on cross-examination if he had not stated the year before the alleged offense that he had had illicit intercourse with the party charged, for the inquiry does not relate to any matter in issue.—Dunn v. Dunn, 11 Mich. 284.

[m] (Mich. 1888) In a suit on a note by the indorsee of the payee, defendant alleged that it was obtained by fraud, and plaintiff knew of it, and showed that other notes were fraudulently obtained and passed to third persons before due. Held, that plaintiff could not show, on cross-examination, the reputable character of the third persons.—Mace v. Kennedy, 68 Mich. 389, 36 N. W. 187.

[n] (Mich. 1889) In an action for the value of land which plaintiffs allege defendant agreed to exchange for land conveyed by them, where the person who made the abstract for the land covered by plaintiff's deed has testified as a witness for defendant that there is no record of a patent from the government for the land, he may be cross-examined as to why he made the abstract showing title from the government, and where he obtained his information.—Dikeman v. Arnold, 78 Mich. 455, 44 N. W. 407.

[o] (Mich. 1894) In a trial for burglary, the defense being an alibi, where it appears that the police were warned that the crime was to be committed, it is proper to restrict the cross-examination of the state's witnesses, as to the source of the information, to matters bearing on the question of whether defendant was present at the commission of the burglary.—People v. Laird, 102 Mich. 135, 60 N. W. 457.

[p] (Mich. 1895) Whether or not the county attorney prepared the bail bond of a witness who has testified that he is under arrest, and is out on bail, is immaterial.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149, 63 N. W. 196.

[q] (Mo. 1888) In a prosecution for murder a question to a witness, who was a member of the criminal society to which defendant belonged, and was present at a meeting of it before the murder, and who has fully detailed his connection with the case, whether he has employed counsel, is properly excluded as immaterial.—State v. Mathews, 98 Mo. 125, 10 S. W. 144, 11 S. W. 1135.

[r] (Mo. 1892) When plaintiff has forced a trial by admitting that defendant's absent witness would swear to the facts set out in the affidavit for continuance, only such statements of fact can be read to the jury, and plaintiff cannot cross-examine affiant as to matters concerning the diligence used to procure the witness' attendance.—Osborn v. Emery, 51 Mo. App. 408.

[s] (N. Y. 1873) It was not permissible to ask a witness on cross-examination whether witnesses had been called to swear they would not believe him on oath.—Burvee v. People, 1 Thomp. & C. 289.

[t] (Or. 1885) A witness cannot be interrogated as to the mode by which his attendance as a witness was procured.—Hurst v. Burnside, 12 Or. 520, 8 Pac. 888.

[u] (Tex. 1880) The body of the deceased was found by certain persons who were not produced as witnesses on the trial for the homicide, and there was no evidence that defendant made any effort to have them produced. On cross-examination of one of the state's witnesses, defendant's counsel inquired what had become of these persons, and why they were not produced. Held, that an objection to this question was properly sustained.—Rye v. State, 8 Tex. App. 153.

[v] (Tex. 1889) After certain state witnesses had testified, on cross-examination, that they had not been paid by D. to testify in this case, they were asked if at the time of taking their depositions in a civil suit, at which time he told them they would be called as witnesses in this case, he had not paid them money, though he owed them nothing at the time. Held, that such evidence was irrelevant, and was properly excluded.—O'Connor v. State, 28 Tex. App. 288, 13 S. W. 14.

[a] (Mich. 1895) Where plaintiff has offered testimony tending to corroborate a witness of his on a certain matter, it is error to refuse to permit the witness to be cross-examined in regard thereto, on the ground that the testimony is immaterial and irrelevant.—Valin v. McKerreghan, 104 Mich. 213, 62 N. W. 340.

[b] (Wis. 1857) Where one party introduces immaterial testimony, the other party may cross-examine the witness as to the same.—Ketchingman v. State, 6 Wis. 426.

6. CROSS-EXAMINATION AS TO WRITINGS.

CAPACITY OF PERSON EXECUTING WRITING, § 959.
NECESSITY FOR PRODUCTION OF WRITINGS, § 960.
ADMISSIBILITY OF WRITINGS, § 961.
MANNER OF CONDUCTING CROSS-EXAMINATION, § 962.

Consideration for note, see ante, § 946.
Cross-examination as to consideration based on testimony as to execution and amount due, see ante, § 954.
—— as to fraud, see post, § 963, 964.
—— of party as to writings, see post, § 973.

[a] (Cal. 1872) On a criminal prosecution, the district attorney asked a witness on cross-examination if he had signed a verdict as a member of the coroner's jury. The verdict was produced and read to the witness as part of the question, and it appeared that it was to the effect that the killing by the prisoner was done with malice. Before witness answered the question the verdict inquired of was placed in his hands, and he was permitted to read and examine it. Held, that such cross-examination was not improper on the ground that it was irrelevant and inadmissible, and as an effort to prove the contents of a written record by parol.—People v. Donovan, 43 Cal. 162.

[b] (Cal. 1886) A question put in cross-examination as to a "side-line monument," not mentioned in the examination in chief, to a witness examined upon a certain map in evidence, is not responsive to such examination in chief.—Anderson v. Black, 70 Cal. 226, 11 Pac. 700.

[c] (Ind. 1892) Where a letter, identified by a witness, is to be put in evidence, a cross-examination of the witness, based on the letter, is proper before it is put in evidence.—Foss-Schneider Brewing Co. v. McLaughlin, 5 Ind. App. 415, 31 N. E. 838.

[d] (Md. 1861) Where a witness has testified for the plaintiff in reference to entries of measurements in his book, the defendant may cross-examine the witness in reference to these entries and the headings of the same, for all the purposes of the defense; the entire account, though composed of many items, is, in the eye of the law, but one memorandum and one entry, and the defendant is entitled to the whole of it.—Green v. Caulk, 16 Md. 556.

[e] (Md. 1881) Where in an action on a note, a witness has testified in chief as to his knowledge of defendant's handwriting, has examined the note, and has proved that it was in the handwriting of the defendant, he can upon cross-examination be asked "when he first saw the note," and "who showed him the note."—Herrick v. Swomley, 56 Md. 439.

[f] (Md. 1896) Plaintiff, in a creditors' bill against her deceased father's widow to set aside conveyances by him to defendant, alleged an indebtedness to plaintiff on a single bill for $26,500 purporting to have been executed by deceased by making his mark, and to have been witnessed by plaintiff's husband. The husband testified for plaintiff as to the execution of the instrument. Held, that it was not error to permit such witness to be cross-examined as to who were present and what was said by deceased at the time the paper was executed.—Duttera v. Babylon, 83 Md. 536, 35 Atl. 64.

[g] (Mass. 1883) In an action against a corporation for inducing plaintiff to purchase stock by false representations as to the solvency of the company, defendant introduced as a witness its treasurer, who produced his cashbook, and testified that he showed it to plaintiff before the sale. Held, that it was competent to cross-examine the witness for the purpose of showing that the book did not contain a correct statement of the affairs of the corporation.—Teague v. Irwin, 134 Mass. 303.

[h] (Mich. 1885) In an action on an assigned obligation, the assignee, if called as a witness for plaintiff, may properly be cross-examined as to any material fact affecting the execution of the paper.—Bulen v. Granger, 58 Mich. 274, 25 N. W. 188.

[i] (Mich. 1893) In an action on a note which the indorser claimed had been raised from $500 to $3,500, he testified that sufficient spaces were left before the figures "500," and the words "five hundred," in the body of the note, for the insertion of the figure "3" and the word "thirty," respectively. Held, that it was competent to ask him why he did not put marks in such spaces to prevent their being filled, if he did not know that it was ordinarily done, and if he cared whether it was left in such condition that it could be changed; such question being within the range of legitimate cross-examination.—Pearson v. Hardin, 95 Mich. 360, 54 N. W. 904.

[j] (Minn. 1893) It is improper, on cross-examination, to ask a witness as to the contents of a written instrument not in evidence; but if the party cross-examining desire to show the contents, and cross-examine upon them, he should, if the instrument be admitted, introduce it, and make it part of his cross-examination.—O'Riley v. Clampet, 53 Minn. 539, 55 N. W. 740.

[k] (Neb. 1896) Where, in an action on a bill or note, a witness is examined with respect to the genuineness of the signature alone, he should not on cross-examination be required to state his opinion touching collateral or incidental matters based upon a comparison of the disputed signature with others.—Norfolk Nat. Bank v. Job, 48 Neb. 774, 67 N. W. 781.

[m] (N. M. 1892) Where a witness in an action for the breach of a contract, the execution of which defendant claims was never authorized by him, testified that defendant wrote him several letters, in which defendant expressed the desire to have his name stricken from the contract, it was error not to permit cross-examination as to the reason, if any, given in the letters for such wish.—Kirchner v. Laughlin, 6 N. M. 300, 28 Pac. 505.

[n] (N. C. 1895) In an action to set aside a deed to land claimed by plaintiff under a will of the alleged grantor, plaintiff claimed that such deed was a forgery. Held, that it was not error to require the grantee and her husband (who had testified as to the execution of the deed), on cross-examination, to state whether the signatures to such will and codicil were not the genuine signatures of testator and the alleged grantor in such deed.—Kornegay v. Kornegay, 117 N. C. 242, 23 S. E. 257.

[o] (Ohio, 1886) Where it is sought to show the rejection of a claim against an estate, and the evidence of claimant shows a presentation of the claim to the administrator, its retention by him for examination, and that it was afterwards returned with no indorsement thereon and no verbal message, but with a letter which a witness for claimant stated was a rejection, the court should permit the administrator to cross-examine the witness as to such letter, or to introduce it in evidence on the cross-examination, or afterwards when he came to the introduction of his own evidence.—Yager v. Greiss, 1 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 531.

[p] (Ohio, 1890) The rule excluding oral testimony of the contents of a deed does not, on cross-examination of a witness, prevent inquiry as to his motives and purposes in procuring it.—Boyle v. State, 6 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 163.

[q] (Pa. 1841) If a witness be asked a question respecting a certain transaction, the opposite party, before the question is answered, may inquire and know whether such transaction is in writing; for, if so, the witness cannot be allowed to testify on the subject.—Rice v. Bixler, 1 Watts & S. 445.

[r] (Pa. 1848) Where a witness is called to prove a written contract, defendant may prove, by his cross-examination, circumstances occurring at the time which rebut a legal presumption otherwise arising from the written contract.—Bank v. Fordyce, 9 Pa. (9 Barr) 275, 49 Am. Dec. 561.

[s] (Pa. 1894) Witnesses who have testified as to the correctness of a map put in evidence by plaintiff, and as to the location of certain objects marked on it, may be cross-examined as to other points and distances on it.—Derk v. Northern Cent. Ry. Co., 164 Pa. 243, 30 Atl. 231.

[t] (Vt. 1888) In an action to charge one as a silent partner, where it is contended that the effect of a certain written agreement was to dissolve a partnership existing between the parties, and one of the partners testifies that all the parties continued liable on contracts entered into in the name of the firm, notwithstanding the written agreement, it is proper to ask him, on cross-examination, what he understood the relations of the parties to be after the execution of the agreement.—Currier v. Robinson's Estate, 61 Vt. 196, 18 Atl. 147.

[u] (Vt. 1888) It is also competent, on the cross-examination of such partner, to show that other claims against the firm, for which defendant was liable, if for any, had only been partly paid, though defendant was financially responsible, and to show the conduct of the witness as a member of the firm in reference to other claims against it.—Currier v. Robinson's Estate, 61 Vt. 196, 18 Atl. 147.

[a] (Ill. 1867) On a bill seeking to set aside a will on the ground of undue influence, where a witness has expressed a decided opinion as to the mental capacity of the testator, it is proper, on cross-examination, to inquire as to business transactions with the testator, occurring at about the time his opinion of the mental capacity of the testator had reference to, and as to how the testator at that time conducted himself.—Roe v. Taylor, 45 Ill. 485.

[b] (Ind. 1871) A witness testified to facts tending to show the insanity of a testator before the execution of his will and about the time the witness made a proposition to purchase land from the testator. Held, that it was within the limits of cross-examination to allow the witness to be asked, "If your proposition to purchase the land adjoining you from the testator had been accepted by him, would you have taken a conveyance from him?"—Rush v. Megee, 36 Ind. 69.

[c] (Ind. 1893) In a will contest, a witness who testifies to certain facts, on which he bases his opinion that testator, an aged man, was of unsound mind, may be cross-examined as to whether it is not his belief that old men, as a rule, are of unsound mind, because of a failure of memory.—Pence v. Waugh, 135 Ind. 143, 34 N. E. 860.

[d] (Ind. 1893) Where a contract entered into between testator and his grandson forms a part of the facts on which the witness bases his opinion as to testator's unsoundness of mind, it is proper to ask him on cross-examination whether he regarded the contract as a reasonable or an unreasonable transaction.—Pence v. Waugh, 135 Ind. 143, 34 N. E. 860.

[e] (Ind. 1893) The good faith of a witness who has testified as to testator's unsoundness of mind may be tested on cross-examination by a question as to whether he considered testator of unsound mind at the time of certain business transactions between them.—Pence v. Waugh, 135 Ind. 143, 34 N. E. 860.

[f] (Md. 1872) In ejectment, where the defendant claims under a will, a witness having stated that a testator had not such knowledge of his property and relations as to make a proper and intelligent distribution of his property, it is competent on cross-examination to question him as to his opinion of the propriety and intelligence of the several dispositions of the will; and the proper course to pursue in eliciting this opinion is not to hand him the will to construe, but to read to him the several dispositions, and question him in relation to them.—Waters v. Waters, 35 Md. 531.

[g] (N. Y. 1889) Where a subscribing witness, a layman, has testified to the formal execution of a will, and that he does not know whether testator was of sound mind, it is not proper, on cross-examination, to ask him, for the purpose of testing his credibility or intelligence, whether he thinks testator had mind sufficient to give the specific directions contained in the will as to the disposition of certain property.—In re McCarthy, 55 Hun, 7, 8 N. Y. Supp. 578.

Requiring production of papers used in direct examination, see ante, § 895.

[a] (Ga. 1892) Where plaintiff was permitted, in testifying about the time trains were due, to refresh his memory from a time card, which was his own, and which he did not put in evidence, it was proper to refuse to require him, on cross-examination, to read parts thereof.—Chattanooga, R. & C. R. Co. v. Owen, 90 Ga. 265, 15 S. E. 853; Owen v. Chattanooga, R. & C. R. Co., Id.

[b] (N. J. 1880) A party cannot demand that the witness of the other party be required to produce documents to be used in the support of his case, unless such documents become necessary on the legitimate cross-examination of the witness.—Wells v. Wells, 33 N. J. Eq. (6 Stew.) 4.

[c] (N. Y. 1804) Where a defendant cross-examines a plaintiff's witness, he makes him his own; and parol testimony of a deed or will cannot be given by such witness, without notice to produce the instrument.—Jackson v. Son, 2 Caines, 178.

[d] (N. C. 1887) Where a witness is examined in his direct examination as to an affidavit made by him, he may be questioned on cross-examination as to whether he swore that its contents were true, without a production of the document itself.—Harris v. Terry, 98 N. C. 131, 3 S. E. 745.

Admissibility of writing as evidence in direct examination used in refreshing memory of witness, see ante, § 892.

[a] (Cal. 1895) The state, after showing diligent effort to find an absent witness, offered the deposition of the witness, taken on the preliminary hearing. On cross examination, defendant produced a photograph of the absent witness, and offered it to the jury for inspection. Held, that the exclusion of the photograph was proper.—People v. Chin Hane, 108 Cal. 597, 41 Pac. 697.

[b] (Ill. 1875) Although the books of defendant may be proper and competent evidence for the purpose of rebutting the testimony of plaintiff, if offered at the proper time, they cannot be given in evidence, on the cross-examination of plaintiff, as a part of such cross-examination; and, if so offered in evidence, it is proper to exclude them.—Peru Coal Co. v. Merrick, 79 Ill. 112.

[c] (Ill. 1887) Where a witness, on direct examination, stated the contents of a letter to the jury, the original letter may be introduced in evidence on cross-examination.—Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Holland, 122 Ill. 461, 13 N. E. 145.

[d] (Iowa, 1888) In an action on a note, to which there is a counterclaim for rents collected by plaintiff for defendant, where defendant testifies, on his direct examination, that plaintiff has not paid over to him any rent since 1879, and that the last settlement he had with plaintiff was in 1882, a written statement of rents received and money paid out, which defendant admits he received from plaintiff, and covering time from 1881 to 1883, relates to the matter testified to by defendant, and is properly admitted on cross-examination.—Riordan v. Guggerty, 74 Iowa, 688, 39 N. W. 107.

[e] (Iowa, 1889) Defendant's soliciting agent, who took plaintiff's application for insurance, having testified for plaintiff that he had blank policies furnished him by defendant, may testify, on cross-examination, that a blank policy made an exhibit to the answer is of the form of defendant's blanks, and the exhibit may then be admitted in evidence.—Barre v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 76 Iowa, 609, 41 N. W. 373.

[f] (Kan. 1876) A city engineer was introduced as a witness by plaintiff, for the purpose of proving that an apportionment of a special tax, made by his predecessor, was incorrect; and his examination in chief disclosed that he had made subsequent apportionment of the same tax. Held, that it was not substantial error to permit the defendant, on cross-examination, to introduce the second apportionment.—Casey v. City of Leavenworth, 17 Kan. 189.

[g] (Me. 1872) Exceptions will not lie to the admission of a written memorandum of a conversation which the witness has detailed on direct examination, when such memorandum is elicited and introduced on cross-examination.—Brooks v. Goss, 61 Me. 307.

[h] (Me. 1872) In an action of trespass to recover for timber cut from mortgaged land, defendants justified the removal of the timber by virtue of an alleged parol license from the deceased mortgagee, and called a witness who testified to two conversations in the course of which such license was given. On cross-examination witness added that she had made a memorandum of these conversations at the time each occurred, and produced them, and they were offered in evidence by the plaintiffs. Held, that they were properly received as tests of the witness' recollection and of the degree of credibility to be attached to her testimony.—Brooks v. Goss, 61 Me. 307.

[i] (Minn. 1865) Where depositions had not been referred to in the examination in chief, and were not any part of the record offered by the plaintiff, and the plaintiff was not required to offer them in evidence, they cannot be produced in cross-examination.—Chapman v. Dodd, 10 Minn. 350 (Gil. 277).

[j] (N. Y. 1887) Where a witness referred to the record of the police court, and professed ignorance as to the result of a charge, the record was admissible as a part of his cross-examination, where it was used to enable him to refresh his memory by showing facts which he had either forgotten, or was unwilling to tell, and was not used for the purpose of contradicting him.—Laserowitsch v. Reiman, 6 N. Y. St. Rep. 246.

[k] (N. Y. 1895) In an action by a brakeman to recover for injuries received in coupling cars, it being alleged that the couplings were defective, a rule of defendant company that conductors, "with the help of their men," must know their cars are in a safe condition, is not irrelevant, as relating solely to conductors, but is admissible in connection with plaintiff's cross-examination.—Joyce v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co., 92 Hun, 107, 36 N. Y. Supp. 731.

[l] (Ohio, 1890) Where, on the trial of an indictment for the forgery of a will, a witness for the state testified that shortly before the date of the instrument in question, in conversation with the alleged testatrix, he read to her a portion of a letter written to him by a third person, having reference to a proposed testamentary disposition of her property, defendant is not entitled, on cross-examination, to have read to the jury a certain other portion of the same letter, unless he consents that the entire letter may be read.—Corbett v. State, 5 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 155.

[m] (S. C. 1889) In an action against a sheriff for an alleged wrongful seizure of property, the warrant and papers under which the sheriff acted may be put in evidence on the cross-examination of plaintiff's witness.—Owens v. Gentry, 30 S. C. 490, 9 S. E. 525.

Order and course of examination in general, see ante, § 908.

[a] (Conn. 1878) In the courts of this country—though not in England—the rule requiring counsel to show a witness a letter for recognition, before cross-examining as to the contents, applies where the witness is a party.—Morford v. Peck, 46 Conn. 380.

[b] (Ill. 1892) Where a witness has testified to the genuineness of a signature, it is proper, on cross-examination, to show him other admittedly genuine signatures of the party, and to ask him whether he based his opinion on said genuine signatures, and whether the spelling of these signatures was not different from that of the contested one.—Bevan v. Atlanta Nat. Bank, 142 Ill. 302, 31 N. E. 679, reversing (1891) 39 Ill. App. 577.

[c] (Ky. 1880) On an issue as to whether a county judge had signed certain bonds, he was produced as a witness to prove his handwriting, and on cross-examination he was shown a number of signatures of his own name, some genuine and others imitated, and was required to point out the genuine. Held, that this was an unfair test.—Loving v. Warren County, 1 Ky. Law Rep. 340.

[d] (Mass. 1838) On the trial of an indictment for forgery, a paper was handed to a witness, on cross-examination, with all the writing but the signature concealed, and the witness was asked whether the signature was his. Held, that the witness was not bound to answer without first seeing the contents of the paper.—Commonwealth v. Whitney, Thacher, Cr. Cas. 588.

[e] (Mich. 1871) On the trial of an action on an insurance policy, plaintiff denied his signature to the application produced by defendants as the one upon which the policy issued. On cross-examination counsel for defendant presented witness a paper folded so as to show only the name of plaintiff, and asked if the signature was his. Held, that witness could not be compelled to answer unless he was permitted to examine the paper to which the signature was appended.—North American Fire Ins. Co. v. Throop, 22 Mich. 146, 7 Am. Rep. 638.

[f] (N. Y. 1888) Where defendant introduces one of the parties whose name is signed in the note, as a witness to show that she wrote the name alleged to have been forged, and that defendant wrote her name by her authority, she may be required, on cross-examination, to write her own name and that alleged to have been forged, and the signatures may be submitted to the jury for comparison as a test of her veracity.—People v. De Kroyft, 49 Hun, 71, 1 N. Y. Supp. 692.

7. CROSS-EXAMINATION AS TO FRAUD.

PARTICULAR MATTERS AS SUBJECTS OF CROSS-EXAMINATION, § 964.

Cross-examination of party as to fraud, see post, § 970.

[a] (Idaho, 1893) Where a transfer of personal property is alleged to have been made for the purpose of defrauding, delaying, or hindering creditors, and facts appear in the evidence which have a strong tendency to sustain such allegation, much latitude is allowed in the examination of the parties to the transfer, and others in any wise connected with the affair.—Ferbrache v. Martin, 3 Idaho (Hasb.) 573, 32 Pac. 252.

[b] (Ill. 1886) In attachment proceedings, where a third party interpleads, claiming the property attached, and the charge is that the transaction between the debtor and the claimant was one in fraud of creditors, the rule is liberal in allowing a full examination of parties to such alleged fraud, when they appear as witnesses.—Hollenback v. Todd, 119 Ill. 543, 8 N. E. 829.

[c] (Iowa, 1895) Where, in an action against a sheriff, for attached property, by a purchaser before levy of the writ, defendant alleges fraud in the sale as a defense, and the original owner, as plaintiff's witness, gives evidence to prove the bona fides of the sale, it is proper to allow a full cross-examination as to the transaction, as bearing on its bona fides.—Klotz v. James, 96 Iowa, 1, 64 N. W. 648, 59 Am. St. Rep. 348.

[d] (Mich. 1876) A wide latitude of examination should be allowed to one cross-examining a witness who was a participant in an alleged fraud.—Anderson v. Walter, 34 Mich. 113.

[f] (Minn. 1895) It is reversible error, in an action to set aside a transfer as in fraud of creditors, not to permit an extensive cross-examination.—Nicolay v. Mallery, 62 Minn. 119, 64 N. W. 108.

[g] (Minn. 1896) Great latitude should be allowed in the cross-examination of the immediate parties to an alleged fraudulent transaction, and it is error to refuse to allow any such cross-examination having a reasonable tendency to throw light on the transaction, though the inquiry is as to matters not touched in the direct examination.—Cohen v. Goldberg, 65 Minn. 473, 67 N. W. 1149.

[a] (Ill. 1894) Where the issue is whether a certain note and judgment on it by confession were fraudulent as to creditors, and the maker testifies in behalf of the payee, in effect, that the transaction was bona fide, it is competent to show, by cross-examination of such witness, that he had admitted that he owed such payee nothing.—Silvis v. Oltmann, 53 Ill. App. 392.

[b] (Iowa, 1895) Where the vendor in an alleged fraudulent bill of sale was examined by plaintiff vendee as to his execution thereof, and as to the property described therein and its value, it was proper to permit, on cross-examination, inquiries as to who was present when the bill of sale was made, the consideration for the sale, the disposition made of the vendor of the funds received therefrom, and whether at the same time he deeded land to the vendee.—Chapman v. James, 96 Iowa, 233, 64 N. W. 795.

[c] (Md. 1866) Where the defendant had been examined by the claimant in attachment proceedings to identify the goods taken under the writ, as part of a stock sold by him to the claimant under a bill of sale, and afterwards, the claimant objecting, he was examined by the plaintiffs as to the manner of payment of the consideration, his connection with the goods, etc., for the purpose of showing fraud, it was held that this cross-examination was competent.—Howard v. Oppenheimer, 25 Md. 350.

[d] (Mich. 1883) A wife replevied, as her own, property that had been seized on execution against her husband, and on the trial called her husband to show that it belonged to her. Held proper to cross-examine him as to his own use of the property, and of its proceeds, and also as to his business, what he did with his earnings, and where his wife got her money to pay for the property in suit; such questions tending to discredit witness, or to show ownership in him.—Gavigan v. Scott, 51 Mich. 373, 16 N. W. 769.

[e] (Mich. 1884) In an action wherein the bona fides of a transfer of goods by an insolvent is involved, the insolvent may be fully cross-examined as to his insolvency.—Berger v. Clippert, 53 Mich. 468, 19 N. W. 149.

[f] (Mich. 1892) Where defendant attacked a sale of a stock of goods by a firm as fraudulent, and a member of the firm was examined by plaintiff as to the sale and change of possession, on cross-examination the witness may be interrogated as to various dealings between the firm and its members and their relatives; and it was error to rule that such facts must be shown by direct proof.—Pickard v. Bryant, 92 Mich. 430, 52 N. W. 788.

[g] (Mich. 1892) In an action by a wife to replevy goods levied on to satisfy an execution against her husband, which goods she claims under a bill of sale from him, executed after judgment, but before levy, the husband testified that such bill of sale was given to secure a debt due her for money borrowed 25 years ago; and other evidence showed that no note was ever given or any account kept of such indebtedness, and no demand ever made for the principal or interest. Held, that it was proper, on cross-examination of the husband, to show what property he has owned since such indebtedness originated, what the profits of his business have been, and his wife's knowledge, from time to time, of his business ventures and investments.—Miller v. Hanley, 94 Mich. 253, 53 N. W. 962.

[h] (Mich. 1892) When a judgment debtor undertakes to convey his property to his wife in payment of a loan made by her to him 37 years before, and it appears that no account of the debt was kept, no evidence thereof given, and no interest or principal paid or requested, the financial condition of both parties for the entire period is a proper subject for inquiry, and the greatest latitude of cross-examination should be allowed the judgment creditor in replevin by the wife to recover the property taken under execution against the husband.—Miller v. Hanley, 94 Mich. 253, 53 N. W. 962.

[i] (N. Y. 1863) After the testimony of a witness has disclosed facts sufficient to require the submission to the jury of the question of fraudulent intent in an assignment made by such witness to the plaintiffs, which question is in issue, he may be asked, on cross-examination by the plaintiffs, whether the act was done with fraudulent intent.—Persse & Brooks Paper Works v. Willett, 24 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Rob.) 131.

[j] (N. Y. 1863) Where the good faith of an assignment to the plaintiffs is in issue, a witness who testifies that he was superintendent of the assignor's business during a period extending beyond the time of the transfer may be asked, on cross-examination by the plaintiffs, whether he was superintendent under them after the transfer.—Persse & Brooks Paper Works v. Willett, 24 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Rob.) 131.

[k] (N. Y. 1891) In replevin for goods alleged to have been procured by W., defendant's assignor, with intent not to pay for them, it appeared that within two months of his assignment W., who was then insolvent, wrote plaintiffs that no one had any special claim upon him; that he was good beyond question. Upon direct examination, W. testified to facts designed to acquit him of any imputation of fraud. Held, that it was proper to ask him, on cross-examination, whether, when he wrote the letter, he intended that plaintiffs should understand that he was financially responsible.—Dobson v. Warner, 58 Hun, 602, 11 N. Y. Supp. 760, judgment affirmed (1891) 128 N. Y. 649, 29 N. E. 147.

8. CROSS-EXAMINATION OF WITNESS TO CHARACTER OF PARTY OR WITNESS.

QUESTIONS AS TO PARTICULAR REPORTS HEARD BY WITNESS, § 966.

[a] (Ala. 1867) It is not error, in the trial of a person accused of the murder of his wife, to refuse to allow the prisoner to ask a witness for the state on cross-examination, who has testified in proof of character that defendant's kindness to his wife was just like that of other husbands, whether he (the witness) knew of any other husband in the neighborhood who milked the cows for his wife.—Hall v. State, 40 Ala. 698.

[b] (Ill. 1890) Where witnesses who testify as to the defendant's good character are asked on cross-examination whether they have not heard of his committing a certain assault, it is proper to exclude evidence as to the details of such assault as pertaining to a collateral issue.—Aneals v. People, 134 Ill. 401, 25 N. E. 1022.

[c] (Mass. 1858) A witness who has testified that the reputation of another witness for truth is good cannot be asked, on cross-examination, what was the reputation of that witness for integrity.—Quinsigamond Bank v. Hobbs, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 250.

[d] (Mo. 1894) A witness testifying as to defendant's character is not exempt from cross-examination concerning contradictory statements made by him to the prosecuting attorney before the grand jury.—State v. Smith, 125 Mo. 2, 28 S. W. 181.

[e] (N. H. 1863) Where in a prosecution for rape the defendant introduced evidence of his reputation for morality as well as chastity, it was competent on cross-examination for the prosecution to inquire as to his reputation for selling liquor without license.—State v. Knapp, 45 N. H. 148.

[f] (Pa. 1861) Where the testimony of a witness for the plaintiff was assailed by witnesses on the part of the defendant, on the ground of her mental incompetency, who detailed facts and expressed opinions as to it, questions on the part of the plaintiff in cross-examination, the object of which was to draw from them an opinion as to her competency, are competent.—Bricker v. Lightner's Ex'r, 40 Pa. (4 Wright) 199.

[g] (S. C. 1891) A witness for the defense, who testifies that defendant is of a peaceable character, may be asked, on cross-examination, if he knows of certain particular acts of violence committed by defendant, for the purpose of showing that he gives defendant a character inconsistent with that inferable from facts known to him.—State v. Merriman, 34 S. C. 16, 12 S. E. 619; Id., 34 S. C. 576, 13 S. E. 328.

[a] (Ala. 1889) Where a witness on his examination in chief has testified that he had never heard anything against defendant, he can be asked, on cross-examination, if he had heard that defendant had worn "stripes."—Holmes v. State, 88 Ala. 26, 7 South. 193, 16 Am. St. Rep. 17.

[b] (Ala. 1893) A witness who testifies to the good character of defendant may be asked on cross-examination, for the purpose of affecting his credibility, and not for the purpose of affecting the character of defendant, whether or not he heard of certain offenses charged against defendant before the trial.—Smith v. State, 103 Ala. 57, 15 South. 866.

[c] (Cal. 1893) On the cross-examination of witnesses testifying to defendant's good disposition it was proper to ask them if they had heard of defendant's prior conviction of murder, and of his having drawn his pistol on different persons.—People v. Ah Lee Doon, 97 Cal. 171, 31 Pac. 933.

[d] (Ga. 1887) Upon cross-examination a witness was asked the following questions bearing upon the character of a party: "He was found a defaulter of public funds to the amount of about $9,000, wasn't it, doctor?" and, "Did you ever hear that Arthur had been found a defaulter to the amount of $9,000?" Held, that the questions were properly disallowed, not being within the sanction of Code, § 3874, providing that "the opinions of single witnesses cannot be inquired of on either side, except upon cross-examination, in seeking for the extent and foundation of the witness' knowledge." The questions quoted were not for the purpose of ascertaining the extent and foundation of witness' knowledge, but were an effort to prove conviction of a crime by hearsay. Such conviction can be shown only by the record.—Pulliam v. Cantrell, 77 Ga. 563, 3 S. E. 280.

[e] (Ind. 1878) A witness who has testified to the good reputation of a party to the action may properly be asked on cross-examination whether, on a previous trial, he has not heard the neighbors of such party testify that his reputation was bad.—Hutts v. Hutts, 62 Ind. 240.

[f] (Ind. 1888) Where a witness called for defendant testified that the reputation of the plaintiff for chastity was bad, it is competent to ask the witness, on cross-examination, what he had heard that defendant had said to others on that subject.—Binford v. Young, 115 Ind. 174, 16 N. E. 142.

[g] (Ind. 1892) A witness who testifies in behalf of the accused that the latter's character is good so far as he knows, may, for the purpose of testing his credibility, be asked, on cross-examination, whether he has heard that the accused has been arrested on various charges, and may testify that the accused has been convicted of shooting a turkey.—Randall v. State, 132 Ind. 539, 32 N. E. 305.

[h] (La. 1896) On the cross-examination of witnesses, to prove the good character of the accused for peace and quietness, they may be asked if they had not heard particular acts of violence imputed to the accused.—State v. Pain, 48 La. Ann. 311, 19 South. 138.

[i] (Mo. 1891) A witness for defendant, on a trial for the larceny of a cow, having testified that defendant's general reputation for honesty was good, was asked on cross-examination if he had not heard of defendant's having been indicted for the larceny of other cattle, and that defendant had been charged with violating the revenue laws by selling whisky without a license. Held that, although such evidence would not have been admissible for the purpose of rebutting defendant's evidence of good character, it was admissible in cross-examination to determine the credibility of the witness and the sources from which his knowledge was obtained.—State v. Crow, 107 Mo. 341, 17 S. W. 745.

[j] (Neb. 1895) It was proper, on cross-examination of a witness testifying in reference to defendant's character, to ask whether he had heard certain reports tending to contradict his testimony on direct examination.—Basye v. State, 45 Neb. 261, 63 N. W. 811.

[k] (N. Y. 1891) A witness, having testified to the good general reputation of a party before a certain date, was allowed on cross-examination to testify that he had heard at that time stories derogatory to such party. Held, that a refusal to allow him to speak as to such stories subsequent to that time was proper, that being no part of a cross-examination.—Morrison v. Press Pub. Co., 59 N. Y. Super. Ct. (27 Jones & S.) 216, 14 N. Y. Supp. 131, judgment affirmed (1892) 133 N. Y. 538, 30 N. E. 1148.

9. CROSS-EXAMINATION OF PARTY IN GENERAL.

IN GENERAL, § 967.
PARTICULAR SUBJECTS OF INQUIRY, § 968.
—— FACTS INCONSISTENT WITH TESTIMONY, § 969.
—— FRAUD, § 970.
—— LIMITATION TO SUBJECTS OF DIRECT EXAMINATION, § 971.
—— IRRELEVANT, COLLATERAL, OR IMMATERIAL MATTERS, § 972.
—— WRITINGS, § 973.
TESTIMONY INCONSISTENT WITH PLEADINGS, § 974.
CROSS-EXAMINATION OF PARTY EXAMINED AS A WITNESS BY ADVERSE PARTY, § 975.

Consideration of note, § 946 [b].
Discretion of court as to cross-examination of party, see ante, § 924.
Ownership or interest in property, see ante, § 947.
Voluntary statements, see ante, § 943.

[a] (Ala. 1890) Under Code, § 2818, providing that the answers to interrogatories, duly sworn to before and certified by a proper officer, are evidence in the cause when offered by the party taking them, it is competent, on cross-examination of plaintiff, testifying in his own behalf, to question him on material matters in regard to which he had testified in a deposition previously taken under the statute, though such deposition has not been offered in evidence.—Marx v. Leinkauff, 93 Ala. 453, 9 South. 818.

[b] (Colo. 1890) Where defendant testifies to a conversation with plaintiff, which discredits the latter's testimony, the refusal to permit defendant to be fully cross-examined as to such conversation is error.—Patrick v. Crowe, 15 Colo. 543, 25 Pac. 985.

[c] (Ill. 1884) Rev. St. 1874, § 25, provides that "if plaintiff * * * will state on oath upon the trial that he claims title through a common source with defendant, it shall be sufficient for him to show title from such common source, unless defendant * * * will deny on oath that he claims title through such source." Held, that defendant could not, on his denial, be subject to cross-examination.—Thatcher v. Olmstead, 110 Ill. 26.

[d] (Ind. 1889) Code, § 509, providing that "a party to an action may be examined as a witness," gives also the right of cross-examination.—Mosier v. Stoll, 119 Ind. 244, 20 N. E. 752.

[e] (Iowa, 1891) After a party to an action has been fully cross-examined, it is not error to restrict it as to questions relating to immaterial matters, or those which have been covered by previous inquiries.—Allen v. Kirk, 81 Iowa, 658, 47 N. W. 906.

[f] (N. Y. 1853) When a party supports his own motion by his own affidavit, he may be brought before the court to be cross-examined, and if he refuses to answer any questions, the court may strike out his testimony.—Meyer v. Lent, 16 Barb. 538.

[g] (Or. 1893) Where plaintiff, in an action on contract, discloses on his examination in chief only so much of the transaction as leaves an inference of the contract's legality, it is proper for defendant to bring out, on cross-examination, the remaining facts and circumstances under which the contract arose, and which show its illegality.—Ah Doon v. Smith, 25 Or. 89, 34 Pac. 1093.

[h] (S. C. 1832) Where plaintiff becomes the witness to prove his book entries, in an action for goods sold, he can be cross-examined by defendant.—Clough v. Little, 3 Rich. Law, 353.

[a] (Ala. 1894) In an action to recover for breach of a contract to sell and deliver certain produce at a fixed time and place, defendant may ask the plaintiff, as a witness on his own behalf, at what price he sold similar produce at the time and place named for the delivery.—Buist v. Guice, 105 Ala. 518, 16 South. 915.

[b] (Cal. 1881) When the question is whether a transaction amounts to payment of a note, and the plaintiff admits that he received it after maturity under circumstances of suspicion, he may be cross-examined as to all collateral facts capable of affording any reasonable inference of payment.—Moran v. Abbey, 58 Cal. 163.

[c, d] (Cal. 1886) When a witness, who is a party to the suit, has stated, on his examination in chief, a part of what he said at a certain time and place, it is competent to have him state, on cross-examination, all he said on that occasion.—Watrous v. Cunningham, 71 Cal. 30, 11 Pac. 811.

[e] (Ill. 1881) In an action by a broker to recover a margin from a customer, where the merchandise purchased has been sold by the broker at a loss, the plaintiff may be required to testify on cross-examination as to the particulars of the transaction of purchase.—Oldershaw v. Knowles, 101 Ill. 117, affirming (1880) 6 Ill. App. (6 Bradw.) 325.

[f] (Iowa, 1895) Where plaintiff sues for services rendered under a contract made on a specified date, cross-examination as to the exact date of his first conversation with defendant, which he states occurred during the preceding year, is properly excluded.—Kelly v. Stone, 94 Iowa, 316, 62 N. W. 842.

[g] (Kan. 1882) In an action for negligence, plaintiff testified in his own behalf that he was a farmer. Held, upon cross-examination, that it was allowable to ask him how much land he owned.—Field v. Davis, 27 Kan. 400.

[h] (Mass. 1858) In an action upon an agreement, the defendant was asked on cross-examination if he did not understand the plaintiff as meaning and intending to do all that was necessary on his part, and answered that he supposed the plaintiff meant to make a sure thing of it, and to do all that was necessary for him to do. Held, that the question and answer were admissible.—McIntyre v. Park, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 102, 71 Am. Dec. 690.

[i] (Mass. 1861) A party to an action for breach of warranty, testifying in his own behalf, cannot be asked on cross-examination if the adverse party made certain declarations to him after the transaction was completed; such cross-examination being incompetent because by it defendant sought to put in evidence his own declarations.—Carlton v. Pierce, 83 Mass. (1 Allen) 26.

[j] (Mich. 1885) Where a contract sued upon is not admitted by defendant, it is error to refuse to allow plaintiff to be cross-examined, before he leaves the witness stand, to show the unreasonableness of the contract, or that it could not have been carried out by either party.—Petrie v. Lane, 58 Mich. 527, 25 N. W. 504.

[k] (Mich. 1886) In an action by a traveling salesman against his employer for expenses in going to the city where his employer was located, it appeared that, by his contract, plaintiff was to be allowed "funds for his traveling expenses." Plaintiff testified, without contradiction, that his samples were to be looked after by him personally; that, as long as they were in his possession, he was obliged to go where they did; and that he had no orders to send them in by express. Held, that a question on cross-examination whether plaintiff might not as well have sent the articles in by express as to have taken them in himself was properly excluded.—Lamb v. Henderson, 63 Mich. 302, 29 N. W. 732.

[l] (Mich. 1887) In an action by one partner against his copartner on the common counts, where defendant on different trials had made conflicting statements concerning the existence of the copartnership, it was proper, on cross-examination of defendant, to ask whether there was any reason why he should not form a copartnership with plaintiff, it appearing that defendant had been in the business of the partnership before, and had leased it, agreeing not to engage in it for some years.—Miner v. Lorman, 66 Mich. 530, 33 N. W. 866.

[m] (Mich. 1889) The plaintiff, in proving damages sustained by reason of the prosecution, having shown that he had subpœnaed witnesses, and the amount that he had paid them, the defendant has the right, upon cross-examination, to ask what he paid to any one of them.—Thurston v. Wright, 77 Mich. 96, 43 N. W. 860.

[n] (Mich. 1890) Defendant having testified that he had promised to pay the note sued on if plaintiff would discount it, he was properly asked how much he had offered to pay for it.—Steers v. Holmes, 79 Mich. 430, 44 N. W. 922.

[o] (Mich. 1890) In an action for assault and battery and malicious prosecution, it is not error to allow defendant to be cross-examined fully in regard to his former relations with plaintiff.—Peterson v. Toner, 80 Mich. 350, 45 N. W. 346.

[p] (Mich. 1892) In an action to recover damages for personal injuries caused by the bite of a dog, it is error to permit plaintiff's counsel, in his cross-examination of defendant, to inquire into defendant's disposition of his property pending the suit.—French v. Wilkinson, 93 Mich. 322, 53 N. W. 530.

[q] (Mich. 1893) In an action for services, it is error to require defendant to state on cross-examination that plaintiffs were depending on their labor for their living.—Curren v. Ampersee, 96 Mich. 553, 56 N. W. 87.

[qq] (Minn. 1886) In an action by F. against a sheriff for an alleged wrongful seizure of wheat, the sheriff justified under a writ of attachment against J., the brother of F. F. testified that he bought the wheat of his sister; that she lived with J., their brother; that she had bought the land of J.; and that J. had raised the wheat for her. Held, that defendant was entitled, on cross-examination, to inquire fully into the consideration and circumstances of the alleged sale.—Homberger v. Brandenberg, 35 Minn. 401, 29 N. W. 123.

[qqq] (Minn. 1894) A party to an action may be questioned on cross-examination as to a statement made by him when a witness before a grand jury, when such statement is not merely impeaching, but the admission of a fact material in the case.—Loveland v. Cooley, 59 Minn. 259, 61 N. W. 138.

[rr] (Mo. 1890) Plaintiff in ejectment who claims under a deed conveying the land by metes and bounds cannot be cross-examined as to whether or not he purchased by the acre.—Bell v. Jamison, 102 Mo. 71, 14 S. W. 714.

[rr] (Neb. 1887) In an action against one who had been a witness in a former suit against a third party on the same cause of action, defendant may be cross-examined as to his testimony in the former suit.—Lamb v. Briggs, 22 Neb. 138, 34 N. W. 217.

[ss] (Neb. 1887) In an action for malicious prosecution it was claimed by defendant, who was a constable, that he had sufficient cause for making the complaint against plaintiff, charging him with the crime of burglary—his information being the confession of a youth whom he had previously arrested for the same crime, which confession was voluntarily given, and by which he implicated plaintiff as being a confederate and accomplice; these facts being testified to by defendant. On his cross-examination he was asked if, prior to the confession, and while the youth was in custody, he did not, in the hearing of the party under arrest, tell another constable to take him to jail, and by the time he had lain there long enough he would confess, or language to that effect. Objection was made and the objection sustained. Held error.—Dorsey v. Clapp, 22 Neb. 564, 35 N. W. 389.

[ss] (Neb. 1888) In replevin by the assignee of the property, where plaintiff is called to prove the assignment, he may be cross-examined as to the character of the assignment, and as to whether the avails of the action are to be paid to the assignor.—Grimes v. Cannell, 23 Neb. 187, 36 N. W. 479.

[tt] (N. Y. 1877) In an action for meal and middlings delivered to third persons, plaintiff claimed that such third persons were carrying on a distillery as defendant's agents, and sought to establish it by proof of defendant's acts and apparent relations with such third persons, such as his stocking the distillery, disposing of the products, furnishing money and credits, claiming to own the property, etc. Held, that it was not error to permit plaintiff to be asked on cross-examination whether his circumstances were such that he had been in need of money during the time that he had permitted the alleged account to run.—McDougall v. Hess, 68 N. Y. 620.

[tt] (N. Y. 1890) In an action for money which plaintiff alleged he had loaned to defendant to promote an election at which they were both candidates, upon his redirect examination defendant testified that there was a treasurer holding the funds for disbursement at the election. Upon cross-examination he was asked to give the name of the treasurer. Held properly excluded, there being no claim that plaintiff had himself delivered the money to the treasurer.—Avery v. Mattice, 56 Hun, 639, 9 N. Y. Supp. 106, judgment affirmed (1892) 132 N. Y. 601, 30 N. E. 1152.

[uu] (N. Y. 1894) In an action for commissions for procuring a sale of land to defendant it is error to permit defendant to be asked on cross-examination what profits he finally made on resale of the land procured for him by plaintiff, as such question tends to prejudice the jury.—Dodge v. Weill, 81 Hun, 113, 30 N. Y. Supp. 681.

[uu] (N. C. 1842) Where a party takes his oath under the "book debt" law, it is competent for the opposite party to cross-examine him, both as to the articles and the price charged, with a view to contradict or discredit him, as he might do with regard to any other witness swearing to the account, the party so swearing being considered as a witness in his own cause.—Colbert v. Piercy, 25 N. C. 77.

[vv] (N. C. 1894) Where a plaintiff testifies in his own behalf, it is error to ask him, on cross-examination, whether the question at issue had not been tried before in that action, and found against him by the jury, since the former verdict should not be considered by the jury.—Grubbs v. Stevenson, 114 N. C. 277, 19 S. E. 643.

[vv] (Ohio, 1860) At whatever stage of the trial a party offers himself as a witness, he may, on cross-examination, be interrogated as to admissions or communications made to his counsel, and they may be proved by the attorney, either as evidence in chief, or for the purpose of impeachment.—King v. Barrett, 11 Ohio St. 261.

[ww] (Pa. 1873) In an action by a superintendent against a corporation for his wrongful dismissal, he, being called as a witness, may be cross-examined as to whether he faithfully performed his duties.—Henderson v. Hydraulic Works, 9 Phila. 100.

[ww] (Pa. 1893) In an action for personal injuries, defendant cannot complain because plaintiff's counsel is allowed to ask her why she did not have a physician to attend her after she was injured, when defendant's counsel had previously asked her questions on the same subject.—Feather v. City of Reading, 155 Pa. 187, 26 Atl. 212.

[xx] (S. C. 1894) Plaintiff testified to a transaction between him and defendant in the purchase and sale, on joint account, of a certain gold mine; and no objection was made until he was about to disclose the division made of the profits. Held, that it was not error to permit defendant to testify on cross-examination as to such transaction.—Willis v. Hammond, 41 S. C. 153, 19 S. E. 310.

[xx] (Tex. 1888) In an action by an administrator d. b. n. against an executor for alleged conversion of assets of the estate, where defendant has testified in his own behalf, in chief, to the employment by him of attorneys for the estate, and the payment of their fee, and claimed a credit therefor, plaintiff may cross-examine him as to the necessity of such employment of attorneys, the reasonableness of the contract, and the amount of the retainer agreed on.—Grothaus v. Witte, 72 Tex. 124, 11 S. W. 1032.

[yy] (Tex. 1896) Where, in an action for personal injuries, several physicians, whose testimony and credibility are unimpeached, testify to the extent of the injuries, and the court has refused to order the examination of the person injured, by physicians appointed by the court, it is not reversible error to refuse to allow plaintiff to be questioned as to his willingness to permit the examination.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Pendery, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 60, 36 S. W. 793.

[zz] (Vt. 1894) On an issue whether the sum charged for serving a writ was more than the legal fee, it was proper to require defendant to answer on cross-examination whether he knew any reason why the fee as charged was not correct.—Hamilton v. Gray, 67 Vt. 233, 31 Atl. 315, 48 Am. St. Rep. 811.

[zz] (Wis. 1896) In an action by a physician for services there was no dispute as to the number of his visits or items of charges. Plaintiff testified as to the value of his services, the nature of his treatment, and that they were worth the amount charged. Held, that it was not error to refuse to permit defendant to cross-examine him as to the amount charged for particular visits, and what they were worth, where the court offered to permit defendant to examine him as to what he had done, and show that his services were not worth anything.—Wurdeman v. Barnes, 92 Wis. 206, 66 N. W. 111.

Cross-examination of witness as to facts inconsistent with testimony in general, see ante, § 936.

[a] (U. S. 1884) In an action by a passenger against a carrier, for injuries sustained through the negligence of defendant's servant, defendant, in order to prove that plaintiff was a trespasser, may ask plaintiff, on cross-examination, if he did not refuse to pay his fare or leave the coach, when plaintiff has testified that he was rightfully in the coach as a passenger under the usual conditions.—Gilmer v. Higley, 110 U. S. 47, 3 Sup. Ct. 471, 28 L. Ed. 62.

[b] (Ala. 1887) Refusal to allow plaintiff, who had testified that the land, as incumbered by the grantor, was worth but ten cents per acre, to be asked, on cross-examination, if he had not been offered one dollar per acre for it, is reversible error.—Clark v. Zeigler, 85 Ala. 154, 4 South. 669.

[c] (Conn. 1896) On a trial for arson there was evidence that defendant had been carrying on a clandestine correspondence, under an assumed name, with a woman, and that the night before the fire he had taken from his office, subsequently burned, a picture of the woman, and mailed it to himself, under such assumed name. Held, that defendant having denied that he mailed the picture or was conducting clandestine correspondence, it was competent to show, on cross-examination, that he had traveled with the woman under an assumed name, and as her husband.—State v. Griswold, 67 Conn. 290, 34 Atl. 1046, 33 L. R. A. 227.

[d] (Ga. 1886) In an action on a note, where defendant pleads non est factum, it is not error to refuse to permit plaintiff to ask defendant, on cross-examination, if he did not authorize the person who signed the note sued on to sign certain other notes, the object of the question not being apparent, and defendant having already testified that he never gave such authority at any time.—Etheridge v. Hobbs, 77 Ga. 531, 3 S. E. 251.

[e] (Ind. 1896) Where, in an action to recover money alleged to have been paid under duress, plaintiff testifies that the money was paid under duress, she may be asked, on cross-examination, if she had not stated that she owed the money paid to defendant, and intended to pay the same.—Stanley v. Dunn, 143 Ind. 495, 42 N. E. 908.

[f] (Iowa, 1895) Where plaintiff, a physician, claimed that he lost his practice by being rendered unable to attend to it, in consequence of an injury sustained through defendant's negligence, it was proper to show on cross-examination that he lost his practice through immoral conduct.—Hood v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 95 Iowa, 331, 64 N. W. 261.

[g] (Mass. 1887) In a prosecution of two defendants for maintaining a liquor nuisance, where one testifies that he had no connection with the establishment during the time covered by the complaint, it is proper to cross-examine him as to his relations thereto prior to that time, for the purpose of contradicting his testimony in chief.—Commonwealth v. Clark, 145 Mass. 251, 13 N. E. 888.

[h] (Mass. 1896) In an action on notes given for a subscription to the stock of a corporation, the principal assets of which were patents on signaling apparatus, defendant testified that the stock and patents were worthless. Held, that it was not error to permit defendant, on cross-examination, to be asked whether he had not expressed a preference for said corporation over another concern engaged in the same business, in which defendant was interested, and whether he did not know that a certain city had made offers for the apparatus of said corporation, which were not filled.—Watts v. Stevenson, 165 Mass. 518, 43 N. E. 497.

[i] (Mich. 1865) Where a woman brought trover against the mortgagee of a horse sold without her authority by her husband, and testified that she never sold the horse, nor authorized her husband to sell him, and, if she had her rights, the horse would still have been in her possession, it was held that the question on cross-examination whether at any time between the sale on chattel mortgage and the removal of the horse she notified the purchaser that the horse was hers was legitimate.—Dann v. Cudney, 13 Mich. 239, 87 Am. Dec. 755.

[j] (Mich. 1893) Where defendant testifies that a building in controversy was worth $400 or $500, it is not error to require him to state on cross-examination that he only paid $85 for it.—Curren v. Ampersee, 96 Mich. 553, 56 N. W. 87.

[k] (Minn. 1893) In an action to recover property levied on as that of another, it is proper, on cross-examination, to question plaintiff in regard to his admissions to third parties, touching the ownership of the property in controversy.—Olson v. Swensen, 53 Minn. 516, 55 N. W. 596.

[l] (N. Y. 1867) Where, in an action to recover damages for the conversion of property, plaintiff testified on his own behalf as to the value of the articles, it was held to be competent on cross-examination to prove the price paid for the same at two business sales previous to the commencement of the action.—Wells v. Kelsey, 37 N. Y. 143, 4 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 243.

[m] (N. Y. 1872) When part of the case or defense is based on the state of mind, at a certain time, of a party to the action, who becomes a witness on the trial, it is pertinent and proper that he should state (in answer to leading questions from the opposite party) what was his declaration as to his state of mind at a subsequent time, in reference to a subject alleged by him to have induced that former state of mind which was essential to his cause of action.—Livingston v. Keech, 34 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Jones & S.) 547.

[n] (N. Y. 1886) In an action for breach of a contract to employ plaintiff in a theatrical company, where the employment of plaintiff for a stated period is denied by defendant, it is competent, on the question of defendant's credibility, to show on his cross-examination that he had employed other members of the company for a stated period, as claimed by plaintiff he had employed her, and that such other members had recovered their compensation.—Praeger v. Mestayer, 54 N. Y. Super. Ct. (22 Jones & S.) 100.

[o] (N. Y. 1888) On cross-examination of defendant in an action for wages, where the evidence of the parties conflicted as to whether plaintiff was to receive $2.75 or $2.50 per day, it was proper to ask, "Have you paid any other men who worked on the job more than $2.50 per day?" to test the sincerity of the witness as to whether the understanding was that plaintiff should receive $2.50 or $2.75.—Richards v. Derrick, 49 Hun, 610, 2 N. Y. Supp. 31.

[p] (N. Y. 1889) Where, in a suit to recover for legal services, defendant had testified that he had told plaintiffs that one W. had contracted to pay all the expenses of a certain suit, in which plaintiffs had been engaged, and the expenses of which were in litigation, it was proper cross-examination to ask defendant if he had not paid other claims like the one in suit.—Stanley v. Pickhardt, 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. (25 Jones & S.) 147, 6 N. Y. Supp. 930, judgment affirmed (1891) 127 N. Y. 649, 27 N. E. 856.

[q] (Tex. 1895) Where a defendant in a criminal case denied having lived in a certain place, it was proper for the prosecution to ask, on a cross-examination, if he was not at a house in that place when officers were searching it for a murderer.—Craft v. State (Cr. App.) 31 S. W. 367.

[r] (Vt. 1895) Where defendant testified as to the value of his real estate, including improvements, it was proper cross-examination to ask him the cost of the buildings and the value of a portion of the real estate, for the purpose of showing that the value of a portion was greater than the amount given on direct examination as the value of the whole.—Morrill v. Palmer, 68 Vt. 1, 33 Atl. 829, 33 L. R. A. 411.

[s] (Wis. 1890) In a suit for personal injuries caused by falling upon a defective sidewalk, several witnesses testified that plaintiff was intoxicated at the time, which he denied. Held proper, on cross-examination, to allow the question, "Are you not habitually in the habit of getting drunk?" as tending to show that he was drunk at the time.—McCracken v. Village of Markesan, 76 Wis. 499, 45 N. W. 323.

Cross-examination of witnesses in general as to fraud, see ante, §§ 963, 964.

Inquiry as to fraud on direct examination, see ante, § 836.

[a] (U. S. 1892) In an action for wrongful attachment based on an affidavit that plaintiff was "about to convert his property or a part thereof into money for the purpose of placing it beyond the reach of his creditors," there was evidence at the trial to show an intent on plaintiff's part at the time of the suing out and levy of the attachment to defraud his creditors by secreting his property by putting it into the shape of notes, and by fraudulently placing them beyond the reach of his creditors; and plaintiff testified in chief on direct examination that on the day of the levy or the next day a large amount owed to him was put in the shape of negotiable notes. Held, that plaintiff might properly be asked on cross-examination what he had done with such notes.—Eames v. Kaiser, 142 U. S. 488, 12 Sup. Ct. 302, 35 L. Ed. 1091.

[b] (Ill. 1873) Where plaintiff in replevin, basing his title to the property on a chattel mortgage, gives a full history of the transaction resulting in the giving of the mortgage while testifying in his own behalf, great latitude should be allowed in his cross-examination, especially where fraud is charged in obtaining the mortgage.—Strohm v. Hayes, 70 Ill. 41.

[c] (Ill. 1880) In replevin by A., the purchaser of certain cattle, against B., who had levied execution upon them, and claimed that the sale was fraudulent, held, that A. might be asked, on cross-examination, whether he had received any money from the vendor of the cattle, or any of his family, since the year of the sale.—Brosseau v. Warren, 6 Ill. App. (6 Bradw.) 450.

[d] (Ill. 1889) In replevin by one claiming goods under an absolute sale against an attaching creditor, the vendor, having testified in his examination in chief that he had on the same day given the vendee a note and mortgage of the goods, may be cross-examined by the attaching creditor fully in regard thereto.—Huschle v. Morris, 31 Ill. App. 545.

[e] (Iowa, 1885) On cross-examination, a party claiming to own property seized on execution against another, which it is alleged has been transferred to the claimant in fraud of creditors, may be asked whether he did not know there were judgments against his vendor, and as to how he obtained the means used by him in making such purchase, even though no inquiry was made on examination in chief in relation to these matters.—Clark v. Reiniger, 66 Iowa, 507, 24 N. W. 16.

[f] (Iowa, 1895) Where one intervenes, claiming attached goods under a mortgage, the attachment defendant, as a witness for plaintiff, may be asked whether he told the intervener, when he executed the mortgage, that he had conveyed his homestead to his wife, to show his intent in executing the mortgage.—Bussard v. Bullitt, 95 Iowa, 736, 64 N. W. 658.

[g] (Mich. 1878) An assignee of goods, bringing replevin against a constable who had levied on them under an execution against the assignor, may be cross-examined as to whether he was not wholly irresponsible at the time of the assignment, if the purpose is to show that it was a fraud on creditors.—Jennings v. Prentice, 39 Mich. 421.

[h] (Mich. 1888) Plaintiff, as indorsee of a note, sued the maker, who defended on the ground that plaintiff had purloined the note from the payee and forged the indorsement, the payee being dead. It appeared from plaintiff's testimony that the payee had kept the note in his pocketbook. Held, that it was proper to ask plaintiff, on cross-examination, if after payee's death he had the pocketbook in his possession, being material to defendant's theory of the case.—Hillman v. Schwenk, 68 Mich. 293, 36 N. W. 77; Id., 68 Mich. 297, 36 N. W. 670.

[i] (Mich. 1888) In a suit on a note, which defendant alleges was obtained by fraud, defendant may be asked, on cross-examination, just where the fraud was.—Mace v. Kennedy, 68 Mich. 389, 36 N. W. 187.

[k] (Minn. 1868) In replevin for goods of which plaintiff claimed to be the general owner, the defense was that the sale to plaintiff was fraudulent. Plaintiff, on the trial, identified a bill of sale to him, proved the execution and delivery to himself, and testified as to the delivery of goods thereunder. Held, that defendant might, upon cross-examination, go into all the circumstances of the sale tending to characterize the delivery thereunder as fraudulent.—Dodge v. Chandler, 13 Minn. 114 (Gil. 105).

also appeared that the lessor, during the lease, remained about the premises, assisted in raising the crop, and appeared to be interested in it; and that plaintiff testified in chief that he raised the crop. Held, that it was error not to permit plaintiff to be asked on cross-examination who owned the wheat at the time it was threshed.—Allen v. Fortier, 37 Minn. 218, 34 N. W. 21.

[m] (Minn. 1892). On an issue of title to property alleged to have been fraudulently transferred, much latitude is allowed on the cross-examination of a party claiming to own the same. Not only the circumstances of his purchase, but his financial condition, and his object in making it, and the situation, character, and value of the property, may become material matters to be inquired into.—Riddell v. Munro, 49 Minn. 532, 52 N. W. 141.

[n] (Neb. 1889) In replevin for corn seized on execution against plaintiff's husband, plaintiff cannot be cross-examined with a view of proving that the teams employed in working the farm were in fact her husband's, but were fraudulently transferred by him to his father and brother; no other evidence of that fact having been offered or given, and plaintiff not having referred to the teams on her direct examination.—Woodruff v. White, 25 Neb. 745, 41 N. W. 781.

[o] (N. C. 1874) A defendant, offering himself as a witness in his own behalf, may be asked if he has not transferred his property to his brother-in-law to avoid payment of any recovery in the present action, but remained in possession selling as agent, and his answers, although to be taken as conclusive, may be commented upon before the jury, as an embarrassed attempt to gloss over a dishonest act.—Lassiter v. Phillips, 70 N. C. 462.

[p] (Ohio, 1895) In an action to rescind a contract for the sale of certain mining stock by plaintiff to defendant on the ground of fraud, defendant cannot show by cross-examination of the plaintiff that after the beginning of the action plaintiff had entered into certain champertous contracts under which parties with whom plaintiff made the same were to furnish means for the continued prosecution of plaintiff's action and share in the proceeds of any recovery that might be had.—Ford v. Holden, 2 Cleve. Law Rep. 33, 4 Ohio, Dec. 364.

Limitation of cross-examination of witness in general to subjects of direct examination, see ante, §§ 949–954.

[a] (U. S. 1895) In an action for personal injuries, where plaintiff alleged, by way of special damage, that prior to the accident the business he was engaged in yielded him a certain sum, but at the trial made no attempt to show the extent or value of such business, the refusal to allow defendant to cross-examine on that subject was not error.—Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Urlin, 158 U. S. 271, 15 Sup. Ct. 840, 39 L. Ed. 977.

[b] (Ala. 1857) Where plaintiff seeks to establish the correctness of his demand by his own oath, he must swear to the fact of nonpayment, and cannot be cross-examined as to matters outside of the facts to which he testifies; but if the court allows him to testify, without swearing to the fact of nonpayment, he cannot complain on error that the defendant was permitted to cross-examine him generally.—Pryor v. Harris, 30 Ala. 118.

[c] (Cal. 1888) In an action by the indorsee of a note against the maker, refusal to allow defendant to cross-examine plaintiff, with the view of showing that the note sued on is without consideration, is not error where plaintiff has given no testimony on the point in chief.—Braly v. Henry, 77 Cal. 324, 19 Pac. 529.

[e] (Ill. 1892) Where a plaintiff, testifying in his own behalf, gives evidence as to his cause of action, he cannot be questioned on cross-examination in regard to matters of set-off.—Rigdon v. Conley, 141 Ill. 565, 30 N. E. 1060.

[f] (Ill. 1892) Where a party testifies in his own behalf, the opposite party has no right to question him on cross-examination as to matters which were not referred to in his direct examination.—Hansen v. Miller, 145 Ill. 538, 32 N. E. 548.

[g] (Ind. 1889) When plaintiff is recalled as a witness in chief, in an action for damages for removing the lateral support to land, and testifies merely as to the date of the sale of a part of the land, and that the land had caved before such sale, and had fallen away from under a stable, it is improper to ask, on cross-examination, if he does not know that the land could be filled in for 25 cents a yard.—Moellering v. Evans, 121 Ind. 195, 22 N. E. 989, 6 L. R. A. 449.

[h] (Ind. 1891) The seller of a car load of potatoes consigned them to a third person, who was to deliver them to the purchasers as called for. Instead of so doing, the consignee, in payment of the consignor's debt, wrongfully delivered them to another, who had knowledge of all the facts, and the latter sold them to the original purchasers, who also had knowledge of all the facts. Held, in an action by the seller for the conversion of the potatoes, brought against all these persons, that questions put to the seller on cross-examination as to whether or not the consignee was his agent for the purpose of selling any goods at about the time of the alleged conversion were properly excluded, unless the inquiry were limited to the goods in controversy.—Kavanaugh v. Taylor, 2 Ind. App. 502, 28 N. E. 553.

[i] (Ind. 1895) In an action for breach of a contract to employ plaintiff, he cannot be cross-examined as to other employment he engaged in after the breach of contract by defendant, where plaintiff did not refer thereto on his examination in chief.—Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Terrell, 12 Ind. App. 328, 39 N. E. 295.

[j] (Iowa, 1895) In an action by a wife for alienation of her husband's affections, it cannot be shown on cross-examination of plaintiff that her husband married her after having seduced her, to prevent being prosecuted therefor, and that he had no affection for her, the wife not having testified to such matter, on the ground that her going on the stand is an affirmance of the presumption of law that her husband had affection for her.—Bailey v. Bailey, 94 Iowa, 598, 63 N. W. 341.

[k] (Iowa, 1895) In an action on a fire insurance policy, the kind of building insured, its material and age, cannot be shown on plaintiff's cross-examination, where plaintiff had not testified on direct examination as to its value.—Davis v. Anchor Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 96 Iowa, 70, 64 N. W. 687.

[l] (Mich. 1890) In an action to recover wages, where the plea is the general issue, and there is no notice of set-off, and no evidence that the contract of hiring was that the board of plaintiff was to be deducted from his wages, he cannot be asked, on cross-examination, questions tending to show that defendants had paid his board for him.—O'Hara v. Mernan, 79 Mich. 222, 44 N. W. 599.

[m] (Mich. 1891) In an action for libel, where plaintiff is offered as a witness, any cross-examination affecting the merits of the case is admissible, whether the particular transaction sought to be shown by such cross-examination had been referred to in the direct examination or not.—Hay v. Reid, 85 Mich. 296, 48 N. W. 507.

[n] (Mo. 1884) It is not error for the court to permit the cross-examination of defendant as to matters not testified to in the examination in chief, where defendant makes no objection.—State v. Douglass, 15 Mo. App. 1.

[o] (Mont. 1893) Where plaintiff's direct examination in an action to recover possession of land and for the value of rents and profits related only to the stipulations of an agreement whereby certain lots were leased, inquiries as to plaintiff's information concerning the use which had been made of such lots were not proper cross-examination.—McCormick v. Gliem, 13 Mont. 469, 34 Pac. 1016.

[p] (N. J. 1886) Where a party to a suit denies the principal allegation or charge made against him, in his direct examination, he thereby lays himself liable to a cross-examination upon every circumstance or transaction with which he was connected, which may tend to establish the allegation or charge.—Pullen v. Pullen (Ch.) 5 Atl. 639.

[q] (N. Y. 1872) Where a party calls himself as a witness and is examined in chief, the opposite party may go into the whole case on a cross-examination, and need not confine himself to a cross-examination on the matters that were the subject of the direct examination.—Livingston v. Keech, 34 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Jones & S.) 547.

[r] (N. Y. 1896) Where a complaint alleged the employment of plaintiff by defendant for a definite period, and the answer denied this, and plaintiff, testifying for himself, stated no time for which he was employed, and defendant testified that he made no contract for a definite period, defendant should have been allowed to ask plaintiff, when he was called in rebuttal and denied several matters testified to by defendant, to state the period of time for which he was to be employed.—Burns v. Johnston, 8 App. Div. 406, 38 N. Y. Supp. 978.

[s] (Or. 1896) In an action for causing the destruction by fire of wood on plaintiff's premises, a question to defendant, on his cross-examination, as to whether it was customary to "backfire," in order to save one's property, was improper, where there was no direct evidence of defendant's having kindled the fire, and defendant, without referring to any custom, merely testified in chief that after he discovered the fire he raked away the briers near his fence to keep the fence from burning.—Willis v. Lance, 28 Or. 371, 43 Pac. 384, 487.

[t] (Pa. 1892) In an action by a pledgee of stock against a corporation to recover dividends to which he was admittedly entitled, and which were paid by defendant to pledgor, where pledgee merely testifies to his demand of the dividends, he cannot be asked, on cross-examination, as to his having received part payment of the debt, surrendered a note evidencing the same, and accepted another for the balance, when he retained the stock as collateral, and had no knowledge that the dividends had been so paid.—Boyd v. Conshohocken Worsted Mills, 149 Pa. 363, 24 Atl. 287, 30 Wkly. Notes Cas. 317.

[u] (Wis. 1892) In trover against officers for the seizure of plaintiff's property on execution against a third person, an attempt by defendants, who had not entered on their defense nor appeared as representing rights of creditors, to cross-examine plaintiff as to fraud in his title, was rightly objected to, as not being pertinent to his evidence on direct examination.—Welcome v. Mitchell, 81 Wis. 566, 51 N. W. 1080, 29 Am. St. Rep. 913.

Cross-examination of witnesses in general as to irrelevant, collateral or immaterial matters, see ante, §§ 955–957.

[a] (Ill. 1880) In an action for money loaned, where the defense was the statute of limitations, a question by the plaintiff to the defendant on cross-examination, "Do you take advantage of the statute of limitations to avoid paying the plaintiff this demand?" is incompetent.—Marshall v. Morissey, 6 Ill. App. (6 Bradw.) 542.

[b] (Iowa, 1876) In a suit for the use of the school fund to recover a certain sum of money on account of alleged sales of intoxicating liquors by defendant to a minor, and to habitual drunkards, in violation of Code, § 1539, it is improper to inquire of plaintiff on cross-examination why he instituted the suit.—Cobleigh v. McBride, 45 Iowa, 116.

[c] (Iowa, 1887) The plaintiff in an action cannot be asked, on cross-examination, who told him to bring the action, or whether he told his attorneys how much defendant owed him.—Walthelm v. Artz, 70 Iowa, 609, 31 N. W. 953.

[d] (Mass. 1893) Defendant was employed by plaintiffs to collect the moneys due them from an estate, under powers of attorney. In an action to recover from him moneys retained by him as his charges, as excessive, defendant testified that he was at the time in question employed as a grocer's clerk. Held, that he could be cross-examined as to what wages the grocer paid him, to show his capacity, and the reasonableness of his charges.—Norton v. Griffin, 160 Mass. 236, 35 N. E. 462; Coates v. Same, Id.; Bisbee v. Same, Id.; Allen v. Same, Id.; McKenzie v. Same, Id.

[e] (Mich. 1891) Defendant cannot cross-examine plaintiff when a witness on the stand concerning the arrangement which he had made to compensate his attorney for his services, as the statute authorizes a party to agree with an attorney for compensation, and such agreement is not a material matter to be inquired into on trial.—Denman v. Johnston, 85 Mich. 387, 48 N. W. 565.

[f] (N. H. 1892) Where, in an action for injuries caused by a defective highway, plaintiff testifies on cross-examination that he had previously been injured by a defective highway in another town, and sued therefor, and as to the character of such injuries, it is not error to refuse to permit him to be asked also whether he recovered of such town.—Jacobs v. Town of Croydon, 67 N. H. 591, 27 Atl. 122.

[g] (N. Y. 1888) Plaintiff, on cross-examination, cannot be asked whether he did not, as soon as he was injured, commence suit against defendant for the injuries.—Kane v. City of Troy, 48 Hun, 619, 1 N. Y. Supp. 536, judgment affirmed (1890) 119 N. Y. 640, 23 N. E. 1148.

[h] (N. Y. 1888) A question asked plaintiff on cross-examination, whether his wife had also sued the city for the same accident, was properly excluded.—Kane v. City of Troy, 48 Hun, 619, 1 N. Y. Supp. 536, judgment affirmed (1890) 119 N. Y. 640, 23 N. E. 1148.

[i] (Pa. 1895) In a proceeding to remove coexecutors for misconduct, one executor testified that money of the estate was used by him in a business in which his coexecutrix was a partner, and that the coexecutrix was indebted to him in her individual account. Held, that he could refuse to testify as to the items of the individual account, or to produce papers relating thereto, since it was a collateral matter.—In re Lafferty's Estate (Orph. Ct.) 4 Pa. Dist. R. 90.

[j] (Vt. 1889) It appeared that the note sued on was given to the prosecutrix to procure the dismissal of a bastardy proceeding against defendant, and had been transferred to plaintiff. Defendant contended that the note was given only on condition that the prosecutrix should be confined, which contingency did not happen. Plaintiff testified that he told defendant, when brought to his office under arrest, that he could either settle with the girl, marry her, or go to jail. Held that, on cross-examination of plaintiff, the court properly excluded all conversation relative to giving bail and procuring counsel as immaterial, and limited the examination to the subject of the settlement and its terms.—Harvey v. Brouilette, 61 Vt. 525, 17 Atl. 722.

[k] (Vt. 1892) In an action by a husband for alienation of his wife's affections, cross-examination of the husband, after his denial of having contracted a bad disorder while visiting a house of ill fame, as to whether he had not told his wife he was using oil of cubebs for a trouble he had, was properly excluded as immaterial, and because the courts are not judges of materia medica.—Rudd v. Rounds, 64 Vt. 432, 25 Atl. 438.

[l] (Wis. 1887) Plaintiff, suing for the price of an article made by him for defendant, testified, on cross-examination, to having made a like article for a certain other person. Held, that he could not be asked whether he ever got his pay, or asked for it.—Morawetz v. McGovern, 68 Wis. 312, 32 N. W. 290.

[m] (Wis. 1891) In replevin against a sheriff who had seized property which is claimed by plaintiff under two bills of sale from one M., defendant was not allowed to ask plaintiff, on cross-examination, "What went to make up the rest of the $3,000 [the consideration named in one of the bills of sale]?" Plaintiff had already testified in his own behalf of what a portion of the consideration consisted. Held, that the question was material, and that it is proper to allow a party to a suit, when offered as a witness, to be cross-examined fully on the whole case.—Weadock v. Kennedy, 80 Wis. 449, 50 N. W. 393.

See post, § 978 [a].

Admissibility of writings on cross-examination of party, see ante, § 961.

Cross-examination of witnesses in general as to writings, see ante, §§ 958–962.

[a] (Ala. 1893) A party, after having testified to the correctness of book entries, which he has examined to refresh his recollection, and to the fact that they were made in the usual course of business, may be cross-examined as to whether some of the entries had not been made since the origin of suit, without making the entries evidence in the cause, and although the book containing them has not been offered in evidence.—Little v. Lishkoff, 98 Ala. 321, 12 South. 429.

[b] (Conn. 1889) In a suit to collect taxes, where the issue is as to whether defendant had moved her residence from the state, and defendant exhibits and testifies concerning receipts for her board and room in another state, she may be asked on cross-examination why the amounts paid do not appear in the receipts.—City of Hartford v. Champion, 58 Conn. 268, 20 Atl. 471.

[c] (Del. 1846) The books of a party being evidence, with his oath, of a sale and delivery of goods, he may be cross-examined on this point.—Fredd v. Eves, 4 Har. 385.

[d] (Ind. 1890) On an issue as to the genuineness of defendant's signature to the bonds sued on, plaintiff's witnesses having produced letters which they testified had been received from defendant and believed them to be genuine, it was not error, on cross-examination of defendant, to exclude the question as to whether such signatures were genuine.—White Sewing Mach. Co. v. Gordon, 124 Ind. 495, 24 N. E. 1053, 19 Am. St. Rep. 109.

[e] (Ind. 1896) On cross-examination of a party, the court may permit him to be asked, after he has been shown and acknowledged having written a letter containing statements contradictory to his testimony in chief, whether he had written certain extracts from the letter, which were read to him at the time; such extracts not being garbled or wrested from their connection, so as to convey a false meaning, and the entire letter subsequently put in evidence.—Gemmill v. State, 16 Ind. App. 154, 43 N. E. 909.

[f] (Me. 1859) The defendant having been called as a witness by his own counsel and having testified, the opposite party on cross-examination was allowed to examine him as to his intentions in signing the contract in question.—Quimby v. Morrill, 47 Me. 470.

[g] (Minn. 1867) A witness who is also a defendant may be cross-examined as to the items in a ledger which he has offered in evidence.—Thayer v. Barney, 12 Minn. 502 (Gil. 406).

[h] (Ohio, 1890) On the cross-examination of a party offering his books in evidence to sustain an account, it is proper to ask him if he had not made as many as 24 mistakes in keeping his accounts within the last two years, which he had been compelled to correct.—Sheridan v. Tenner, 5 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 19.

[i] (Tex. 1888) When the testimony of the shipper in an action by him to recover for injuries to horses shipped by him shows that the contract of shipment was in writing, an objection to questions of defendant whether he did not undertake to feed and water the stock, and attend them at his own expense, is properly sustained.—Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Fagan, 72 Tex. 127, 9 S. W. 749, 13 Am. St. Rep. 776, 2 L. R. A. 75.

[b] (N. Y. 1891) On cross-examination of a defendant testifying in his own behalf to the terms of the contract on which suit is brought, his attention may properly be called to allegations in his answer which conflict with his testimony. It is not ground for objection thereto that he verified the answer by advice of counsel, and did not state therein his specific understanding of the contract.—Hare v. Mahoney, 60 Hun, 576, 14 N. Y. Supp. 81.

[a] (Ala. 1863) The introduction of one of several codefendants, as a witness by the plaintiff, does not constitute him a general witness in the cause, and it is not permissible for the defendants to examine him on any matter of defense not called out by the plaintiff in his examination.—Bell v. Chambers, 38 Ala. 660.

[b] (Ga. 1855) Under the act of 1854, granting to either party in a cause the privilege of a

viva voce examination of his adversary in open court, and providing that when subpœnaed a party shall "testify in the action as other witnesses now, by law, are required to do," parties to an action, when subpœnaed as witnesses in the case, stand on the same footing as any other witnesses, and are subject to the same cross-examination.—Wood v. McGuire, 17 Ga. 303.

[c] (Iowa, 1856) A plaintiff called as a witness by the defendant, and examined as to a certain item or fact, cannot be examined generally to support his own demand.—Everly v. Cole, 3 G. Greene, 239.

[d] (Iowa, 1856) Where defendant objected to a note's being permitted to go before the jury as evidence, on the ground of variance between the one offered and that declared on, and, plaintiff calling defendant as a witness on this question, defendant's counsel wished to examine him in regard to the consideration of the note, which plaintiff objected to, it was held that the only inquiry before the court was the preliminary one of variance, and that the objection should be sustained.—Converse v. Warren, 4 Iowa (4 Clarke) 158.

[e] (Iowa, 1861) Before Revision 1860, §§ 3980, 3981, defendant, if called by plaintiff, was not thereby rendered a general witness in the case, but could be cross-examined only as to those points upon which he was called in chief. —Arthur v. Blunt, 12 Iowa, 200.

[f] (Mass. 1886) Where, in an action of contract to recover certain sums paid by plaintiff to defendant for shares in a stock company organized to sell a patented article, which proved to be worthless, and the answers of defendant, upon being called as a witness by plaintiff, to certain questions put by the latter, tended to show that the article was of less value than represented by defendant at the time of the sale of the stock, defendant should have been allowed to answer questions afterwards put by his counsel tending to show that the invention was valuable.—Reeve v. Dennett, 141 Mass. 207, 6 N. E. 378.

[g] (N. J. 1854) Where a party to a suit is called by the opposite party as a witness, his own counsel may cross-examine him.—Teel v. Byrne, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 631.

[h] (S. C. 1847) If a defendant in "summary process" choose to embrace the alternative allowed by the rule of court, and answer ore tenus to the interrogatories propounded by the plaintiff, this gives no more right to the defendant's counsel to cross-examine the defendant than if he had submitted answers in writing, attested as usual, or had been examined out of the state by commission.—Hill v. Denny, 1 Strob. 338.

[i] (S. C. 1847) Where a defendant is called on, in the "summary process" jurisdiction, to give testimony, he cannot be cross-examined by his own counsel, as a person so called is not regarded as a witness generally, but the object is to extract from him a discovery of such matters as are set down in writing, this mode of proof having been authorized only in cases where, to the party resorting to it, evidence is inaccessible according to common-law rules.—Hill v. Denny, 1 Strob. 338.

10. EXAMINATION OF ADVERSE PARTY AS ON CROSS-EXAMINATION.

RIGHT TO CROSS-EXAMINE, § 976.
COMPELLING ATTENDANCE OF ADVERSE PARTY, § 977.
SCOPE AND MANNER OF CROSS-EXAMINATION, § 978.

Examination of adverse party in general, see ante, § 815.

Right to cross-examine and re-examine in general, see ante, § 907.

[a, b] (U. S. 1885) The Pennsylvania statute, which provides that a party to the record, when called by the adverse party, may be examined as if under cross-examination, is not applicable to a suit in equity in a United States court.—Dravo v. Fabel (D. C.) 25 Fed. 116; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Allegheny Valley R. Co. (C. C.) 25 Fed. 115.

[c] (Minn. 1896) A defendant against whom a default judgment had been entered could not be called for cross-examination by plaintiff on the trial of the issues raised by the answers of his co-defendants, under Gen. St. 1894, § 5659, providing that a party to the record, or a person for whose immediate benefit an action is prosecuted or defended, may be called for cross-examination by the opposite party, who shall not be concluded by his testimony.—Suter v. Page, 64 Minn. 444, 67 N. W. 67.

[d] (Pa. 1886) An administratrix, defendant to a suit, having an interest, may be called as an adverse party as if for cross-examination under the act of March 27, 1865, unless the plaintiffs have coupled with their bill in equity, as regards her, interrogatories for discovery, in which case she cannot be compelled to testify orally.—William Penn Building & Loan Ass'n v. Mayer, 2 Montg. Co. Law Rep'r, 41.

[e] (Pa. 1886) An administratrix, defendant in a suit, is a party having an interest therein, and cannot be called as an adverse party by the opposite side under the act of April 15, 1869.—William Penn Building & Loan Ass'n v. Mayer, 2 Montg. Co. Law Rep'r, 41.

Attendance of witness for cross-examination in general, see ante, §§ 912–915.

[a] (Tenn. 1889) Defendant's application for an order to compel plaintiff to appear personally at the trial, so that he might cross-examine her, was properly refused, where such application was made before the trial, and before any attempt had been made to take her testimony by deposition or otherwise.—Graham v. McReynolds, 88 Tenn. (4 Pickle) 240, 12 S. W. 547.

Scope and extent of cross-examination in general, see post, §§ 931–948.

[a] (Minn. 1888) In proceedings to probate a will, a proponent was examined as a witness for the contestants. Held, that under Gen. Laws 1885, c. 193, § 1, providing that a party to the record, or one for whose benefit an action is being prosecuted or defended, is compelled to testify as if under cross-examination, he could be interrogated by contestants concerning statements said to have been made by him to others concerning the mental capacity of the deceased.—In re Brown, 38 Minn. 112, 35 N. W. 726.

[b] (Pa. 1874) Where a party is called as a witness by his adversary, as on cross-examination under Act April 15, 1869, leading questions may be put to him, and there may be drawn from him any facts or admissions which weaken his case or strengthen his adversary's.—Brubaker's Adm'r v. Taylor, 76 Pa. (26 P. F. Smith) 83.

11. CROSS-EXAMINATION OF ACCUSED IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

PARTICULAR SUBJECTS OF INQUIRY, § 980.
—— FACTS INCONSISTENT WITH TESTIMONY, § 981.
LIMITATION OF CROSS-EXAMINATION TO SUBJECTS OF DIRECT EXAMINATION, § 982.
RECALLING FOR FURTHER CROSS-EXAMINATION, § 983.
WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS, § 984.

Cross-examination on voluntary statements by witness, see ante, § 943.

Discretion of court as to cross-examination of accused in criminal prosecutions, see ante, § 925.

Privilege of accused on cross-examination, see post, §§ 1043–1046.

Scope of cross-examination of accused by counsel for joint defendant, see ante, § 910 [b].

[a] (Ala. 1882) A defendant, making his statement under Act Dec. 2, 1882 (Pamph. Acts 1882–83, p. 4), authorizing him to make a statement in his own behalf, not under oath, is not subject to examination or cross-examination.—Chappell v. State, 71 Ala. 322; Whisenant v. State, Id. 383.

[b] (Cal. 1871) The fact that the accused offers himself as a witness in his own behalf does not change or modify the rules of practice with reference to the proper limits of a cross-examination, and does not make him a witness for the state against himself.—People v. McGungill, 41 Cal. 429.

[c] (Ind. 1886) When the accused testifies as a witness, he is to be treated as any other witness upon cross-examination.—Boyle v. State, 105 Ind. 469, 5 N. E. 203, 55 Am. Rep. 518.

[d] (Kan. 1896) When a defendant in a criminal prosecution has offered himself as a witness in his own behalf, he may be cross-examined to the same extent as any other witness, and he may also be recalled by the state for further cross-examination, but he cannot be recalled as a witness for the state, and compelled to testify in its favor.—State v. Lewis, 56 Kan. 374, 43 Pac. 265.

[e] (La. 1891) The state can, on cross-examination of the accused, question him in relation to matters referred to on his direct examination.—State v. Baker, 43 La. Ann. 1168, 10 South. 256.

[f] (Mich. 1891) Laws 1861, No. 125, permitting accused persons to testify, not under oath, in their own behalf, was repealed by Laws 1881, No. 245, permitting them to testify under oath, and the state may cross-examine a defendant, offering himself as a witness, although unsworn, to the same extent as any other witness.—People v. Robinson, 86 Mich. 415, 49 N. W. 260.

[g] (Mich. 1895) The defendant, on becoming a witness in his own behalf, is subject to the same rules of cross-examination, and the prosecution has the same right to inquire fully into his antecedents, as in the case of any other witness.—People v. Sutherland, 104 Mich. 468, 62 N. W. 566.

[h] (Mo. 1878) A defendant in a criminal case who avails himself of Act 1877, p. 356, testifying in his own behalf, subjects himself to the same rules as to cross-examination as other witnesses.—State v. Clinton, 67 Mo. 380, 29 Am. Rep. 506.

[i] (Mo. 1884) The defendant in a criminal case may, when a witness in his own behalf, be cross-examined as to any pertinent matter.—State v. Douglass, 15 Mo. App. 1.

[j] (Mo. 1887) If a defendant in a criminal case becomes a witness in his own behalf, he may be cross-examined and impeached as may other witnesses.—State v. Beaty, 25 Mo. App. 214.

[k] (Wis. 1881) Where a defendant in a criminal action offers himself as a witness in his own behalf, he is subject to cross-examination to the same extent as any other witness.—Yanke v. State, 51 Wis. 464, 8 N. W. 276.

Particular subjects of examination limited to subjects of direct examination, see post, § 982.

[a] (Ala. 1889) Where defendant, in a prosecution for murder, testifies in his own behalf, he may be asked, on cross-examination, where he was from the time of the killing until his arrest.—Rains v. State, 88 Ala. 91, 7 South. 315.

[b] (Ala. 1890) Where defendant, on indictment for assault with intent to kill, attempts to show that he committed the assault while intoxicated, and testifies that he had purchased a bottle of whisky just before, he may be asked on cross-examination from whom he purchased it.—Fonville v. State, 91 Ala. 39, 8 South. 688.

[c] (Cal. 1873) A defendant who becomes a witness in his own behalf, and undertakes, on his direct examination, to state all that transpired between two points of time, may be asked on his cross examination if he has omitted anything pertinent to the case; and his attention may be directed to the precise point by asking him if some specified thing did not occur.—People v. Russell, 46 Cal. 121.

[d] (Cal. 1883) To ask defendant, on cross-examination, the name of his father and mother, cannot prejudice him.—People v. Bowers, 18 Pac. 660.

[e] (Cal. 1889) Where a defendant in a criminal case has testified on direct examination as to his birth, parentage, education, and business, a cross-examination as to whether up to the date of his arrest he had ever been arrested was not improper, as extending beyond the scope of cross-examination.—People v. Fong Ching, 78 Cal. 169, 20 Pac. 396.

[f] (Cal. 1894) Where defendant in a murder trial, to show that deceased was of a quarrelsome character, testifies that he saw him stab a person in a difficulty, he may, on cross-examination, be examined as to what he saw in connection with the stabbing, to show who was the aggressor.—People v. Anderson, 105 Cal. 32, 38 Pac. 513.

[g] (Cal. 1895) When defendant, in accounting for his time on the night of the robbery, testified that he went to a certain part of the town, he could be properly cross-examined, as to what he and his companion were doing there.—People v. Clark, 106 Cal. 32, 39 Pac. 53.

[i] (Ind. 1877) One on trial for murder testified that he had had illicit intercourse with the deceased, had met her husband during his intimacy with her, and had killed her in a passion of love and jealousy amounting to insanity. Held, that he might be properly asked, on cross-examination, whether, at such meeting, the husband had forbidden him to further associate with her.—Greenley v. State, 60 Ind. 141.

[j] (Iowa, 1890) A defendant charged with burglary may be asked on cross-examination to state who was present at the time the burglary was committed.—State v. O'Brien, 81 Iowa, 93, 46 N. W. 861.

[k] (Mass. 1887) Defendant was indicted for embezzlement, and it appeared that the person from whom the money was embezzled had charged defendant with having spent it in "stock gambling," but defendant denied that such a charge had been made. Held, that on cross-examination defendant could be asked if he had not spent considerable sums of money in stock gambling, or in anything else, and could be asked how he obtained the money, such an examination to be confined to a period of time subsequent to that of the embezzlement.—Commonwealth v. Shaw, 145 Mass. 349, 14 N. E. 159.

[l] (Mich. 1885) A defendant in whose saloon a robbery has occurred, and who is alleged to have been concerned therein, may be asked, when a witness in his own behalf, if, when the officer came to his saloon, he assisted him in arresting the guilty person.—People v. Wallin, 55 Mich. 497, 22 N. W. 15.

[m] (Mo. 1893) On a trial for murder, where a witness for the state testified that defendant stated in his presence that it was a man by the name of T. who traveled with him towards the place where deceased's body was found, it was proper to cross-examine defendant as to the statement, for the purpose of showing that T. and deceased, whom defendant testified killed himself, were the same person.—State v. Avery, 113 Mo. 475, 21 S. W. 193.

[n] (Mo. 1895) Where, in a case of arson, the defense is alibi, and defendant, as a witness, simply states that he was not present at the time and place of the fire, it is proper cross-examination to ask him where he was at the time the property was burned.—State v. Harvey, 131 Mo. 339, 32 S. W. 1110.

[o] (Mo. 1896) Where, in a prosecution for seduction, defendant testifies on direct examination that he had constantly visited prosecutrix until after her alleged seduction, it is proper to permit him to be asked on cross-examination why he ceased his visits.—State v. Eisenhour, 132 Mo. 140, 33 S. W. 785.

[p] (Mo. 1896) When defendant has testified all about the homicide on direct examination, questions asked, on cross-examination, with respect to statements made by him before the coroner in regard to matters to which he had testified in chief, are admissible.—State v. Punshon, 133 Mo. 44, 34 S. W. 25.

[q] (N. Y. 1878) It is competent for the state, in a criminal case, to ask the prisoner on cross-examination as to the motives which influenced him in certain actions connected with the crime. —Blake v. People, 73 N. Y. 586.

[r] (N. Y. 1880) When a prisoner testifies in his own behalf that he lent money, it is competent, on cross-examination, to inquire as to the sources from which he received it, and evidence is admissible, to disprove the prisoner's statements, of his pecuniary necessities, the fact of his not paying debts, etc., at about the time.—Pontius v. People, 82 N. Y. 339.

[s] (N. Y. 1891) Where defendant, in an action for an assault and battery, alleged to have been committed while defendant was a police officer, testifies, on cross-examination, that since the alleged assault he and the police department had severed connection, it is error to exclude the question, "You were dismissed, were you not?"—Walsh v. Dolan (City Ct. N. Y.) 15 N. Y. Supp. 96.

[t] (Pa. 1885) A defendant who goes upon the stand and denies his guilt may be cross-examined upon every fact and circumstance that led up to it, or rendered it more probable.—Commonwealth v. Burk, 3 Lanc. Law Rev. 138.

[u] (S. C. 1878) Defendant's counsel in a criminal trial, in cross-examining a witness for the state, introduced new matter affecting the defendant. Held, that the prosecution, after the defendant had testified, could cross-examine him on the same subject and introduce witnesses in reply.—State v. Cardoza, 11 S. C. 195.

[v] (Utah, 1893) Defendant having testified in his own behalf, it was competent to inquire of him what his business and antecedents were for 20 years past, and to interrogate him as to past transactions to test his recollection, and to bring to light conduct that would affect his credibility.—People v. Hite, 8 Utah, 461, 33 Pac. 254.

Cross-examination as to facts inconsistent with testimony in general, see ante, § 936.

[a] (Cal. 1890) Defendant, having testified that he bought the horse, which he was alleged to have stolen, from one R., was asked, on cross-examination: "Where is R. now, do you know?" "When did you last hear from him?" "Have you made any effort to procure his attendance?" Held proper questions, as his ability or expectation to have R. corroborate his statement might throw some light on its truth. —People v. Cline, 83 Cal. 374, 23 Pac. 391.

[b] (Cal. 1892) On a prosecution for altering a public record, defendant may not be asked on cross-examination whether he had participated in the alteration of another record on the theory that guilty knowledge may thereby be shown, since a conviction may be based on a performance of the acts constituting the offense regardless of any fraudulent intention.—People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171, 31 Pac. 45.

[c] (Cal. 1894) On a trial for embezzlement, defendant testified that his employer permitted him to expend money for many different purposes, in order to promote the business of his employer; that he felt justified in what he expended; and that he did not intend to steal or embezzle the money taken. Held, that it was competent to show on his cross-examination that his conduct in leaving the city was inconsistent with such statements.—People v. Bidleman, 104 Cal. 608, 38 Pac. 502.

[d] (Ill. 1896) Where defendant, in a criminal case, testifies that his business is that of laundryman, it is not error to permit him to be asked, on cross-examination, if he was not running an opium smoking business, and did not keep an opium joint, instead of being in the laundry business.—Goon Bow v. People, 160 Ill. 438, 43 N. E. 593.

[e] (Mo. 1887) Under a statute which provided that, when the accused shall offer himself as a witness, he may be cross-examined as any other witness, the defendant, indicted for murder, took the stand in his own behalf. The theory of defense was that accused had accidentally killed deceased in administering chloroform to him in an attempted surgical operation. On his direct examination, defendant stated that he never had a medical diploma, had never been licensed as a physician, nor ever represented himself to be such. Held, that it was competent on his cross-examination to ask whether a certain document purporting to be a medical diploma to himself, which the state had put in evidence in its case in chief, and had again read on the cross-examination, was in defendant's own handwriting, whether it was an actual diploma, when he obtained possession of and for what purpose he wrote it.—State v. Brooks, 92 Mo. 542, 5 S. W. 257, 330.

[f] (Mo. 1893) Defendant, on a trial for murder, testified that he and deceased went together to the place where deceased's body was found, described the movements of deceased, and that deceased shot himself. Held, in order to ascertain defendant's opportunities for observing the movements of deceased, and the surrounding circumstances, it was proper, on cross-examination, to ask if the moon was shining that night. State v. Avery, 113 Mo. 475, 21 S. W. 193.

[g] (Neb. 1895) A defendant in a prosecution for producing an abortion having testified in chief that his acquaintance with the woman on whom the operation was performed was not intimate, it was proper cross-examination to show by him that he had been criminally intimate with her.—Dixon v. State, 46 Neb. 298, 64 N. W. 961.

[h] (S. C. 1891) An accused person who becomes a witness in his own behalf assumes the position of an ordinary witness; and where he has put his character for peaceableness in issue he may be cross-examined as to particular acts of violence which he is alleged to have committed.—State v. Merriman, 34 S. C. 576, 13 S. E. 328, affirming (1891) 34 S. C. 16, 12 S. E. 619.

[i] (S. C. 1891) He may also be asked whether he ever told persons named of an act of violence which he at one time purposed, but was prevented from consummating, with a view to contradicting him by the evidence of the persons named.—State v. Merriman, 34 S. C. 576, 13 S. E. 328, affirming (1891) 34 S. C. 16, 12 S. E. 619.

Limitation of cross-examination of witnesses in general to subjects of direct examination, see ante, §§ 949–954.

[a] A defendant testifying in a criminal case on his own behalf can be cross-examined only as to matters brought out in the direct examination.

—(Mich. 1872) Gale v. People, 26 Mich. 157; (Mo. 1882) State v. McLaughlin, 76 Mo. 320; (1882) Same v. Turner, 76 Mo. 350; (1886) Same v. Buella, 89 Mo. 595, 1 S. W. 764; (1886) Same v. Beeman, 2 S. W. 407; (Or. 1885) State v. Lurch, 12 Or. 99, 6 Pac. 408.

[b] (U. S. 1887) Where the accused is examined as a witness in his own behalf, the question as to whether the cross-examination must be confined to matters pertinent to the testimony in chief, or may be extended to the matters in issue, is one of state law as administered in the courts of the state, and not of federal law; and is not a ground on application to the United States supreme court for a writ of error.—Spies v. People, 123 U. S. 131, 8 Sup. Ct. 22, 31 L. Ed. 80.

[c] (Cal. 1885) Under Const. art. 1, § 13, providing that no person shall "be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself," a defendant who has testified in his own behalf cannot be cross-examined as to matters not testified to by him on his examination in chief.—People v. O'Brien, 66 Cal. 602, 6 Pac. 695.

[d] (Cal. 1887) On cross-examination in a criminal trial, where answers of defendant to questions objected to added nothing material to what he had previously voluntarily stated without objection, and only tended to make more clear some of the statements previously made by him, there was no violation of Pen. Code, § 1323, limiting cross-examination of a defendant in criminal actions to matters as to which he was examined in chief.—People v. Sutton, 73 Cal. 243, 15 Pac. 86.

[e] (Cal. 1888) Pen. Code, § 1323, provides that defendant in a criminal action cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself; but if he offer himself as a witness he may be cross-examined as to all matters about which he was examined in chief. Defendant testified that he did not commit the acts charged in the information. Held, that he could be asked, on cross-examination, whether a letter shown him, which contained statements tending to contradict his denial, was in his handwriting.—People v. Rozelle, 78 Cal. 84, 20 Pac. 36.

[f] (Cal. 1888) Defendant having denied all knowledge of any intent to commit the injury charged, or that he advised or participated in the same, may, under the above act, be asked, on cross-examination, if he did not have a conversation with a certain person in which he made threats against the person injured.—People v. Rozelle, 78 Cal. 84, 20 Pac. 36.

[g] (Cal. 1893) Pen. Code, § 688, provides that in a criminal action one cannot be compelled to testify against himself, and section 1323 provides that, if a defendant in a criminal action offer himself as a witness, he may be cross-examined as to matters about which he was examined in chief. Held that, where defendant had merely denied that he had advised another to draw money from a bank for the purpose of embezzling it, and had denied all knowledge of intention of the other so to do, it was error on cross-examination to allow him to be asked questions relating to facts transpiring after the money was drawn.—People v. Gallagher, 33 Pac. 890.

[h] (Cal. 1893) On a prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder with a knife, defendant testified as to his presence at the scene of the assault, and his arrest as the perpetrator thereof, but made no mention of anything happening after his arrest. Held that, under Pen. Code, § 1323, providing that a defendant who offers himself as a witness can be cross-examined only as to "matters about which he was examined in chief," defendant could not be cross-examined regarding a pistol which fell from his person just after his arrest.—People v. Wong Ah Leong, 99 Cal. 440, 34 Pac. 105.

[i] (Cal. 1893) Defendant, accused of abetting B. in embezzling money drawn by B. from the bank on his employer's account, with which money they two had gone by train to S., testified that he had been with B. most of the day before the crime, and had agreed to meet B. near noon next day at a bar opposite the bank, with no special purpose; that they had agreed to go by a certain train to S.; that they did not agree to take the money with them; that defendant had never advised B. to take his employer's money, agreed with him to go off with it, nor consented to his doing so. Held, that the state could ask him, as "matters about which he was examined in chief" (Pen. Code, § 1323), whether, the day the money was drawn, he went with B. and the money to a neighboring city, helped B. to change part of it, returned with B. and the same money, and left B., and went to the depot with part of it.—People v. Gallagher, 100 Cal. 466, 35 Pac. 80.

a revolver, it was proper on cross-examination to ask him if he could identify as his own a revolver shown him, under Pen. Code, § 1323, providing that a defendant may be cross-examined as to all matters about which he was examined in chief.—People v. Gordon, 103 Cal. 568, 37 Pac. 534.

[k] (Cal. 1896) In a prosecution for embezzlement, it is error to allow the prosecution to cross-examine defendant as to bets made by him at a race track, defendant not having testified in regard thereto on his examination in chief.—People v. Van Ewan, 111 Cal. 144, 43 Pac. 520.

[m] (La. 1892) An accused, who avails himself of the privilege of testifying under Acts 1886, No. 29, may be cross-examined by the state, but only concerning matters as to which the witness has testified in chief.—State v. Underwood, 44 La. Ann. 852, 11 South. 277.

[n] (Mo.) If defendant in a criminal case avails himself of the privilege of testifying in his own behalf, he can be cross-examined only as to matters testified to by him in chief, according to Rev. St. § 1918.—(1881) State v. McGraw, 74 Mo. 573; (1881) Same v. Porter, 75 Mo. 171; (1886) Same v. Chamberlain, 89 Mo. 129, 1 S. W. 145.

[o] (Mo. 1890) Where, in a murder trial, it appeared that one of the defendants had stated that he had tapped deceased with a cane, but that, upon his direct examination as a witness, he had testified that he had no cane with him, and did not strike deceased with a cane, and he was asked on cross-examination, "Were you sitting in the saloon there with your head down on a cane?" it is not error to overrule an objection to the question on the ground that the direct examination had been confined to what occurred after he left the saloon.—State v. McKinzie, 102 Mo. 620, 15 S. W. 149.

[a] (Ala. 1893) The court may compel an accused, who has offered himself as a witness, to be recalled for further cross-examination.—Thomas v. State, 100 Ala. 58, 14 South. 621.

[b] (Mo. 1894) In a criminal prosecution, a defendant who has testified in his own behalf may be recalled by the state for further cross-examination.—State v. Kennade, 121 Mo. 405, 26 S. W. 347.

[a] (Mo. 1885) Where no objection is made nor exception saved to the cross-examination of a defendant in a criminal case, as to matters not testified to in chief, the objection is waived.—State v. Mills, 88 Mo. 417.

12. CROSS-EXAMINATION OF ACCOMPLICES AND CO-DEFENDANTS IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

IN GENERAL, § 985.
PARTICULAR SUBJECTS OF INQUIRY, § 986.

[a] (Ill. 1887) Where the murder was committed in an affray, and participants in the affray are witnesses for the prosecution, the cross-examination should be given the greatest latitude, and the direct examination correspondingly restricted.—Sutton v. People, 119 Ill. 250, 10 N. E. 376.

[b] (Ohio, 1871) Where an accomplice testifies as a witness a liberal and full cross-examination should be permitted.—Lee v. State, 21 Ohio St. 151.

[a] (Ariz. 1892) On a trial for stealing a horse, it was error to refuse to permit defendant to ask a self-confessed accomplice if the latter did not testify in the examining court that he (the accomplice) took the horse.—Youree v. Territory, 29 Pac. 894.

[b] (Cal. 1886) Where a witness stated that he had feigned complicity with one indicted for larceny, for the purpose of detecting the thieves, and stated what he said and did in connection with the transaction, a question asked of him as to whether he stole the property which defendant was charged with stealing was properly disallowed, as it was for the jury to determine from the evidence whether he was or was not particeps criminis.—People v. Bolanger, 71 Cal. 17, 11 Pac. 799.

[c] (Mich. 1869) Where upon a criminal prosecution an accomplice testified to facts tending to show his own guilt and that of the defendant on trial, and upon cross-examination admitted that he had made an affidavit for continuance, in which he swore that, as he had been advised by counsel and believed he had a good defense upon the merits, and the counsel for the defendant then asked what that defense was, and the witness declined to answer, it was held that he should not have been permitted to decline answering the question.—Foster v. People, 18 Mich. 266.

[d] (Mich. 1895) Where an accomplice has already testified on cross-examination as to his knowledge of the responsibility for his acts, the exclusion of the question, "Do you know that you are liable for what you did that night,—criminally liable?" is immaterial.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149, 63 N. W. 196.

[e] (N. Y. 1892) Where, in an action for killing complainant's horses, an alleged accomplice testifies that the death was caused by poison procured by defendant, it is competent to ask him on cross-examination whether he understood such statement by him would relieve him from prosecution.—People v. Christy, 65 Hun, 349, 20 N. Y. Supp. 278, 8 N. Y. Cr. R. 484.

[f] (N. D. 1895) Where an accomplice has, by his own testimony, made out a case of murder against himself, he may be asked, on cross-examination, if he expected to be hung.—State v. Kent, 4 N. D. 577, 62 N. W. 631, 27 L. R. A. 686.

Questions on direct examination, see ante, §§ 817–851.

Questions on direct examination assuming facts, see ante, §§ 829–832.

[a] It is improper, on cross-examination, to assume as true facts which are not in proof.
—(Minn. 1873) St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. v. Murphy, 19 Minn. 500 (Gil. 433); (Neb. 1883) Levi v. State, 14 Neb. 1, 14 N. W. 543;
(N. Y. 1830) People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 229, 21 Am. Dec. 122.

[c] (Iowa, 1879) The prosecutrix, in a prosecution for seduction, who was shown to have received presents from a male acquaintance during the continuance of a marriage engagement with the defendant, was asked on cross-examination if she had heard at the time she was going with the said acquaintance that he had said she was engaged, and that the only thing lacking was the consent of her mother; the object being to show that, if she received his attentions and presents knowing that he claimed to be engaged to her, her action was not consistent with an engagement to the defendant. Held, that the question was objectionable, in assuming, in the absence of any evidence, that she had been keeping company with the said acquaintance; and also in assuming that the remark attributed to him necessarily meant that she was engaged to him.—State v. Curran, 51 Iowa, 112, 49 N. W. 1006.

[d] (N. Y. 1893) On an issue as to whether a contract between defendant and a third person, under which plaintiff claimed as assignee, had been rescinded by mutual consent prior to such assignment, defendant was asked, on cross-examination, "What time was this pretended or alleged cancellation of the contract?" Held, that the question was not objectionable on the ground that it assumed the contract was a pretended one.—Davis v. Willis, 67 Hun, 650, 22 N. Y. Supp. 839.

§ 988. Questions involving matters of opinion.

Leading questions involving conclusions or matters of opinion on examination in chief, see ante, § 844.

Questions on direct examination involving conclusions or matters of opinion, see ante, §§ 833–836.

[a] (Tex. 1884) In an action against a railway company for personal injuries, it is improper for defendant to ask plaintiff, in his examination by written interrogatories, the question: "Describe minutely how the accident occurred. Was is not your own fault and negligence?" since it calls for an opinion.—Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Reason, 61 Tex. 613.

Discretion of court as to leading questions on cross-examination, see ante, § 927.

Leading questions on direct examination, see ante, §§ 837–851.

[a] Leading questions may be asked in cross-examining a witness.
—(U. S. 1803) Dawes v. Corcoran, Fed. Cas. No. 3,664 [1 Cranch, C. C. 137];

[b] (U. S. 1820) On cross-examination of a witness, he may be asked leading questions, to draw from him a further disclosure than he made upon the principal examination, and in reference to the matter testified about, but not as to other matter.—Harrison v. Rowan, Fed. Cas. No. 6,141 [3 Wash. C. C. 580].

[c] (Ind. 1860) In an action to recover installments on subscriptions to the capital stock of a company, a witness may be asked on cross-examination whether the subscription was not made for the purpose of securing the location of the road on a certain survey, over objection that it was leading.—Vawter v. Ohio & M. R. Co., 14 Ind. 174.

[f] (N. Y. 1881) Leading questions on cross-examination are not admissible for the purpose of eliciting testimony concerning new matter constituting an element of the case of the party cross-examining.—People v. Court of Oyer & Terminer of New York County, 83 N. Y. 436.

[g] (Va. 1886) A question put to a witness who had just testified that defendant was not liable for a note given for goods, in cross-examination by plaintiff's counsel, "Did you not, a short time before this suit was brought, in a conversation with me, tell me that defendant ought to pay this note?" is admissible.—Smith v. Watson, 82 Va. 712, 1 S. E. 96.

Discretion of court as to repetition of question in the same or another form, see ante, § 928.

Repetition of questions or questions calling for a repetition of testimony on direct examination, see ante, §§ 827, 828.

[a] (Iowa, 1880) In an action for personal injuries, plaintiff's husband, having stated on cross-examination that he did not think he had told her counsel that the injury was to her right leg, could not be required to answer as to whether he had not, at plaintiff's instance, carried a message to her attorneys, to the effect that the injury was to her right leg, since this only called for a repetition of his statement.—Garlick v. City of Pella, 53 Iowa, 646, 6 N. W. 8.

[b] (Mass. 1877) A repetition by the questioner, on cross-examination, of the witness' answer in an interrogative form, does not entitle the opposite party to insist that all the conversation referred to in the answer shall be put in evidence; that interview, etc., not having been introduced on the direct examination.—Perlmutter v. Highland St. R. Co., 121 Mass. 497.

[d] (N. Y. 1892) The court may, in its discretion, refuse to permit a witness to be asked on cross-examination questions substantially the same as others previously propounded and answered.—Mason v. Hinds (Super. Buff.) 19 N. Y. Supp. 996.

[e] (Wash. 1896) It is not error to sustain an objection to a question on cross-examination which is merely a repetition of a former question, and calls for nothing material.—Gilliam v. Davis, 14 Wash. 183, 44 Pac. 152.

[a] (Mass. 1850) Where a witness, who is called to testify to what was said by a witness on a former occasion, makes a statement thereof from his recollection, assisted by a reference to his minutes taken at the time, it is not the right of the adverse party, on cross-examination, to require him to state again in detail, without referring to his minutes, what was said by the witness.—Odiorne v. Bacon, 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 185.

[b] (Mich. 1891) Although it is not permissible for counsel on cross-examination to pass through the whole of the direct examination, and ask the witness to repeat it, he has a right to ask the witness to repeat what he has testified to upon a particular point in his direct examination for the purpose, not only of testing his recollection, but of ascertaining whether he will make a statement at variance with what he testified to in chief.—Zucker v. Karpeles, 88 Mich. 413, 50 N. W. 373.

[c] (Mich.) A witness may be asked on cross-examination to repeat what he has testified to on a particular point in his direct examination for the purpose of testing his recollection, and of ascertaining whether he will make a statement at variance with his testimony in chief—(1891) Zucker v. Karpeles, 88 Mich. 413, 50 N. W. 373; (1893) Beers v. Payment, 95 Mich. 281, 54 N. W. 886.

[a] (N. H. 1858) Where the direct testimony of a deponent has been ruled out, a question on cross-examination which is given in such a form as to make the answer thereto a repetition of the incompetent testimony previously ruled out was properly excluded.—Spear v. Richardson, 37 N. H. 23.

Indefinite and general questions in examination in chief, see ante, § 821.

[a] (Minn. 1886) The rejection on cross-examination, of questions as to the existence of a contract, for indefiniteness, is not prejudicial to the party offering them, since they may be renewed in more definite form.—Fetsch v. Mandehr, 36 Minn. 295, 31 N. W. 49.

[b] (Mo. 1885) In an action against a railroad company for injuries to plaintiff by collision with a car at a crossing, an affirmative answer to the question, "You didn't stop to look for anything further, thinking that was the only train?" did not show that he did not look or listen before going on the track; but the ambiguity of the question rendered the evidence vague and uncertain, making it a matter for the jury.—Drain v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 86 Mo. 574, reversing (1881) 10 Mo. App. 531.

[c] (Tenn. 1892) In cross-examining one on trial for carrying a weapon, it is not permissible to ask him "if he had not been charged with stealing money," as it does not state whether inquiry is thereby made concerning indictments only, or also accusations by individuals.—Hill v. State, 91 Tenn. (7 Pickle) 521, 19 S. W. 674.

REPETITION OF TESTIMONY ON DIRECT OR CROSS-EXAMINATION, § 1005.

Discretion of court as to recalling witness and re-examination, see ante, § 930.

Recalling witness before cross-examination, see ante, §§ 899–905.

Redirect examination of person giving impeaching evidence, see post, § 1160.

[a] (Mass. 1829) Where, on trial, a witness is examined respecting a matter irrelevant to the issue by both parties without objection, one party cannot afterwards object to the witness' further examination on the same subject.—Young v. Mason, 25 Mass. (8 Pick.) 551.

[b] (Vt. 1886) Where a witness is interrupted in his answer by a cross-examining counsel, he may complete it on re-examination.—Bellows v. Sowles, 59 Vt. 63, 7 Atl. 542.

[a] (Ky. 1887) On the separate trial of a defendant jointly indicted with another for robbery, a witness, on cross-examination, testified that the prisoner on trial was generally in the company of the other defendant, who had been positively identified as one of the robbers; that they had been together at a previous hour on the night of the robbery; that the two were always together, etc. Upon re-examination, the prosecuting attorney asked: "You say that [the defendants] were always together?" "Yes, sir; more or less, always together." "Run together?" "Yes, sir; they did." "You saw them together that night?" "Yes, sir." "These men were partners?" "Yes, sir." Held, the questions, though of a leading character, related to matter in substance brought out upon the defendant's examination of the witness, and of which the witness had spoken without objection upon the part of the defendant, and were, therefore, not ground for reversal.—Hess v. Commonwealth, 5 S. W. 751.

[b] (N. Y. 1874) Where a witness for plaintiffs, after detailing on his direct examination a conversation between himself and one of the defendants material to the issue, testifies on cross-examination that he had been in plaintiff's employment and was present at an earlier hearing of the case, and that he had not then told plaintiffs of such conversation, nor told plaintiffs' attorney what he would swear to, and also testifies that he had told defendant's attorney part of what took place in the conversation in question, but not all, and is asked as to his reasons for withholding part, there is no error in permitting his attention, on redirect examination, to be called to a particular time and place, and permitting him to be asked, in substance, if he did not then, in the presence of several persons named, narrate the conversation to plaintiff's attorney.—Gilbert v. Sage, 57 N. Y. 639, affirming (1871) 5 Lans. 287.

[c] (Tex. 1886) Where, in a prosecution for murder, a witness 10 years old had testified that he was at his uncle's house when the shot was fired; that about two minutes later defendant entered, and asked him if he heard the gun, and he said that he did; that defendant then told witness' uncle something, but witness did not remember what his uncle told him about it—the following question, on re-examination, when not objected to as leading, was not error, viz.: "Did not your uncle * * * tell you, in the presence of the defendant, to wait until your mother came home the next morning, and she would tell you what to say about the shot?" —Smith v. State, 21 Tex. App. 277, 17 S. W. 471.

[d] (Tex. 1896) Where defendant's witness on cross-examination testified as to the date of the homicide, it is proper to exclude as leading, on redirect examination, the question whether the killing was not on another certain date, and whether the witness was not mistaken as to the date first given.—Harvey v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 545, 34 S. W. 623.

[a] (Mass. 1894) In an action for injuries caused by an icy sidewalk, a witness for the city testified that shortly before the accident there was some ice on the walk, and he put ashes on it. Cross-examined, he said that he was first asked about the then state of the walk nearly 2½ years after the accident. Held, that on redirect examination it was proper to refresh his memory with leading questions as to a conversation he had had on the subject about a month after the accident.—Farrell v. City of Boston, 161 Mass. 106, 36 N. E. 751.

[a] (Cal. 1886) In a murder case, a witness for the state may, on his redirect examination, testify as to a statement made by defendant relating to and connected with the circumstances of the homicide, as detailed on his examination in chief and cross-examination. — People v. French, 69 Cal. 169, 10 Pac. 378.

[b] (Ind. 1882) A witness having testified that defendant's character was bad, and on cross-examination stated that he was reputed to be a drinking and profane man, held, that the state could not, on re-examination, show that he was reputed dishonest.—Robinson v. State, 84 Ind. 452.

[c] (Ind. 1894) On trial for an assault with intent to murder one E. it appeared that E. and her children were met in the highway by two men and two women riding in a buggy, when one of the men got out of the buggy, and fired five shots at E. and her children. One of the women who were in the buggy testified that it was her belief that defendant was one of the men, but on cross-examination she stated that she would not like to say he was the man. Held, that it was not error to permit such witness to testify on re-examination that she stated after the shooting that she recognized defendant as the person who shot E.—Walker v. State, 136 Ind. 663, 36 N. E. 356.

[d] (Iowa, 1877) On the redirect examination of a witness for the state, the accused may properly object to testimony partially elicited by himself on the cross-examination, if the same has any tendency to mislead the jury as to the time or place of occurrences in question.—State v. Robinson, 47 Iowa, 489.

[f] (Iowa, 1896) In an action against the surviving husband of a deceased sister, on her note, where plaintiff has testified that her mother was worth $3,000 when she died, and that defendant's wife received nearly all of it, she may, after cross-examination as to her means of knowledge, testify that, on death of her mother, her heirs approximated her estate at $3,000, though defendant was not present when the approximation was made.—Leipird v. Stotler, 97 Iowa, 169, 66 N. W. 150.

[g] (Iowa, 1896) Where one of plaintiff's witnesses was an employé of defendant, it was not error to allow plaintiff, on redirect examination, to question the witness regarding certain conversations he had had with defendant's attorneys at the former trial, and the information he had given them respecting his knowledge of the case.—Spaulding v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. Ry. Co., 98 Iowa, 205, 67 N. W. 227.

[h] (La. 1844) It is the universal practice in this state, both in criminal and civil proceedings, to permit a witness, after cross-examination, to be again examined by the party introducing him, or to be subsequently recalled and interrogated on material facts, not before elicited from inadvertence or ignorance of their being within witness' knowledge.—State v. Duncan, 8 Rob. 562.

[i] (La. 1867) In a criminal prosecution, where a witness has been examined by the state and consigned to the defendant, he can only be re-examined by the state for the purpose of explaining any facts which may come out on the cross-examination, and must be confined exclusively to the cross-examination.—State v. Denis, 19 La. Ann. 119.

[j] (La. 1872) A witness in a criminal trial, who has first been examined in chief, consigned, and cross-examined, may be again recalled and re-examined by the party who first introduced him upon points touching which he had not before testified.—State v. Scott, 24 La. Ann. 161.

[k] (Md. 1876) On a prosecution of one claimed to have evaded the liquor law by selling cigarettes and inviting the purchaser to drink whisky with him, upon which a state's witness, after having detailed the circumstances of his purchasing the cigarettes and getting drinks from defendant, states on cross-examination that he never bought whisky from defendant, and never had any agreement or understanding with him whereby he was to get whisky, if he purchased cigarettes or anything else, may properly be asked, on re-examination in chief, whether, from anything that had already occurred between him and defendant or in defendant's presence, he expected to get whisky for his money, and his reasons for so expecting. —Archer v. State, 45 Md. 33.

[m] (Mass. 1854) A witness, who has been asked on cross-examination when he was first inquired of by any one concerning the facts to which he has testified in chief, may be asked on re-examination whether he had previously communicated the same facts to other persons. —Commonwealth v. Wilson, 67 Mass. (1 Gray) 337.

[n] (Mass. 1856) A witness, who has stated the appearance and conduct of a testator, tending to show his insanity at the time of making his will, and has testified that he refused to make for the testator a bond for the conveyance of land, but, after a private conversation with the obligee, aside from the testator, did make it, may testify, on re-examination, that the obligee told him the bond was intended to secure the land for the testator until he should come to himself.—Baxter v. Abbott, 73 Mass. (7 Gray) 71.

[o] (Mass. 1886) In an action against W., charging him with conspiring with one R. to cheat and defraud the plaintiffs, where defendant's counsel, on cross-examination of D., one of the plaintiffs, asked him certain questions regarding an interview between D., one other plaintiff, and R. relating to the alleged conspiracy, plaintiffs' counsel is entitled, on redirect examination, to ask D. any questions connected with the statements elicited on cross-examination, and with matters having a natural and close connection with the subject of inquiry, and investigation on the part of the defendant on cross-examination.—Dole v. Wooldredge, 142 Mass. 161, 7 N. E. 832.

[p] (Mass. 1898) Where a witness testified on cross-examination that he could not swear he had not been threatened in relation to his testimony, and that the trial justice had intimated that all proceedings against him for failure to appear in compliance with his recognizance would be stayed if he would now testify against defendant, the district attorney may re-examine him as to a conversation between them to show that the former assured the witness, before calling him, that no prosecution on his recognizance would be urged. — Commonwealth v. Bent, 82 Mass. (16 Gray) 239.

[q] (Mich. 1882) Plaintiff in an action for fraud was asked on cross-examination "when he first learned that he had been swindled." He was afterwards asked by his own counsel as to when he first learned of the evidence to support his action, and he answered, "Since I commenced this suit." Held, that the latter question was in the line of inquiry opened by the defendant, and that the latter could not complain of it.—Daniels v. Dayton, 49 Mich. 137, 13 N. W. 392.

[r] (Mich. 1885) Where one against whom a heavy award had been made transferred property to his wife, and, in a suit involving his title to it, was cross-examined as to his indebtedness and transfers, it was permissible to ask him on re-examination whether he "was at all alarmed about that matter" (meaning the award).—Hall v. Moriarty, 57 Mich. 345, 24 N. W. 96.

[s] (Mich. 1894) A state's witness having, on cross-examination, denied recollection of having said that he had got to get rid of defendant in that neighborhood, redirect questions as to what produced in witness' mind the opinion, if he had it, that defendant was a good man to get rid of, and whether witness was convinced of his guilt, and so thought him dangerous, being promptly ruled out, were not prejudicial, the jury being warned by the court to take nothing from questions unwarranted by the evidence.—People v. Pyckett, 99 Mich. 613, 58 N. W. 621.

[t] (Mo. 1894) Where a witness for the state, in giving his reasons for saying that B. was the woman he met on the night of the homicide, disclosed on cross-examination that B. had afterwards picked him out from a number of men as the man she met on that night, and the defense insisted that the fact of such selection was witness' sole reason for saying she was the woman whom he met, it was not error to permit the witness to state that he was convinced that she was the woman by her manner of identifying him, and to testify fully as to such identification.—State v. Kaiser, 124 Mo. 651, 28 S. W. 182.

[tt] (Neb. 1885) A witness was called to testify as to the value of a stock of goods which he had appraised. The value, as given by him in his testimony, exceeded the value as ascertained by the appraisement. Upon cross-examination, it was shown that he was present at a sale afterwards made; and, for the purpose of showing that his valuation of the whole stock was wrong, it was sought to show by him that the goods were well sold; that he made purchases at such sale; and that the whole proceeds were much less than the valuation fixed by him. Held, that he might testify on re-examination as to what goods he and others bought, what they paid, and what was their value, for the purpose of showing the correctness of the estimate of value as testified to in his examination in chief.—Blerbower v. Polk, 17 Neb. 268, 22 N. W. 698.

[u] (N. H. 1841) The plaintiff offered in evidence his book of accounts, with his suppletory oath; but, on his cross-examination, it appearing in evidence that the articles charged were delivered by a third person, the book was rejected by the court. In the course of his cross-examination he was inquired of by the defendant's counsel touching the case generally. Held, that the plaintiff's counsel, although the book had been rejected, might examine him in relation to his evidence relating to the case generally, and that his testimony might be considered by the jury, in connection with the other evidence in the case.—McIlvaine v. Wilkins, 12 N. H. 474.

[uu] (N. H. 1875) In an action of trover, involving an inquiry whether defendant, when he purchased certain liquors of plaintiff, intended to pay for them, and in which he states on cross-examination that he did so intend, and has always been willing to pay the reasonable value of the liquors, a question to him by plaintiffs as to whether a person named, pending the action, representing the interests of plaintiff, offered him to release the claim if he would pay a sum much less than the contract price of the liquors, is inadmissible.—Hovey v. Grant, 55 N. H. 497.

[v] (N. J. 1881) On a prosecution for performing an abortion, under Crimes Act, § 75, a state's witness, who is cross-examined as to the woman's declarations concerning her delicate condition, made to him as a physician while he was examining her, cannot be re-examined as to other disconnected assertions, made in course of the same conversation, charging the accused with criminal acts and conduct in attempting to produce a miscarriage.—State v. Gedicke, 43 N. J. Law (14 Vroom) 86.

[vv] (N. Y. 1894) In an action for injuries received on entering a street car, where plaintiff was asked on cross-examination if, after entering the car, she spoke of the accident to the driver or to any person in the car—it being the theory of the defense that the accident, as described, had not occurred—plaintiff may testify that on arriving at home she spoke of the accident.—Fuller v. Jamestown St. Ry. Co., 75 Hun, 273, 26 N. Y. Supp. 1078, judgment affirmed (1896) 148 N. Y. 741, 42 N. E. 1093.

[w] (N. Y. 1896) In an action to recover commissions for negotiating a sale of bonds, defendant denied having employed plaintiff to make the sale, and, on cross-examination, plaintiff, on being asked as to whether defendant had not befriended him, replied that he had complained of defendant's treatment in a certain transaction. Held, that it was reversible error to allow plaintiff, on redirect examination, to show that the transaction referred to was one in which he was employed by defendant to negotiate a loan for him, and in which defendant, after plaintiff had succeeded in negotiating the loan, closed the transaction with the lender without plaintiff's knowledge, thereby depriving him of the commissions.—Brown v. Barse, 3 App. Div. 257, 38 N. Y. Supp. 400.

[ww] (Ohio, 1896) On a trial for homicide, where defendant, on cross-examination of the officer who made the arrest, attempted to show that he acted without reliable information, it was competent to show, on redirect examination, that the wife of deceased described the man who made the assault.—Moran v. State, 11 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 464, 5 O. C. D. 234.

[xx] (R. I. 1859) Where a witness has sworn in his direct examination that the criminal acts were done within the times laid in the indictment, and upon cross-examination it appears that he cannot fix the precise date of any of them, it is permissible in reply to re-examine the witness as to the means by which he is enabled to ascertain that the criminal acts were done within the period covered by the indictment.—State v. Williams, 6 R. I. 207.

[y] (Tex. 1895) In an action for price of corporate stock sold at par, where defendant, to show the improbability of the purchase, proved by plaintiff on cross-examination that stock had been sold much below par, plaintiff can testify on redirect that he purchased the stock originally from defendant, who stated that it would pay at least 25 per cent.—Hoxie v. Silliman (Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 913.

[yy] (Tex. 1895) Where a witness for the state, who had been defendant's accomplice, testified on cross-examination that the prosecution against him had been nolled, it was proper for the prosecution to ask him if his testimony was the same as the statements he had made before the case was dismissed.—Mitchell v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 278, 33 S. W. 867, 36 S. W. 456.

[z] (Vt. 1893) There is no error in refusing to allow defendant to introduce testimony of a witness on redirect examination, it not being in explanation or avoidance of anything obtained by the cross-examination, for the reason that the question asked of the witness on cross-examination was answered adversely to the examiner.—Ranney v. St. Johnsbury & L. C. R. Co., 67 Vt. 594, 32 Atl. 810.

[zz] (Wis. 1874) On trial of an indictment for arson, L., as a witness for the state, testified on his examination in chief that defendant, in a certain conversation with him, said, "I suppose you are going to send me up on that buggy scrape." On his cross-examination the witness explained that the language relative to the "buggy scrape" referred to a buggy for the stealing of which L. had procured the arrest of defendant a few days before that time. On his redirect examination the witness was permitted to testify, under objection as to its competency, as to "what he knew and what he did in regard to the buggy scrape," detailing facts and circumstances tending to show that defendant had stolen the buggy. Held that, as this was new matter not admissible within the rule for redirect examination, its admission was a fatal error.—Schaser v. State, 36 Wis. 429.

[b] (Iowa, 1896) In an action against a railroad company, one of the witnesses for plaintiff, who had formerly been employed by defendant, on cross-examination, was questioned in regard to his discharge. Held that, on redirect examination, a letter from defendant's superintendent commendatory in character was properly admitted as explaining why the witness had left defendant's employ.—Spaulding v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. Ry. Co., 98 Iowa, 205, 67 N. W. 227.

[c] (Mich. 1893) In an action for breach of contract to deliver sheep at a certain time, plaintiff, having testified for himself, on request of the defense produced his memorandum book of purchases, and was cross-examined therefrom. He testified that the entry of defendant's sale was made at the time, in defendant's presence, but not read to him. Held, that the book was admissible on redirect examination to corroborate plaintiff, but not to prove the sale.—Aulls v. Young, 98 Mich. 231, 57 N. W. 119.

[d] (Mo. 1893) Where witnesses on cross-examination are questioned as to certain admissions in depositions formerly given by them, it is error to refuse to allow the whole of the depositions to be read upon redirect examination.—Wilkerson v. Eilers, 114 Mo. 245, 21 S. W. 514.

[e] (N. Y. 1890) Where defendant asked plaintiff on cross-examination if he had made any memorandum of the transaction, and he said he had, plaintiff could not, on his redirect examination, read the memorandum in evidence.—Avery v. Mattice, 56 Hun, 639, 9 N. Y. Supp. 166, judgment affirmed (1892) 132 N. Y. 601, 30 N. E. 1152.

[f] (Vt. 1873) Where, on cross-examination, the reliability of a witness' testimony is shown to depend on books of entry kept by him in relation to a certain business transacted by him, out of which the matter in controversy arose, and to his mode of doing which he had testified in chief without objection, it is proper for the other party to use such books in evidence for the purpose of showing fully the manner in which his business was transacted and how such books were kept.—Missisquoi Bank v. Evarts, 45 Vt. 293.

[a] (Minn. 1895) Where plaintiff, on cross-examination, stated that he intended a writing drawn by him to be the contract between the parties, it was proper to permit him, on redirect examination, to state that he intended to put in the writing a material provision, in reference to which he had testified on direct examination, but failed to do so through oversight.—Vaughan v. McCarthy, 63 Minn. 221, 65 N. W. 249.

[b] (Mo. 1890) From the cross-examination of defendant in replevin, it appeared that he knew where the person under whom he claimed title lived, and had written to such person, and received an answer by letter. Held that, on his redirect examination, he might state the reasons for not taking the deposition of such person, but that he should not be allowed to state, for that purpose, the contents of the letter received from him; nor was the admission of such testimony justified on the ground that plaintiff had opened the door therefor.—Redman v. Peirsol, 39 Mo. App. 173.

[c] (Neb. 1895) Where defendant's bookkeeper testified that a certain person was not defendant's agent, and on cross-examination a letter was shown, but not introduced in evidence, written by witness, and signed in defendant's name, which recited that such person was defendant's agent, it was not error, on the redirect examination, not to permit the witness to testify whether he was authorized by defendant to write the letter.—Fremont Butter & Egg Co. v. Peters, 45 Neb. 356, 63 N. W. 791.

[d] (Vt. 1873) Where, on cross-examination, the reliability of a witness' testimony is shown to depend on books of entry kept by him in relation to certain business transacted by him, out of which the matter in controversy arose, and to his mode of doing which he had testified in chief without objection, it is proper for the other party to show fully the manner in which his business was transacted and how such books were kept.—Missisquoi Bank v. Evarts, 45 Vt. 293.

[e] (Wis. 1888) A witness who has testified, on cross-examination, that he had seen a credit on the books of plaintiff, may be asked, on re-examination, what was the date of such credit.—Norwegian Plow Co. v. Hanthorn, 71 Wis. 529, 37 N. W. 825.

Admission of writings in explanation of testimony, see ante, § 998.

Rebuttal or explanation of evidence to discredit witness, see post, § 1110.

Recalling for purpose of explaining inconsistent statements, see post, §§ 1261, 1262.

[a] (U. S. 1893) In an action for damages for a death caused by unguarded machinery, where a witness for plaintiff is asked, on cross-examination, if it occurred to him at the time that there was danger about the work, to which he answers in the affirmative, there is no error in permitting him, on redirect examination, to be asked wherein the danger consisted.—Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Harkins, 55 Fed. 932, 5 C. C. A. 326, 17 U. S. App. 22.

[aa] (Cal. 1895) In an action for a breach of contract to purchase raisins, a witness for plaintiff, who states that he examined the fruit, and found it in merchantable condition, and on cross-examination states that he cannot tell the number of boxes he examined, may be asked on redirect examination as to how the examination by him compared with the ordinary examination by experts, to ascertain the value or quality of the raisins.—Hewes v. Germain Fruit Co., 106 Cal. 441, 39 Pac. 853.

[c] (Iowa, 1887) Plaintiff testified, without objection, that his services were worth in his business $200 per month. On cross-examination he said: "I can get more than that. I can get $2,500 for my time outside of my business." On redirect examination he said he meant that he could get that sum for superintending other people's business. Held, the defendant could not object to this testimony, as it was merely explanatory of evidence introduced by himself.—Kendall v. City of Albia, 73 Iowa, 241, 34 N. W. 833.

[d] (Ind. 1892) In an action to recover for services rendered defendant on his farm, one of plaintiff's witnesses testified, on cross-examination, that he had stated to defendant's counsel before the trial that plaintiff's services were worth a certain amount. Held, that he should be allowed, on redirect examination, to state that he meant such amount would be proper as a compromise.—Loy v. Petty, 3 Ind. App. 241, 29 N. E. 788.

[e] (Kan. 1896) It was error, in an action against a railroad company to recover damages resulting from a fire set by a locomotive, to permit a witness who testified for plaintiff to explain his apparent hostility to the company by stating that it had refused to settle claims interposed against it by him on an equitable basis.—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Briggs, 2 Kan. App. 154, 43 Pac. 289.

[f] (Mass. 1893) Where, on a trial for robbery, the police officer who made the arrest is asked on cross-examination by defendant's counsel "whether the charge he made against defendant at the station house on committing him was not that of drunkenness," it is competent for the commonwealth on redirect examination to ask the witness to state the exact words he used in making a charge.—Commonwealth v. Armstrong, 158 Mass. 78, 32 N. E. 1032.

[g] (Mich. 1889) In an action by an employé for personal injuries, on plaintiff's cross-examination it was brought out that wages were paid him by defendants after the injury, and were afterwards stopped. Held, that it was competent, on redirect examination, for him to state the occasion of his wages being discontinued, and what was said on such occasion by defendants' foreman, who had charge of fixing wages and discharging employés.—Van Dusen v. Letellier, 78 Mich. 492, 44 N. W. 572.

[h] (Mich. 1893) On a prosecution for carnally knowing a young girl, the latter, after testifying on cross-examination that a written statement made by her had been prepared by the prosecuting attorney, who told her to sign it, might properly be re-examined to show that the statement was in her own language, that no threats or inducements had been held out to her in regard to it, and that she had not been asked to say anything therein that was not true.—People v. Mills, 94 Mich. 630, 54 N. W. 488.

[i] (Neb. 1896) It is permissible by way of redirect examination to introduce evidence explanatory of facts elicited by the cross-examination, although corroborative of the witnesses' testimony in chief.—Norfolk Nat. Bank v. Job, 48 Neb. 774, 67 N. W. 781.

[j] (N. Y. 1853) Where, on a charge of fraud in the exchange of horses, the plaintiff by compulsory examination has drawn from the defendant a statement from which a fraudulent concealment of a defect might be inferred, it is competent for the defendant to state the circumstances of the transaction so far, and so far only, as to explain the answer and show the reason of the concealment.—Richardson v. Wilkins, 19 Barb. 510.

[k] (N. Y. 1881) On a trial for burglary, the prisoner's general reputation was in issue. A witness testified for the prisoner that he would believe him under oath. On cross-examination he admitted that unfavorable reports as to his character were circulated. On redirect examination he was asked if these were in reference to the prisoner's drinking and horse trading. Held, that the question was a proper one, and should not have been ruled out.—Stape v. People, 85 N. Y. 390.

[l] (N. Y. 1889) Where a witness for plaintiff alludes in his cross-examination to a remark made by plaintiff, it is within the discretion of the court to allow him to explain on redirect examination what that remark was, though it was derogatory to defendant.—Graves v. Santway, 52 Hun, 613, 6 N. Y. Supp. 892, judgment affirmed (1891) 127 N. Y. 677, 28 N. E. 256.

[m] (N. Y. 1894) Where defendant, examined as a witness in his own behalf, refuses to answer certain questions, on the ground that they involve privileged communications, he may, on his redirect examination, testify as to such transactions, in order to explain circumstances that had been disclosed on the cross-examination.—Lally v. Emery, 79 Hun, 560, 29 N. Y. Supp. 888.

[n] (N. Y. 1896) Where the only evidence as to the relations between the testatrix and her residuary legatee, who is alleged to have exercised undue influence over testatrix, is that elicited on the cross-examination of such legatee, Code, § 829, does not preclude the witness being given the very fullest opportunity to explain all the transactions as to which he is interrogated, and to give not only the facts, but the circumstances, when material.—In re Spratt's Will, 4 App. Div. 1, 38 N. Y. Supp. 329.

[p] (N. D. 1893) On redirect examination in a criminal case, it is proper to permit the witness to state facts and circumstances that tend to correct any wrong inferences that arise from matters drawn out on cross-examination, and this rule is not changed because such facts may be of a character to prejudice defendant in the minds of the jury.—State v. McGahey, 3 N. D. 293, 55 N. W. 753.

[q] (Ohio, 1883) Where a witness for the prosecution on cross-examination admits having had a certain conversation, but denies that he made a certain statement therein, the prosecution cannot, on re-examination of the witness, before introducing other witnesses to contradict him, show what he said in such conversation.—Dickson v. State, 39 Ohio St. 73.

[r] (Tex. 1886) On re-examination, the witness may be asked for an explanation of an expression used on cross-examination.—Favors v. State, 20 Tex. App. 155.

[s] (Vt. 1844) In an action against a town for an injury occasioned by the insufficiency of a highway, a witness introduced by defendant was asked, on cross-examination, without objection, whether his team had not run off at the same place the day before the injury complained of happened, and he answered that they did. Counsel for plaintiff disclaimed all intention of using the fact, except for the purpose of calling the mind of the witness with more certainty to the time when the injury happened to plaintiff, and the court instructed the jury that they must disregard that fact, except for the purpose specified by plaintiff. Held, that defendant was not entitled to re-examine the witness in relation to the circumstances under which his team ran off the road.—Allen v. Town of Hancock, 16 Vt. 230.

[a] (Ill. 1880) A witness for the prosecution, from which the accused has drawn out on cross-examination, with a view to raise an inference favorable to himself and unfavorable to the witness, in whose store the killing occurred, that the witness was loading his gun at the time of the shooting, may be permitted to testify that he loaded his gun to protect his house, having had an intimation that defendant's brother was coming there to shoot deceased.—Wilson v. People, 94 Ill. 299.

[b] (Ind. 1891) Where, in an action for the price of a machine which plaintiff alleges was sold absolutely, and which defendant alleges was taken by him on approval, an agent of plaintiff, after admitting on cross-examination that he went to see the machine work after defendant had received it, may explain, on redirect examination, that his object was to ascertain whether anything had happened to the machine, and to convince defendant that the machine was all right.—Westbrook v. Aultman, Miller & Co., 3 Ind. App. 83, 28 N. E. 1011.

[c] (Iowa, 1888) The prosecuting witness, after having been asked on cross-examination the names of the parties he suspected, was permitted to testify on his redirect examination that another person on the night of the crime had given the name of defendants, who were then suspected. Held admissible to explain why witness charged defendants with the crime.—State v. Maher, 74 Iowa, 82, 37 N. W. 5.

[d] (Mass. 1878) On trial of a complaint in bastardy, the complainant, on cross-examination, admitted that she had put her mark to a paper purporting to release the respondent. Held, that she might properly be asked, on re-examination, whether the respondent at any time used intimidation or threatened her, solely to ascertain if she had acted under duress.—Mulrey v. McDonald, 124 Mass. 345.

[e] (Neb. 1886) In replevin by a chattel mortgagee against a sheriff, the defense was founded upon an alleged conspiracy between B., the agent of the plaintiff, and R., the mortgagor, to defraud the creditors of R. by the means of the making, delivery, and foreclosing of said mortgage. B. was called as a witness by the plaintiff, and, on cross-examination by defendant's counsel, stated that he went to board with R. shortly after the execution by R. of the mortgage. Held error on the part of the court to refuse to allow R. to state, in reply to a question put by plaintiff's counsel, how he came to go to the house of R. to board.—Kay v. Noll, 20 Neb. 380, 30 N. W. 269.

[f] (Neb. 1887) On a trial of a defendant charged with incest with his niece, the woman was not examined as a witness by the state, but defendant examined her as a witness in his behalf. On being asked if defendant had ever had sexual intercourse with her, she answered he had not. On the cross-examination, counsel for the prosecution presented her with the affidavit which she had made by which proceedings in bastardy had been instituted, and in answer to his question she stated that she had signed the affidavit. On re-examination by defendant's counsel, she was asked if the signing of the affidavit was voluntary on her part. The question was objected to as not cross-examination, and the objection sustained. Held error.—Yeoman v. State, 21 Neb. 171, 31 N. W. 669.

[g] (Neb. 1895) Where the sheriff, as a witness for the state in a murder case, was asked, on cross-examination, whether he felt suspicious of defendant, and answered in the affirmative, it was proper to permit the state, on redirect examination, to ask him his reasons for his suspicions.—Collins v. State, 46 Neb. 37, 64 N. W. 432.

[h] (N. J. 1888) In a divorce suit for adultery and cruelty, where plaintiff asserted that she had just cause for separating from defendant, the latter testified on cross-examination that he supposed plaintiff left him because she loved another man more than him. On redirect examination he was asked what reasons he had for such belief. Held proper redirect examination, although recrimination was not pleaded.—Pullen v. Pullen (Ch.) 12 Atl. 138.

[i] (N. Y. 1887) On cross-examination of plaintiff, she was asked whether a certain doctor, who had visited her in her illness, had been subpœnaed as a witness in her behalf, and answered that the doctor had told her he would not attend. Held that, on redirect examination, it was competent to ask her, and to have her answer, as to what reason the doctor assigned for his refusal.—Uransky v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co., 7 N. Y. St. Rep. 395.

[j] (N. Y. 1889) Where plaintiff, in an action for breach of marriage promise, on cross-examination has testified that she was then unwilling to marry defendant, she may testify on re-examination to the reason of her unwillingness.—Chellis v. Chapman, 52 Hun, 613, 7 N. Y. Supp. 78, judgment affirmed (1891) 125 N. Y. 214, 26 N. E. 308, 11 L. R. A. 784.

[k] (N. Y. 1890) Plaintiff, having stated on cross-examination that he could not identify the person accompanying him after the accident, was properly allowed to testify concerning the reason why he was not positive.—James v. Ford, 16 Daly, 126, 9 N. Y. Supp. 504.

[l] (N. Y. 1896) A witness, on cross-examination, testified that one S. called on him on defendant's behalf, and that he told S. that he was not in the market for a certain kind of property; such statement having been drawn out for the purpose of affecting the witness' credibility. Held, that it was incompetent for plaintiff, on redirect examination, to ask the witness whether or not he was actually in the market, and to explain why he had made such statement to S.—Foster v. Tanenbaum, 2 App. Div. 168, 37 N. Y. Supp. 722.

[m] (Tex. 1894) Where plaintiff is cross-examined by defendants as to a deed of his land to their ancestor by the holder of the legal title, he may state, on re-examination, his reasons for having the deed made.—Hicks v. Hicks (Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 227.

[n] (Utah, 1882) A witness for the people having testified on cross-examination that he saw the defendant and the deceased talking together and that he watched them closely, he could not be asked by the prosecution his motive in thus watching them, as it was beyond the legitimate scope of redirect examination.—People v. Biddlecome, 3 Utah, 208, 2 Pac. 194.

Drawing out whole of transaction or conversation on cross-examination, see ante, § 933.

[a] (U. S. 1895) A witness who has been cross-examined as to confessions made by defendant cannot, on redirect examination, be asked as to other statements made by defendant in the same conversation in regard to a subject not touched on in the cross-examination.—Ballew v. United States, 160 U. S. 187, 16 Sup. Ct. 263, 40 L. Ed. 388.

[b] (Ala. 1895) Where defendant, on cross-examination, elicited from a witness statements made to him by one H., it was proper to permit plaintiff to question the witness as to the whole conversation, bringing out what witness said to H. relative to the same matter.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Malone, 109 Ala. 509, 20 South. 33.

[c] (Ala. 1895) Where prosecutrix was asked on cross-examination whether she had not made a certain statement to a third person, to which she replied that she had not, it was proper to permit her to state on redirect examination what it was she had told such person.—Bracken v. State, 111 Ala. 68, 20 South. 636, 56 Am. St. Rep. 23, following Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Malone (1895) 109 Ala. 509, 20 South. 33.

[d] (Cal. 1880) Where, on the cross-examination of a prosecuting witness, he testified that he had consulted a third person in relation to the transaction out of which the indictment grew, and in part developed what had occurred between them, it was proper for the prosecution to call out all that took place at the consultation.—People v. Smallman, 55 Cal. 185.

[e] (Ky. 1827) Defendant, in a breach of promise suit, in cross-examining a physician introduced by plaintiff to prove her pregnancy, elicited the fact that plaintiff told him she had another disease, and then stopped the interrogatories saying he did not wish to make use of any communication the plaintiff had made to him in his professional capacity. Held, that the plaintiff had a right to call for the whole conversation from the witness, to the effect that the disease was venereal and communicated by the defendant.—Withers v. Richardson, 21 Ky. (5 T. B. Mon.) 94, 17 Am. Dec. 44.

[f] (Mich. 1864) Where a witness on cross-examination testified that some years before he had a conversation with the testator, whose will was contested, but stated no part of the conversation, it was held incompetent for the opposite party to inquire, on re-examination, what was said by the testator on such occasion.—Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 459.

[g] (Mich. 1874) A witness for the prosecution is held to be as much the people's witness when under cross-examination as when on his examination in chief; and the fact that he is permitted on cross-examination, on a subject entered upon in the direct examination, to detail without objection a part of a hearsay story told him, will not authorize the calling out of the rest of it against objection on the redirect examination, upon the claim that it is part of the same conversation.—Wagner v. People, 30 Mich. 384.

[h] (Mich. 1880) In an action for breach of promise of marriage, where evidence in relation to an offer of settlement made by defendant's brother is called out on redirect examination by plaintiff as part of an interview between plaintiff and her counsel, first inquired about and gone into by counsel for defendant on cross-examination of the witness, it should not be stricken out.—Bennett v. Beam, 42 Mich. 346, 4 N. W. 8, 36 Am. Rep. 442.

[i] (Mich. 1882) One party cannot, on cross-examination, draw out a part of a transaction, and then preclude the other party from getting out what he regards as material to his case.—Wilcox v. Ney, 47 Mich. 421, 11 N. W. 225.

[j] (Mich. 1890) Plaintiff, on cross-examination, being asked if, in a conversation with one N., the latter did not ask him, "Why didn't you do as I did when I left the old man—settle up with him?" admitted having had a talk with N., but denied that N. asked this, and also denied that he said he had reasons for waiting, and denied that there was any such conversation. Held, that plaintiff was properly allowed, on redirect, to state what the conversation was.—Alderton v. Wright, 81 Mich. 294, 45 N. W. 968.

[k] (N. J. 1850) Where a witness, on his cross-examination, was asked if the party whose witness he was had spoken to him on the subject of the suit, and he answered that he had, the party calling him, on a re-examination, was allowed to ask what he had said to the witness.—Doughty v. Somerville & E. R. Co., 22 N. J. Law (2 Zab.) 495.

[l] (N. Y. 1827) Where a witness is introduced by a party, and is asked as to a particular fact, and the opposite party, on cross-examination, asks him generally if he ever communicated that fact to any one, and to whom, and he answers that he communicated it to the party calling him, this does not entitle the party calling him to inquire as to his own reply, and other conversation, at the time.—Winchell v. Latham, 6 Cow. 682.

[m] (N. Y. 1849) Where a witness for the prosecution was asked on cross-examination whether he had not offered to leave the state and refuse to testify for remuneration, to which he answered, "Not exactly that," and was then stopped by the prisoner's counsel from giving further answer, the prosecution, on redirect examination, were entitled to elicit the particulars.—People v. Austin, 2 Edm. Sel. Cas. 54.

[n] (N. Y. 1874) In an action for damages caused by a collision between vessels, a witness, on his cross-examination by defendant's counsel, having spoken as to the value of the vessel sunk, and being questioned as to his competency, stated that he had known of the sale of various steamboats, among them the M., the price of which was $3,500. Held, that on his re-examination it was competent for plaintiff to elicit testimony that the real value of the boat referred to was $16,000.—Blanchard v. New Jersey Steamboat Co., 67 Barb. 101.

[q] (N. Y. 1895) On trial for murder, where a witness for the state is asked on cross-examination if he had any communication with the coroner, and if he did not suggest the inquiry as to poisoning, the state may, on redirect examination, ask for the whole conversation between the witness and the coroner.—People v. Buchanan, 145 N. Y. 1, 39 N. E. 846.

[r] (Ohio, 1848) Where defendant, on cross-examination, inquired of a witness what a third person told him, it was held that this did not authorize the plaintiff upon a re-examination, to ask the witness what the third person, in the same conversation, said the defendant himself had told him.—McCracken v. West, 17 Ohio, 16.

New matter which is immaterial, see post, § 1004.

[a] (Iowa, 1872) A witness may be re-examined in respect to a matter drawn out by the cross-examination, or which furnishes a circumstance by which a transaction in question was impressed upon the witness' mind.—Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Young, 36 Iowa, 44.

[b] (Iowa, 1881) Although plaintiff in an action for personal injuries against a railroad cannot be asked on re-examination whether he "thought" of protecting himself after the danger signal was given, since his negligence cannot be excused by his forgetfulness, it is not error to admit such testimony where plaintiff had already been cross-examined as to the operations of his mind preceding the accident.—Jeffrey v. Keokuk & D. M. R. Co., 56 Iowa, 546, 9 N. W. 884.

[c] (Kan. 1891) Where a matter of evidence is brought out for the first time on the cross-examination of a witness, the other party may re-examine upon the same matter.—Hamilton v. Miller, 46 Kan. 486, 26 Pac. 1030.

[d] (Mass. 1892) On an indictment for lascivious cohabitation, the husband of the female defendant testified, while being cross-examined by defendants, that some years previous he found his wife sitting with one C., and that he thought it improper, on account of C.'s reputation. Held, that it was not error to allow the prosecution to inquire as to the reputation.—Commonwealth v. Dill, 156 Mass. 226, 30 N. E. 1016.

[e] (N. C. 1896) Where a witness, testifying to the general character of the prisoner, had on cross-examination stated that the prisoner had submitted on the charge of adultery, the redirect examination is limited to the particular matter brought out on cross-examination.—State v. Ussery, 118 N. C. 1177, 24 S. E. 414.

[f] (Tex. 1873) When a party, on cross-examination of a witness, seeks to draw out new matter not inquired about in the examination in chief, he makes the witness his own for that purpose, and the opposite party may cross-examine on such new matter.—Bassham v. State, 38 Tex. 622.

[g] (Wis. 1884) On a trial for murder a witness for the prosecution stated that on the night of the homicide he saw a man on a bridge near where it occurred, and he thought it was defendant. On cross-examination, defendant, seeking to show that it did not occur to witness at the time that the man he saw was defendant, asked, "I want you to tell, as near as you can, when you told anybody" that it was defendant. Held that, as the question was thus opened on cross-examination, it was proper, on direct examination, to ask witness, "Did you state to any one soon after that you thought it was defendant?"—Williams v. State, 61 Wis. 281, 21 N. W. 56.

[h] (Wis. 1886) Where a party claims goods under a bill of sale given in consideration of large sums of money which he claims to have put into the business, and the sale is impeached as fraudulent against creditors, if his cross-examination has been of a character such as to raise a suspicion that he was not in the possession or the owner of such sums, he may, on re-examination, testify from what sources he obtained the money, though on his direct examination he gave no testimony in relation thereto.—Tuckwood v. Hanthorn, 67 Wis. 326, 30 N. W. 705.

Cross-examination as to irrelevant, collateral, or immaterial matters, see ante, §§ 955, 957.

[a] (Ill. 1866) In an action against a railroad company for negligently burning the warehouse of plaintiff by the escape of fire from defendant's engine, defendant introduced a witness who testified that he was a master mechanic in the employ of the company and in their machine shop, and that the spark arrester used on the engine from which it was alleged the fire escaped was the best known and in use, and that he knew it was in good repair at the time the fire occurred. On cross-examination he said it was his business to know the condition of every engine at the time it left the shop on each trip; that he knew the condition of the engine from the uniform course of business of the shop, but was unable to state that he had made a personal examination of that engine. On re-examination defendant asked the witness what was the uniform course of business in the shop. Held, that it was immaterial that he should explain in detail the course of business in the shop.—Great Western R. Co. v. Haworth, 39 Ill. 346.

[b] (Mass. 1879) A witness for the petitioner testified that the land in question was suitable for the production of cranberries. He was then asked by the petitioner what was the market value of cranberries at the time of the taking in 1875, which question was excluded. On cross-examination he testified that cranberries were lower than in 1875. On re-examination, the question put to him by the petitioner was again excluded. Held, that the question was properly excluded.—Gardner v. Inhabitants of Brookline, 127 Mass. 358.

[e] (Pa. 1838) A witness cannot be examined directly as to irrelevant matters, though he has been questioned as to them on the previous cross-examination.—Smith v. Dreer, 3 Whart. 154.

[f] (S. D. 1893) When a witness on cross-examination voluntarily refers to a conversation he had with another party, which conversation was not shown to be relevant to the case on trial, for the purpose of fixing the time he first had knowledge of the facts to which he was testifying, the party, whose witness he is, is not entitled to have the full details of that conversation.—Uhe v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 3 S. D. 563, 54 N. W. 601.

Repetition of questions on direct examination, see ante, §§ 827, 828.

[a] (Ill. 1893) Where a witness on cross-examination explicitly denies certain matters, he cannot be again called on to testify to the same matters in rebuttal.—Winslow v. Covert, 52 Ill. App. 63.

[b] (Ind. 1866) When a witness has been examined in chief by the plaintiff, he cannot, after the defendant has offered evidence to contradict what the witness has said, recall the witness simply to repeat what he said in the first examination.—Hudspeth v. Allen, 26 Ind. 165.

[c] (Iowa, 1887) Where a witness has testified fully in chief upon the matters inquired of him, it is not error to sustain an objection to his further testifying in rebuttal on the same matters.—Watson Coal & Mining Co. v. James, 72 Iowa, 184, 33 N. W. 622.

[d] (Mich. 1878) Where a conversation, partly in a foreign language, has been testified to and interpreted by the witness on cross-examination, it is not error to refuse to allow it to be again detailed, to test the correctness of the translation, where that is not seriously questioned.—Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245.

[e] (Neb. 1880) The opinion or understanding of a witness as to his rights under a contract is not competent evidence; but where the plaintiff, on the cross-examination of the defendant, asked for and obtained his opinion on the subject, he is not in a situation to complain if such opinion is repeated by the witness on his re-examination in chief.—Goodman v. Kennedy, 10 Neb. 270, 4 N. W. 987.

15. RECROSS-EXAMINATION AND RECALLING WITNESS FOR CROSS-EXAMINATION.

RIGHT TO RECROSS-EXAMINE OR RECALL FOR CROSS-EXAMINATION, § 1006.
SCOPE AND EXTENT OF CROSS-EXAMINATION, § 1007.

Attendance of witness for further cross-examination, see ante; § 912.
Discretion of court as to recalling witness and re-examination, see ante, § 930.
Discretion of court as to recalling witness on direct examination, see ante, § 797.
Recalling accused in criminal prosecutions for further cross-examination, see ante, § 983.

§ 1006. Right to recross-examine or recall for cross-examination.

[a] (Cal. 1875) The fact that, after the prosecutor has left the witness stand, another witness called by the prosecution testifies as to certain occurrences, and in his relation of them differs from the account given by the prosecutor when on the stand, does not give the accused a right further to cross-examine the prosecutor.—People v. Parton, 49 Cal. 632.

[b] (Ga. 1855) Where, on the re-examination in chief of a witness, new matter is brought out, which is neither explanatory of the first nor in rebuttal of the cross-examination, the opposite party have the right to cross-examine again as to such matter.—Wood v. McGuire, 17 Ga. 303.

[c] (Kan. 1896) When a defendant in a criminal prosecution has offered himself as a witness in his own behalf, he may be cross-examined to the same extent as any other witness, and he may also be recalled by the state for further cross-examination, but he cannot be recalled as a witness for the state, and con-pelled to testify in its favor.—State v. Lewis, 56 Kan. 374, 43 Pac. 265.

[d] (La. 1873) On the prosecutrix being offered as a witness by the state, she was interrogated in chief, cross-examined by the defense, re-examined by the state, and then sought to be recross-examined by the defense. Held, that the court properly refused this to be done, if the re-examination on the part of the state was confined to such matters as the cross-examination drew out.—State v. Turner, 25 La. Ann. 573.

[a] (La. 1896) Where a witness is recalled and re-examined, the cross-examination is limited to the matter on which he has been re-examined.—State v. Southern, 48 La. Ann. 628, 19 South. 668.

[b] (Mass. 1858) A witness called by the commonwealth on a criminal trial cannot, upon being recalled by the defendant, be cross-examined by the district attorney upon his testimony before the grand jury.—Commonwealth v. Hudson, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 64.

[c] (Minn. 1883) Upon the recross-examination of a witness, who had testified to the payment of certain money, he was asked to whom and for what purpose the money was paid. He had not testified as to the purpose of such payment on his re-examination, and on the original cross-examination he had been interrogated on the subject, and there had been ample opportunity to examine him thereon. Held, that the question was properly excluded, as not proper cross-examination.—Butler v. Bohn, 31 Minn. 325, 17 N. W. 862.

Right to examine adverse party before trial, affected by character of evidence sought to be disclosed, see "Discovery," vol. 16, cc. 2046–2048, § 56.

1. NATURE AND GROUNDS OF PRIVILEGE TO REFUSE TO ANSWER IN GENERAL.

[a] (U. S. 1870) In taking testimony to be used in an action before the court of claims, a witness will not be compelled to answer a question which, in his opinion, relates to another suit, and not to the action on trial, unless some assurance be given to the court that the answer is expected to elicit testimony relevant to the issue in the action which is being heard.—Hill v. United States, 6 Ct. Cl. 83.

[b] (Md. 1767) In an action of trespass quare clausum, where a warrant of resurvey has been ordered, neither a sheriff nor his deputy can be compelled to give evidence that the defendant in such action had not sufficient notice of the executing of such warrant.—Trammell v. Thomas, 1 Har. & McH. 261.

[c] (N. H. 1865) In a suit against a railway conductor, charging him with collecting fares and not accounting to the company therefor, he was required to state the condition of his property before and since his service, although he claimed it was a part of his defense.—State v. Farmer, 46 N. H. 200.

[d] (N. H. 1871) Since the purchaser of liquor sold in violation of the statute is not guilty of a criminal offense, he cannot be excused from testifying as to the purchase.—State v. Rand, 51 N. H. 361, 12 Am. Rep. 127.

[e] (N. H. 1879) Gen. Laws, c. 228, § 14, providing that one shall not be compelled to disclose his witnesses, nor the manner of proving his case, does not excuse him from testifying to all he knows upon the issue.—Penniman v. Jones, 59 N. H. 119.

[f] (Tenn. 1808) No one, in a court of law, can be obliged to give evidence against himself.—Cook v. Corn, 1 Tenn. (1 Overt.) 340.

APPLICATION OF PROVISIONS TO CORPORATIONS, § 1012.
APPLICATION OF CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION TO POWER OF STATE, § 1013.
EFFECT OF PROVISIONS IN GENERAL, § 1014.

§ 1009. Constitutionality of statute or ordinance compelling witness to testify, or production of books and papers for examination, or making reports.

[a] (U. S. 1886) Act June 22, 1874, c. 391, § 5, 18 Stat. 187 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2019], authorizing an order in revenue cases requiring defendant or claimant to produce his private books, invoices, and papers, or else the allegations of the government attorney will be taken as confessed, violates Const. Amend 5, forbidding the compelling of a person in a criminal case to be a witness against himself.—Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746.

[b] (U. S. 1869) Act July 20, 1868, § 49, authorizing the supervisor of internal revenue to summon persons to come before him and testify under oath and produce their books and papers, does not violate Const. Amend. 5, declaring that no one shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself; the proceeding not being criminal, but civil.—In re Meador, Fed. Cas. No. 9,375 [1 Abb. (U. S.) 317].

[c] (U. S. 1870) Act July 20, 1863, § 49 (16 Stat. 144), which gives supervisors of internal revenue the right to examine such books and papers as show the operation of banks, etc., with the public, and are connected with the internal revenue of the United States, is not unconstitutional as compelling a party to testify against himself.—Stanwood v. Green, Fed. Cas. No. 13,301 [2 Abb. (U. S.) 184].

[d] (U. S. 1871) Proceedings under Act June 30, 1864, § 14, as amended by Act July 13, 1866, § 9 (14 Stat. 101), for the purpose of compelling the production of books and giving of evidence before an assessor of internal revenue, are civil, and not criminal; and a party cannot object that the production of books or giving of evidence is in violation of the federal constitution, which provides that no person can be compelled to be a witness against himself in a criminal case.—In re Strouse, Fed. Cas. No. 13,548 [1 Sawy. 605].

[e] (U. S. 1874) Act June 22, 1874, c. 391, § 5, 18 Stat. 187 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2019] requiring the production by defendants or claimants of all books, papers, etc., in proceedings under the revenue laws other than criminal, that will tend to prove allegations made by the United States, is not repugnant to Const. U. S. Amend. 5, providing that no persons shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself.—United States v. Distillery No. 28, Fed. Cas. No. 14,966 [6 Biss. 483].

[f] (U. S. 1875) Act June 22, 1874, c. 391, § 5, 18 Stat. 187 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2019], requiring the production of books and papers in a proceeding against a distillery for forfeiture, is not unconstitutional, within the provision of the constitution declaring that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself; such a proceeding not being criminal within the statute.—United States v. Three Tons of Coal, Fed. Cas. No. 16,515 [6 Biss. 379].

[g] (Ind. 1872) Treasury Act 1859 (1 Gav. & H. St. p. 647), providing that no money shall be paid into the state treasury until the auditor of state be furnished with "a description of the liability on account of which such payment is to be made," who shall then make his draft therefor in favor of the state treasurer, and making it the duty of the latter to "number, register, file, and preserve such draft," so far as it compels the treasurer to furnish evidence against himself of the violation of Act 1861 (2 Gav. & H. St. § 456), making it a felony to use any of the funds of the state by way of investment or loan, is in conflict with Const. art. 1, § 14, providing that "no person in any criminal prosecution, shall be compelled to testify against himself."—State v. Kimball, Wils. 174.

[h] (Ind. 1879) That part of 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 463, § 14, by which it is provided that "any person concerned in such trespass may be compelled to testify against any other person therein concerned," is in direct contravention of both the letter and the spirit of the last clause of section 14 of the bill of rights in the constitution, by which it is expressly provided that "no person, in any criminal prosecution, shall be compelled to testify against himself."—State v. Enochs, 69 Ind. 314.

[i] (Kan. 1885) Code, § 482, "in aid of execution," authorizing the district judge to require a judgment debtor to appear before him to answer concerning his property, which he unjustly refuses to apply towards the satisfaction of a judgment rendered against him, and to order any money in his actual possession and under his control, not exempt by law, to be applied to the satisfaction of the judgment under which the proceedings are had, and to enforce said orders by proceedings for contempt in case of refusal or disobedience, does not violate Bill of Rights, § 10, providing that no person shall be witness against himself.—In re Burrows, 33 Kan. 675, 7 Pac. 148.

[j] (Me. 1867) Act 1864, c. 280, allowing a person charged with crime to testify at his own trial, if he requests to do so, is not unconstitutional, as compelling a person to testify against himself.—State v. Bartlett, 55 Me. 200.

[k] (Mass. 1839) St. 1838, c. 14, giving to bank commissioners power to examine bank officers and agents under oath relative to the condition of the bank, and fixing a penalty for any refusal by such an officer or agent, "without justifiable cause," to testify, does not conflict with the constitutional provision that no one shall be compelled to criminate himself, since, if the evidence of such an officer or agent would criminate him, that fact would be justifiable cause for refusal to testify.—Commonwealth v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, 38 Mass. (21 Pick.) 542, 32 Am. Dec. 290.

[l] (Mo. 1891) The act of 1889, "for the punishment of pools, trusts and conspiracies," requiring some officer of every corporation to inform, under oath, the secretary of state, whether the corporation has violated the act, and prescribing a fine on the corporation and forfeiture of its property, and fine or imprisonment of the officers, in case it or they have violated the act, is in conflict with the constitutional declaration that "no person shall be compelled to testify against himself in a criminal case."—State v. Simmons Hardware Co., 109 Mo. 118, 18 S. W. 1125, 15 L. R. A. 676.

[m] (Mo. 1893) Rev. St. 1889, §§ 4621, 4622, prohibiting a druggist from selling liquor except on the prescriptions of a physician, and declaring that such prescriptions shall be carefully preserved, and produced in court, or before any grand jury, whenever required, and that, on the failure of the druggist to produce the same, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, are not in conflict with Const. art. 2, § 23, providing that no person shall be required to furnish evidence in a criminal case against himself.—State v. Davis, 117 Mo. 614, 23 S. W. 759.

a book a description of property left with him in pawn, and of the person leaving it, is not unconstitutional, as being in conflict with Const. U. S. Amend. 5, providing that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself.—City of St. Joseph v. Levin, 128 Mo. 588, 31 S. W. 101, 49 Am. St. Rep. 577.

[o] (N. Y. 1861) The constitution provides that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself. New York City Charter, § 52, relating to bribery of the common council, declares that every person offending against the section shall be a competent witness against any other witness offending in the same transaction, and may be compelled to appear and give evidence. Held, that the constitution did not continue the common-law privilege allowing a witness to refuse to answer, where his answer tended to disgrace him, and the statute was not unconstitutional.—People v. Kelly, 21 How. Prac. 54.

[p] (Ohio, 1881) 71 Ohio Laws, p. 146, fixing a penalty against railroads for overcharging for transportation, and declaring that allegations of the petition claiming such penalty, not denied by answer, shall be taken as true, does not violate Const. art. 1, § 10, which provides that no person in any criminal case shall be compelled to be a witness against himself.—Cincinnati, S. & C. R. Co. v. Cook, 37 Ohio St. 265.

[r] (Tex. 1889) Pen. Code, art. 756, requires those engaged in the business of slaughtering live stock to report to the commissioners' court the number, age, sex, etc., of stock slaughtered. Article 764 defines the offense of killing for market an unbranded or unmarked animal, or purchasing or killing any animal without taking a bill of sale. Held, that the former article does not, as requiring a person to criminate himself under the latter article, violate section 10 of the bill of rights, providing that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall not be compelled to give evidence against himself.—Aston v. State, 27 Tex. App. 574, 11 S. W. 637.

[a] (U. S. 1886) A proceeding to forfeit goods for a violation of the customs revenue laws, whether in rem or in personam, is a criminal case, within the fifth amendment of the constitution, and an order for the compulsory production of defendant's private books and papers, under Act Cong. June 22, 1874, c. 391, § 5, 18 Stat. 187 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2019] making a refusal to produce books equivalent to a confession of the allegations which it is charged that they will prove, is void, as in violation of that amendment.—Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746.

See post, § 1026 [d].

Actions or proceedings in which privilege of accused may be exercised, see post, § 1042½.

Answer tending to subject witness to civil action, see post, § 1015.

[a] (U. S. 1892) The fifth amendment to the constitution of the United States, which declares that no person "shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself," extends its protection to a witness called to testify before a grand jury which is investigating alleged violations of the interstate commerce law. It is not limited to cases of criminal prosecution against the witness himself.—Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 12 Sup. Ct. 195, 35 L. Ed. 1110, reversing In re Counselman (C. C. 1890) 44 Fed. 268.

[b] (U. S.) A witness before a grand jury is not bound to answer, where he states that the answer might implicate himself.—(1829) Sanderson's Case, Fed. Cas. No. 12,297 [3 Cranch, C. C. 638]. CONTRA, see (1824) Devaughn's Case, Fed. Cas. No. 3,837 [2 Cranch, C. C. 501].

[c] (U. S. 1883) The constitutional provision that "no person shall be compelled in any criminal action to be a witness against himself" applies only to evidence in suits or proceedings instituted against the witness himself.—United States v. McCarthy (C. C.) 18 Fed. 87, 21 Blatchf. 469.

[d] (Cal. 1895) A prosecution under Pen. Code, § 772, providing for the removal of public officers for violations of duty, is a criminal case, within Const. art. 1, § 13, declaring that no person shall be compelled to be a witness against himself in any criminal case.—Thruston v. Clark, 107 Cal. 285, 40 Pac. 435.

[e] (Ind. 1860) The provision that no person in any criminal prosecution shall be compelled to testify against himself protects witnesses in civil cases.—Wilkins v. Malone, 14 Ind. 153.

[f] (Ind. 1881) In a bastardy proceeding, defendant may be compelled to testify; the proceeding being a civil one.—Burt v. State, 79 Ind. 359.

[g] (Mass.) The constitutional provision that no one shall be compelled to accuse or furnish evidence against himself does not relate to questions of property, but to criminal cases only.—(1827) Devoll v. Brownell, 22 Mass. (5 Pick.) 448; (1829) Keith v. Woombell, 25 Mass. (8 Pick.) 211.

[h] (Mass. 1871) Const. art. 12, providing that no subject shall be compelled to accuse or furnish evidence against himself, applies to investigations ordered and conducted by the legislature, as such proceedings are regulated by the same rules as in judicial inquiries.—In re Emery, 107 Mass. 172, 9 Am. Rep. 22.

[i] (N. H. 1814) Bill of Rights, art. 15, declaring that no person shall be required to furnish evidence against himself, relates to criminal proceedings only.—Wood v. Weld, Smith, 367.

[j] (N. Y. 1890) The provision of Const. art. 1, § 6, that "no person shall be * * * compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself," does not apply to an investigation by police commissioners of a charge against a police sergeant for conduct unbecoming an officer.—People v. McClave, 57 Hun, 587, 10 N. Y. Supp. 560, judgment affirmed (1890) 123 N. Y. 512, 25 N. E. 1047.

[a] (U. S. 1880) The fifth amendment to the constitution of the United States, which forbids that any person shall be compelled in a criminal case to give evidence against himself, applies to a corporation, as well as to persons.—Pollock v. The Sea Bird (D. C.) 3 Fed. 573.

[a] (S. C. 1894) Const. U. S. Amends. 4, 5, providing that no person shall be compelled to testify against himself in a criminal case, have no application to the power of the state governments, but apply only to the powers of the federal government.—State v. Atkinson, 40 S. C. 363, 18 S. E. 1021, 42 Am. St. Rep. 877; Id., 41 S. C. 551, 19 S. E. 691.

[a] (U. S. 1896) The constitutional privilege of refusing to give self-incriminating testimony was not intended to shield the witness from the personal disgrace or opprobrium attaching to the exposure of his crime, but only from actual prosecution and punishment.—Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 16 Sup. Ct. 644, 40 L. Ed. 819, affirming (C. C. 1895) 70 Fed. 46.

[b] (Cal. 1894) Const. art. 1, § 13, providing that "no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself," relieves such witness from giving any evidence which in a criminal prosecution against himself might tend to establish the offense with which he may be charged.—Ex parte Cohen, 104 Cal. 524, 38 Pac. 364, 43 Am. St. Rep. 127, 26 L. R. A. 423.

[c] (Minn. 1859) Rev. St. p. 481, § 72, providing that a witness shall not be required to answer questions which will have a tendency to accuse him of any crime or misdemeanor, or expose him to any penalty or forfeiture, is declaratory of the law as it previously existed, and neither restricts nor enlarges the privileges of witnesses.—State v. Bilansky, 3 Minn. 246 (Gil. 169).

[d] (N. Y. 1861) The act of 1860, which makes husband and wife competent as witnesses in case of divorce, does not operate to compel them to testify in cases where a witness is exempt from giving answers which have a tendency to accuse him of crime or expose him to forfeiture.—Anable v. Anable, 24 How. Prac. 92.

3. ANSWER TENDING TO SUBJECT WITNESS TO CIVIL ACTION OR PECUNIARY LOSS.

ANSWER TENDING TO SUBJECT WITNESS TO CIVIL ACTION, § 1015.
ANSWER TENDING TO SUBJECT WITNESS TO PECUNIARY LOSS, § 1016.
—— REVEALING TRADE SECRETS, § 1017.

§ 1015. Answer tending to subject witness to civil action.

Actions or proceedings in general, see ante, § 1011.

[a] A witness cannot excuse himself, or be excused, from giving evidence, because his answer may expose him to a civil action.

—(Ala. 1845) Alexander v. Knox, 7 Ala. 503; (Ky. 1823) Gorham v. Carroll, 13 Ky. (3 Litt.) 221; (1823) Black v. Crouch, Id. 226; (1831) Commonwealth v. Thruston, 30 Ky. (7 J. J. Marsh.) 62;
(La. 1819) Planters' Bank v. George, 6 Mart. (O. S.) 670, 12 Am. Dec. 487;
(Md. 1818) Taney v. Kemp, 4 Har. & J. 348, 7 Am. Dec. 673; (1829) Hays v. Richardson, 1 Gill & J. 366; (1829) Naylor v. Simmes, 4 Gill & J. 273;
(Miss. 1834) Judge of Probate v. Green, 2 Miss. (1 How.) 146;
(Mo. 1874) Ex parte Munford, 57 Mo. 603;
(N. H. 1825) Copp v. Upham, 3 N. H. 159;
(N. Y. 1867) Taylor v. Jennings, 30 N. Y. Super. Ct. (7 Rob.) 581;
(N. C. 1830) Jones v. Lanier, 13 N. C. 480;
(Tenn. 1834) Zollicoffer v. Turney, 14 Tenn. (6 Yerg.) 297.

[b] (N. Y. 1829) A witness neither nominally nor substantially party to the suit is not exempted from giving evidence, though it should be evidence against him in a civil suit, unless it tends to criminate him, or subject him to some loss or damage in the nature of a penalty or forfeiture.—In re Kip, 1 Paige, 601.

[c] (N. Y. 1841) A witness may refuse to answer a question, where his answer would tend to criminate him or subject him to forfeiture; but he cannot object simply on the ground that his answer might subject him to a civil suit for a debt or otherwise.—Stewart v. Turner, 3 Edw. Ch. 458.

[a] A witness is bound to answer a question in a matter pertinent to the issue, where his answer will not expose him to criminal prosecution, or tend to subject him to a penalty or forfeiture, although it may otherwise adversely affect his pecuniary interest.

—(Mass. 1830) Bull v. Loveland, 27 Mass. (10 Pick.) 9;
(Pa. 1818) Baird v. Cochran, 4 Serg. & R. 397.

CONTRA, see
(Conn. 1797) Starr v. Tracy, 2 Root, 528;
(Mass. 1810) Appleton v. Boyd, 7 Mass. 131.

[b] A witness is not excused from answering merely because his answer may subject him to pecuniary loss.

—(Me. 1841) Lowney v. Perham, 20 Me. (2 App.) 235;
(Md. 1829) Hays v. Richardson, 1 Gill & J. 366;
(N. C. 1845) Harper v. Burrow, 28 N. C. 30;
(Vt. 1843) Ward v. Sharp, 15 Vt. 115.

[c] (U. S.) A witness who is interested cannot be compelled to testify against his interest.—(1806) Carne v. McLane, Fed. Cas. No. 2,416 [1 Cranch, C. C. 351]; (1819) Pritchard v. Georgetown, Fed. Cas. No. 11,437 [2 Cranch, C. C. 191].

[d] (U. S. 1828) In an action by a bank against a customer for money had and received on an overdraft, plaintiff asked a witness, who had been a bookkeeper at the time, whether defendant's account, at the time the check was paid, showed a balance equal thereto. Held, that the bookkeeper was not obliged to answer, as by answering he might charge himself with the loss.—Bank of the United States v. Washington, Fed. Cas. No. 940 [3 Cranch, C. C. 295].

[e] (Ala. 1843) In a proceeding against a sheriff by motion for neglect in making the amount of an execution, a witness cannot be excused from testifying against him on the ground that he is one of his sureties, unless the sureties are made parties to the proceeding.—Garey v. Frost, 5 Ala. 636.

[f] (Ala. 1843) A surety in the bond of a claimant of property levied on will not be excused from testifying for the plaintiff in execution because he is such surety.—Planters' & Merchants' Bank v. Willis, 5 Ala. 770.

[g] (Conn. 1796) A witness who has become voluntarily interested cannot be privileged from testifying what he knew before, nor can he be compelled to testify to what came to his knowledge after he became interested, if it may render him liable pecuniarily.—Simons v. Payne, 2 Root, 406.

[h] (Conn. 1820) A person who has signed a note as attorney for another, and has afterwards given bonds for his principal to prosecute an appeal from a judgment on that note, is not protected from giving his testimony for the payee to prove the execution of the note, on the ground that it would be against his interest; he having voluntarily assumed such interest after the payee had an interest in his testimony.—Phelps v. Riley, 3 Conn. 266.

[i] (Ill. 1843) If a party in interest is not also a party to the record in a suit, he may, at the instance of the opposite party, be compelled to testify as a witness against his own interest, provided his answers do not subject him to a criminal prosecution or to a penalty or forfeiture.—Brooks v. McKinney, 5 Ill. (4 Scam.) 309.

[j] (Ky. 1827) The fact that a witness was interested in favor of the plaintiff's recovery, and expected to get the benefit of the recovery, and that to compel him to testify would be to compel him to testify against his own interests, did not give him the right to refuse, as only the danger of a penal proceeding would give him that right.—Robinson v. Neal, 21 Ky. (5 T. B. Mon.) 212.

[k] (Md. 1826) In an action to recover a deposit claimed to have been made by plaintiff in defendant bank, a stockholder, called as a witness, may be compelled to give evidence that certain money received by the bank belonged to plaintiff, though such evidence is against his interest.—City Bank of Baltimore v. Bateman, 7 Har. & J. 104.

[m] (N. C. 1805) A garnishee cannot be asked whether he has paid a bond of 20 years' standing.—Gee v. Warwick, 3 N. C. 358.

[n] (Pa. 1811) A witness will not be compelled to answer a question, where his answer tends to show the invalidity of a judgment by confession entered for him in another proceeding.—In re Bell, 1 Browne, 376.

[o] (Pa. 1842) A witness may be compelled to answer a question, the answer to which may affect his interest civilly.—In re Danforth, 1 Pa. Law J. 148.

[p] (S. C. 1806) A witness may be compelled to give evidence which may ultimately affect his own interest, if the party against whom this interest operates insists on his giving testimony, provided his evidence does not extend to render him infamous or prove him guilty of some crime.—Miller v. Creyon, 2 Brev. 108.

[a] (U. S. 1888) A witness for complainant in a suit to restrain the infringement of a patent for a medical preparation, having testified only as to the uses and effect of the preparation, cannot, on cross-examination, be required to disclose its ingredients; that being a trade secret, the disclosure of which would injure plaintiff's business.—Moxie Nerve-Food Co. v. Beach (C. C.) 35 Fed. 465.

[b] (N. Y. 1860) In an action to restrain the infringement of a trade-mark, one of the plaintiffs, when offered as a witness on their own behalf as to the issue on the question of damages sustained by them by the infringement, refused to answer as to the materials with which his compound, which he sought to protect by the trade-mark, was prepared. Held, that he was not privileged to refuse to answer such a question, and that his claim for damages was properly stricken out as a penalty for contempt in refusing to answer; he not offering other testimony in support of it.—Burnett v. Phalon, 11 Abb. Prac. 157, 19 How. Prac. 530.

4. ANSWER TENDING TO SUBJECT WITNESS TO PENALTY OR FORFEITURE.

IN GENERAL, § 1018.
PERSONS ENTITLED TO PRIVILEGE, § 1019.
PARTICULAR SUBJECTS OF INQUIRY, § 1020.

Forfeiture because of usury, see post, § 1029.

[a] A witness is not bound to answer a question, if an answer will subject him to a penalty.

—(Ind. 1843) Lister v. Boker, 6 Blackf. 439;
(N. Y. 1838) People v. Rector, 19 Wend. 569;
(Va. 1882) Langhorne v. Commonwealth, 76 Va. 1012.

[b] (N. Y. 1847) Where a witness objects to testifying on the ground that his testimony might subject him to an indictment or prosecution for a penalty, it is not, in a court of review, an answer to the claim of privilege that the statute of limitations has run against the offense, unless it appears that such answer was suggested on the trial.—Henry v. Bank of Salina, 1 N. Y. (1 Comst.) 83.

[c] (N. Y. 1886) A witness shall not be required to give an answer which may tend to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture. Code Civ. Proc. § 837.—Gadsen v. Woodward, 103 N. Y. 242, 8 N. E. 653; Dixon v. Same, 103 N. Y. 638, 8 N. E. 653.

[d] (Va. 1850) A party is not bound to answer interrogatories which may subject him to a penalty or forfeiture, though the object of the suit is not to enforce such penalty or forfeiture, but would only expose the party to another suit.—Poindexter v. Davis, 6 Grat. 481.

Persons entitled to raise objection, see post, §§ 1058–1060.

[a] (U. S. 1873) Where a charge of misconduct is made against an officer, whether amounting to an indictable offense, or only to his discredit as such officer, which might furnish grounds for his removal or impeachment, he is not bound to be a witness against himself.—United States v. Collins, Fed. Cas. No. 14,837 [1 Woods, 499].

[b] (Ga. 1870) Under Code, § 3798, providing that no person shall be compelled to answer any question tending to criminate himself, it is error, in proceedings against road commissioners for neglect of duty, to compel the defendants to answer questions the answer of which might subject them to a fine, forfeiture, or penalty.—Bryan v. State, 40 Ga. 688.

[a] (N. Y. 1847) A witness, or a party called as a witness, may not only object to testifying to the main fact, which would subject him to a penalty or forfeiture, but may also refuse to disclose any one of a series of facts, which together would expose him to such penalty or forfeiture.—Henry v. Bank of Salina, 1 N. Y. (1 Comst.) 83.

[b] (N. Y. 1847) Where a note was put in suit for the benefit of the teller of a bank, and the defendant's counsel, in his opening, stated as one ground of defense that the note was discounted by the teller for his own benefit, in violation of the statute, and relied upon usury as another ground, such teller, though ostensibly called as a witness to prove the usury, cannot be required to disclose the transaction, for the reason that his testimony might subject him to the penalty of the forfeiture under the statute, upon a ground distinct from the de-

[c] (N. Y. 1886) In an action to recover a penalty for selling adulterated milk, contrary to a city ordinance, it was error to compel defendant to testify that he was in the business of selling milk at the time alleged in the complaint.—City of Buffalo v. Ray, 1 N. Y. St. Rep. 730.

[d] (Tenn. 1825) In an action for seduction, the woman called as a witness need not answer whether she has had carnal knowledge with other men, as an answer in the affirmative would subject her to penalties by virtue of Acts 1741, c. 14.—Johnson v. Goss, 10 Tenn. (2 Yerg.) 110.

5. ANSWER TENDING TO DISGRACE WITNESS OR RENDER HIM INFAMOUS.

DISCRETION OF COURT, § 1022.
MATERIALITY OR RELEVANCY OF INQUIRY, § 1023.
COMPELLING WITNESS TO STATE REASONS, § 1024.
ANSWERS ON CROSS-EXAMINATION, § 1025.

See post, § 1034 [c].

—(U. S. 1827) United States v. Craig, Fed. Cas. No. 14,883 [4 Wash. C. C. 729]; (1840) United States v. Dickinson, Fed. Cas. No. 14,958 [2 McLean, 325];
(N. Y. 1816) People v. Herrick, 13 Johns. 82, 7 Am. Dec. 364.

—(U. S. 1827) United States v. Craig, Fed. Cas. No. 14,883 [4 Wash. C. C. 729];
(N. Y. 1838) People v. Rector, 19 Wend. 569.

[c] (Ala. 1887) A witness cannot refuse to answer a question on the ground that the answer would tend to humiliate and degrade him.—Ex parte Boscowitz, 84 Ala. 463, 4 South. 279, 5 Am. St. Rep. 384.

[d] (Iowa, 1874) The word "ignominy," as used in the Revision, § 3989, excusing a witness from answering any question that would expose him to public ignominy, means public disgrace or dishonor. A plaintiff in an action for seduction need not answer whether, before the alleged seduction, she ever had intercourse with other men than the defendant.—Brown v. Kingsley, 38 Iowa, 220.

[e] (Ky. 1859) A witness cannot be excused from answering a question asked to, and which would, impeach his credibility, merely because he would, by answering the question, bring disgrace upon himself.—Rutherford v. Commonwealth, 59 Ky. (2 Metc.) 387.

[f] (N. Y. 1848) Where a party intends to coerce an answer from a witness tending to degrade him, such party is bound to show affirmatively that the question is relevant.—People v. Lohman, 2 Barb. 216.

[g] (N. C. 1842) Questions to a witness, tending to disparage or disgrace him, may be asked, and cannot be objected to by the opposite party. Whether the witness is bound to answer them, quære.—State v. Patterson, 24 N. C. 346, 38 Am. Dec. 699.

[h] (N. C. 1874) A question as to whether defendant, who was testifying in his own behalf, had not gone to a distant city to consult a Spiritualist to find out about the money in controversy, as tending to show his doubts about the genuineness of a certain receipt, was not to be rejected because it tended to subject the defendant to ridicule.—Lassiter v. Phillips, 70 N. C. 462.

[i] (Pa. 1803) A witness cannot be obliged to testify, if his testimony will accuse himself of an immoral act.—Galbreath's Lessee v. Eichelberger, 3 Yeates, 515.

[j] (Pa. 1847) The legislature of Pennsylvania can compel witnesses to answer questions, the answers to which may not show them to be criminal, but may involve them in shame and reproach.—Commonwealth v. Roberts, Brightly, N. P. 109.

[k] (Pa. 1891) A witness, subpœnaed before a subcommittée of the finance committee of councils, under the fifteenth section of the Bullit bill of June 1, 1885, will not be bound to reply to questions the answers to which might subject him to ignominy and contempt, even although an indictment would not lie against him thereunder.—In re Yard, 48 Leg. Int. 288.

[a] (Minn. 1859) Allowing questions which do not tend to criminate, but merely to disgrace or degrade, the witness, is discretionary with the trial court.—State v. Bilansky, 3 Minn. 246 (Gil. 169).

[b] (Mo. 1876) Counsel may sometimes ask a witness a question the answer to which may degrade him, but it is in the discretion of the court to require an answer. The court may also, under certain circumstances, forbid such questions to be asked.—Ring v. Jamison, 2 Mo. App. 584.

§ 1023. Materiality or relevancy of inquiry.

[a] A witness will not be excused from testifying to a fact material to the issue, because his testimony may have a direct tendency to degrade his character.
—(Ill. 1851) Weldon v. Burch, 12 Ill. (2 Peck) 374;
(N. Y. 1867) Taylor v. Jennings, 30 N. Y. Super. Ct. (7 Rob.) 581.

[b] (Cal. 1868) Under Prac. Act, § 408, excusing a witness from giving an answer having a direct tendency to degrade his character, unless it be to a fact in issue, the privilege does not extend to a question relative to a matter alleged in the answer.—Clark v. Reese, 35 Cal. 89.

[c] (Del. 1859) The fact that an answer tends to disgrace a witness will not excuse him from answering if the matter is relevant, but is a good excuse if the question is irrelevant or only collateral.—Knowles v. Knowles, 2 Houst. 133.

[d] (Mich. 1878) A witness is not excused from testifying concerning facts that are relevant, because they may exhibit him in a discreditable light, if they do not show criminality.—Jennings v. Prentice, 39 Mich. 421.

[e] (Mo. 1851) Where the transaction to which a witness is interrogated forms any part of the issue to be tried, the witness will be obliged to answer, however strongly it may reflect on his character.—Clementine v. State, 14 Mo. 112.

[ee] (N. H. 1866) Where a witness is asked a question the answer to which would disgrace him, but could have no bearing on the issue, except so far as it might impeach his credibility, he is privileged from answering it.—State v. Staples, 47 N. H. 113, 90 Am. Dec. 565.

[f] (N. J. 1811) A witness is not bound to answer questions tending to disgrace him, and there is no distinction in such case between matters relevant to the main issue and collateral matters.—Vaughn v. Perine, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 728, 4 Am. Dec. 411.

[g] (N. Y. 1848) Where a witness is asked a question, the answer to which would disgrace him, but could have no bearing on the issue, except as it might impair his credibility, he is privileged from answering.—Lohman v. People, 1 N. Y. (1 Comst.) 379, 49 Am. Dec. 340.

[h] (Ohio, 1888) A witness cannot refuse to answer a question pertinent to the issue, on the ground that such answer will tend to disgrace her, where such answer will not tend to criminate her, and the witness so testifies.—Ammon v. Johnson, 2 O. C. D. 149.

[i] (Pa. 1846) The effect an answer will have on the character of the witness will not excuse him from answering a question material and relevant, but will excuse him from answering a question of a collateral matter.—In re Doran, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. 467.

[j] (Utah, 1875) A witness is not bound to answer, nor is a court to compel an answer, to an inquiry tending to disgrace a witness, unless the evidence is material to the issue.—Conway v. Clinton, 1 Utah, 215.

[a] (Md. 1882) A witness having declined to answer questions which manifestly tended, if the answer should be in the affirmative, to degrade him, held, that he should not be obliged to say why he declined.—Merluzzi v. Gleeson, 59 Md. 214.

[b] (N. Y. 1882) If a witness refuses to answer a question because an answer might tend to degrade him, and the question is otherwise unobjectionable, he may be compelled to give his reason and claim his privilege.—New v. Fisher, 11 Daly, 308.

§ 1025. Answers on cross-examination.

[a] Where a witness voluntarily testifies in chief on a particular subject, he may be cross-examined on the subject, even though his answers may disgrace him.

—(Cal. 1880) People v. Freshour, 55 Cal. 375, 1 Ky. Law Rep. 224;

[b] (Ala. 1867) There is no rule of evidence preventing a person accused of a crime from asking a witness on cross-examination questions tending to degrade or bring shame on the witness.—Hall v. State, 40 Ala. 698.

[c] (Cal. 1868) In an action for breach of promise of marriage, the character of the plaintiff for chastity being in issue, and the defendant testifying in his own behalf, to a cross-question whether he had ever called the plaintiff his "dear Carrie," or his "dear child," having replied, "I decline to answer the question; when a man takes personal liberties with a woman, he should not come on the stand and swear to it," was asked by the plaintiff, "Did you ever take improper liberties with the plaintiff?" to which, on his declining to answer, the court enforced an answer. Held, that the plaintiff's last question was proper, after defendant's insinuation that he had taken improper liberties with plaintiff.—Clark v. Reese, 35 Cal. 89.

[d] (Ga. 1884) A female witness was asked on cross-examination if she did not have children, and she replied she had one. She was then asked if she had ever been married; and, on objection being made, the court said the witness need not answer, and also ruled out the former answer. Held, that there was no error, in the absence of any question as to the right of the witness to voluntarily answer questions tending to degrade her.—Gravett v. State, 74 Ga. 191.

[e] (Iowa, 1878) In an action on account for legal services one item of which was $500 for services in a divorce suit, the plaintiff testified that, pending his employment, an agreement was made between him and his client for "more than an ordinary fee," upon the ground that employment involved him in some complications that were compromising him in his profession. Held, that he might be compelled to state upon cross-examination what those complications were.—Bolton v. Daily, 48 Iowa, 348.

[f] (Ky. 1896) In a criminal action, it is permissible, upon cross-examination, to inquire into the habits and mode of life of the witness, for the purpose of shaking his credit as a witness, even though the answers may tend to bring him into disgrace.—Warren v. Commonwealth, 99 Ky. 370, 35 S. W. 1028.

[g] (Mo. 1880) A witness, upon cross-examination, may be compelled to answer any questions tending to test his credibility or to shake his credit by injuring his character, however irrelevant to the facts in issue, or however disgraceful the answer would be to himself, except where his answer would expose him to a criminal charge.—Muller v. St. Louis Hospital Ass'n, 73 Mo. 242.

[h] (N. Y. 1869) A witness is privileged, on cross-examination, to refuse to answer a question which does not relate to any matter material to the issue or involved in his direct examination, where he swears that a truthful answer would tend to degrade him.—In re Lewis, 39 How. Prac. 155, Fed. Cas. No. 8,312.

[i] (N. Y. 1878) On cross-examination of the defendant on a trial for forgery, while a witness in his own behalf, an objection to the inquiry, "How many times have you been arrested?" as tending to degrade him, is improperly overruled, after his counsel has raised the question of privilege.—People v. Brown, 72 N. Y. 571, 28 Am. Rep. 183.

[j] (N. C. 1872) In general, questions put to a witness on cross-examination are not objectionable, as tending to disparage him, unless the answer may subject him to indictment or to a statute penalty.—State v. Davidson, 67 N. C. 119.

[k] (N. D. 1896) For the purpose of affecting the credibility of a witness, it is proper to ask him on cross-examination questions the answers to which may tend to degrade, disgrace, or criminate him, though he may refuse to answer any question the answer to which will tend to criminate him.—State v. Pancoast, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052, 35 L. R. A. 518.

(Vt. 1840) Chamberlain v. Willson, 12 Vt. 491, 36 Am. Dec. 356.

[b] (U. S. 1807) If any direct answer may disclose a fact which forms a necessary and essential link in the chain of testimony which would be sufficient to convict the witness of any crime, he is not bound to answer it, so as to furnish matter for that conviction.—United States v. Burr, Fed. Cas. No. 14,692e.

[c] (Del. 1847) A question may be put to a witness tending to criminate him, but he is not obliged to answer.—Short v. State, 4 Har. 568.

[d] (Ill. 1885) It is the privilege of a witness to refuse to answer questions before a grand jury, if, in his opinion, the answers would tend to disclose matters that might criminate him. —Mackin v. People, 115 Ill. 312, 3 N. E. 222.

[e] (Ind. 1860) A witness cannot be compelled to answer as to any one act, the constant repetition of which would amount to a statute offense.—French v. Venneman, 14 Ind. 282.

[f] (Iowa, 1861) Where the answer to a question in the direct interrogation of a witness would not tend to criminate him, but the questions which might be rightfully put on cross-examination to test the truth of such answer might form a link in a chain of evidence that would criminate him, it was held that witness might refuse to answer.—Printz v. Cheeney, 11 Iowa, 469.

[g] (Miss. 1894) Where one is jointly indicted with another, and there is no severance, he cannot be compelled to testify for his codefendant, since it may constrain him to give evidence against himself.—Holman v. State, 72 Miss. 108, 16 South. 294.

[h] (Mo. 1825) A witness is bound to testify, although he stands indicted for the same offense as the person on trial, and although he says his testimony will lead to his own conviction.—State v. Douglass, 1 Mo. 527.

[i] (N. H. 1829) A witness cannot be compelled to answer a question, if his answer will expose him to a criminal prosecution; but, if he voluntarily state a fact, he is bound to state how he knows it, although in so doing he may expose himself to a criminal charge.—State v. K——, 4 N. H. 562.

[j] (N. H. 1854) A witness will not be compelled to answer a question, if his answer will expose him to be criminally prosecuted; and he is not bound to testify to any particular fact, if a full account of his knowledge of such fact would so expose him. If the fact to which he is interrogated forms but one link in the chain of testimony which is to convict him, he is protected.—Janvrin v. Scammon, 29 N. H. (9 Fost.) 280.

[k] (N. H. 1855) If a witness discloses part of a transaction in which he was criminally concerned, without claiming his privilege, he must then proceed and state the whole; but, if what he discloses is not clearly a part of the transaction, he should not be compelled to proceed.—Coburn v. Odell, 30 N. H. (10 Fost.) 540.

[l] (N. J. 1830) A question may be put to a witness, though the answer to it may criminate or disgrace him; but the witness is not bound to answer.—Fries v. Brugler, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 79, 21 Am. Dec. 52.

[m] (N. Y. 1861) A witness cannot refuse to answer, because his answer might assist in pointing out to the prosecuting officer sources of evidence to sustain a criminal suit against himself, of which otherwise such officer could have had no knowledge.—People v. Kelly, 24 N. Y. 74.

[n] (N. Y. 1861) If a witness objects to a question on the ground that an answer would criminate himself, he must allege in substance that his answer, if repeated as his admission on his own trial, would tend to prove him guilty of a criminal offense; but if, either by reason of a positive statutory prohibition or otherwise, the case is so situated that a repetition of his evidence in a prosecution against him is impossible, his privilege of refusal to answer is gone. —People v. Kelly, 24 N. Y. 74, 24 How. Prac. 369.

[o] (N. Y. 1882) In a proceeding to revoke letters of administration granted on the estate of an alleged decedent, on the ground that he was alive, a witness was produced who stated on his direct examination that he was the alleged decedent, and on his cross-examination testified as to the events of his life prior to a certain year, in which, according to his statements, he left Boston. On being asked whither he went on leaving Boston, he declined to answer, on the ground that his reply would tend to charge him with a crime. He refused to name any person with whom he had lived or associated during the period, or to state any business or occupation in which he had been engaged. He testified that he had neither been in prison nor under arrest; but, when asked whether he had been charged with crime, he again invoked his privilege, and replied that he would not answer in that regard. Held, that since, at the time of the refusal, no subject had been broached which suggested the possibility of witness' connection with the commission of a crime, his statement that his answer might tend to incriminate him was an insufficient basis of his claim of privilege. — Youngs v. Youngs, 5 Redf. Sur. 505.

[p] (N. Y. 1894) Though a witness has testified that he was in no way connected with a criminal offense, yet, where the circumstances are such as to place him in danger of a prosecution therefor, he may refuse to testify on the ground that his evidence may tend to criminate him.—People v. Forbes, 143 N. Y. 219, 38 N. E. 303.

[q] (N. C. 1868) Laws 1866, c. 43, makes parties who are on trial for the same criminal offense, charged in the same indictment, competent and compellable to give evidence for or against each other, save that a party is not to give evidence for or against himself, or for or against his wife (and e converso), and is not compellable to answer any question tending to criminate himself.—State v. Rose, 61 N. C. 406.

the fact to which he is interrogated forms but a link in the chain of testimony which would convict him, he is protected, without being required to explain how he might be criminated by the answer; and if it is one of a series of questions, the answers to all of which would establish his criminality, he cannot be compelled to answer that or any of the series, and the court is bound to instruct him whether his answer would tend to criminate or expose him.—Lea v. Henderson, 41 Tenn. (1 Cold.) 146.

[s] (Va. 1874) By the eighth section in the Bill of Rights, providing that in all criminal prosecutions the defendant cannot be compelled to give evidence against himself, he is not only protected from giving evidence against himself on his own trial, but also from giving evidence on the trial of another, where such evidence will tend to criminate him.—Cullen v. Commonwealth, 24 Grat. 624.

[t] (Va. 1882) Where the fact concerning which a witness is interrogated forms even a single remote link in the chain of testimony which may implicate him in a crime or misdemeanor, he is not bound to answer.—Langhorne v. Commonwealth, 76 Va. 1012.

[a] (U. S. 1804) A witness is not bound to answer the question whether he sold certain stolen goods to defendant.—United States v. Moses, Fed. Cas. No. 15,824 [1 Cranch, C. C. 170].

[b] (U. S. 1807) The secretary of a person charged with treason cannot refuse to answer whether he has present knowledge of the cipher in which is written a letter purporting to have been written by the accused, as any direct answer could not tend to implicate him.—United States v. Burr, Fed. Cas. No. 14,692e.

[c] (U. S. 1879) In a suit by an assignee in bankruptcy to recover the value of property alleged to have been fraudulently transferred by the bankrupt, the bankrupt when called as a witness need not answer whether the defendant had paid him for the property; he having been indicted for putting goods out of the way to defraud creditors.—Tyler v. Angevine, Fed. Cas. No. 14,306 [15 Blatchf. 536].

[d] (U. S. 1894) The vendor of an infringing devise, who is not a party to the suit, may be compelled to testify to the purchase and use thereof by defendant, without violating the constitutional provision that no witness shall be compelled to testify against himself in any criminal case; for Rev. St. §§ 4919, 4921 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 3394, 3395], do not subject an infringer to penalties or forfeitures, but merely authorize the court in its discretion, and "according to the circumstances of the case," to impose additional damages.—Masseth v. Johnston (C. C.) 59 Fed. 613.

[e] (Ark. 1855) If the object of questions is to implicate the witness in the compounding of a felony, and thereby to discredit him, he will be privileged from answering.—Pleasant v. State, 15 Ark. 624.

[g] (Cal. 1894) Const. art. 1, § 13, provides that no one shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself. Section 154, Pen. Code, provides that every debtor who fraudulently sells or conceals his property with intent to defraud or delay his creditors is punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both. Petitioner was adjudicated an insolvent, and was cited to appear before the court and be examined regarding his disposition of his property. Held, that he was not obliged to answer questions relating to his fraudulent disposition of his property.—Ex parte Clarke, 103 Cal. 352, 37 Pac. 230.

[h] (Ill. 1890) The question as to whether witness was indebted to one of the parties for whom he was business manager, without his consent, does not carry with it any necessary implication of crime, and it is error to exclude it.—Moline Wagon Co. v. Preston, 35 Ill. App. 358.

[i] (Ind. 1843) A penalty is inflicted by an act of 1840 for issuing any small bill, for the purpose of passing the same as a circulating medium; and therefore a witness cannot be required to answer a question which would be evidence against him on such a charge.—Lister v. Boker, 6 Blackf. 439.

[j] (Iowa, 1865) A constable was asked, when a witness before the grand jury, whether he knew of any house in a certain place "where spirituous liquors are sold." He declined to answer on the ground that Revision, § 1578, makes it a misdemeanor for a peace officer who knows of a violation of the liquor law not to inform of the same, and that his answer would criminate himself. Held, that the question must be answered, as it referred to a time so recent that the answer, instead of criminating him, was in accord with his duty under the statute.—Hunt v. McCalla, 20 Iowa, 20.

[k] (Iowa, 1876) A witness stated that defendant had admitted to him, in the presence of several others, his guilt of the crime of which he stood charged. Held, that the witness might be compelled to give the names of the others present at the time the confession was made, though it may tend to incriminate him.—State v. Fay, 43 Iowa, 651.

[l] (La. 1844) Interrogating an attorney to ascertain whether he was the author of a contemptuous petition and his motive, and compelling him to answer, is not a violation of the constitutional provision that "in criminal prosecutions no one shall be compelled to give evidence against himself."—State v. Soule, 8 Rob. 500.

[m] (Me. 1845) A witness may refuse to answer whether he has not testified falsely in a former case in which he had been called by the same party, because it might criminate himself.—State v. Blake, 25 Me. (12 Shep.) 350.

[n] (Mass. 1886) At the trial of a case, a witness who has testified that she had lived in a certain house is not obliged to answer an inquiry as to the character of the house, where it sufficiently appears that the answer would tend to criminate her.—Commonwealth v. Trider, 143 Mass. 180, 9 N. E. 510.

[o] (Minn. 1868) In an action for libel, it is error to require a witness to testify whether he wrote the libel in question, the effect of an affirmative answer being to subject the witness to a criminal prosecution.—Simmons v. Holster, 13 Minn. 249 (Gil. 232).

[p] (Minn. 1890) On an indictment for forgery where the person whose name was forged is called, for the state, to prove that what purports to be his signature is a forgery, he is not entitled to claim the privilege of silence on the ground that his answer might criminate himself.—State v. Thaden, 43 Minn. 253, 45 N. W. 447; Same v. Tall, 43 Minn. 273, 45 N. W. 449.

[q] (N. H. 1865) In an action against a railway conductor, charging him with collecting fares and not accounting to the company therefor, the defendant was justified in refusing, on the ground that it would tend to criminate himself, to answer whether he had passed persons free in the cars, or whether he had sold tickets below the regular prices.—State v. Farmer, 46 N. H. 200.

[r] (N. Y. 1832) A witness who has preferred a complaint for felony, and who was examined before the magistrate and his examination reduced to writing, is not bound, when testifying on the trial, to answer as to the evidence given by him on making his complaint, and on his examination before the magistrate, as the answer might tend to subject the witness to a prosecution for perjury.—Bellinger v. People, 8 Wend. 595.

[s] (N. Y. 1845) In a suit on a note by a bank, the defendant called the cashier to prove that usury was taken by the bank in discounting the note. Held that, if the cashier received the usury in behalf of the bank, he would be liable to an indictment under the statute making usury a misdemeanor, and would be, therefore, privileged from testifying.—Curtis v. Knox, 2 Denio, 341.

[t] (N. Y. 1847) A plaintiff on the record, or plaintiff in interest, when called upon to testify under the usury act of 1837, cannot be compelled to disclose facts tending to show that the note, to recover which the suit is brought, was discounted by him in violation of the statute (1 Rev. St. p. 595, § 28) concerning the discounting of notes, etc., by officers and agents of banking corporations.—Henry v. Bank of Salina, 1 N. Y. (1 Comst.) 83.

[u] (N. Y. 1854) A witness, formerly proprietor of a mercantile agency, is excused from answering as to communications made by defendant as a correspondent of the agency to the witness, on the ground that the answer might form a link to convict the witness of libel.—In re Tappan, 9 How. Prac. 394.

[uu] (N. Y. 1860) Since the act of 1850, providing that every person who shall knowingly vend any goods, etc., having thereon any forged trade-marks, without disclosing the fact to the purchaser, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, the defendant, in an action for infringement of trade-mark, cannot be compelled to testify as to whether he has used labels like the plaintiff's, or whether there were on any of his bottles labels like those of the plaintiff, or whether he has put a different article from the plaintiff's into bottles and labeled them with labels like the plaintiff's; for affirmative answers to such questions might, in connection with other testimony, tend directly to convict him of vending bottles, etc., with counterfeit labels.—Byass v. Sullivan, 21 How. Prac. 50.

[v] (N. Y. 1860) On the trial of an action brought to recover, or upon a reference ordered to ascertain, the damages sustained by plaintiff by the use by defendant of plaintiff's trade-mark, defendant cannot be compelled to answer questions tending to show that defendant has sold articles manufactured by himself with a label thereon imitating, resembling, or purporting to be the label of the plaintiff, which act would be an offense, within chapter 123, § 3, Laws 1850.—Byass v. Smith, 17 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Bosw.) 679.

[vv] (N. Y. 1893) A witness need not answer a question as to whether or not she had on a former occasion committed perjury, since an answer might tend to convict her of the crime.—Friess v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 67 Hun, 205, 22 N. Y. Supp. 104, judgment affirmed (1893) 140 N. Y. 639, 55 N. E. 892.

[w] (N. Y. 1894) On an investigation before a grand jury of a death caused by the generation of gas in jugs which had been provided for that purpose in order to disturb a meeting of a class at college, a student was asked whether he knew when, where, and by whom the jugs were purchased, and to whom they were delivered after they were purchased. Held, that such questions tended to criminate the witness, though he had previously stated that he did not know what the contents of the jugs were at the time of the purchase, or what the jugs were intended for.—People v. Seaman (Sup.) 8 Misc. Rep. 152, 29 N. Y. Supp. 329.

[ww] (N. C. 1823) A witness cannot be asked if he did not in conversation state the facts to be otherwise than he testified, as he cannot be compelled to answer any question tending to render him liable to criminal prosecution.—State v. Simpson, 9 N. C. 580.

[x] (Pa. 1846) As Act Feb. 17, 1762, makes it an indictable offense to purchase a lottery ticket, a witness could not be compelled to answer whether or not he had purchased a ticket.—In re Doran, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. 467.

[xx] (Pa. 1887) In an action for breach of promise, a witness was asked whether plaintiff was a chaste woman. Held a proper question, which he could answer categorically without criminating himself.—McFadden v. Reynolds, 11 Atl. 638.

[y] (Tenn. 1852) Champerty is an indictable offense, and one who is a party to a champertous agreement, whether a party to the suit or not, cannot be compelled, as a witness upon the trial of a cause, to make a disclosure touching the agreement, the tendency of which (if voluntarily made) would be to expose him to punishment, or which might be used against him in a prosecution for the offense.—Douglass v. Wood's Lessee, 31 Tenn. (1 Swan) 393.

[yy] (Va. 1874) It is unconstitutional to require any person engaged in a duel to testify against another prosecuted for having fought such duel.—Cullen v. Commonwealth, 24 Grat. 624.

[z] (Wash. 1891) A witness may refuse to answer whether she is a prostitute, on the ground that such evidence may tend to criminate her.—State v. Coella, 3 Wash. St. 99, 28 Pac. 28.

[zz] (Wis. 1868) In an action to try title to an office, it is error to compel a witness to testify whether he voted, when the evidence would tend to criminate himself.—State v. Olin, 23 Wis. 309.

[a] (U. S. 1807) A witness must answer whether he saw the defendant at a public gaming table, inasmuch as the answer cannot criminate or tend to criminate the witness himself.—Ex parte Lindo, Fed. Cas. No. 8,364 [1 Cranch, C. C. 445].

[b] (Ill. 1886) A witness, being asked by a grand jury if he knew of any persons having played with cards for money within 18 months in the county, replied: "I cannot answer without criminating myself or divulging the names of witnesses who would criminate me, and of which witnesses the people have no knowledge, as I believe, other than would be derived from my testimony." He was sent before the court, and the answer adjudged evasive; but he refused to make further answer. Held, that he was properly fined for contempt.—Smith v. People, 20 Ill. App. (20 Bradw.) 591.

[c] (Ill. 1891) One who has taken part in a gambling game cannot be compelled to testify that the other players gambled, since such an answer would tend to criminate him.—Minters v. People, 39 Ill. App. 438, reversed (1891) 139 Ill. 363, 29 N. E. 45.

[d] (Ind. 1846) A horse race is a game, and is therefore within the statute enacting that any person legally called to give evidence against another for gaming shall be deemed a competent witness to prove such gaming, although such person may have been concerned as a party, and may be compelled to testify as in the case of other witnesses.—Cheesum v. State, 8 Blackf. 332, 44 Am. Dec. 771.

[e] (Iowa, 1850) A witness cannot refuse to answer the question whether he knows of any one, other than himself, being engaged in gaming within two years in M. county.—Richman v. State, 2 G. Greene, 532.

[f] (Mo. 1829) A witness summoned to appear before the grand jury and give evidence, and refusing to tell "what person or persons have so bet on faro," other than himself, and not naming himself, is liable to imprisonment.—Ward v. State, 2 Mo. 120, 22 Am. Dec. 449.

[g] (Ohio, 1835) A party to a wager cannot be compelled to testify, in an action qui tam to recover the penalty for betting.—Anderson v. State, 7 Ohio (7 Ham.) 250, pt. 2.

Examination of bank president in action to subject bank to penalty for usury, see ante, § 1019 [c].

[a] (N. Y. 1809) In an action on a note, a witness, who was the real plaintiff, and who was interested and concerned in the contract from the beginning, may decline to answer a question, on being examined by the adverse party, relating to the alleged usury, on the ground that his answer might subject him to a criminal prosecution.—Connor v. Bradey, Anth. N. P. 99.

[b] (N. Y. 1840) Where an action was brought by the holder against the maker of a note, and the defense was usury, the payee who transferred it was held to be privileged from answering questions to show that he had received usurious interest.—Burns v. Kempshall, 24 Wend. 360, affirmed Kempshall v. Burns (1842) 4 Hill, 468.

[c] (N. Y. 1846) Evidence of a usurious agreement forms a link in the chain of evidence to show usury actually paid; and therefore a lender cannot, as a witness between other parties, be compelled to testify to such an agreement, where it does not affirmatively appear that he has not received the usury.—Bank of Salina v. Henry, 2 Denio, 155.

[d] (N. Y. 1846) The defendant's counsel, in opening the defense, stated that the teller of the plaintiffs, who were a banking corporation, had discounted the note sued on for a usurious premium, with knowledge that it had been offered to the bank and refused, and then called the teller as a witness to prove these facts. Held, that he was privileged from testifying on the ground that his testimony would tend to subject him to a forfeiture of twice the amount of the loan, under the provisions of 1 Rev. St. p. 595, § 28.—Bank of Salina v. Henry, 2 Denio, 155.

[e] (N. Y. 1847) The deducting and retaining a greater amount than the proper discount, at the legal rate of interest, upon discounting a note, is a misdemeanor, under the statute of 1837; and in an action on the note a witness is excused from testifying that he so discounted it.—Henry v. Bank of Salina, 3 Denio, 593, affirming Bank of Salina v. Henry (1846) 2 Denio, 155.

[f] (N. Y. 1857) Where the defense of usury is set up to an action on a note, and the lender of the money, being called as a witness, refuses to testify, on the ground that his answer might criminate himself, the referee, unless he knows that no usury was in fact taken, should not attempt to compel the witness to answer.—Fellows v. Wilson, 31 Barb. 162.

[g] (Ohio, 1863) A mortgagee may be compelled to answer interrogatories as to the consideration of notes which the mortgage was intended to secure, and whether it was not usurious interest.—Mayham v. Coombs, 14 Ohio, 428.

[a] (Ala. 1887) On trial of a female charged with being a common prostitute, a witness may refuse to answer whether he has had sexual intercourse with the accused, on the ground that his answer would tend to criminate him; limitation not having barred a prosecution for such intercourse.—Ex parte Boscowitz, 84 Ala. 463, 4 South. 279, 5 Am. St. Rep. 384.

[b] (Ind. 1853) In a prosecution for bastardy, a witness, introduced by defendant to prove that the complainant had carnal intercourse with another about the time the child is alleged to have been begotten, may be compelled to testify whether he had carnal intercourse with her about that time, she having denied that she had such intercourse with any other than defendant.—Hill v. State, 4 Ind. 112.

[c] (Ind. 1868) Where a witness in a prosecution for bastardy refused to answer whether he had ever had sexual intercourse with the relatrix, and it was shown by other witnesses that the circumstances (a secret marriage) were such that the act would not have been criminal, it was held that his right to silence was withdrawn.—Ford v. State, 29 Ind. 541, 95 Am. Dec. 658.

[d] (Kan. 1893) Where, in a prosecution for bastardy, a witness declines to answer the question as to whether he had intercourse with the relatrix, on the ground that his answer might render him liable to a criminal prosecution, he cannot be required to answer if it reasonably appear that the answer would expose him to such prosecution, or if the fact on which he is interrogated would lead to his conviction of a crime.—Stevens v. State, 50 Kan. 712, 32 Pac. 350.

[e] (Mich. 1873) On trial for seduction where the previous chastity of the woman was in issue, a witness may refuse to answer a question as to whether he had had sexual intercourse with her, on the ground that it might incriminate him.—People v. Brewer, 27 Mich. 134.

[f] (N. J. 1811) A witness in an action for seduction may refuse to testify whether he has ever had criminal connection with the person seduced.—Vaughn v. Perine, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 728, 4 Am. Dec. 411.

[g] (N. C. 1895) Under Const. art. 1, § 11, providing that no person shall be compelled to give evidence against himself, a witness in divorce proceedings cannot be compelled to answer whether he ever had criminal intercourse with the wife.—Smith v. Smith, 116 N. C. 386, 21 S. E. 196.

[h] (Tenn. 1858) In an action for seduction, the female in being examined as a witness cannot be interrogated as to acts of unchastity with others, where such acts would subject her to a criminal prosecution.—Reed v. Williams, 37 Tenn. (5 Sneed) 580, 73 Am. Dec. 157.

Persons entitled to raise objection, see post, §§ 1058–1060.

[a] (Iowa, 1886) Although selling intoxicating liquors contrary to law is, in Iowa, a criminal offense, yet the buyer is not an abettor or particeps criminis, and cannot refuse to testify whether he had bought liquor on the ground that the answer would tend to criminate him.—Wakeman v. Chambers, 69 Iowa, 169, 28 N. W. 498, 58 Am. Rep. 218.

[b] (Me. 1844) Where one is indicted for being a seller of spirituous liquors without license, another who was to participate in the profits of the business cannot claim, for that reason, to be exempted from testifying to the commission of the offense.—State v. Davis, 23 Me. (10 Shep.) 403.

[c] (Md. 1885) Acts 1882, c. 112, provide that in case of the illegal sale of liquor by any company or corporation, "each or any member of such company, corporation, or association shall be liable, and shall suffer imprisonment as prescribed in this act." Held that, under an indictment of an incorporated club, a member could not be compelled to testify to facts tending to prove the guilt of the club.—Chesapeake Club v. State, 63 Md. 446.

[d] (Mass. 1839) The purchaser of spirituous liquor sold in violation of St. 1838, c. 157, § 1, does not, under ordinary circumstances, subject himself to any penalty, either at common law, as inducing the seller to commit a misdemeanor, or under the statute, and may therefore be compelled by imprisonment to testify as to such sale.—Commonwealth v. Willard, 39 Mass. (22 Pick.) 476.

[e] (Tenn. 1883) The statute making it an offense to retail spirituous liquors on Sunday is intended to punish the seller, not the buyer; and the latter cannot, therefore, refuse to testify on the ground that he might criminate himself.—Page v. State, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 202.

§ 1032. —— Testimony by husband or wife tending to criminate the other.

Compelling husband or wife to testify in general, see ante, § 136.

[a] (Ala. 1884) A husband or wife cannot be compelled to give testimony which, even in a collateral matter, tends to criminate the other, though it may be received in the absence of objection by the witness or opposite party.—Woods v. State, 76 Ala. 35, 52 Am. Rep. 315.

[b] (Pa. 1870) While a husband or wife of a defendant not on trial is not necessarily an incompetent witness for the commonwealth, where on a joint indictment there is a separate trial, yet it is, notwithstanding, his or her privilege to decline to testify to such facts as would criminate the other.—Commonwealth v. Reid, 8 Phila. 385.

[a] (Iowa, 1888) Under Code 1873, § 3647, providing that a witness shall not be compelled to answer a question when the matter sought to be elicited would tend to render him criminally liable, or to expose him to public ignominy, a witness is not prima facie excused from answering questions asked in support of allegations of a petition that witness' husband had conveyed land to her in fraud of creditors, and that she had received it with like intent, and without consideration, unless she can show reasonable grounds for believing that her answer to any particular question would expose her to public ignominy, or to prosecution under Code, § 4074, punishing with fine and imprisonment parties and privies to fraudulent conveyances, who knowingly put them in use as made in good faith. Neither ignominy nor criminality is necessarily involved in such conduct, and there is nothing to show but that, were she criminal in the matter, her prosecution would be barred by limitation.—Mahanke v. Cleland, 76 Iowa, 401, 41 N. W. 53.

[b] (N. H. 1854) Whether the answer of a witness will tend to criminate him is a point which the court will determine under all the circumstances of the case, but without requiring him fully to explain how it would criminate him. Unless the court can see that he will not be criminated, the privilege will be recognized and protected.—Janvrin v. Scammon, 29 N. H. (9 Fost.) 280.

[c] (N. H. 1865) A defendant will not be compelled to show fully how an answer will tend to criminate himself, or how it will have the effect of disclosing the names of his witnesses and the manner of proving his case, if it reasonably appears to the court that the answer will have such effect.—State v. Farmer, 46 N. H. 200.

[d] (N. Y. 1882) If a witness, because an answer to a question otherwise unobjectionable might tend to criminate or degrade him, refuses to answer it, he may be compelled to give his reason and claim his privilege.—New v. Fisher, 11 Daly, 308.

[e] (N. Y. 1893) A witness need not answer a question as to whether or not she had on a former occasion committed perjury, since an answer thereto might tend to convict her of the crime, and she need not give any reasons for claiming such privilege.—Friess v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 67 Hun, 205, 22 N. Y. Supp. 104, judgment affirmed (1893) 140 N. Y. 639, 35 N. E. 892.

[a] (Cal. 1880) Where a witness for the prosecution has testified fully as to his own connection with the actual commission of a larceny charged against defendant, he cannot refuse to testify to the general plan which he and defendant entered into with reference to the stealing, on the ground that it would criminate him in other offenses.—People v. Freshour, 55 Cal. 375, 1 Ky. Law Rep. 224.

[aa] (Conn. 1859) Where a witness voluntarily testifies in chief on a particular subject, he may be cross-examined on the subject, even though his answers may criminate him.—Town of Norfolk v. Gaylord, 28 Conn. 309.

[b] (Ill. 1880) A witness in a civil action, having testified that any judgment in the case went to his benefit, is privileged from answering, on cross-examination, a criminating question as to whether he has gone through bankruptcy without mention of this claim.—Taylor v. McIrvin, 94 Ill. 488.

[c] (Ill. 1890) A witness will not be excused from answering on cross-examination a question tending to impeach his impartiality, unless he claims his privilege on the ground that he will, by answering, expose himself to punishment; mere disgrace, without danger of punishment, is no excuse.—Moline Wagon Co. v. Preston, 35 Ill. App. 358.

[d] (Md. 1876) A party to a civil action, who becomes a witness "at his own request," waives the constitutional privilege of exemption from furnishing or giving evidence against himself tending to criminate; and his acts may be inquired about on cross-examination, though tending to prove him guilty of a crime for the purpose of negativing the truth of his statements made on his direct examination.—Roddy v. Finnegan, 43 Md. 490.

[e] (Mich. 1867) An accomplice testifying for the government, on cross-examination need not disclose his criminality in other cases.—Pitcher v. People, 16 Mich. 142.

[f] (Mich. 1879) A merchant, as the prosecuting witness in a trial for larceny from his store, testified that he had once been a member of a banking firm. He was asked on cross-examination, "Did you not, while a member of that firm, extract from an envelope securities which were left in your vault for safe-keeping, and use their proceeds in stock speculations in New York?" Held, that the question should have been allowed, as tending to draw out evidence relative to his moral character, although the witness might properly have refused to criminate himself.—People v. Arnold, 40 Mich. 710.

[g] (Mo. 1880) A witness upon cross-examination may be compelled to answer any questions tending to test his credibility, or to shake his credit by injuring his character, however irrelevant to the facts in issue, or however, disgraceful the answer would be to himself, except where his answer would expose him to a criminal charge.—Muller v. St. Louis Hospital Ass'n, 73 Mo. 242.

[h] (Mo. 1886) One who has volunteered his testimony in behalf of one indicted cannot be required to submit to a cross-examination on objection that his answers will expose him to a criminal charge growing out of the transaction concerning which he has volunteered his testimony.—State v. Hall, 20 Mo. App. 397.

[i] (N. D. 1896) For the purpose of affecting the credibility of a witness, it is proper to ask him on cross-examination questions the answers to which may tend to degrade, disgrace, or criminate him, though he may refuse to answer any question the answer to which will tend to criminate him.—State v. Pancoast, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052, 35 L. R. A. 518.

[j] (Wis. 1859) On cross-examination, it is proper to ask a witness as to his past and present residence, his occupation, his associates, and whether he has ever assumed different names—these do not tend to criminate him apparently, but may affect his credibility.—Kirschner v. State, 9 Wis. 140.

[a] (Cal. 1880) If a witness discloses a part of a transaction, with which he was criminally concerned, without claiming his privilege, he must disclose the whole. He cannot, after voluntarily testifying in chief, decline to be cross-examined on the ground that his answer may criminate or disgrace him.—People v. Freshour, 55 Cal. 375.

[b] (Fla. 1896) One who votes at an election to which applies Rev. St. § 2787, imposing a punishment for illegal voting, and who, with full knowledge of his rights, testifies, in a suit wherein the validity of that election is in issue, that he did vote at that election, and that his ballot was received by the judges and inspectors, thereby waives his privilege as to giving incriminatory testimony, and must submit to a regular cross-examination as to his qualifications as a voter.—Ex parte Senior, 37 Fla. 1, 19 South. 652, 32 L. R. A. 133.

[c] (Mass. 1853) If a witness, knowing that he is not bound to testify concerning a fact which may tend to criminate himself, voluntarily answers in part, he may be cross-examined as to the whole transaction.—Foster v. Pierce, 65 Mass. (11 Cush.) 437, 59 Am. Dec. 152.

[d] (Mass. 1858) An accomplice, who has testified to facts criminating the prisoner and himself, cannot afterwards decline on cross-examination to answer a question on the ground that it will criminate himself. But if, after so declining, he offers to submit himself to the examination, a party who refuses the offer has no ground of exception.—Commonwealth v. Price, 76 Mass. (10 Gray) 472, 71 Am. Dec. 668.

[e] (Mass. 1879) A witness, who has voluntarily testified in part on a matter tending to criminate him, cannot afterwards on cross-examination decline to answer a question upon the ground that it will criminate him.—Commonwealth v. Pratt, 126 Mass. 462.

[f] (N. Y. 1855) A witness cannot object that the answer to a question put would criminate himself, if the answer is essential to the understanding of facts already voluntarily stated by him. If the witness has stated part of a transaction which implicates defendant, the latter has a right, by cross-examination, to show that the criminality was on the part of the witness and not on his.—People v. Carroll, 3 Parker, Cr. R. 73.

[g] (Vt. 1840) If the witness, understandingly, waive his privilege, and begin to testify, he must submit to a full cross-examination if required.—Chamberlin v. Willson, 12 Vt. 491, 36 Am. Dec. 356.

Protection against use of evidence, see post, § 1068.

Statutory provisions as to use of testimony, see post, §§ 1051, 1052.

[a] (Ky. 1887) It is error to permit the commonwealth to prove, on a trial for being a common gambler, that defendant had testified on the trial of another for suffering gaming that he made his living for the most part by gaming.—Grundy v. Commonwealth, 8 Ky. Law Rep. 876.

[b] (Tex. 1874) The statements of the defendant, when examined as a witness in another case, may be given in evidence by the state against her, there being no intimidation or persuasion, although it did not appear that defendant, when examined as a witness, knew she could decline to criminate herself.—Alston v. State, 41 Tex. 39.

[a] (N. Y. 1894) A witness cannot refuse to testify before the grand jury on the investigation of a charge against another person on the ground that his testimony may tend to criminate him, where he has been promised exemption from prosecution on any evidence which he should give.—In re Taylor (O. & T.) 8 Misc. Rep. 159, 28 N. Y. Supp. 500.

[b] (Tenn. 1883) On the trial of a liquor dealer for illegally selling liquor, his barkeeper, who, if he had made a sale, might also have been indicted, could not be compelled to answer a question which might tend to criminate him, though the attorney general stated in open court that he would not prefer an indictment against him.—Muller v. State, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 18.

7. PRIVILEGE AS TO PRODUCTION OF BOOKS OR DOCUMENTS.

IN GENERAL, § 1038.
PRIVILEGE AS TO PRODUCTION OF PARTICULAR BOOKS OR DOCUMENTS, § 1039.
PRIVILEGE OF AGENT TO WITHHOLD BOOKS OR DOCUMENTS TENDING TO INCRIMINATE PRINCIPAL, § 1040.
RIGHT TO SEAL UP PARTS OF BOOKS, § 1041.

Production and inspection of writings before trial affected by character of evidence sought to be disclosed, see "Discovery," vol. 16, cc. 2141, 2142, § 117.

[a] (U. S. 1890) Where the testimony of a witness before a grand jury, which is investigating alleged violations of the interstate commerce law by the agent of a railroad company, shows that such witness is not himself guilty of the offense, he cannot refuse to produce certain documents demanded by the grand jury on the ground that their production will tend to criminate him.—In re Peasley (C. C.) 44 Fed. 271.

[b] (Ill. 1896) Where a witness is excused from testifying on the ground that his answers will tend to incriminate him, he cannot be compelled to produce books and papers which will have the same effect.—Lamson v. Boyden, 160 Ill. 613, 43 N. E. 781.

[c] (Mass. 1830) A witness may be compelled, under a subpœna duces tecum, to produce a document in his possession, unless he has a valid excuse for withholding it, though its production will adversely affect his pecuniary interest.—Bull v. Loveland, 27 Mass. (10 Pick.) 9.

[d] (Mass. 1859) It is no ground for the refusal of a witness to produce books or papers, when required by lawful authority, that they are private.—Burnham v. Morrissey, 80 Mass. (14 Gray) 226, 74 Am. Dec. 676.

[e] (N. Y. 1826) A party will not ordinarily be compelled to produce books or papers to furnish evidence against himself.—Utica Bank v. Hillard, 5 Cow. 419.

[f] (N. Y. 1860) The same rule of law which excuses a witness from answering questions which may tend to convict him of a crime or misdemeanor excuses him also from producing books or papers the contents of which may be used against him, and tend to the same result; but it must be shown that the books in question would have such a tendency.—Byass v. Sullivan, 21 How. Prac. 50.

[a] (U. S. 1868) A tobacco manufacturer will be required to produce his books before the assessor of internal revenue, notwithstanding a criminal proceeding against him; but he will be allowed to object to the exhibit of any particular entry as tending to criminate himself. —In re Lippman, Fed. Cas. No. 8,382 [3 Ben. 95].

[b] (U. S. 1875) Where an information is filed under the internal revenue laws against the distillery and other property, and an order is made requiring the claimants to produce books and papers under Act June 22, 1874, c. 391, § 5, 18 Stat. 187 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2019], the claimants cannot object to the production of such evidence on the ground that they are required to testify against themselves in a criminal case. Such a proceeding is not criminal, and the claimants, strictly speaking, are not parties to the proceeding, and a forfeiture of the property does not in any way convict them.—United States v. Distillery No. 28, Fed. Cas. No. 14,966 [6 Biss. 483].

[c] (Mass. 1830) In an action on a note, a witness, served by plaintiff with a subpœna duces tecum to produce the note, testified that the defendant had assigned his property to the witness, who was a creditor, and that the plaintiff and other creditors had placed their demands, including the note in question, in the hands of witness for collection, agreeing that he might furnish stock to the defendant to work up for the benefit of the creditors, and that the proceeds of all the property should be applied to the repayment of the advances made by the witness, and the surplus to the payment of the demands, and that a large sum was due to the witness on account of his advances. Held, that the witness had such an equitable interest in the note that the plaintiff was not entitled to have him compelled to produce it.—Bull v. Loveland, 27 Mass. (10 Pick.) 9.

[b] (Iowa, 1886) The agent of an express company required by a subpœna to produce certain books of the corporation, for the purpose of showing that it has been guilty of a violation of the liquor laws, cannot refuse, under Code 1873, § 3647, to produce the books, because they would incriminate his employers, and will be guilty of contempt if he fails to obey the subpœna.—United States Exp. Co. v. Henderson, 69 Iowa, 40, 28 N. W. 426.

[a] (N. Y. 1847) It is the right of a party, when required to produce books for inspection, if such books contain accounts and transactions which in no way relate to the subject of examination, to seal up such parts of the books. —Titus v. Cortelyou, 1 Barb. 444.

8. PRIVILEGE OF ACCUSED IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTION.

IN GENERAL, § 1042.
ACTIONS OR PROCEEDINGS IN WHICH PRIVILEGE MAY BE EXERCISED, § 1042½.
CROSS-EXAMINATION, § 1043.
—— QUESTIONS AS TO PREVIOUS FAILURE TO TESTIFY, § 1044.
—— EXHIBITION OR TEST IN PRESENCE OF JURY, § 1045.
—— QUESTIONS AS TO OTHER OFFENSES, § 1046.

[a] (N. Y. 1890) Physicians who were sent to the jail to examine a prisoner accused of murder, whose defense was mental irresponsibility, may testify for the prosecution as to his mental capacity, as such visit did not result in compelling the accused to give evidence against himself.—People v. Kemmler, 119 N. Y. 580, 24 N. E. 9.

[b] (Cal. 1893) A proceeding to punish a person for contempt in violating an injunction being criminal in character, the court has no authority to compel him to be sworn as a witness therein, under Const. art. 1, § 13, which declares that no person shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself. —Ex parte Gould, 99 Cal. 360, 33 Pac. 1112, 37 Am. St. Rep. 57, 21 L. R. A. 751.

[c] (Kan. 1892) Where proceedings for contempt of court are instituted against a party, whereby he is charged with inducing witnesses to absent themselves from court and avoid process, it is error for the state to place the accused upon the witness stand to prove the contempt charged, since the offense is also made a crime by statute, and the accused cannot be compelled to give evidence which might criminate himself.—In re Nickell, 47 Kan. 734, 28 Pac. 1076, 27 Am. St. Rep. 315.

[d] (Pa. 1895) Act May 23, 1887, § 10 (P. L. 158), which provides that defendants in criminal trials cannot be compelled to testify, applies to a defendant who is prosecuted for wife desertion; such offense, though not indictable, being of a quasi criminal nature.—Commonwealth v. Reed (Quart. Sess.) 5 Pa. Dist. R. 57.

Waiver by accused in criminal prosecution, see post, §§ 1054, 1055.

[a] (Iowa, 1888) After refusing to allow defendants, charged with assault with intent to murder their adopted daughter by neglect and exposure, to be examined by the state as witnesses in reference to the whereabouts of the adoption papers, the court questioned each of the defendants on that point, and they answered in the presence of the jury. Held error, the question having a material bearing on their guilt.—State v. Merkley, 74 Iowa, 695, 39 N. W. 111.

[b] (Mich. 1888) When a defendant testifies in his own behalf, he may be cross-examined as any other witness, and may be compelled to testify whether he did not write to a person for money, stating that he would need $500 to clear him.—People v. Howard, 73 Mich. 10, 40 N. W. 789.

[c] (Minn. 1868) In an action for libel against the subscriber of a newspaper advertisement and his amanuensis, announcing that a horse had been stolen, and that the plaintiff was believed to be the thief, it was held to be error to ask the amanuensis, after being sworn as a witness, showing him the manuscript identified as the original, "Did you write this paper?"—the answer might have had "a tendency to expose the witness to a penal liability."—Simmons v. Holster, 13 Minn. 249 (Gil. 232).

[d] (N. D. 1890) Where the accused takes the stand as a witness, it is not error to require him to testify, on cross-examination, as to his antecedents, and that he had passed under names other than his own, and had been in jail at different times and places, when such testimony is objected to as irrelevant, and not proper cross-examination,—no question of privilege having been presented.—Territory v. O'Hare, 1 N. D. 30, 44 N. W. 1003.

[e] (S. C. 1892) Where one accused of murder goes upon the stand, and, on being asked if decedent had not threatened his life, voluntarily states part of a communication made to him by his wife containing such a threat, he may be compelled to state the balance of the communication, as to the reason given for the threat.—State v. Turner, 36 S. C. 534, 15 S. E. 602.

[f] (Tex. 1896) Under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, arts. 770, 790, allowing defendant in a criminal case to testify in his own behalf, and providing that a confession made by a defendant while in jail cannot be used against him unless he was duly warned, the state cannot examine a defendant, when a witness in his own behalf, as to a confession made by him while in jail, without being warned, for the purpose of laying a predicate for his impeachment, and then show by witnesses that he made the confession.—Morales v. State (Cr. App.) 36 S. W. 435; Id., 36 Tex. Cr. R. 234, 36 S. W. 846, distinguishing Quintana v. State (1891) 29 Tex. App. 401, 16 S. W. 258, 25 Am. St. Rep. 730, and Ferguson v. State (1892) 31 Tex. Cr. R. 93, 19 S. W. 901, and overruling Phillipp v. State (Cr. App. 1896) 34 S. W. 272.

§ 1044. —— Questions as to previous failure to testify.

[a] (Ky. 1896) Cr. Code, § 223, providing that a defendant's failure to testify shall not be commented on, or be allowed to create a presumption against him, does not prevent the asking of defendant, on his trial, why he did not testify on the examining trial.—Taylor v. Commonwealth, 34 S. W. 227.

[b] (Mass. 1895) A defendant in a criminal action, who has become a witness in his own behalf, may be required to disclose the fact that he refused to testify before the grand jury, on the ground that he might thereby criminate himself, for the purpose of attacking his credibility as a witness.—Commonwealth v. Smith, 163 Mass. 411, 40 N. E. 189.

Experiments in court in general, see "Evidence," vol. 20, c. 1022, § 683.

[a] (U. S. 1887) A party prosecuted in a United States district court for violating the election law, by writing names improperly on the registration book, who on the trial testifies, in his own behalf, that he did not write the names unlawfully written, may be compelled, on his cross-examination, to write the same names on a paper in the presence of the jury, and such paper may be offered in evidence on rebuttal, and the jury permitted to compare it with the writing in the registration book, as this is a legitimate method of cross-examination, and the witness is not thereby compelled to furnish testimony against himself.—United States v. Mullaney (C. C.) 32 Fed. 370.

[b] (Colo. 1896) Where accused becomes a witness in his own behalf, and denies writing a document alleged to be a forgery, he may be required on cross-examination to write in the presence of the jury for the purpose of comparison.—Bradford v. People, 22 Colo. 157, 43 Pac. 1013.

[a] (Kan. 1894) A defendant who testifies as a witness in his own behalf may be cross-examined on matters affecting his credibility, though it tends to show him guilty of other offenses.—State v. Wells, 54 Kan. 161, 37 Pac. 1005.

[b] (Ky. 1895) Under the bill of rights providing that no one shall be compelled to give evidence against himself, one testifying in his own behalf cannot be compelled to admit the commission of other offenses which would subject him to punishment.—Saylor v. Commonwealth, 97 Ky. 184, 30 S. W. 390.

[c] (Me. 1881) Under the statute of 1871, providing that an accused shall not be compelled to testify on cross-examination to facts which would convict him of any other crime than that for which he is on trial, an accused is not protected against cross-examination because his answers may implicate him in other criminalities besides the offense with which he is charged, if the connection is such that the proof is relevant to the issue, as such statute only excludes compulsory admission of extraneous offenses, evidence of which is offered merely to affect credibility.—State v. Witham, 72 Me. 531.

[d] (N. D. 1896) A defendant in a criminal case who takes the witness stand in his own behalf is subject to the same rules of cross-examination that govern other witnesses; and he is required to answer any relevant question tending to convict him of the crime charged, though such answer may also tend to convict him of another crime.—State v. Pancoast, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052, 35 L. R. A. 518.

[e] (Tenn. 1894) The prosecution has no right to ask defendant whether he has committed other crimes, which have no connection with the case on trial, defendant being entitled to claim his privilege from self-incrimination.—Clapp v. State, 94 Tenn. (10 Pickle) 186, 30 S. W. 214.

9. CAUTION TO WITNESS.

CAUTION BY COURT IN GENERAL, § 1047.
CAUTION BY COURT AS TO PARTICULAR QUESTIONS, § 1048.

[a] (U. S. 1855) The court will interfere for the protection of witnesses when necessary, but will not instruct them beforehand that they are not bound to criminate themselves.—United States v. Darnaud, Fed. Cas. No. 14,918 [3 Wall. Jr. 143].

[b] (Mass. 1849) It is not the duty of the judge, on the interposition of a party against whom a witness is called to testify, and independent of any objection of the witness, to inform the latter of the rule of law that he is not bound to criminate himself.—Commonwealth v. Shaw, 58 Mass. (4 Cush.) 594, 50 Am. Dec. 813.

[c] (Mass. 1859) It is not error to refuse to instruct a witness that if he would avail himself of his right to refuse to answer interrogatories, on the ground that the answers might criminate him, he must make the objection before answering anything upon that subject.—Commonwealth v. Howe, 79 Mass. (13 Gray) 26.

[d] (N. C. 1885) Where one of two persons jointly indicted for an affray is examined by the state as a witness against his codefendant, it is not error for the trial judge to caution him that he need not tell anything liable to criminate himself before he is cross-examined by counsel for the other defendant.—State v. Weaver, 93 N. C. 595.

[e] (Ohio, 1865) In a trial for murder, if the court instructs a witness, after he is sworn, "that he need not answer any question, if, in his judgment, the answer would criminate him, but that if he once begins to answer on any subject he must disclose all he knows on that point," and the witness afterwards waives the privilege conceded to him by the court, the judgment will not be reversed for such instruction.—Mimms v. State, 16 Ohio St. 221.

[f] (S. C. 1896) On trial for violation of the liquor law, defendants' counsel requested the court to instruct the witnesses for the state that they need not answer the question whether they had ever bought intoxicating liquor from the defendants, for the reason that an affirmative answer would criminate the witnesses, in that the dispensary law makes it a misdemeanor to receive intoxicating liquor. Held that, the privilege being personal, the request was properly refused.—State v. Butler, 47 S. C. 25, 24 S. E. 991.

[a] (Minn. 1859) Though it is the privilege of the witness alone to decline to answer, yet it is the duty of the court to tell the witness of the privilege, and after the witness has clearly signified his design to avail himself of it, the court may refuse to allow similar questions to be put, and if put, may rule them out without consulting the witness in each case.—State v. Bilansky, 3 Minn. 246 (Gil. 169).

[b] (N. Y. 1826) Where a witness is asked a question the answer to which may tend to criminate him, it is the duty of the court to inform him of his privilege to refuse to answer.—Southard v. Rexford, 6 Cow. 254.

[c] (N. Y. 1888) In a civil case, the question at issue being whether defendant had purposely burned certain property, a witness who, according to the complaint, had set the fire at the instance of defendant, declined to tell how the fire arose, for fear of criminating himself. He was then asked if he had, before the fire, any conversation with defendant in regard to setting the fire. The court instructed him that if he answered that question he might be obliged to answer the other. Held, that the warning was proper.—Boston Marine Ins. Co. v. Slocovitch, 55 N. Y. Super. Ct. (23 Jones & S.) 452.

10. EFFECT OF RELEASE OR DISCHARGE FROM LIABILITY.

PROSECUTION BARRED BY STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS, § 1050.

[a] (Colo. 1891) After an acquittal upon the criminal charge it is too late for a witness to refuse to answer questions on the ground that his answer may tend to criminate himself.—Lothrop v. Roberts, 16 Colo. 250, 27 Pac. 698.

[b] (N. Y. 1858) A pardon does not deprive the witness or party of his privilege of refusing to answer as to the offense.—Moloney v. Dows, 2 Hilt. 247.

[a] When an offense as against a witness is barred by the statute of limitations, he is bound to testify.

(Vt. 1894) Childs v. Merrill, 66 Vt. 302, 29 Atl. 532.

[b] (U. S. 1809) In an action for the penalty for transporting slaves, under Act May 10, 1800 (5 Stat. 167), a particeps criminis, after the statute of limitations has run in his favor, may be compelled to testify against the defendant.—United States v. Smith, Fed. Cas. No. 16,332 [4 Day, 121].

[c] (Ala. 1876) The privilege of a witness to refuse to answer questions tending to criminate him extends only to offenses for which he is liable to be punished, and does not exist when a prosecution therefor is barred by limitations.—Calhoun v. Thompson, 56 Ala. 166, 28 Am. Rep. 754.

[d] (Ga. 1893) The privilege of a witness not to criminate himself continues, though a prosecution for the offense would, if commenced after the time of testifying, be barred by limitation, unless it affirmatively appear that no prosecution against him, commenced in due time, is pending.—Southern Railway News Co. v. Russell, 91 Ga. 808, 18 S. E. 40.

[e] (Ill. 1896) A witness cannot be compelled to give testimony tending to incriminate himself, on the ground that a prosecution for the offense is barred by limitations, unless it is affirmatively shown that no prosecution is pending against the witness.—Lamson v. Boyden, 160 Ill. 613, 43 N. E. 781.

[f] (N. H. 1889) Where a prosecution for a penalty is barred by the statute of limitations, a party cannot refuse to discover matters connected with the transaction on the ground that such evidence will induce an exposure to the penalty.—Manchester & L. R. R. v. Concord R. R., 66 N. H. 100, 20 Atl. 383, 49 Am. St. Rep. 582, 9 L. R. A. 689.

[g] (N. Y. 1845) Where a witness called to establish a defense of usury declines to testify, on the ground that his evidence may expose him to an indictment or subject him to a penalty, and it appears that the statute of limitations has barred all prosecutions, the court is bound to pronounce against his claim to exemption.—Close v. Olney, 1 Denio, 319.

[h] (N. Y. 1845) Where a witness called to establish a defense of usury declines to testify on the ground that his testimony may subject him to prosecution, and it appears that the period of limitation has elapsed since the making of the usurious agreement, but it does not appear that the usurious premium may have been received within the period of limitation, the witness may be compelled to disclose the absence of an offense within the period of limitation, by an examination for that purpose so conducted as not to infringe his privilege.—Close v. Olney, 1 Denio, 319.

[i] (N. Y. 1847) Where a party desires to examine a witness who objects to answer on the ground that he would criminate himself, and the party sets up that the statute of limitations has run against the offense, he must prove, affirmatively, that no indictment was found, or suit commenced, within the period limited by the statute.—Henry v. Bank of Salina, 3 Denio, 593.

[j] (N. Y. 1858) Where a verified complaint alleges matter to the truth of which defendant, if a witness, would be privileged from testifying, the inquiry will not be excluded where an indictment for the offense alleged would be barred by the statute of limitations.—Maloney v. Dows, 2 Hilt. 247.

[k] (N. Y. 1863) In an action to restrain infringement of a trade-mark and to recover damages for counterfeit, defendant cannot refuse to answer or exhibit his books in relation to all sales made three years or more before the inquiry, being protected from criminal prosecution for such sales by the statute of limitations; but he may refuse as to sales subsequent to that time.—Wolfe v. Goulard, 15 Abb. Prac. 336.

[m] (Tenn. 1887) In a suit by the state against a druggist to collect a tax imposed by law upon retail liquor dealers, the sale of liquors without a license being a misdemeanor, the defendant cannot refuse to testify as to the sales made by him on the ground that he would criminate himself, when the prosecution for the misdemeanor involved in such sale is barred by the statute of limitations.—In re Druggist Cases, 85 Tenn. (1 Pickle) 449, 3 S. W. 490.

[n] (Tex. 1851) If a witness is exempt, by statute, from liability for any offense of which he is compelled to give evidence, or if the offense, as to him, is barred by the statute of limitations, he cannot claim the privilege of not answering, ordinarily, incident to such a case. —Floyd v. State, 7 Tex. 215.

11. EFFECT OF STATUTORY PROTECTION OF WITNESS FROM USE OF EVIDENCE AGAINST HIMSELF.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATUTE, § 1052.

Promise of exemption from prosecution, see ante, § 1037.
Protection against use of evidence, see post, § 1068.
—— by promise not to prosecute, see ante, § 1037.
Use of evidence in general, see ante, § 1036.

[a] (U. S. 1892) Rev. St. § 860 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 661], provides that no "evidence obtained from any party or witness by means of a judicial proceeding * * * shall be given in evidence, or in any manner used against him, or his property or estate, in any court of the United States, * * * in any criminal proceeding, or for the enforcement of any penalty or forfeiture." Held that, as this provision would not prevent the use of testimony so obtained to search out other testimony to be used against the witness, the protection afforded is not coextensive with that of the fifth amendment; and hence a witness in any criminal investigation in the federal courts may still refuse to answer on the ground that his testimony will tend to criminate himself.—Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 12 Sup. Ct. 195, 35 L. Ed. 1110, reversing (C. C. 1890) 44 Fed. 268.

[b] (U. S. 1896) The protection afforded by the act of February 11, 1893, c. 83, 27 Stat. 443 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3173] to persons who are required thereby to give self-incriminating evidence in proceedings before the interstate commerce commission, extends to any possible prosecution in the state courts, as well as in the federal courts.—Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 16 Sup. Ct. 644, 40 L. Ed. 819.

[c] (U. S. 1869) A witness, summoned for examination before an assessor of internal revenue pursuant to Act March, 1865, § 14 (13 Stat. 496), as amended by Act July 13, 1866 (14 Stat. 98), may be compelled to answer questions in regard to the falsity of tax returns of tobacco manufacturers, as disclosures or admissions thus made cannot be used against the witness in criminal prosecutions, under Act Feb. 25, 1868 (15 Stat. 37), entitled an "Act for the protection in certain cases of persons making disclosures as parties or testifying as witnesses."—In re Phillips, Fed. Cas. No. 11,097.

[e] (U. S. 1871) Under Act Feb. 25, 1868 (15 Stat. 37), a person may be compelled in a judicial proceeding to testify to matters tending to criminate himself, but no use can be made of such testimony against the witness in a criminal proceeding.—United States v. Brown, Fed. Cas. No. 14,671 [1 Sawy. 531].

[f] (U. S. 1872) As, under Act Feb. 25, 1868 (15 Stat. 37), testimony offered by a witness can in no way be used against him, he is not privileged to refuse to answer.—United States v. Williams, Fed. Cas. No. 16,717.

[g] (U. S. 1875) Rev. St. § 860 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 661], providing that "no discovery or evidence obtained by means of any judicial proceeding from any party or witness * * * shall be given in evidence, or in any manner used, against such party or witness or his property or estate, in any court of the United States, * * * for the enforcement of any penalty or forefeiture by reason of any act or omission of such party or witness," does not apply to the books and papers of a party seized on a warrant under Act March 2, 1867, § 2 (14 Stat. 547), offered on trial of an action for violation of customs laws.—United States v. Hughes, Fed. Cas. No. 15,417 [12 Blatchf. 553].

[h] (U. S. 1883) In the United States courts, since the passage of the act of February 25, 1868 (section 860, Rev. St. [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 661]), preventing any incriminating evidence being used against a witness or his property, the reason of the rule permitting a witness to refuse to testify on the ground that his evidence may incriminate him having ceased, the rule should no longer be upheld, nor the privilege of the witness on this ground be sustained.—United States v. McCarthy (C. C.) 18 Fed. 87, 21 Blatchf. 469.

[i] (U. S. 1890) Under Rev. St. § 860 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 661], providing that "no * * * evidence obtained from a party or witness by means of a judicial proceeding * * * shall be given in any evidence, or in any manner used against him * * * in any court of the United States, in any criminal proceeding," a witness before a grand jury which is investigating alleged violations of the interstate commerce law by a certain railroad company cannot claim the privileges of the fifth amendment to the United States constitution, which provides that no person shall be compelled to be a witness against himself in a criminal case, and refuse to answer questions on the ground that the answer would tend to criminate him.—In re Counselman (C. C.) 44 Fed. 268.

[j] (Ark. 1853) Where two persons unite in the commission of a crime (as in gaming), one of them may be compelled to give evidence on the trial of an indictment against the other; it being provided by statute that "the testimony given by such witness shall in no instance be used against him in any criminal prosecution for the same offense," and thus he is protected from self-accusation, and his common-law and constitutional privilege is secured to him.—State v. Quarles, 13 Ark. (8 Eng.) 307.

[k] (Ga. 1895) One who conducts a lottery in violation of Code, § 4549b, is not guilty of gaming, within section 4545, providing that on the trial of any person guilty of that offense, among others any other person who played at the same time shall be a competent witness, and compelled to give evidence, and that nothing then said by such witness shall at any time be received against him in any prosecution.—Henderson v. State, 95 Ga. 326, 22 S. E. 537.

[l] (Ind. 1874) Under a statute such as 2 Gav. & H. St. 410, § 89, which provides that any person called as a witness to testify against another for gaming is a competent witness, although he may have been concerned as a party, but shall not be liable to indictment or punishment, to exempt a person from prosecution or punishment on the ground that he has been compelled to testify as a witness, it must appear that he was compelled to testify against another for gaming. One who was compelled to testify touching a wager on the result of an election is not exempted.—State v. Henderson, 47 Ind. 127.

[m] (Ind. 1877) On a prosecution for betting money on the result of an election, either of the parties to the wager may be compelled to testify concerning the transaction, under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 395, § 8; but if compelled so to testify, he cannot be prosecuted and punished therefor.—Frazee v. State, 58 Ind. 8.

[n] (Ind. 1888) Under Rev. St. § 1800, providing that, whenever any person is required to testify touching the commission of any misdemeanor, his evidence therein shall not be used in any prosecution against him, and he shall not be liable to punishment for such offense, a prosecuting witness on a trial for rape may not, on the ground that the answer may criminate her, refuse to testify whether she voluntarily submitted to sexual intercourse with one of defendants a short time before the alleged rape.—Bedgood v. State, 115 Ind. 275, 17 N. E. 621.

[p] (N. H. 1878) A statute which provides that a clerk, servant, or agent shall not be excused from testifying against his principal, but that his testimony so given shall not in any prosecution be used as evidence against himself, and that he shall not be thereafter prosecuted for any offense so disclosed by him, does not deprive the witness of the protection afforded by the provision of the bill of rights, that no subject shall be compelled to accuse or furnish evidence against himself.—State v. Nowell, 58 N. H. 314.

[q] (N. Y. 1879) Under Laws 1858, c. 190, § 9, authorizing the board of supervisors to send for persons and papers and to examine the county treasurer's accounts, and providing that the testimony of any witness shall not be given in evidence or used against him on the trial o any indictment or criminal prosecution, the evidence given by the county treasurer in obedience to a subpœna may be used by the governor for his removal, and hence such treasurer was exonerated from answering questions concerning the moneys received by him on the ground that the answers would tend to convict him of a crime or subject him to a penalty, under the rule that a witness is not bound to speak when the answer may subject him to a forfeiture or anything in the nature of a forfeiture of his estate or interest.—In re Dickinson, 58 How. Prac. 260.

[r] (N. Y. 1887) An inquiry before a legislative committee is an "investigation" within the meaning of Pen. Code, § 79, which makes it compulsory on persons concerned in bribery to attend and testify upon any trial or investigation, but declaring that their testimony shall not be used against them in any subsequent proceeding, civil or criminal; and evidence given before such committee, being compulsory, is inadmissible against the person testifying upon any subsequent trial.—People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 427, 14 N. E. 319, reversing (1887) 45 Hun, 460.

signed in his presence by the persons whose signatures appeared thereon. On cross-examination he declined to state whether the notes when signed were in their present condition, on the ground that it might tend to criminate him. Held, that the suppression of the deposition, on the ground that he had waived his privilege by his first answer, and thus should have answered the second question, was error.—Lombard v. Mayberry, 24 Neb. 674, 40 N. W. 271, 8 Am. St. Rep. 234.

[i] (N. H. 1851) It is the privilege of the witness, not of the party, that the witness need not testify to facts which will subject him to a criminal prosecution. If he waives his privilege, and testifies to part of a transaction, in which he was criminally concerned, he is bound to state the whole.—State v. Foster, 23 N. H. (3 Fost.) 348, 55 Am. Dec. 191.

[j] (N. Y. 1848) A witness is not ordinarily bound to testify to his own infamy; but if he does so, for the purpose of fixing crime upon another, he cannot claim the privilege, when asked questions the answers to which may weaken his former testimony, or remove its weight entirely.—People v. Lohman, 2 Barb. 216.

[k] (N. Y. 1854) A witness is not bound to criminate himself and may decline to answer any question which tends to do so, but if he fails to avail himself of his privilege, his answer will be regarded as voluntary, and may be taken as evidence against him.—People v. Hendrickson, 9 How. Prac. 155.

[l] (N. Y. 1882) A witness, by voluntarily answering in part as to a transaction tending to criminate him, waives the privilege of refusing to answer, which he might have had at the outset, if he had chosen to claim it.—Youngs v. Youngs, 5 Redf. Sur. 505.

[m] (N. Y. 1882) In a proceeding to revoke letters of administration granted on the estate of an alleged decedent, on the ground that he was alive, a witness was produced who stated on his direct examination that he was the alleged decedent, and on his cross-examination testified as to the events of his life prior to a certain year, in which, according to his statements, he left Boston. On being asked whither he went on leaving Boston, he declined to answer, on the ground that his reply would tend to charge him with a crime. He refused to name any person with whom he had lived or associated during the period, or to state any business or occupation in which he had been engaged. He testified that he had neither been in prison nor under arrest; but when asked whether he had been charged with crime he again invoked his privilege and replied that he would not answer in that regard. Held, that since at the time he refused to answer the questions on cross-examination he had not disclosed any transaction occurring within the five years as to which he subsequently declined to testify, he did not waive his privilege.—Youngs v. Youngs, 5 Redf. Sur. 505.

[n] (N. Y. 1888) Where a witness refuses to answer a question on the ground that it would tend to criminate him, it is incompetent to show that he had on another occasion testified to something which was a waiver of the privilege claimed on this trial.—Boston Marine Ins. Co. v. Slocovitch, 55 N. Y. Super. Ct. (23 Jones & S.) 452.

[p] (Ohio, 1887) Upon a motion in a civil case to vacate an arrest made on the ground of a debt incurred by embezzlement, the defendant filed his affidavit, controverting the statements of plaintiff's affidavits. Held, that plaintiff could examine him upon the question at issue, and that he could not refuse to answer questions on the ground that the answers would tend to criminate him.—Este v. Wilshire, 44 Ohio St. 636, 10 N. E. 677.

[q, r] (Pa. 1851) Though an elector is not bound to disclose for whom he voted in an election contest, the privilege is a penal one and it may be waived by him, and he may testify if he so desires.—In re Kneass, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. 553.

[s] (Va. 1874) The fact that a witness has testified before the coroner does not deprive him of the privilege, given him by the eighth section of the bill of rights, of refusing to give evidence which will tend to criminate himself; and, if such testimony before the coroner was given without his being advised of his privilege, it is not a waiver of it by him.—Cullen v. Commonwealth, 24 Grat. 624.

[t] (Va. 1880) The fact that the witness testified before the grand jury, and that it was on his testimony that the indictment was found, will not deprive him of his privilege to decline to testify on the trial of the party indicted on the ground that his evidence will tend to incriminate him.—Temple v. Commonwealth, 75 Va. 89.

Cross-examination of accused in general, see ante, §§ 1043–1046.

[a] An accused who offers himself as a witness in his own behalf thereby waives the privilege of refusing to testify.

—(Colo. 1896) Bradford v. People, 22 Colo. 157, 43 Pac. 1013;

(Me. 1881) State v. Witham, 72 Me. 531;

(N. Y. 1870) McGarry v. People, 2 Lans. 227; (1870) Brandon v. People, 42 N. Y. 265; (1894) People v. Court of Sessions of Albany County, 82 Hun, 242, 31 N. Y. Supp. 373;

(N. C. 1890) State v. Allen, 107 N. C. 805, 11 S. E. 1016;

(Or. 1883) State v. Abrams, 11 Or. 169, 8 Pac. 327.

[b] A defendant in a criminal prosecution, who becomes a witness "at his own request," waives the constitutional privilege of exemption from furnishing or giving evidence against himself; and his acts may be inquired about on cross-examination, though tending to prove his guilt, for the purpose of negativing the truth of his statements made on his direct examination.

—(Iowa, 1876) State v. Fay, 43 Iowa, 651;

(Nev. 1876) State v. Huff, 11 Nev. 17.

[c] (Ill. 1887) A defendant offering himself as a witness may be compelled, on cross-examination, to give evidence criminating himself; and his evidence may be considered in the light of his position as accused, and his interest in testifying.—Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320.

[d] (Ind. 1885) A defendant who voluntarily takes the stand and broadly denies the crime, thus waives his constitutional privilege, and may be cross-examined on all facts relevant and material to the issue.—Thomas v. State, 103 Ind. 419, 2 N. E. 808.

[e] (Iowa, 1880) Acts 17th Gen. Assem. p. 168, § 1, provides that "defendants in all criminal proceedings shall be competent witnesses in their own behalf, but cannot be called as witnesses by the state." Section 2 provides that the rules of evidence prevailing in civil actions are applicable in criminal proceedings, so far as they are not inconsistent with other express provisions on the subject. Held that, where defendant in a criminal case is a witness in his own behalf, he is subject to the same rules regulating cross-examination and impeachment as other witnesses.—State v. Red, 53 Iowa, 69, 4 N. W. 831.

[f] (Iowa, 1890) Where one of two persons, charged with the same offense, testifies on the investigation before the grand jury without claiming his constitutional privilege, and both of them are indicted, he cannot on the trial of his co-defendant refuse to testify, on the ground that his testimony will criminate himself.—State v. Van Winkle, 80 Iowa, 15, 45 N. W. 388.

[g] (Mass. 1867) Under St. 1866, c. 260, a defendant in a criminal cause who offers himself as a witness waives his constitutional privilege of refusing to furnish evidence against himself, and may be interrogated as a general witness in the cause. Thus, where a defendant had testified that there was no glass in a door through which, according to previous testimony, he had been seen to sell liquor, it was held proper to put to him the cross-interrogatory whether there was not a glass in the partition near the door.—Commonwealth v. Mullen, 97 Mass. 545.

[h] (Mass. 1873) One testifying that he did not commit the crime charged, thereby waives his constitutional privilege as to criminating himself, and may be cross-examined as to every thing relevant to the issue.—Commonwealth v. Nichols, 114 Mass. 285, 19 Am. Rep. 346.

[i] (Mass. 1876) On trial of an indictment for robbery, the prosecution offered to prove certain confessions by defendant which were excluded as having been obtained by promises and threats made to him by the officers. Afterwards the defendant took the stand and testified in his own behalf, and was asked upon cross-examination what statements he had made in the interview in which the confessions were made. Held, that a ruling that, having thus made himself a witness, he could be asked whether he made statements inconsistent with his testimony on the stand, as affecting his credit, was sufficiently favorable to the defendant.—Commonwealth v. Tolliver, 119 Mass. 312.

[k] (N. H. 1873) The prohibition of the constitution against compelling a subject to furnish evidence against himself (Bill of Rights, art. 15) may be waived by him, and is waived by his consenting to be a witness in his own behalf under Laws 1859, c. 23, and he thereby subjects himself to the rules and tests applicable to other witnesses.—State v. Ober, 52 N. H. 459, 13 Am. Rep. 88.

[l] (N. Y. 1872) Where an accused avails himself of the permission granted by Laws 1869, c. 678, to testify on his own behalf, he thereby subjects himself to the same rules and tests applicable to other witnesses, and waives the provision in his favor, granted by Const. art. 1, § 6, forbidding that an accused be compelled to testify against himself.—Connors v. People, 50 N. Y. 240.

[m] (N. Y. 1892) A defendant in a criminal case, who avails himself of the privilege given by Code Cr. Proc. § 393, to "testify as a witness in his own behalf," becomes a witness generally in the case, subject to the ordinary rules of examination, so that it is no violation of the provision of Const. art. 1, § 6, that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, that the state is allowed to cross-examine him relative to facts not brought out in his examination in chief, or affecting his credibility, but pertinent to the issue.—People v. Tice, 131 N. Y. 651, 30 N. E. 494, 15 L. R. A. 669.

[n] (N. D. 1896) A defendant in a criminal case, who becomes a witness in his own behalf, does not thereby waive his privilege to decline to answer questions the answers to which may tend to convict him of collateral crimes, when such questions are asked solely to affect his credibility.—State v. Pancoast, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052, 35 L. R. A. 518.

[o] (Tex. 1891) Though the accused need not give evidence against himself (Bill of Rights, § 10), yet where he testifies in his own behalf, as permitted by Act Leg. 1887, he becomes as any other witness, and may be recalled by the state for further cross-examination.—Mendez v. State, 29 Tex. App. 608, 16 S. W. 766.

[a] (N. Y. 1895) Defendant was indicted for forging a note which he had paid and taken up before the indictment was found. He was served with a subpœna duces tecum to produce the note before the grand jury, but before the return of the subpœna he voluntarily, at the request of the district attorney, surrendered the note, and it was put in evidence before the grand jury. Held, that defendant, by surrendering the note, waived his right to withdraw it from evidence.—People v. Sebring (O. & T.) 14 Misc. Rep. 31, 35 N. Y. Supp. 237.

[a] (Ala. 1879) An accomplice who consents to testify for the state cannot shield himself from answering any relevant question under the rule that he shall not be required to criminate himself.—Lockett v. State, 63 Ala. 5.

[b] (Mich. 1857) An accomplice who has been led to give evidence for the government by an express or implied promise of pardon contracts to make a full statement, can keep back nothing, and should be allowed no privileged communications.—Alderman v. People, 4 Mich. 414, 69 Am. Dec. 321.

[c] (Miss. 1887) An accomplice who had turned state's evidence was asked a question, the answer to which would have divulged a confidential statement to his attorney. Held admissible, as by turning state's evidence he waived all privileges regarding facts pertinent to the issue, and could be compelled to disclose confidential communications to counsel.—Jones v. State, 65 Miss. 179, 3 South. 379.

§ 1057. Persons entitled to waive privilege.

[a] (Pa. 1870) On the trial of a husband there can be no waiver by the wife as a witness of the privilege which is her husband's.—Commonwealth v. Reid, 8 Phila. 385.

13. PERSONS ENTITLED TO CLAIM PRIVILEGE.

IN GENERAL, § 1058.
PARTY, § 1059.

Persons entitled to privilege, see ante, §§ 1019, 1031, 1032.

[a] The objection that an answer by a witness, if made, may tend to criminate him, can only be made by the witness himself.

—(Colo. 1891) Lothrop v. Roberts, 16 Colo. 250, 27 Pac. 698;

(Ky. 1831) Sodusky v. McGee, 28 Ky. (5 J. J. Marsh.) 621;

(Md. 1876) Roddy v. Finnegan, 43 Md. 490.

[b] (Tex. 1893) Testimony is not objectionable because it inculpates the witness, since no one but he can object on that ground.—Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 20 S. W. 924.

§ 1059. Party.

[a] The privilege of refusing to answer is personal to the witness, and is not in any sense the privilege of the party calling him.

—(Cal. 1868) Clark v. Reese, 35 Cal. 89;

(N. H. 1851) State v. Foster, 23 N. H. (3 Fost.) 348, 55 Am. Dec. 191.

[b] Where a witness does not object to testifying on the ground that his testimony would incriminate him, neither of the parties can object to his testimony on such ground.

—(N. Y. 1845) People v. Bodine, 1 Denio, 281;

(Tex. 1894) San Antonio St. Ry. Co. v. Muth, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 443, 27 S. W. 752.

[c] (U. S. 1894) In an action against an unincorporated association the defendant cannot object to incriminating testimony given by one of the associates, where the witness himself fails to assert his privilege.—Morgan v. Halberstadt, 60 Fed. 592, 9 C. C. A. 147, 20 U. S. App. 417.

[d] (Cal. 1889) Whether the question put is pertinent or not, the witness may decline to answer on the ground that to do so would tend to criminate him; but, where the question is not pertinent, the party introducing him may object thereto, and his objection should be sustained, whether the witness objects to answering or not.—Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633, 22 Pac. 26.

[e] (Mass. 1849) It is the privilege of a witness, and not the right of the party against whom he is called, to object to his giving evidence to criminate himself.—Commonwealth v. Shaw, 58 Mass. (4 Cush.) 594, 50 Am. Dec. 813.

[f] (Mass. 1893) In a prosecution for illegal sales of intoxicating liquors defendant cannot raise the objection that the purchasers, when examined as witnesses, cannot be compelled to criminate themselves.—Commonwealth v. Gould, 158 Mass. 499, 33 N. E. 656.

[g] (Miss. 1859) If the witness is willing to criminate himself, the party cannot object.—Newcomb v. State, 37 Miss. 383.

[h] (Miss. 1876) The accused cannot object to questions put to a witness, on the ground the answers may tend to criminate the witness. The privilege is a personal one, and can be claimed only by the witness.—White v. State, 52 Miss. 216.

[i] (Miss. 1882) A personal privilege of a witness to testify or not at her election is available only to the witness herself, and a party to the action cannot complain because the court compelled her to testify against her objection.—Turner v. State, 60 Miss. 351, 45 Am. Rep. 412.

[j] (N. C. 1890) Neither contestant nor defendant can object to the testimony of a voter alleged to have voted illegally, on the ground that he cannot be compelled to criminate himself, where the witness does not raise the objection himself.—People v. Teague, 106 N. C. 576, 11 S. E. 665.

[k] (Tex. 1889) The state cannot object to a witness' competency on the ground that the testimony will tend to criminate him.—Day v. State, 27 Tex. App. 143, 11 S. W. 36.

[l] (Tex. 1895) The fact that a witness, either voluntarily or by compulsion of court, answers questions relevant to the issue and admissible, but which he has the privilege of not answering, is not available to the party producing the witness as ground for reversal.—Ingersol v. McWillie, 87 Tex. 647, 30 S. W. 869.

[m] (Wis. 1879) The right of a witness to decline answering whether he has been convicted of an infamous offense, on the ground that the answer would tend to degrade him, is personal to such witness, and cannot be taken by the party calling him.—Ingalls v. State, 48 Wis. 647, 4 N. W. 785.

[a] (Colo. 1896) An objection to testifying on the ground of personal privilege must be made by the witness himself, and not by his counsel.—Bradford v. People, 22 Colo. 157, 43 Pac. 1013.

[b] (Iowa, 1892) In an action for seduction plaintiff may claim by her counsel the privilege of not answering criminating questions.—Clifton v. Granger, 86 Iowa, 573, 53 N. W. 316.

[c] (N. D. 1896) The claim of privilege cannot be made by counsel even when the witness is also a party.—State v. Pancoast, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052, 35 L. R. A. 518.

[d] (Ohio, 1888) The privilege of a witness to refuse to answer questions on the ground that it will tend to criminate her cannot be interposed by her counsel, where she swears such question will not tend to criminate her.—Ammon v. Johnson, 2 O. C. D. 149.

14. CLAIM OF PRIVILEGE.

REFUSING TO TAKE OATH, § 1062.
NECESSITY FOR WITNESS TO CLAIM PRIVILEGE, § 1063.
REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY OF CLAIM OF PRIVILEGE, § 1064.

Compelling witness to state reasons why answer would tend to disgrace him, see ante, § 1024.
—— to incriminate him, see ante, § 1033.

[a] (Mich. 1867) An accomplice, testifying for the government, on cross-examination, need not disclose his criminality in other cases; and he may claim his privilege at any stage of the collateral inquiries.—Pitcher v. People, 16 Mich. 142.

[b] (N. H. 1837) A witness testified that he was destitute of property, but admitted, after inquiry, that he had had a considerable amount of money three or four years previous. He then stated that his money had gone to adjust matters which he could not disclose without subjecting himself to a prosecution for a crime. Held, that it was competent to the witness to claim his privilege at this stage of the examination.—Amherst v. Hollis, 9 N. H. 107.

[c] (N. Y. 1857) Where in an action on a note a defense of usury is set up, and the lender of the money, being called as a witness, refuses to testify on the ground that his answer might criminate himself, if the counsel does not claim that usury has in fact been taken, he should so state, and ask the referee to instruct the witness that a mere agreement for a usurious premium is not criminal. If he fails to do so, it is too late to raise that question on appeal.—Fellows v. Wilson, 31 Barb. 162.

[b] (Cal. 1886) A person called as a witness cannot refuse to be sworn on the ground that his testimony would tend to subject him to punishment for a felony, nor can he urge such privilege until a question is put to him, after being sworn, the answer to which would have such tendency; and the court would then decide whether the answer would have such an effect.—Ex parte Stice, 70 Cal. 51, 11 Pac. 459.

[c] (Pa. 1892) One who has been duly summoned before a committee of the city council, to be sworn and testify in an investigation being conducted by said committee in the matter of the deposits of city moneys, and the default of the city treasurer, cannot refuse to be sworn on the ground that he is under indictment for conspiracy with the treasurer, involving the same transactions as those in regard to which it is sought to interrogate him, but must wait until after he is sworn and questioned before he can claim his privilege.—In re Eckstein, 148 Pa. 509, 24 Atl. 63, 30 Wkly. Notes Cas. 59; Appeal of Yard, Id. Affirming (1891) 10 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 41.

[a] (Fla. 1891) The court should not exclude a question, otherwise proper, because it tends to criminate the witness, but should leave it with the witness to avail himself of his personal privilege or not, as he sees fit.—Williams v. Dickenson, 28 Fla. 90, 9 South. 847.

[b] (Ind. 1884) Where a plaintiff has testified in his own behalf in a suit for personal injury by a defective sidewalk, it is discretionary to allow him to be asked on cross-examination whether he had not combined with others several years before to defraud an insurance company, he not claiming his privilege.—City of South Bend v. Hardy, 98 Ind. 577, 49 Am. Rep. 792.

[c] (La. 1836) A witness is competent, though liable to be asked questions the answers to which may subject him to a criminal prosecution. It is his privilege to decline answering them.—Macarty v. Bond's Adm'r, 9 La. 351.

[d] (La. 1874) Unless a witness makes objection, there is no reason why he should not be allowed to testify in a civil matter, though his testimony may tend to show that he has been guilty of an offense against the laws of the state.—Horrell v. Parish, 26 La. Ann. 6.

[e] (Mass. 1870) Where a witness was asked on cross-examination whether he had been convicted of crime as shown by a record introduced of the conviction of a person of the same name, and the witness did not claim any privilege, but answered the question, no error appeared.—Root v. Hamilton, 105 Mass. 22.

[f] (Mich. 1888) In an action on a note procured by an agent of plaintiff, a farm machine company, defendant's contention being that the note sued on was a forgery, he may inquire of the agent if he had not previously turned in a note to another company which falsely purported to be signed by defendant, where the witness does not claim the privilege of not answering because it would tend to criminate him.—Johnston Harvester Co. v. Miller, 72 Mich. 265, 40 N. W. 429, 16 Am. St. Rep. 536.

[g] (N. J. 1843) If a witness, who wrote the libel by the direction of the defendant, does not ask the protection of the court, but submits to answer the questions put to him, his testimony is admissible, and will be received.—Schenck v. Schenck, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 208.

[h] (N. Y. 1882) If a witness, because an answer to a question otherwise unobjectionable might tend to criminate or degrade him, refuses to answer it, he may be compelled to give his reason and claim his privilege.—New v. Fisher, 11 Daly, 308.

[i] (Ohio, 1881) One on trial for murder, testifying for himself, was asked on cross-examination if he had not been arrested for assault with intent to kill. The question was objected to, but the objection was overruled, and the prisoner answered without claiming his privilege. Held no error.—Hanoff v. State, 37 Ohio St. 178, 41 Am. Rep. 496.

[a] (N. Y. 1894) A witness cannot avail himself of his privilege to refuse to answer criminating questions merely by stating that he throws himself on his privilege, but he must make oath that in his opinion the effect of his answer would tend to criminate him.—People v. Seaman (Sup.) 8 Misc. Rep. 152, 29 N. Y. Supp. 329.

[b] (N. D. 1896) A witness who desires to claim his constitutional privilege of declining to answer a question, though he is also the party defendant, must make his claim in person, and under oath, and with sufficient definiteness to render his claim clear.—State v. Pancoast, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052, 35 L. R. A. 518.

[c] (Pa. 1886) An administratrix defendant called by plaintiffs to testify as an adverse party cannot refuse to answer questions on the ground that the bill charges a criminal offense, as to make such a plea available she must state on her oath her belief that to answer the questions would criminate her. A submission of the question to the court is not sufficient.—William Penn Building & Loan Ass'n v. Mayer, 2 Montg. Co. Law Rep'r, 41.

[d] (S. C. 1842) A refusal to answer a question by a witness "because the answer would tend to criminate himself" was sufficient.—Poole v. Perritt, 1 Speers, 128.

[e] (Tenn. 1887) In order to be available, a witness must, at the time he is examined, claim his exemption upon the ground that his answer would criminate himself. Where only a general objection is made, and the witness is not shown to have answered only because he was compelled, his answer cannot afterwards be suppressed.—In re Druggist Cases, 85 Tenn. (1 Pickle) 449, 3 S. W. 490.

[f] (Vt. 1840) The witness must first determine whether he will claim the privilege, and, if it is claimed upon oath, the court cannot deny it, unless fully satisfied that the witness is mistaken, or acts in bad faith.—Chamberlin v. Willson, 12 Vt. 491, 36 Am. Dec. 356.

[g] (Wis. 1859) A witness, who declines to answer on the ground that the answer sought may tend to criminate him, must state under oath that he believes that would be the tendency of the answer.—Kirschner v. State, 9 Wis. 140.

15. DETERMINATION OF RIGHT TO PRIVILEGE AND PROTECTION OF WITNESS AGAINST SUBSEQUENT USE OF EVIDENCE.

DETERMINATION OF RIGHT TO PRIVILEGE IN GENERAL, § 1065.
RIGHT OF WITNESS OR COURT TO DECIDE WHETHER TESTIMONY WOULD INCRIMINATE OR DISGRACE, § 1066.
PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS, § 1067.
PROTECTION OF WITNESS AGAINST SUBSEQUENT USE OF EVIDENCE, § 1068.

§ 1065. Determination of right to privilege in general.

[a] (Iowa, 1895) Where a witness before a grand jury refuses to testify, it is proper for the court before whom the witness is brought, after declaring that the witness had the right to refuse to testify on the ground that his testimony might tend to incriminate him, to direct the witness to return for further examination before the grand jury as the law exonerates him from answering self-incriminating questions only.—State v. Lewis, 96 Iowa, 286, 65 N. W. 295.

[b] (N. Y. 1845) Where a witness called to establish a defense of usury declines to testify on the ground that his testimony might subject him to prosecution, it is the duty of the court to instruct a witness declining to testify in such a case, that the actual receipt of the usurious premium as well as a usurious agreement is essential to expose him to a criminal prosecution, or subject him to a penalty.—Close v. Olney, 1 Denio, 319.

See ante, § 1033 [b].

[a, b] It is not for a witness, but for the court, to determine whether an answer can criminate him directly or indirectly.

—(Iowa, 1850) Richman v. State, 2 G. Greene, 532; (1863) State v. Duffy, 15 Iowa, 425.

(S. C. 1819) State v. Edwards, 2 Nott & McC. 13, 10 Am. Dec. 557.

[c] (U. S. 1807) In determining the right of a witness to refuse to answer on the ground that his answer might tend to incriminate him, it is the province of the court to judge whether any direct answer to the question proposed will furnish evidence against the witness.—United States v. Burr, Fed. Cas. No. 14,692e.

[d] (U. S. 1807) The witness must himself judge what his answer will be; and if he say on oath that he cannot answer without accusing himself, he cannot be compelled to answer.—United States v. Burr, Fed. Cas. No. 14,692e.

[e] (U. S. 1821) A witness in a criminal cause will be compelled to answer a question which he says upon his oath he cannot answer without disclosing a fact which may be material and important evidence to criminate himself, as participator in the same offense for which the defendant stands indicted, provided the court should be of opinion that no direct answer to the question could furnish evidence against the witness.—United States v. Miller, Fed. Cas. No. 15,772 [2 Cranch, C. C. 247].

[f] (U. S. 1821) A witness in a criminal case is in contempt for refusing to answer a question, though he objects that it may disclose a fact constituting important and material evidence to criminate him if the court is of opinion that no direct answer to the question could furnish evidence against the witness.—United States v. Miller, Fed. Cas. No. 15,772 [2 Cranch, C. C. 247].

[g] (U. S. 1822) A witness is not bound to answer a question, if it shall appear to the court that the answer would have a probable tendency to criminate the witness.—United States v. Lynn, Fed. Cas. No. 15,649 [2 Cranch, C. C. 309].

[h] (U. S. 1883) To justify a witness in refusing to testify on the ground that his evidence may incriminate him, reasonable ground must appear to the court to apprehend some proceedings against the witness upon a criminal charge, and some danger to the witness in answering.—United States v. McCarthy (C. C.) 18 Fed. 87, 21 Blatchf. 469.

[i] (La. 1810) A witness may be compelled to answer, though he declare he cannot with safety, if the question appear to the court one the answer to which cannot possibly criminate him.—Territory v. Nugent, 1 Mart. (O. S.) 108.

[j] (Mass. 1826) It is the province of the court to judge whether a direct answer to a question may tend to criminate a witness.—Commonwealth v. Braynard, Thacher, Cr. Cas. 146.

[k] (Miss. 1884) On an election contest on the ground of fraud, inspectors and clerks of election have the right to refuse to answer any question which would tend to subject them to a criminal prosecution, and have the right to judge for themselves as to whether it would have that tendency.—Word v. Sykes, 61 Miss. 649.

[l] (N. Y. 1868) Where a witness or party in supplementary proceedings declines to answer questions propounded to him on the ground that his answers will have a tendency to criminate him, it is the province of the court to determine whether that will probably be the effect of the answers, and when it is fairly ascertained that such will not be the effect of the answers, he may be required to answer the questions.—Forbes v. Willard, 37 How. Prac. 193.

[n] (Pa. 1891) Laws 1887, p. 161, § 10, provides that any competent witness, except defendants upon trial, may be compelled to testify in any proceeding, but not to answer questions which, in the opinion of the trial judge, will tend to criminate such witness. Held, that in a prosecution for bribery of delegates to a congressional convention it was for the trial court to say when the privilege of not answering should be exercised by a witness.—Commonwealth v. Bell, 145 Pa. 374, 22 Atl. 641, 28 Wkly. Notes Cas. 333.

[nn] (S. C. 1842) The witness, with the instruction of the court when necessary, must decide whether his answer will tend to criminate him; and his decision is upon oath, and at the peril of perjury.—Poole v. Perritt, 1 Speers, 128.

[o] (Tex. 1851) It is for the court to judge whether any direct answer to a question which may be proposed may furnish evidence to convict the witness of a crime. If it may, the witness himself must judge what his answer will be, and if he swears that he cannot answer without accusing himself, he cannot be compelled to answer.—Floyd v. State, 7 Tex. 215.

[p] (Wis. 1859) After a witness who declines to answer a question put to him on the ground that the answer may tend to criminate him states under oath that he believes such would be the tendency of the answer, it is for the trial court to decide whether the answer will have that tendency.—Kirschner v. State, 9 Wis. 140.

[a] (Mass. 1830) The court and not the witness is to judge of the lawfulness or reasonableness of an excuse which a witness may have for refusing to produce a document in his possession under a subpœna duces tecum.—Bull v. Loveland, 27 Mass. (10 Pick.) 9.

[b] (N. Y. 1861) It is not the right of a witness to judge, except where the answer might criminate him, whether the matter inquired of is privileged or not. If the production of a document is called for, and the witness declines to produce it, upon the ground that the reading of it in evidence would be prejudicial to his interests, or the interests of a person to whom he stood in a confidential relation respecting the instrument, the witness may be required to submit the document to the inspection of the court.—In re Mitchell, 12 Abb. Prac. 249.

Use of evidence in general, see ante, § 1036.

[a] (Tenn. 1859) One on trial for gaming who wishes to avail himself of the protection of Acts 1824, c. 5, providing that no witness shall be bound to answer to any criminal proceeding for any offense about which he may have been examined as a witness by virtue of this act, must allege specifically in his plea that he was examined before the jury as to the particular offense charged against him in the indictment, and an averment that he was summoned and went before the grand jury to testify as to unlawful gaming is not sufficient.—Leonard v. State, 39 Tenn. (2 Head) 455.

16. EFFECT OF REFUSAL TO ANSWER.

EFFECT ON OTHER EVIDENCE GIVEN BY WITNESS, § 1070.
EFFECT AS EVIDENCE AGAINST WITNESS, § 1071.

[a] (Cal. 1868) Prac. Act. § 409, providing that on the refusal of a witness to answer, if the witness be a party, his complaint may be dismissed or his answer stricken out, was applicable where defendant in an action for the breach of a promise to marry on his direct examination made insinuations against plaintiff's character, and refused to testify fully with regard thereto on cross-examination.—Clark v. Reese, 35 Cal. 89.

[b] (N. Y. 1859) A witness may be asked on his cross-examination, with a view to affect his credibility if affirmatively answered, whether he had not been guilty of adultery and had a venereal disease since his marriage. If the facts thus inquired into are wholly collateral to the issue, the witness may refuse to answer, and no inference unfavorable to his character can be drawn from such refusal.—People v. Blakeley, 4 Parker, Cr. R. 176.

[c] (N. C. 1853) Where a witness was asked on cross-examination whether he has not been convicted and punished for an infamous crime, and the judge allowed the witness to elect whether he would answer, and he refused, it was held that such refusal might be insisted on by counsel in addressing the jury, as warranting the inference that he was unworthy of credit.—State v. Garrett, 44 N. C. 357.

[d] (Pa. 1853) Where a witness declines to answer a question upon the ground that its tendency is to criminate him, from the claim of such privilege and its allowance, no inferences whatever can be legitimately drawn injuriously affecting either party.—Pelin v. Kenderdine, 20 Pa. (8 Harris) 354.

[e] (Tenn. 1884) A witness properly subpœnaed before the grand jury to testify in regard to gaming who refuses to answer touching his knowledge of the offense, although his answer may show his own guilt, is guilty of contempt, for which he may be fined and imprisoned.—Warner v. State, 81 Tenn. (13 Lea) 52.

[a] (Mich. 1886) Refusal of a witness to answer a question, where the answer might criminate him, cannot be commented on by counsel, or considered by the jury in determining the weight of the witness' testimony.—People v. Maunausau, 60 Mich. 15, 26 N. W. 797.

[b] (Mich. 1889) On a trial for robbery a prisoner in the county jail testified that one C., who was implicated in the robbery, and who had turned state's evidence, told him while in the jail that the men who committed the robbery were in Chicago, and that, when he asked C. why he had implicated defendant, he replied: "I am not going over the road alone." The witness, when asked why he did not tell defendant this, refused to answer, on the ground that it might criminate him. Held, that the court properly refused to charge that because the witness "refused to answer any question which he believed would tend to criminate him is no good reason why he should not be believed as to what he said," and stated that the jury might give the testimony such credit as they thought it deserved.—People v. Gallagher, 75 Mich. 512, 42 N. W. 1068.

[c] (Pa. 1870) A refusal to tell the whole truth, where the reservation is made on the ground that the evidence tends to criminate a husband, does not invalidate the evidence given.—Commonwealth v. Reid, 8 Phila. 385.

[a] (Ga. 1887) The pursuit of one's ordinary avocations on Sunday being an indictable offense in Georgia, a person has the privilege of refusing to answer questions as to whether he bought a bill of exchange on Sunday; and, in an action by him on such bill, a deposition showing his refusal to answer such questions therein propounded cannot be introduced in evidence as tending to show that he did buy such bill on Sunday.—Harrison v. Powers, 76 Ga. 218.

[b] (Iowa, 1880) The refusal of a witness to answer a question on the ground that he might criminate himself cannot subsequently, on the trial of such witness for the same offense, be used against him.—State v. Bailey, 54 Iowa, 414, 6 N. W. 589.

[c] (Mass. 1870) The refusal of a party to a suit, when testifying as witness, to answer a material question on the ground that it might criminate himself—as, on an issue between seller and purchaser of liquors, the refusal of the seller to state whether he had a license—is competent evidence against him.—Andrews v. Frye, 104 Mass. 234.

[d] (N. Y. 1857) Where, in an action on a note, a defense of usury is set up, and the lender of the money, being called as a witness, refuses to testify on the ground that his answer might criminate himself, but the witness is instructed that a mere agreement for a usurious premium is not criminal, if he still declines to answer on the same ground, it will be equivalent to swearing that a usurious premium was taken.—Fellows v. Wilson, 31 Barb. 162.

MANNER OF TESTIFYING, § 1078.

[a] (U. S. 1873) It is a rule of presumptions that, ordinarily, a witness who testifies to an affirmative, is entitled to be preferred to one who testifies to a negative. The latter may have forgotten what occurred. It is impossible to remember what never existed.—Stitt v. Huidekoper, 84 U. S. (17 Wall.) 384, 21 L. Ed. 644.

[b] (U. S. 1895) Where there is an irreconcilable conflict in the evidence of the crews of the colliding vessels, the testimony of disinterested witnesses on other vessels, in a position to see what took place, should govern the case.—The Charles H. Trickey, 66 Fed. 1020, 14 C. C. A. 225, 33 U. S. App. 35; Sargent v. Sargent, Id.

[c] (U. S. 1855) Where testimony offered on different sides with regard to the leading facts in a case is wholly irreconcilable, the demeanor of witnesses, and the fact whether those on the same side agree or not with each other, will be considered by the court in weighing the evidence.—Dickenson v. The Gore, Fed. Cas. No. 3,893 [Newb. Adm. 45].

[e] (U. S. 1882) The testimony of witnesses from the two colliding vessels was in irreconcilable conflict as to the condition of the weather. Held, that superior credit was due to those witnesses who were sustained by collateral evidence concerning the material subsidiary points respecting the force of the wind and time of the commencement of the rain, storm, and gale.—The Florence P. Hall (D. C.) 14 Fed. 408.

[f] (U. S. 1888) Elements affecting credibility of witnesses are to be judged of by jurors as they would judge of it in an important matter in everyday life.—United States v. Hughes (D. C.) 34 Fed. 732.

[g] (U. S. 1894) Under Code Or. § 683, making the jury exclusive judges of the credibility of witnesses, they may disregard uncontradicted testimony, where it is unsatisfactory to their minds.—Craft v. Northern Pac. R. Co. (C. C.) 62 Fed. 735.

[h] (Ark. 1875) A witness cannot be impeached by evidence tending to show that a third person was prejudiced against the accused, and had threatened to procure the witness to testify against him.—Benton v. State, 30 Ark. 328.

[i] (Ga. 1858) When a witness aged 59 years testifies to facts which transpired 53 or 54 years previously, her testimony should be perfectly consistent, to be credited.—Parker v. Chambers, 24 Ga. 518.

[j] (Ga. 1860) When there is an apparent conflict of evidence, the jury must reconcile the testimony so as to make all the witnesses speak the truth, if possible. If the testimony is irreconcilable, credit should be given to the witnesses who had the best means of knowledge, but the jury should consider their manner of testifying and the circumstances upon which their recollection, as to time, dates, etc., is based.—Durham v. Holeman, 30 Ga. 619.

[k] (Ga. 1869) An instruction to a jury that, as between several witnesses, the one who had most interest in noticing and remembering the facts to which he has testified should be preferred, is erroneous.—Phillips v. Williams, 39 Ga. 597.

[l] (Ill. 1862) A jury cannot willfully disregard the testimony of an unimpeached witness.—Robertson v. Dodge, 28 Ill. (18 Peck) 161, 81 Am. Dec. 267; Robinson v. Magarity, Id. 423.

[m] (Ill. 1862) While a jury may judge of the credibility of a witness, they must exercise their judgments while doing so, and not their will merely.—Robertson v. Dodge, 28 Ill. (18 Peck) 161, 81 Am. Dec. 267.

[mm] (Ill. 1862) A witness can only be impeached by a direct attack upon his testimony and character.—Hansell v. Erickson, 28 Ill. (18 Peck) 257.

[n] (Ill. 1865) More weight will often be attached to the position of a witness for observing a fact, who testifies that it could not occur without his observation, than to the affirmative or negative form of his testimony.—Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. Cauffman, 38 Ill. 424.

[nn] (Ill. 1878) There can be no pretense in law or in fact for saying that because a man is pecuniarily worthless he is unworthy of belief, or that if another has means, his evidence should be believed rather than that of a person without means.—Van Duzor v. Allen, 90 Ill. 499.

[o] (Ill. 1884) In determining the credibility of a witness, the jury should consider the fact of his interest, if any, in the case, his demeanor and conduct on the witness stand, and the fact that he is contradicted by other witnesses.—Rider v. People, 110 Ill. 11.

[oo] (Ill. 1894) It is error to instruct that the credit of a witness depends on his ability and opportunities to know what occurred, and his disposition to tell the truth, and that the statements of a witness having a superior memory, and superior opportunities for knowing what occurred, are entitled to greater weight.—Williams v. John Davis Co., 54 Ill. App. 198.

[p] (Ind. 1857) There is no distinction between civil and criminal cases, in respect to the mode of arriving at a conclusion as to the credibility of witnesses.—Lewis v. Lewis, 9 Ind. 105.

[pp] (Ind. 1859) Instructions were given that a disposition on the part of a witness, who was the girl seduced, testifying in an action per quod, by her father, to prevaricate on immaterial points, should not affect her credit on material points, corroborated by circumstances or other witnesses, and (upon the defendant's request) that the jury, in estimating her credibility, should compare her testimony given on the bastardy trial, and her former statements, with her present testimony, and should observe her bearing, her own contradictions, and her position with reference to the parties. Held, that on the whole the jury were not misled.—Richardson v. Fouts, 11 Ind. 466.

[q] (Ind. 1872) It is not error to instruct the jury, in a case depending on the credibility of witnesses, that the testimony of a witness given in open court, in the presence of the opposite party and the other witnesses, and where the witness is subjected to a thorough cross-examination, and where the court or jury have the opportunity of observing the manner, appearance, and conduct of the witness, is entitled to greater weight than the evidence of a witness embodied in a deposition, taken in private, and remote from the court and jury, and where all the ordinary tests of truth cannot be applied.—Carver v. Louthain, 38 Ind. 530.

[qq] (Iowa, 1892) The fact that a witness for plaintiff is called after plaintiff's testimony has been closed, and when a motion is about to be made for judgment for defendant, and that another also is called after defendant's testimony is partly in, although irregular, or perhaps suspicious, will not warrant the appellate court in declaring the testimony of such witnesses false, and of no value.—Asbach v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 86 Iowa, 101, 53 N. W. 90.

[r] (Iowa, 1896) Where plaintiff is a co-partnership, the fraudulent act of one partner does not affect the credibility of the others, who were guiltless of intentional wrong.—Gutherless v. Ripley, 98 Iowa, 290, 67 N. W. 109.

[rr] (La. 1852) Where a sea captain, having met with a disaster, prepares a signed protest of the circumstances while fresh in his memory, setting forth the manner of its occurrence, and afterwards, when litigation involving a charge of misconduct against himself arose, attempts, as a witness, in accounting for the disaster, to set forth statements of material incidents in his voyage not disclosed by his protest, his testimony must be viewed with grave distrust, and cannot be considered as satisfactorily verifying the circumstances of the loss.—McDowell v. General Mut. Ins. Co., 7 La. Ann. 684, 56 Am. Dec. 619.

[s] (Mich. 1870) The veracity of a witness cannot be impeached on any assumption that he must have known whatever is brought home to the cognizance of his attorney.—Dickinson v. Dustin, 21 Mich. 561.

[ss] (Miss. 1860) The motives of a witness to commit perjury may be considered by the jury as affecting his credit.—George v. State, 39 Miss. 570.

[t] (Neb. 1894) The credibility of witnesses is a question exclusively for the jury, and, when a number of witnesses testify directly opposite to each other, the jury need not regard the weight of the evidence as evenly balanced, but may determine from the appearance of the witnesses on the stand, their manner of testifying, their apparent candor and fairness, and from all the other surrounding circumstances, which are more worthy of credit.—Howell Lumber Co. v. Campbell, 38 Neb. 567, 57 N. W. 383.

[tt] (Neb. 1896) A jury is not bound to blindly accept as true all testimony which is not directly contradicted or impeached.—Murphey v. Virgin, 47 Neb. 692, 66 N. W. 652.

[u] (N. Y. 1845) In weighing direct evidence, the jury should regard the capacity of the witness,—whether he was able to see and understand the transaction, and also whether he was attentive or careless, prejudiced or dispassionate, or whether he has some sinister motive that might lead him to fabricate that which he did not see.—People v. Bodine, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. 36.

[uu] (N. Y. 1867) Although it is within the province of the jury, in considering the weight of evidence, to pass upon the credit due the respective witnesses, they may not, without reasonable or justifiable ground, disbelieve any witness. They have no right to discredit an unimpeached, uncontradicted witness, who testifies fairly, and gives clear, rational, consistent, and relevant testimony.—Seibert v. Erie R. Co., 49 Barb. 583.

[v] (N. C. 1842) Where a jury are left in a reasonable and real doubt as to the credibility of a witness, they should disregard his testimony, and give such a verdict as they would have done if he had not been a witness.—Miller v. Richardson, 24 N. C. 250.

[vv] (Pa. 1845) As the credibility of a witness must be judged of by the jury, any evidence which tends to affect it is competent.—Magehan v. Thompson, 9 Watts & S. 54.

[w] (Pa. 1873) The manner of a witness, the reasonableness of his testimony, his sources of knowledge, his capacity to understand and intelligently narrate what he sees and knows, and his motives and bias, each and all, are elements of belief or disbelief.—Lodge v. Frankford & H. R. Co., 30 Leg. Int. 92.

[ww] (Pa. 1894) Where the testimony of a witness who refuses to swear that he will tell the whole truth is necessary in order to infer adultery, such inference cannot be drawn, and such testimony must be wholly rejected.—Ginther v. Ginther (Com. Pl.) 15 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 130.

[x] (Pa. 1896) Though the oral testimony of plaintiff's witnesses to prove the existence of conditions in a lost deed be uncontradicted, the question as to their existence is for the jury.—Lehigh Coal & Navigation Co. v. Evans, 176 Pa. 28, 34 Atl. 999, 38 Wkly. Notes Cas. 286.

[xx] (Tex. 1893) Where there is no fact in the record which tends to rebut the statements of a witness the court is not authorized to reject them, especially where there are other facts or circumstances corroborative thereof.—Clark v. McGrath (Civ. App.) 22 S. W. 527.

[yy] (Tex. 1895) The wife of plaintiff may be impeached by testimony that she had stated in a conversation with witness that she was afraid of plaintiff, and that he had dictated to her what she should testify to.—Donahoo v. Scott (Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 385.

[z] (Tex. 1895) The state could not show that, though it made a diligent search for evidence, it was unaware of the testimony of a witness testifying for defendant in support of an alibi, thereby discrediting the testimony of such witness.—Coker v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 57, 31 S. W. 655.

[a] (U. S. 1881) Where a defendant in a criminal prosecution otherwise unimpeached testifies under circumstances calculated to create a strong bias, and he states what is in its nature incredible, his testimony is not necessarily to be believed, as the credit of testimony is left to the jury, who are judges of the probability or improbability and credibility of the witness and his testimony.—United States v. Borger (C. C.) 7 Fed. 193, 19 Blatchf. 249.

[b] (U. S. 1885) Where an extraordinary transaction is disclosed, no satisfactory explanation of which is vouchsafed, and the evidence of the transaction, which it was in the power of the parties to produce, has been withheld, the court may disregard the testimony of the parties so far as it is improbable, and interpret the transaction in a way consistent with the ordinary conduct and motives of business men.—Chandler v. Town of Attica (C. C.) 22 Fed. 625, 23 Blatchf. 66.

[c] (Ala. 1883) The mere fact that testimony is unreasonable and improbable does not compel the jury to disbelieve it.—Ross v. State, 74 Ala. 532.

[d] (Ga. 1846) Where witnesses testified to what they saw, on a certain night, aided by the starlight and the light from neighboring houses, it was not permitted to impeach them by witnesses who offer to prove that on a similar starlight night they made experiments between the same hours, and with the same degree of light, and were unable to discern objects distinctly at the distance testified to by the witnesses to be impeached.—Sealy v. State, 1 Ga. (1 Kelly) 213, 44 Am. Dec. 641.

[e] (Ill. 1889) The testimony of unimpeached witnesses, as to the bona fides of a conveyance, cannot be ignored because the transaction was not businesslike.—Dunn v. Weir, 34 Ill. App. 612.

[f] (Ill. 1890) The fact that the account given by a witness of a transaction is in the abstract improbable is not of itself sufficient to discredit him, though he is testifying in his own interest.—Bunn v. Third Nat. Bank, 38 Ill. App. 76.

[g] (La. 1877) Where the testimony of a witness is improbable and suggestive of collusion and conspiracy, it is entitled to no weight.—Breard v. Mechanics' & Traders' Ins. Co., 29 La. Ann. 764.

[h] (La. 1891) Positive testimony by witnesses whose character and credibility are not impeached cannot be overcome by suspicion founded on mere improbability of their statements, when not shown to be in any sense impossible; especially when the trial judge has given credence to it.—Succession of Barrett, 43 La. Ann. 61, 8 South. 438.

[i] (Me. 1856) Evidence offered to show the improbability of a transaction, as stated by a witness, but having no tendency to show that he had given a different account of it, is not a mode of impeaching him known to the law.—Shaw v. Emery, 42 Me. 59.

[j] (Minn. 1894) The positive testimony of an otherwise unimpeached witness can only be disregarded when its improbability or inconsistency, appearing from the evidence in the case, furnishes a reasonable ground for doing so.—Second Nat. Bank v. Donald, 56 Minn. 491, 58 N. W. 269.

[k] (N. J. 1883) In weighing evidence, the credibility thereof, as it appears probable under the tests of experience and observation, is to be considered.—Daggers v. Van Dyck, 37 N. J. Eq. (10 Stew.) 130.

[l] (N. Y. 1871) Where the statements of a witness are grossly improbable, the jury are not bound to refrain from exercising their judgment and to adopt the statements of such witness.—Elwood v. Western Union Tel. Co., 45 N. Y. 549, 6 Am. Rep. 140.

[m] (N. Y. 1886) While a court is bound to believe a disinterested, unimpeached, uncontradicted witness, who gives evidence not in any way discredited, or in itself improbable or incredible, it is not bound to give credit to a witness who is interested in the result of the action, and whose evidence is improbable, and discredited by circumstances, or is against common experience and observation.—New York & Brooklyn Ferry Co. v. Moore, 102 N. Y. 667, 6 N. E. 293; New York Ferry Co. v. Same, Id.

[n] (N. C. 1890) That a witness who testified that he was present when deceased was shot did not know where deceased lived, or the date when she was shot, will not warrant a charge to disbelieve his testimony.—State v. Jacobs, 107 N. C. 873, 12 S. E. 248.

[o] (Ohio, 1853) The improbability of a witness' story may justify the jury in not believing him, though he is not directly impeached.—French v. Millard, 2 Ohio St. 44.

[p] (Tenn. 1848) The mere fact that statements proved by one witness to have been made by the prisoner were not heard by others who were present is not a sufficient circumstance to discredit such person, if otherwise unimpeached.—Clark v. State, 27 Tenn. (8 Humph.) 671.

[a] (Ala. 1888) The law raises no presumption as to whether or not a witness under oath speaks the truth.—Stix v. Keith, 85 Ala. 465, 5 South. 184, overruling Rowland v. Plummer (1874) 50 Ala. 182.

[b] (Miss. 1849) Every presumption is in favor of the credibility of a witness; and although there may be impeaching testimony, if it is overbalanced, his testimony cannot be rejected.—Comstock v. Rayford, 20 Miss. (12 Smedes & M.) 369.

[a] (Ill. 1891) The testimony of a witness as to the distance of a fence from a certain point should not be disregarded, although at the time when he measured the distance he was but 12 years old.—Moffett v. South Park Com'rs, 138 Ill. 620, 28 N. E. 975.

[b] (N. J. 1885) A child of young and tender age was a witness in a suit for divorce between her father and mother. She was under the mother's charge when a witness, and gave favorable testimony for her. Held, upon a petition to open the decree upon the ground that the child was willing to swear to statements contrary to her former testimony, she having in the meanwhile been transferred to the care of the father, that her testimony was entitled to no weight.—Pedrick v. Pedrick (Ch.) 3 Atl. 406.

[c] (N. Y. 1893) Under Code Cr. Proc. § 392, providing that where a child under the age of 12 years, offered as a witness, does not, in the opinion of the court, understand the nature of an oath, the evidence of such child may be received, though not given under oath, "but no person shall be convicted on such testimony unsupported by other evidence," corroboration is not required where the testimony of a child is received under oath.—People v. O'Brien, 74 Hun, 264, 26 N. Y. Supp. 812.

[d] (S. C. 1813) The evidence of a child of seven years of age, corroborated by circumstances, is sufficient to justify a conviction of a capital crime, although that evidence be contradicted by the evidence of an adult; the credibility of the witnesses being left to the jury.—State v. Le Blanc, 3 Brev. 339.

As affecting competency, see ante, §§ 80–87.
Impeachment of knowledge, see post, § 1108.

[a] (U. S. 1851) On a question as to the strength and direction of the wind arising, on the trial of a libel for collision, brought in behalf of a sailing vessel against a steamboat, the testimony of those on board the former, whose movements depend upon the wind, is entitled to more weight than that of those on board the latter, whose movements are independent of it.—The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 53 U. S. (12 How.) 443, 13 L. Ed. 1058.

[b] (U. S.) A direct conflict between equally credible witnesses must be resolved in favor of the one having the best opportunity to know the facts.—(1849) Barrett v. Williamson, Fed. Cas. No. 1,051 [4 McLean, 589]; (1854) Abbe v. Rood, Fed. Cas. No. 6 [6 McLean, 106]; (1870) Ayer v. The Glaucus, Fed. Cas. No. 683 [4 Cliff. 166].

[d] (U. S. 1868) The evidence of the pilot of a steamer that he saw the sail vessel from a quarter to a half mile off is more reliable than that of other witnesses, who came out suddenly into the darkness, that she could not be seen so far off.—The Western Metropolis, Fed. Cas. No. 17,439 [2 Ben. 399].

[e] (U. S.) The testimony of the witnesses on board a sail vessel as to the direction of the wind will be held more reliable than that of witnesses on board the steamer with which she came in collision.—(1871) The Hammonia, Fed. Cas. No. 6,005 [4 Ben. 515]; (1872) The Hansa, Fed. Cas. No. 6,037 [5 Ben. 501].

[f] (U. S. 1882) Where there is a vast conflict of testimony, in which there is a question of identity to be established, it is for the jury first to consider which witnesses had the best opportunity and were most likely to know the facts, and, second, to give to those witnesses whose long acquaintance and special opportunities were such as to enable them to carry in their recollection the identity of the particular party, greater weight than those who only casually knew the party.—Wackerle v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. (C. C.) 14 Fed. 23, 4 McCrary, 508.

[g] (U. S. 1892) Where testimony is conflicting, the jury should consider, in determining what weight to attach to the testimony of witnesses, their means of information.—United States v. Ybanez (C. C.) 53 Fed. 536.

[h] (Ala. 1833) A single witness, who heard a conversation set up in complainant's bill between complainant and a deceased executor, is sufficient to prove the declarations made in such conversation, as against a surviving executor, who does not, in denying that there was such a conversation, show how he acquired knowledge justifying his denial.—Waters v. Creagh, 4 Stew. & P. 410.

[i] (Ala. 1853) When there is a conflict in the testimony of two witnesses, which cannot be reconciled, regard must be had, in determining which one is mistaken, to the capacity of the witnesses, their respective opportunities of knowing the facts to which they depose, and the nature of the facts deposed to, as calculated to impress themselves with more or less force on the memory.—Hitt v. Rush, 22 Ala. 563.

[j] (Ill. 1855) In determining the relative weight of conflicting testimony of two witnesses, the preponderance should be given the one who had the better opportunity of being correctly informed as to the matters in controversy.—Brady v. Thompson, 17 Ill. (7 Peck) 270.

[k] (Ill. 1858) A witness may be impeached by his want of intelligence or means of knowing the facts to which he testifies.—Rankin v. Crow, 19 Ill. (9 Peck) 626.

testifies may justify the jury in discrediting him; but if he is corroborated his testimony ought not to be rejected.—Hansell v. Erickson, 28 Ill. (18 Peck) 257.

[m] (Ill. 1863) The instruction of the judge on the trial of an indictment, "that if the jury find that" the witness, who had stated a conversation by defendants among themselves containing admissions, did not hear all the conversation between the prisoners, and did not pretend to have understood all they said, her testimony is entitled to much less weight than if she had heard and understood the whole of the conversation upon the same subject. But it is for the jury to say whether she related the words or substance of the language used, and whether such language was in relation to distinct facts, and how far it tends to prove defendants guilty. Held correct.—White v. Walker, 31 Ill. 422.

[n] (Ill. 1883) It is error to instruct the jury that they should be governed by the testimony of such witness as in their opinion had the best knowledge, as the witness with the best knowledge is not always entitled to the most credit.—German Fire Ins. Co. v. Von Gunten, 13 Ill. App. (13 Bradw.) 593.

[o] (Ind. 1858) A witness testified that a settlement between the plaintiff and the defendant was, "as he understood," etc., and afterwards that it was "understood and agreed by the parties," as before. Held, that the source of his understanding, and the facts on which it was based, sufficiently appeared.—Thomas v. White, 11 Ind. 132.

[p] (Iowa, 1890) On trial for keeping a house of ill fame, a witness may state the reputation of the house, though his information has been received from traveling men, who did not reside in the place.—State v. Lee, 80 Iowa, 75, 45 N. W. 545, 20 Am. St. Rep. 401.

[q] (N. Y. 1863) Greater reliance is to be placed upon the testimony of an impartial and respectable lawyer, in regard to the due execution of a legal instrument, than upon that of a nonprofessional witness.—Julke v. Adam, 1 Redf. Sur. 454.

[r] (N. C. 1891) In an action to set aside a power of attorney on account of the maker's want of mental capacity, it is proper to charge that the law attaches peculiar importance to the testimony of a subscribing witness, and of the attending family physician.—Smith v. Smith, 108 N. C. 365, 12 S. E. 1045, 13 S. E. 113.

[t] (Vt. 1879) Where the cross-examination of a witness disclosed that testimony which both counsel and the court supposed to be of facts within her own knowledge was really hearsay, and the counsel for the state then told the jury that the testimony was withdrawn from their consideration, it was proper for the court to discharge the witness and inform the jury that her testimony was of no account.—State v. Babcock, 51 Vt. 570.

As affecting competency of witness, see ante, § 82.

Impeachment of recollection, see post, § 1103.

[a] (Ala. 1850) The circumstance that a witness called to testify to declarations cannot state the precise time or place or the names of the persons goes only to his credibility.—Walker v. Blassingame, 17 Ala. 813.

[b] (Ala. 1855) A witness who is introduced by the state to prove the defendants' confessions, and who states, on re-examination, "that he had testified to the substance of all that each of said defendants stated on that occasion, but that they may have stated something which he did not recollect," is competent to testify to the confessions, if in themselves admissible.—Brister v. State, 26 Ala. 107.

[c] (Ala. 1876) When a witness testifying to a conversation or confession admits that he cannot recollect all that was said at the time, this is no reason for rejecting his testimony entirely.—Pond v. State, 55 Ala. 196.

[d] (Ark. 1880) The fact that defendant, in a conversation with a witness, said something which the witness cannot remember, will not exclude his testimony of what he does remember.—Wright v. State, 35 Ark. 639.

[e] (Ill. 1873) The testimony of a witness which is clear and positive as to a certain transaction is entitled to greater weight than that of one who remembers nothing of such transaction, except from seeing his handwriting in a receipt given by him.—Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Shea, 66 Ill. 471.

[f] (La. 1852) The testimony of witnesses who speak positively and minutely of facts of no interest to them, happening many years before during their childhood, is not a sufficient ground of belief.—Chandler v. Hough, 7 La. Ann. 440.

[g] (N. J. 1878) A witness who feigns forgetfulness of circumstances collateral to his main story, which he must recollect if he has any memory at all, and in respect to which he would be open to contradiction if his testimony is untrue, is unworthy of belief.—Gibbons v. Potter, 30 N. J. Eq. (3 Stew.) 204.

[h] (N. Y. 1863) Witnesses not being able to recollect positively the language used when the contract was made, the jury are authorized to consider the probability of plaintiffs being satisfied with the answer defendants claim to have made, and the probability of defendants making such an answer.—Audubon v. Excelsior Ins. Co., 27 N. Y. 216.

[i] (Tex. 1878) On a trial of R. for theft of a gelding, the principal witness for the state was unable to recognize R. as the man he had seen in possession of the animal, but stated that as a witness in a previous trial he had identified the person then accused as the man. The prosecuting attorney thereupon testified that R. was the person so identified. Held, that this was competent to remedy the defect of memory of the principal witness.—Ruston v. State, 4 Tex. App. 432.

[j] (Tex. 1882) Where a witness testifies to the contents of a deed that has been lost for 20 years, it is enough if the witness can testify to its substance, though his recollection is not very specific.—Parks v. Caudle, 58 Tex. 216.

[k] (Utah, 1891) On trial for a murder committed 32 years before, when the principal witness for the prosecution was only 5 years old, where the other witnesses have grown old, the lapse of time since the commission of the crime is a strong circumstance to be considered by the jury.—People v. Hancock, 7 Utah, 170, 25 Pac. 1093.

[a] (U. S. 1892) Where testimony is conflicting, the jury should consider, in determining what weight to attach to the testimony of the witnesses, their manner of testifying.—United States v. Ybanez (C. C.) 53 Fed. 536.

[b] (Ga. 1860) When a witness testifies to facts incoherently or inconsistently, that circumstance goes to the credibility of the witness; and if the manner is very incoherent or inconsistent, the testimony should be considered with great caution.—Evans v. Lipscomb, 31 Ga. 71.

[c] (Ill. 1858) A witness may be impeached by his manner of testifying on the stand, and the jury may be justified in disregarding his evidence, unless it is sustained by other evidence in the case.—Rankin v. Crow, 19 Ill. (9 Peck) 626.

[d] (Ill. 1862) The manner of a witness on the stand may justify the jury in discrediting him, but if he is corroborated his testimony ought not to be rejected.—Hansell v. Erickson, 28 Ill. (18 Peck) 257.

[e] (Ill. 1894) It is proper to instruct the jury, in determining the credibility of a witness, to take into consideration his conduct and demeanor on the stand, and that if they believe from the evidence that any witness has willfully sworn falsely as to any material matter, they may disregard his testimony except in so far as it is corroborated.—Bevelot v. Lestrade, 153 Ill. 625, 38 N. E. 1056.

[f] (Ind. 1859) A witness may not only be impeached by evidence of general bad reputation, but by so conducting himself and testifying as to discredit his whole statements.—Terry v. State, 13 Ind. 70.

[h] (N. C. 1854) The conduct of a witness in stating that she did not know the distance between certain objects in a yard because she had not measured it, and that she could not tell whether it was a quarter of a mile or less, though calculated to prejudice her in the opinion of the jury, was not a matter that called for the exclusion of testimony, and it was proper for the jury to consider it as affecting her credit and not her competency.—State v. Peace, 46 N. C. 251.

[i] (Ohio, 1853) The manner of a witness on the stand may justify the jury in not believing him, though he is not directly impeached.—French v. Millard, 2 Ohio St. 44.

[j] (Tex. 1854) The jury are not required to believe a witness, although he makes a plain statement of what is not impossible, and is neither impeached nor contradicted, but may discredit him on account of the manner of giving the testimony, the attendant circumstances, or the improbability of the statement.—Cheatham v. Riddle, 12 Tex. 112.

2. EFFECT OF MISTAKEN, INACCURATE, OR FALSE TESTIMONY.

FALSUS IN UNO, FALSUS IN OMNIBUS, § 1080.
WILLFULNESS OR MISTAKE, § 1081.
MATERIALITY OF FALSE TESTIMONY, § 1082.
CONTRADICTION OR CORROBORATION ON OTHER POINTS, § 1083.

Effect of contradiction, see post, § 1283.
—— of impeachment by inconsistent statements, see post, §§ 1265, 1266.
Instructions to jury, see "Trial," vol. 46, cc. 1501–1504, § 532.

[a] (U. S. 1822) The doctrine that, if witnesses concur in proof of a material fact, they ought to be believed in respect to that fact, whatever may be the other contradictions in their testimony, can be received only under many qualifications, and with great caution.—The Santissima Trinidad, 20 U. S. (7 Wheat.) 283, 5 L. Ed. 454, affirming decree (1821) Fed. Cas. No. 2,568 [1 Brock. 478].

[b] (U. S. 1873) In an action to set aside a settlement made five years previously, and after the death of one of the parties, in order that complainant might have the benefit of a certain credit, the testimony of the wife and daughter of such deceased party, from memory, as to the date of a receipt on which the credit was based, is insufficient proof of mistake to warrant a decree setting aside such settlement, where several years had elapsed since the witnesses saw such receipt, and their testimony was inconsistent as to circumstances that impressed such date on their minds.—Willett v. Fister, 85 U. S. (18 Wall.) 91, 21 L. Ed. 804.

[c] (U. S. 1846) The general veracity of witnesses to a collision should not be impeached because of their different statements of attendant incidents, as the confusion and disturbance consequent on the occurrence would naturally tend to prevent such distinct observation as would enable the eyewitnesses to give concurring descriptions.—Corks v. The Belle, Fed. Cas. No. 3,231a.

[d] (U. S. 1888) A witness may be impeached by showing that in a material matter about which he could not be mistaken his testimony was untrue.—United States v. Hughes (D. C.) 34 Fed. 732.

[e] (U. S. 1893) The testimony of a witness 77 years of age, as to an event in his boyhood of a nature to be vividly impressed upon his mind, is not discredited by the fact that his statements as to certain other events were confused, and somewhat contradictory, upon a long cross-examination, and his memory at fault as to dates.—McClaskey v. Barr (C. C.) 54 Fed. 781.

[f] (Ala. 1861) Confusion or conflict as to dates cannot affect very strongly the credibility of a witness when the events of which he was speaking transpired more than thirty years before.—Black v. Black, 38 Ala. 111.

[g] (Mich. 1894) A mistake of a month in fixing the time of the intercourse at which the child was conceived will not warrant an instruction that the jury may, by reason of it, discredit her claim that the intercourse was consented to under promise of marriage.—Badder v. Keefer, 100 Mich. 272, 58 N. W. 1007.

[h] (Miss. 1857) Where one of two witnesses, whose testimony is contradictory, is fully sustained where he testifies to facts of which other witnesses are cognizant, and the other, in many instances, upon important and material facts, is contradicted by the unimpeached testimony of other witnesses, the testimony of the latter will be disregarded, and that of the former will be entitled to credit, in determining the questions at issue between them.—Fox v. Matthews, 33 Miss. 433.

[i] (Mo. 1872) If a witness contradict himself on any material point, his testimony may be disregarded.—State v. Miller, 49 Mo. 505.

[j] (Neb. 1884) The fact that a witness made an erroneous statement as to whether or not there was a defalcation of certain moneys, which depended to a great extent upon figures and computation, does not render his evidence of no credit.—Buffalo County v. Van Sickle, 16 Neb. 363, 20 N. W. 261.

[k] (Nev. 1880) Witnesses testified that a certain note was executed and delivered August 5, 1875. The note, being produced, appeared to bear date August 5, 1878. Held, in the absence of any opportunity being given to the witnesses to explain, that this circumstance was not sufficient to authorize the court to pronounce their testimony false.—Taft v. Kyle, 15 Nev. 416.

[l] (N. Y. 1896) The mere fact that plaintiff, in an action for injuries received while a passenger on defendant's street car, made a mistake in his testimony as to the number of the car, does not necessarily impeach his testimony, so that no reliance should be placed on the residue.—Schaffer v. Second Ave. R. Co., 1 App. Div. 48, 36 N. Y. Supp. 1046.

[m] (Tex. 1847) Where a witness swore to a fact as occurring in 1821 or 1822, and it was proved to have occurred in 1823, it was held not to destroy his credibility as to other facts. —Jones v. Laney, 2 Tex. 342.

§ 1080. Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus.

[a] The whole testimony of a witness may be rejected by the jury where it is found that he has willfully testified falsely as to a material fact.

—(U. S. 1856) Wellman v. Blood, Fed. Cas. No. 17,385 [1 McArthur, Pat. Cas. 432]; (1865) Union Sugar Refinery v. Matthiesson, Fed. Cas. No. 14,399 [3 Cliff. 639, 2 Fish. Pat. Cas. 600]; (1869) United States v. Blaisdell, Fed. Cas. No. 14,608 [3 Ben. 132]; (1869) Same v. Harries, Fed. Cas. No. 15,309 [2 Bond, 311]; (1885) Mann v. Arkansas Valley Land & Cattle Co. (C. C.) 24 Fed. 261; (1887) Strauss v. Abrahams (C. C.) 32 Fed. 310;

(N. Y. 1885) People v. Petmecky, 99 N. Y. 415, 2 N. E. 145, affirming (1884) 2 N. Y. Cr. R. 450;

(Wis. 1894) Allen v. Murray, 87 Wis. 41, 57 N. W. 979.

[b] It is proper to charge that, if the jury find that a witness has intentionally testified falsely as to material matters, they may disregard his testimony altogether, instead of telling them that they must disregard it unless corroborated.

—(Cal. 1896) People v. Oldham, 111 Cal. 648, 44 Pac. 312;

(Wis. 1854) Mercer v. Wright, 3 Wis. 645.

[c] Juries are the exclusive judges of the weight of testimony, and are not obliged to reject all the testimony of a witness simply because he has testified falsely in one particular.

(Wis. 1854) Mercer v. Wright, 3 Wis. 645.

—(U. S. 1848) Giltner v. Gorham, Fed. Cas. No. 5,453 [4 McLean, 402];

(Ga. 1853) Day v. Crawford, 13 Ga. 508; (1874) Pierce v. State, 53 Ga. 365;

(N. Y. 1882) Clark v. Mechanics' Nat. Bank, 11 Daly, 239; (1888) In re Hyman, 13 N. Y. St. Rep. 136.

[e] The maxim, "Falsus in uno," etc., imports that the witness' whole testimony is to be suspected, but not necessarily rejected.

—(Cal. 1879) People v. Hicks, 53 Cal. 354; Same v. Sprague, Id. 491;

(Miss. 1878) Finley v. Hunt, 56 Miss. 221.

[ee] The rule, "Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," is to be applied by the jury according to their own judgment for the ascertainment of the truth, and is not a rule under which the judge may withdraw the evidence from the jury's consideration and direct them to disregard it.

—(N. C. 1855) State v. Williams, 47 N. C. 257;

[f] (U. S. 1856) If there be reason to suppose that the perjury or prevarication of one witness is the result of subornation, it affords a reasonable ground in a doubtful case for suspecting the testimony of other witnesses adduced by the same party.—Wellman v. Blood, Fed. Cas. No. 17,385 [1 McArthur, Pat. Cas. 432].

[g] (U. S. 1884) Where a witness falsifies a fact in respect to which he cannot be presumed liable to mistake, courts are bound, upon principles of law, morality, and justice, to apply the maxim, "Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus." —American Bell Tel. Co. v. People's Tel. Co. (C. C.) 22 Fed. 309, 22 Blatchf. 531.

[gg] (U. S. 1885) The jury are at liberty to reject the testimony of a witness as incredible, although he is not impeached or contradicted by direct evidence, where there is some intrinsic improbability in his narrative, and he has shown himself unworthy of credit by his attempt to falsify a collateral transaction involved in the suit.—Tracey v. Town of Phelps (C. C.) 22 Fed. 634, 23 Blatchf. 71.

[h] (Ala. 1879) The maxim that a witness who intentionally gives false testimony as to any material fact is to be wholly discredited is not a rule of law imperatively binding the jury, but is to be applied according to their sound judgment.—Grimes v. State, 63 Ala. 166.

[hh] (Cal. 1885) The presumption arising under Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, that "a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others," is rebuttable, and may be overcome by circumstances of which the jury are the sole judges.—White v. Disher, 67 Cal. 402, 7 Pac. 826.

[i] (Cal. 1886) Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, provides that a witness false in one part of his testimony "is to be" distrusted in others. Held, that it is error to instruct that, in such case, the jury "are at liberty" to disregard any part of such testimony.—Brown v. Griffith, 9 Pac. 425.

[ii] (Cal. 1887) An instruction that the jury might reject, wholly or in part, the testimony of a witness who had "willfully testified falsely in regard to any one person or any one particular fact in the case," was objected to on the ground that it should only have told the jury to distrust or reject the testimony of a witness who had willfully sworn falsely "as to a material point in the case." Held that, under the rule "that a witness false in one part of his testimony is to be distrusted in others" (Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3), the instruction was not erroneous.—People v. Flynn, 73 Cal. 511, 15 Pac. 102.

[jj] (Ill. 1867) Where there is no evidence tending to corroborate a witness, it is not error to instruct the jury that, if they believe, from the evidence, that the witness has willfully sworn falsely upon any material point, they may disregard his entire testimony.—Howard v. McDonald, 46 Ill. 123.

[jj] (Ill. 1871) The maxim, "Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," should be applied in all cases where the testimony of a witness is intentionally false.—United States Exp. Co. v. Hutchins, 58 Ill. 44.

[k] (Ill. 1886) The jury cannot properly be instructed that, if they believed plaintiff had sworn willfully false on any one point in the case, they may disregard the whole evidence, as the giving of such an instruction may deprive the plaintiff of the benefit of his entire evidence.—Coggins v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 18 Ill. App. (18 Bradw.) 620.

[kk] (Iowa, 1855) A requested instruction that, when a witness swears falsely as to one material fact, he is not entitled to credit, may be given with the qualification that, if the jury are satisfied that the witness has so sworn, they ought to look with suspicion and distrust on the whole of his testimony, but if they are satisfied that the witness has sworn the truth in relation to other material facts, the latter should not be discredited.—McCrary v. Crandall, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 117.

[l] (Iowa, 1855) To instruct the jury that a witness who has sworn falsely upon one material point is utterly unworthy of credit is wrong.—McCrary v. Crandall, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 117.

[ll] (Kan. 1866) The presumption that a witness will declare the truth ceases as soon as it manifestly appears that he is guilty of perjury, in a material matter in the case.—Campbell v. State, 3 Kan. 488.

[m] (Kan. 1866) In a trial for murder, if the jury believe from all the evidence that a witness has testified falsely in respect to any material fact, it is their duty to disregard the whole of her testimony.—Campbell v. State, 3 Kan. 488.

[mm] (Me. 1840) The rule that, if a witness testifies falsely as to any one material fact, the whole of his testimony must be rejected, is not of such binding effect as to authorize the court to instruct the jury that they cannot believe one part of his statement and disbelieve another. This is but a presumption of law, and cases often occur in which jurors may yield entire credit to certain statements and disbelieve others.—Lewis v. Hodgdon, 17 Me. (5 Shep.) 267.

[n] (Me. 1841) An instruction to the jury that, if they believed that one of the parties had attempted to deceive them in an important particular relative to the issue, they might take it into consideration in connection with other conflicting testimony, is not legally objectionable.—Millay v. Millay, 18 Me. (6 Shep.) 387.

[nn] (Mass. 1867) It is not an absolute rule of law that, if the jury find that a witness has willfully sworn falsely in relation to any matter material to the issue on the trial, they shall wholly disregard his testimony except in those particulars in which it is corroborated.—Commonwealth v. Billings, 97 Mass. 405.

[o] (Mich. 1880) The jury were charged that if they believed defendant had willfully sworn falsely as to any material fact, and they should be of opinion that such willful false swearing rendered the witness incredible in the whole, it would be their right to disregard his entire testimony. Held proper.—O'Rourke v. O'Rourke, 43 Mich. 58, 4 N. W. 531.

[oo] (Mich. 1888) A charge that, if a witness swears to a matter which is willfully false, then the jury is under no obligation to believe anything he says, is technically correct, and not ground for reversal.—Hillman v. Schwenk, 68 Mich. 293, 297, 36 N. W. 77, 670.

[p] (Miss. 1860) The jury on considering all the circumstances may act on or disregard the testimony of a witness, in whole or in part, as they shall deem it worthy or unworthy of belief.—George v. State, 39 Miss. 570.

[pp] (Mo. 1867) It is not error in the court to instruct the jury that, if they find that a certain witness willfully and knowingly swore falsely to any material matter in the case, they are authorized to discredit the whole of his testimony.—Paulette v. Brown, 40 Mo. 52.

[q] (Mo. 1888) Where there is a direct conflict of testimony, it is not error to instruct a jury that, if they believe that a witness has knowingly testified to a falsehood, they may disregard his entire testimony.—State v. Hickam, 95 Mo. 322, 8 S. W. 252, 6 Am. St. Rep. 54.

[qq] (Mo. 1894) Where the testimony of witnesses is wholly irreconcilable, and the credibility of some is questioned, it is not error to instruct that the jury may disregard wholly or in part the testimony of any witness who they believed had sworn falsely.—Gerdes v. Christopher & Simpson Architectural Iron & Foundry Co. (Sup.) 27 S. W. 615.

[r] (Mo. 1895) Where defendant admits that he received the money sued for, and claims that he disbursed it for plaintiff's use, but cannot remember to whom it was paid, the admission as to the receipt of the money may be accepted as true, and the evidence as to the disposition of it rejected.—Johnson v. Blell, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 291, 61 Mo. App. 37.

[rr] (Neb. 1880) In an action on a note, the defense of usury in the note and the taking of usurious interest after maturity was supported by the testimony of defendant and another, but was positively denied by plaintiff. Held, that the court was not justified in finding the taking of usurious interest after maturity, and at the same time that the note was originally free from usury, but should have applied the rule that, where a party swears falsely to a fact in respect of which he cannot be presumed liable to mistake, courts are bound to apply the maxim falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus, and to give no credit to any alleged fact depending upon his statement alone.—Dell v. Oppenheimer, 9 Neb. 454, 4 N. W. 51.

[s] (Neb. 1883) Defendant swore positively that he did not sign a mortgage in dispute, but his statement was disproved by the evidence of a number of disinterested witnesses. Held, that the jury properly disregarded his testimony in other particulars as unworthy of belief.—Gandy v. Poole, 14 Neb. 98, 15 N. W. 223.

[ss] (Neb. 1886) In a replevin suit there was no evidence before the court that any witness had sworn falsely, but the main witness for the plaintiff, before his final dismissal as such witness, made a correction and retraction of a part of his testimony. Held error on the part of the court to give in charge to the jury the maxim, "falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus."—Kay v. Noll, 20 Neb. 380, 30 N. W. 269.

[t] (N. M. 1892) The court properly instructed the jury that "if you believe from the evidence that the defendant, as a witness, * * * has willfully sworn falsely in this trial as to any matter or thing material to the issue in this case, then you are at liberty to disregard his entire testimony, except so far as it has been corroborated by other credible evidence, or by facts and circumstances proved on the trial."—Faulkner v. Territory, 6 N. M. 464, 30 Pac. 905.

[tt] (N. Y. 1848) Where a witness is discredited on one point, and makes a statement on another point, which is supported by his evidence alone, or principally, when, confessedly, there can be no one to contradict what the witness says, if untrue, and where his statement is in effect contradicted by the attending circumstances, his evidence will be considered insufficient.—Burtus v. Tisdall, 4 Barb. 571.

[u] (N. Y. 1878) A finding based solely on statements of a witness who has made false statements on other points is not erroneous, where it does not clearly appear that the witness was corrupt.—Deering v. Metcalf, 74 N. Y. 501.

[uu] (N. Y. 1880) On a trial for murder, the accused, in his own behalf, was the only person who gave direct evidence of the incidents of the homicide from having witnessed them. Held, that an instruction was proper, based on the maxim, "Falsus in uno," etc., to the effect that where a witness commits willful perjury in a part of his testimony, the whole should sometimes be rejected.—People v. Moett, 58 How. Prac. 467.

[v] (N. Y. 1886) The jury have a right to disregard the evidence of a witness who has willfully and corruptly sworn to a state of facts known to him to be untrue.—People v. Buddensieck, 4 N. Y. Cr. R. 230.

[vv] (N. Y. 1891) The willful false swearing of a witness in one particular does not absolutely discredit his entire testimony; but the whole is to be submitted to the court or jury to determine, by the ordinary tests of veracity, whether and how far they may believe him.—Smith v. Smith (Com. Pl.) 13 N. Y. Supp. 817.

[w] (N. C. 1828) The testimony of a witness who is corruptly false in any particular should be entirely disregarded by the jury; and a charge that they might reject part of the testimony which they did not believe, and act on what they did believe, is erroneous.—State v. Jim, 12 N. C. 508.

[ww] (N. C. 1860) The maxim, "Falsum in uno, falsum in omnibus," does not prevail in courts of law, the fact that a witness has sworn falsely as to one matter going to the credibility and not to the competency of his testimony as to other matters.—State v. Smith, 53 N. C. 132.

[x] (N. C.) The rule, "Falsum in uno, falsum in omnibus," does not now prevail in this state, and a jury may believe a part, all, or none of the testimony of a witness.—(1869) State v. Brantley, 63 N. C. 518; (1870) Same v. Spencer, 64 N. C. 316.

[xx] (Ohio, 1864) The testimony of a witness, clearly shown to have committed perjury in one material point of his evidence, must be wholly rejected, and cannot be relied upon for any purpose whatever.—Stoffer v. State, 15 Ohio St. 47, 86 Am. Dec. 470.

[y] (Pa. 1886) An instruction that if plaintiff is convicted of willful falsity in his testimony in any material particular, the jury should throw out his evidence, held not ground for reversal.—Sharp v. City of Erie, 4 Atl. 161.

[z] (S. C. 1887) Whether the doctrine, "Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," should be applied to the testimony of a witness, held to be entirely within the discretion of the trial judge.—James v. Mickey, 26 S. C. 270, 2 S. E. 130.

[zz] (Va. 1891) Where, in a murder trial, deceased's son testifies that he knew the hour at which the assault occurred, because he looked at a clock in the house, and his sisters testify that there was no clock, the value of his evidence is for the jury, and an instruction is properly refused declaring that, if the witness swore falsely in this respect, his whole testimony is destroyed, and should be disregarded.—Hash v. Commonwealth, 88 Va. 172, 13 S. E. 398.

[a] The whole testimony of a witness is not to be disregarded because he testified falsely as to a material fact, unless he did so knowingly and willfully.

—(Ariz. 1893) Follett v. Territory, 33 Pac. 869;
(Cal. 1866) People v. Strong, 30 Cal. 151;
(Colo. 1876) Gottlieb v. Hartman, 3 Colo. 53;
(Ill. 1861) Crabtree v. Hagenbaugh, 25 Ill. 233, 79 Am. Dec. 324; (1871) United States Exp. Co. v. Hutchins, 58 Ill. 44; (1886) Hoge v. People, 117 Ill. 35, 6 N. E. 796; (Mo. 1876) State v. Elkins, 63 Mo. 159; (1884) Same v. Lett, 85 Mo. 52; (1886) Same v. Palmer, 88 Mo. 568.

[b] The maxim, "Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," should only be applied to a willful mistatement by the witness.

—(Ill. 1871) United States Exp. Co. v. Hutchins, 58 Ill. 44; (1871) Pope v. Dodson, Id. 360; (1876) Gulliher v. People, 82 Ill. 145; (1877) Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Boger, 1 Ill. App. (1 Bradw.) 472;
(Iowa, 1868) Callanan v. Shaw, 24 Iowa, 441;
(Miss. 1884) Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. Hedrick, 62 Miss. 28;
(Neb. 1884) Buffalo Co. v. Van Sickle, 16 Neb. 363, 20 N. W. 261; (1896) Omaha & R. V. R. Co. v. Krayenbuhl, 48 Neb. 553, 67 N. W. 447.

[c] (U. S. 1848) If one portion of a witness' testimony be contradicted, but it do not appear that the witness intentionally swore falsely, the rest of his testimony is not necessarily rendered unworthy of credit by such contradiction.—Giltner v. Gorham, Fed. Cas. No. 5,453 [4 McLean, 402].

[d] (Ark. 1892) An instruction that, "if the jury find that any witness has sworn falsely to any material fact, they may, if they see proper, disregard the entire testimony of such witness," is incomplete, since false swearing discredits the entire testimony of a witness only when it is willful.—Frazier v. State, 56 Ark. 242, 19 S. W. 838.

[e] (Ill.) Because a witness makes an untrue statement it does not follow that his whole testimony is to be disregarded. The motive actuating the witness must be regarded. The maxim, "Falsus in uno," etc., should only be applied to cases where a witness willfully gives false testimony.—(1854) Brennan v. People, 15 Ill. (5 Peck) 511; (1884) Smith v. Forbes, 14 Ill. App. (14 Bradw.) 477.

[f] (Ill. 1866) An instruction that, if the jury believe a witness has testified falsely to a point material to the issue, they are at liberty to disregard his testimony, is erroneous, unless qualified by a restriction to the case of such untruth as is willful and not the result of inadvertence or want of recollection.—Yundt v. Hartrunft, 41 Ill. 10.

[g] (Ill. 1879) It is only when a witness has intentionally sworn falsely as to one matter that the jury may be instructed to reject his entire testimony, unless corroborated.—Quinn v. Rawson, 5 Ill. App. (5 Bradw.) 130.

[h] (Ill. 1886) It is of the utmost importance, in the rule of law giving the jury liberty to reject the uncorroborated testimony of a witness who has sworn falsely upon a material point that the false testimony be knowingly and willfully given. An instruction which omits this qualification is grossly erroneous.—Freeman v. Easly, 117 Ill. 317, 7 N. E. 656.

[i] (Ill. 1887) A witness should not be entirely discredited because he has made a false statement, unless he made it knowing it was false, and it was material to the issue.—Spencer v. Dougherty, 23 Ill. App. 399.

[j] (Ill. 1889) An instruction to the effect that if the jury believe that a witness has testified falsely upon any material matter they may disregard all his testimony, except as corroborated, is erroneous as treating an innocent mistake as having the same effect upon his credibility as willful perjury.—Murtaugh v. Murphy, 30 Ill. App. 59.

[k] (Ill. 1889) It is error for the court to instruct the jury that they may disregard the uncorroborated testimony of a witness, if they believe he has sworn falsely upon a material question, without specifying that they must be satisfied that the false statement was knowingly and willfully made.—Linck v. Whipple, 31 Ill. App. 155.

[l] (Ill. 1891) The testimony of a witness should not be rejected unless he has willfully sworn falsely, and his testimony is uncorroborated.—Shove v. Rowe, 42 Ill. App. 150.

[m] (Ill. 1895) It is only where it is palpable that a witness has deliberately and intentionally testified falsely as to some material matter, and is not corroborated by other evidence, that a jury is warranted in disregarding his testimony.—Hutchinson Nat. Bank v. Crow, 56 Ill. App. 558.

[n] (Ill. 1896) Although a witness may be mistaken as to some parts of his evidence, it does not follow, as a matter of law, that he has willfully told an untruth, or that the jury would have the right to reject his testimony.—Hutchinson Nat. Bank v. Crow, 56 Ill. App. 558.

[o] (Iowa, 1899) A charge that, if the jury find that a witness has made a false statement through mistake or misapprehension, his entire testimony should not be disregarded, but that, if he has intentionally sworn falsely, then it may be, is not error.—Winter v. Central Iowa Ry. Co., 80 Iowa, 443, 45 N. W. 737.

[p] (Kan. 1883) An instruction that if the jury believe a witness has sworn falsely, they may reject his testimony or any part of it, is erroneous; as, unless the testimony was willfully false, it is no ground for disregarding the entire testimony of the witness.—Barney v. Dudley, 40 Kan. 247, 19 Pac. 550.

[q] (Mich. 1882) A jury has a right to disregard the positive testimony of a witness if they are satisfied from other evidence that it is erroneous, even though they do not think it intentionally false.—Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 49 Mich. 99, 13 N. W. 374.

[r] (Mo. 1879) Upon a trial, plaintiff and defendant contradicted one another upon the main issue, and the court charged that, if any witness had testified falsely as to any material fact, the jury might discredit his testimony as to such fact. Held error.—Shenuit v. Brueggestradt, 8 Mo. App. 46.

[s] (Mo. 1887) An instruction on the doctrine of falsus in uno, etc., is in Missouri sufficient if it charge that the witness had willfully sworn falsely, the words "willfully" and "knowingly" being prescribed in the alternative in such cases.—State v. Beaucleigh, 92 Mo. 490, 4 S. W. 666.

[t] (Mo. 1888) It is proper to refuse to instruct that, if the jury believe that any witness has sworn falsely concerning any material fact, they may disregard the whole or any part of his testimony, the qualification that such false swearing was willfully or intentionally done being omitted.—Blitt v. Heinrich, 33 Mo. App. 243.

[u] (Mo. 1890) Where there is an irreconcilable conflict in the testimony, and the veracity of witnesses is impeached, and evidence of contradictory statements is offered, it is proper to instruct as to the credibility of witnesses, but it is error to charge that, "if any witness has made any willfully false statement, they may disregard the whole of said witness' testimony," without limiting it to "willfully false statements," made under oath, of some fact material to the issue in the case.—State v. Buchler, 103 Mo. 203, 15 S. W. 331, distinguishing State v. Jones (1885) 86 Mo. 623.

[v] (Mont. 1892) An instruction that if the testimony of a witness has been given under the influence of ill-will towards a party, and any portion of it is untrue as to any material fact, it may be entirely disregarded, is erroneous, in failing to state that it must be knowingly and willfully untrue, especially where there is nothing to show that the witness was actuated by ill-will, but only that he was not friendly.—Bonnie v. Earll, 12 Mont. 239, 29 Pac. 882.

[w] (N. M. 1895) It is error to instruct that, if the jury believe that any witness has testified falsely, they may disregard all the testimony of such witness, unless it is corroborated by other credible evidence, as it omits the element that the testimony must have been willfully false.—Pacific Gold Co. v. Skillicorn, 8 N. M. 8, 41 Pac. 533.

[x] (N. Y. 1875) The jury are not bound to disregard the testimony of a witness on all points because of false testimony on one material point, if it be a point on which the witness might be mistaken or deceived.—Koehucke v. Ross, 16 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 345.

[y] (N. D. 1895) The testimony of a witness who testified falsely as to a material fact in the case could not be wholly disregarded by the jury, unless they believed that he so testified intentionally.—McPherrin v. Jones, 5 N. D. 261, 65 N. W. 685.

[z] (Wash. 1892) An instruction that, if the jury disbelieve the testimony of any witness in regard to any material matter, they shall disregard all his evidence, is properly refused. The jury must believe the testimony to be willfully false.—State v. Freidrich, 4 Wash. 204, 29 Pac. 1055, 30 Pac. 328, 31 Pac. 332.

[a] (U. S. 1853) Mistake by a witness in an immaterial fact should not discredit him. The maxim, "Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," only applies where there is willful, corrupt falsehood, in one particular, amounting to perjury.—Marshall v. Mee, Fed. Cas. No. 9,129 [1 MacArthur, Pat. Cas. 229].

[b] (D. C. 1879) A witness who, upon a trial, testifies falsely in regard to a matter, the truth of which he must have known, although the fact is immaterial, is to be disbelieved, and his evidence disregarded in every particular.—Huber v. Teuber, 3 MacArthur, 484, 36 Am. Rep. 110.

[c] (Ga. 1857) Where a witness swears willfully and knowingly false, even to a collateral fact, his testimony should be entirely rejected, unless it be so corroborated by circumstances or other unimpeachable evidence as to be irresistible.—Ivey v. State, 23 Ga. 576.

[d] (Ill. 1861) Where a witness contradicts himself in regard to an immaterial matter, such contradiction alone will not render his testimony unworthy of credit.—Crabtree v. Hagenbaugh, 25 Ill. 233, 79 Am. Dec. 324.

[e] (Ill. 1886) The principle that, if the jury believe from the evidence that a witness has willfully sworn falsely in the case, they are at liberty to disregard his testimony except so far as corroborated by other credible evidence in the case, is subject to the essential qualification that such knowingly false testimony must have been to matters material to the issue.—Dacey v. People, 116 Ill. 555, 6 N. E. 165.

[f] (Mo. 1893) A jury may not disregard the evidence of a witness on the ground that they believe he has willfully sworn falsely, unless the false swearing was in regard to a material fact.—White v. Lowenberg, 55 Mo. App. 69.

[g] (N. Y. 1892) In an action against a husband for divorce on the ground of adultery, it appeared that the parties were living apart, and that for some time before the action was brought defendant had living with him, as the only other member of his household, an unmarried woman of about his age, in the ostensible relation of housekeeper and domestic servant. The only additional evidence tending to support the charge of adultery was the testimony of four men, entire strangers to defendant, who gained access to his house at night under shallow and absurd pretenses. They swore that their visits had no reference to an action for divorce, and did not know that such an action was contemplated. Held, that the referee, if convinced that such witnesses testified falsely as to their pretenses for such visits, had a right to reject the whole of their testimony as unworthy of credit.—Welke v. Welke, 63 Hun, 625, 17 N. Y. Supp. 298.

[h] (Wis. 1895) An instruction that, if the jury believe that any witness has told an untruth, they may reject his entire testimony, must be confined to an untruth as to a material fact.—Schmitt v. Milwaukee St. Ry. Co., 89 Wis. 195, 61 N. W. 834.

[a] (U. S. 1822) If a witness upon his cross-examination has sworn falsely, in the opinion of the jury, upon an immaterial point, it is competent for them to give their verdict upon his testimony in chief upon other points, corroborated by other testimony.—Turner v. Foxall, Fed. Cas. No. 14,255 [2 Cranch, C. C. 324].

[b] (Ga. 1857) If a witness is shown to have willfully and corruptly sworn falsely as to a leading fact about which there could be no unintentional error, the mere fact that her evidence is corroborated in some other immaterial points will not restore her credibility.—Smith v. State, 23 Ga. 297.

[bb] (Ga. 1857) A witness may be discredited as to a particular fact, and yet believed as to others, provided he be sustained by corroborating proof.—Richardson v. Roberts, 23 Ga. 215.

[c] (Ga. 1877) A jury need not discard all the testimony of a corrupt witness, when he is satisfactorily corroborated on material points by circumstances or by other unimpeached evidence.—Skipper v. State, 59 Ga. 63.

[d] (Ill. 1864) The testimony of a witness swearing falsely in one particular may be believed upon other points, if corroborated.—Meixsell v. Williamson, 35 Ill. 529.

[e] (Ill. 1865) It is error to tell the jury that, if a witness has sworn falsely in one particular, his whole testimony must be rejected; for he may, in other portions of his testimony, be corroborated.—Blanchard v. Pratt, 37 Ill. 243.

[f] (Ill. 1877) An instruction that testimony of any witness who has willfully sworn falsely may be disbelieved unless corroborated by other unimpeached witnesses is erroneous unless qualified by the words "or by circumstances in evidence."—Angelo v. Faul, 85 Ill. 106.

[g] (Ill. 1880) An instruction that the entire testimony of a witness may be disregarded if he has willfully and knowingly sworn falsely as to any material point is erroneous without the qualification as to his being uncorroborated by other testimony.—Goeing v. Outhouse, 95 Ill. 346.

[h] (Ill. 1880) But where the point was as to a certain conversation, and the only corroborating evidence was that of the witness' son 12 years old, who, when the conversation took place, was but 9 years old, held, that the inaccuracy of the instruction was not a sufficient ground for reversal.—Goeing v. Outhouse, 95 Ill. 346.

[i] (Iowa, 1879) It is not error to modify an instruction that, if the jury believe that plaintiff has willfully testified falsely as to any material fact, they would be authorized in rejecting all his testimony, by adding, "unless corroborated by other credible evidence."—Brown v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 51 Iowa, 235, 1 N. W. 487.

[j] (Mich. 1867) Where a witness has sworn willfully false in anything material, such testimony will seriously affect all the witness has sworn to, and no credit should be given to any fact depending on his statement alone, but when corroborated by proof it may receive such credit as it appears to the jury to deserve.—Knowles v. People, 15 Mich. 408.

[k] (Mo. 1877) Where a witness has willfully sworn falsely as to a material fact, the jury are at liberty to disregard his entire testimony, including that part which has been corroborated by other witnesses.—Brown v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 66 Mo. 588.

[l] (N. Y. 1893) The testimony of a witness who is found to have intentionally sworn falsely on a material issue in the action is of no legal force or effect as to another matter, in respect of which he is contradicted, and is not sustained by corroborative evidence; and a judgment resting on such testimony alone will be reversed as wholly without evidence.—Morgenthau v. Walker (Com. Pl.) 2 Misc. Rep. 245, 21 N. Y. Supp. 936.

3. EVIDENCE TO CORROBORATE OR SUSTAIN UNIMPEACHED WITNESS.

IN GENERAL, § 1084.
CORROBORATION OF UNIMPEACHED OR UNCONTRADICTED WITNESS, § 1085.
EVIDENCE OF GOOD CHARACTER OF UNIMPEACHED WITNESS, § 1086.

Corroboration of witness in general, see post, §§ 1284–1289.

[a] (Ala. 1882) Evidence is not admissible to sustain the credibility of a witness whose testimony was not sought to be impeached.—Moon's Adm'r v. Crowder, 72 Ala. 79.

[b] (Ga. 1859) A party cannot introduce evidence to support the testimony of his own witness before he is attacked, either for want of character, or because he has made contradictory statements.—Hamilton v. Conyers, 28 Ga. 276.

[c] (Mass. 1882) If, in any event, one of two defendants can be allowed to testify that he is pecuniarily irresponsible, in order that greater value may be attached to his testimony, he cannot so testify before his credibility has been attacked.—Bryant v. Tidgewell, 133 Mass. 86.

[d] (N. Y. 1877) Where, in an action on a fire policy, defendant's secretary is called to contradict the testimony of plaintiff that such officer had waived a condition of the policy, he cannot, for the purpose of fortifying his testimony, be asked general questions touching the extent of his powers, unless he has been directly or indirectly impeached.—Adams v. Greenwich Ins. Co., 70 N. Y. 166.

[a] (U. S. 1893) Testimony by a physician, who made an autopsy, that he examined the stomach of deceased for traces of alcohol, may be corroborated by showing that it had been intimated to him that deceased had been drinking that day, as it amounted to no more than asking the witness what was the purpose and scope of his investigation.—Manufacturers' Acc. Indemnity Co. v. Dorgan, 58 Fed. 945, 7 C. C. A. 581, 16 U. S. App. 290.

[b] (Iowa, 1865) Evidence to corroborate a witness may be excluded if his testimony has not been attacked in any manner.—State v. Rorabacher, 19 Iowa, 154.

[c] (La. 1842) Where a witness is illiterate, or his testimony seems extraordinary, it may be sustained, though he be unimpeached, by showing that he made the same statements at the time of the transaction.—Pilié v. Kenner, 2 Rob. 95.

[d] (Mich. 1882) A witness has no power to produce corroborating testimony, and his failure to do so cannot be used against the party for whom he testifies.—People v. Lyons, 49 Mich. 78, 13 N. W. 365.

[e] (N. Y. 1826) Evidence is inadmissible to support a witness' testimony, by showing the consistency between his former declarations and his testimony on the trial, unless he is first impeached.—Jackson v. Etz, 5 Cow. 314.

[f] (Or. 1885) After a state's witness, on a trial for forgery, has testified that the signature apparently his, and alleged to be forged, is not his, he cannot be recalled to write his name for purposes of comparison, as he could not be allowed to demonstrate on his direct examination that he had told the truth.—State v. Lurch, 12 Or. 99, 6 Pac. 408.

[g] (Pa. 1866) Where a pardoned convict has testified, in a criminal trial, to communications in the penitentiary between the prisoners and others, corroborating evidence by himself that he had shown visitors how communication between the cells was possible was admissible, though there had been no formal attempt to impeach him.—Howser v. Commonwealth, 51 Pa. (1 P. F. Smith) 332.

—(Cal. 1884) People v. Bush, 65 Cal. 129, 3 Pac. 590;

(Ind. 1884) Fitzgerald v. Goff, 99 Ind. 28;

(N. Y. 1852) People v. Gay, 7 N. Y. (3 Seld.) 378; (1885) People v. Van Houter, 38 Hun, 168;

(Pa. 1839) Braddee v. Brownfield, 9 Watts, 124; (1853) Werts v. May, 21 Pa. (9 Harris) 274.

[b] (Conn. 1830) The person injured and the principal witness in a prosecution for an attempt to commit a rape was deaf and dumb. The public prosecutor offered evidence to prove that her general character for truth was good. Held, that such evidence was admissible, though no impeachment of her character had been attempted.—State v. DeWolf, 8 Conn. 93, 20 Am. Dec. 90.

[c] (Conn. 1850) Though by the general rule, a witness cannot be supported by evidence of his general character as to truth except after a general impeachment of it, yet where the witness is in the situation of a stranger, such evidence is admissible without such previous impeachment.—Merriam v. Hartford and New Haven Railroad Co., 20 Conn. 354, 52 Am. Dec. 344.

[e] (Ind. 1863) In a criminal trial upon indictment, after the state has introduced its testimony, and the defendant has introduced his, but has not attempted to impeach the witnesses produced by the state, it would be error to allow the state to introduce testimony as to the general moral character, or standing for integrity, of its witnesses. The character of a witness is presumed to be good until impeached. —Johnson v. State, 21 Ind. 329.

[f] (Ind. 1882) Evidence of the good character for veracity of a witness whose character has not been attacked is inadmissible.—Brann v. Campbell, 86 Ind. 516.

[g] (Mo. 1880) Where defendant has testified as a witness, evidence in support of his character for truth and veracity, before testimony has been offered to impeach such character, should be excluded.—State v. Cooper, 71 Mo. 436.

[h] (N. Y. 1852) Evidence cannot be given of the good character of a witness, until evidence, either on direct or cross-examination, has been given, on the other side, tending to impeach it. —People v. Gay, 7 N. Y. (3 Seld.) 378.

[i] (Or. 1894) Evidence to show plaintiff's reputation for truth is not admissible where such reputation has not been attacked.—Osmun v. Winters, 25 Or. 260, 35 Pac. 250.

[j] (Tex. 1885) Attacks in the argument of counsel on a witness' veracity do not justify the admission of testimony to sustain his reputation for truth and veracity.—Ricks v. State, 19 Tex. App. 308.

4. RIGHT TO IMPEACH OR DISCREDIT WITNESS IN GENERAL.

NATURE OF TESTIMONY, § 1088.
WITNESSES WHOSE TESTIMONY MAY BE DISCREDITED, § 1089.
—— ABSENT WITNESS AND STIPULATION AS TO TESTIMONY, § 1090.
—— PARTY TO ACTION, § 1091.
—— ACCUSED IN CRIMINAL CAUSE, § 1092.
TIME FOR IMPEACHMENT, § 1093.

[a] (La. 1893) In a criminal trial, where the state places a particular witness for the first time on the stand, by permission of the court, after the parties have closed their case, to rebut the testimony of a witness for defendant, defendant may impeach him.—State v. Spencer, 45 La. Ann. 1, 12 South. 135.

§ 1088. Nature of testimony.

[a] (Ind. 1884) A witness called by defendant in a bastardy suit to testify that the witness had had connection with plaintiff denied such connection. Held, that he had not testified to anything prejudicial to defendant which would allow the latter to impeach him.—Hull v. State, 93 Ind. 128.

[b] (Ky. 1893) A witness who has testified in the case may be impeached, whether his evidence was material or not.—Davis v. Commonwealth, 95 Ky. 19, 23 S. W. 585, 44 Am. St. Rep. 201.

[c] (La. 1884) Evidence offered in a criminal case merely to impeach the credibility of a witness who testified that he did not recollect whether he had or had not done a particular act was inadmissible.—State v. Chevallier, 36 La. Ann. 81.

[d] (N. C. 1806) A party may discredit a witness introduced by the opposite party, though a distinct fact has been proved by the witness in favor of the party attempting to discredit the witness.—Sawrey v. Murrell, 3 N. C. 397.

[e] (R. I. 1893) On a trial for burglary, a witness for defendant, who was not an expert in diamonds, offered to show the jury diamonds very similar to those which the state's witnesses had identified as the stolen property. Held, that the court properly refused to have the stones go to the jury, since, to discredit the state's witnesses, defendant should have presented the stones to them when on the stand, in order to test their power to distinguish between the stones presented by the state and those offered by defendant.—State v. Ellwood, 18 R. I. 234, 26 Atl. 190.

Impeachment of impeaching witness, see post, § 1174.

Witness who may be impeached as to character, see post, §§ 1111–1113.

[a] (Ga. 1885) Where defendant, on trial for wife beating, uses his wife as a witness, her credit may be impeached under the rules applicable to witnesses generally.—Memmler v. State, 75 Ga. 576.

[b] (Ky. 1883) When the evidence of an accomplice has been corroborated, he may be impeached in the same manner as any other witness.—Craft v. Commonwealth, 81 Ky. 250, 50 Am. Rep. 160.

Contradiction, see post, § 1271.

Inconsistent statements, see post, § 1213.

[a] (Ala. 1890) Where a negro is on trial for a crime, and the state admits that absent witnesses will testify to certain circumstances stated, the state cannot afterwards ask a witness whether such absent witnesses are black or white.—Fonville v. State, 91 Ala. 89, 8 South. 688.

[b] (Cal. 1893) Where a murder case had been previously tried three times, and the parties stipulated to use the evidence of one of defendant's witnesses, as given at the last trial, it was not error to exclude evidence given at the first trial, when offered by defendant to impeach such witness.—People v. Hawes, 98 Cal. 648, 33 Pac. 791.

[c] (Ill. 1892) Where, to avoid a continuance applied for on the ground of an absent witness, a party admits that the absent witness would testify as alleged, a letter from such witness is not admissible to impeach his testimony.—North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Cottingham, 44 Ill. App. 46.

[d] (Ky. 1889) When accused himself has testified, the fact that he has sworn to an affidavit, that an absent witness would testify to certain facts, which the prosecution has admitted to be true, does not preclude the prosecution from impeaching his testimony, on the ground that it would be contradicting what it has admitted to be true.—Pace v. Commonwealth, 89 Ky. 204, 12 S. W. 271.

[e] (Mont. 1890) Where, in order to avoid a continuance for the purpose of taking depositions, a party admits that the witnesses would testify to the facts desired to be proved by them, he may reserve the right to impeach their testimony.—State v. Gibbs, 10 Mont. 212, 25 Pac. 289.

[f] (Tex. 1860) Evidence is inadmissible merely to impeach the credit of a deponent who is not present in court to explain the contradiction.—Weir v. McGee, 25 Tex. Supp. 20.

Impeachment as to character, see post, § 1112.

[a] (Ill. 1871) Where suit is brought in the names of two parties for the use of one of them, and the party having no interest testifies against his coplaintiff, it is competent to impeach him by other witnesses.—Carey v. Henderson, 61 Ill. 378.

§ 1092. —— Accused in criminal cause.

Cross-examination of accused in general, see post, § 1106 [f].

Impeachment as to character, see post, § 1113.

[a] (U. S. 1889) Where a defendant in a criminal case becomes a witness for himself, under Act Cong. March 16, 1878, making him a "competent" witness, his credibility may be impeached.—United States v. Brown (D. C.) 40 Fed. 457.

[b] (Ala. 1895) A defendant who testifies in his own behalf subjects himself to impeachment as any other witness.—Buchanan v. State, 109 Ala. 7, 19 South. 410.

[c] (Ga. 1883) Where two defendants charged with a crime agree to be tried jointly, with the right to each to testify in behalf of the other, as if tried separately, each can be impeached as a witness for the other.—McGruder v. State, 71 Ga. 864.

[d] (Iowa, 1877) An accused examined for his codefendant is liable to impeachment as though he were not himself upon trial.—State v. Hardin, 46 Iowa, 623.

[e] (Iowa, 1886) Where the defendant testifies in his own behalf, he may be impeached or contradicted in the same manner as any other witness, and is not entitled to notice of the state's intention.—State v. Teeter, 69 Iowa, 717, 27 N. W. 485.

[f] (Mo. 1886) On indictment for a crime, where the defendant offers himself as a witness, he may be impeached as any other witness, except that on his cross-examination he can only be questioned as to such matters as he testified to in his examination in chief.—State v. Bulla, 89 Mo. 595, 1 S. W. 764.

[g] (Mo. 1887) If defendant in a criminal case becomes a witness in his own behalf he may be impeached as may other witnesses.—State v. Beaty, 25 Mo. App. 214.

[h] (N. Y. 1870) Where a prisoner on trial for felony avails himself of the privilege granted by Laws 1869, c. 678, of testifying as a witness in his own favor, he may be impeached the same as any other witness.—Burdick v. People, 58 Barb. 51.

[i] (N. C. 1895) Where, on trial of four persons for an affray, three of them have testified, and the fourth, who was their antagonist, is called in his own behalf, his codefendants have the same right to impeach him as though he were a state's witness.—State v. Goff, 117 N. C. 755, 23 S. E. 355.

[a] (Mich. 1880) Testimony to impeach a person not yet sworn is inadmissible.—People v. Whitson, 43 Mich. 419, 5 N. W. 454.

[aa] (Miss. 1866) The credit of a witness cannot be impeached before his testimony has been offered.—Mullins v. Cottrell, 41 Miss. 291.

[b] (N. Y. 1817) The credit of a witness cannot be impeached after hearing and decree.—Livingston v. Hubbs, 3 Johns. Ch. 124.

5. IMPEACHMENT OF ONE'S OWN WITNESS.

IN GENERAL, § 1094.
WITNESS WHOM PARTY IS COMPELLED TO CALL, § 1095.
WITNESS HOSTILE TO PARTY, § 1096.
PARTY CALLED AS WITNESS BY ADVERSARY, § 1097.
WITNESS CROSS-EXAMINED AS TO MATTER NOT SUBJECT OF DIRECT EXAMINATION, § 1098.
DEPOSITION TAKEN OR WITNESS CALLED BY ONE PARTY, AND INTRODUCED BY ADVERSARY, § 1099.
WITNESS FOR BOTH PARTIES, § 1100.

Contradiction of testimony, see post, §§ 1268–1270.
Inconsistent statements, see post, §§ 1214–1219.
Interest or bias, see post, § 1178.

[a] A party voluntarily putting a witness upon a stand to testify in his own behalf is thereby estopped from assailing his general character for truth and veracity, or from impeaching him.

—(Ill. 1865) Rockwood v. Poundstone, 38 Ill. 199;
(Iowa, 1866) Thorn v. Moore, 21 Iowa, 285.

—(Me. 1846) Brown v. Osgood, 25 Me. (12 Shep.) 505;
(N. C. 1845) Shelton v. Hampton, 28 N. C. 216.

[c] A party cannot impeach his own witness.

—(Ala. 1858) Griffin v. Wall, 32 Ala. 149;
(N. Y. 1830) Lawrence v. Barker, 5 Wend. 301; (1867) People v. Skeehan, 49 Barb. 217; (1891) Thalheimer v. Klapetzy, 59 Hun, 619, 12 N. Y. Supp. 941;

[d] (U. S. 1829) A party cannot discredit his own witness by testimony as to his general character.—United States v. Watkins, Fed. Cas. No. 16,649 [3 Cranch, C. C. 441].

[e] (U. S. 1834) Upon the trial of an indictment for keeping a house of ill fame, the prosecution will not be permitted to prove that its own witness is a woman of ill fame.—United States v. McDowell, Fed. Cas. No. 15,671 [4 Cranch, C. C. 423].

[f] (U. S. 1880) Where a party who assails a conveyance from husband to wife, as made in fraud of creditors, calls the husband and wife as witnesses, and afterwards reads their depositions in court, he thereby vouches for their credibility, and cannot be heard, in argument, to question their veracity.—Tarsney v. Turner (C. C.) 48 Fed. 818.

[g] (Ala. 1829) A party cannot ask his own witness questions tending to show him incompetent or unworthy of credit, nor can he examine other witnesses to prove him incompetent or unworthy of credit.—Winston v. Moseley, 2 Stew. 137.

[h] (Ala. 1858) Where the answer of the garnishee is adduced in evidence by the contesting plaintiff, he cannot discredit it in a request for instructions to the jury, since such answer having been made evidence by the act of plaintiff, it was not permissible for him to discredit such evidence.—Price v. Mazange, 31 Ala. 701.

[i] (Ark. 1884) The state, in a criminal proceeding, may not impeach its own witness.—Carr v. State, 43 Ark. 99.

[j] (Cal. 1855) Where the defendant called a witness, who testified that in making a contract, now the subject of litigation, he was conscious, and recollected what he did, and was capable of doing business, it was held he could not introduce evidence of the witness' insanity at that time.—Montgomery v. Hunt, 5 Cal. 366.

[k] (Ga. 1874) A party cannot discredit his own witness, unless it is shown that he was entrapped to introduce the witness by statements made by him contradictory to those he has testified to.—McDaniel v. State, 53 Ga. 253.

[l] (Ind. 1860) The Criminal Code has not changed the common-law rule that the state cannot impeach its own witness.—Quinn v. State, 14 Ind. 589.

[m] (Ind. 1895) A witness cannot be impeached by the party calling him, unless he testifies to some matter prejudicial to such party. It is not enough that witness merely fails to testify to facts sought to be proven by him.—Blough v. Parry, 144 Ind. 463, 40 N. E. 70, 43 N. E. 560.

[n] (Iowa, 1888) On trial of a pharmacist for the unlawful sale of liquor, the state is not bound by a statement of its witness that he purchased the liquor for medicinal purposes, but may inquire of him how many times he was sick, the nature of his ailments, when he made the purchases, etc., to show that the alleged object of the purchase was a mere pretense, and that defendant knew that fact.—State v. Cummins, 76 Iowa, 133, 40 N. W. 124.

[nn] (Kan. 1886) The question as to whether a party may impeach his own witness is largely within the sound judicial discretion of the trial court; and a slight error in such a matter, where the testimony of the witness is of small importance, is not ground for reversal.—St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Weaver, 35 Kan. 412, 11 Pac. 408, 57 Am. Rep. 176.

[o] (Kan. 1894) In a criminal case the state cannot impeach the general character for truth and veracity of one of its own witnesses.—State v. Keefe, 54 Kan. 197, 38 Pac. 302.

[oo] (La. 1895) The state cannot impeach its own witness by asking irrelevant questions, the object of which is to discredit the witness' testimony.—State v. Vickers, 47 La. Ann. 1574, 18 South. 639.

[p] (Md. 1829) A party will not be permitted to take testimony to discredit his own witness.—Winder v. Diffenderffer, 2 Bland, 166.

[pp] (Mass. 1834) It is not competent for a party, calling the subscribing witness for the purpose of proving the execution of a deed, to impeach his general character for truth.—Whitaker v. Salisbury, 32 Mass. (15 Pick.) 534.

[q] (Mich. 1889) In an action for injuries occasioned by defendant's negligence, in which plaintiff testified, her counsel, for the purpose of showing that her memory was defective, introduced a witness who was allowed to relate a conversation had with her, after her examination, concerning what she had testified to. Held, that this testimony was inadmissible.—Dundas v. City of Lansing, 75 Mich. 499, 42 N. W. 1011, 13 Am. St. Rep. 457, 5 L. R. A. 143.

[qq] (Miss. 1881) Where circumstances suggest the presumption that the party introducing a witness knows that his testimony will not be in accordance with his representations, evidence of surprise is necessary, before such witness may be impeached by the party calling him.—Moore v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co., 59 Miss. 243.

[r] (Mo. 1885) One cannot impeach his own witness unless he has been entrapped into offering him, or there is some imposition or surprise.—Dunn v. Dunnaker, 87 Mo. 597.

[s] (N. Y. 1860) The mere fact that the witness testified differently from what the party expected is not a sufficient reason for discrediting him.—Sanches v. People, 22 N. Y. 147.

[ss] (N. Y. 1873) Where a party calling a witness is surprised by testimony contrary to his expectations, he cannot put questions to him the sole effect of an affirmative answer to which will be to discredit the witness.—Bullard v. Pearsall, 53 N. Y. 230.

[t] (N. Y. 1873) There is no exception to the rule that a party cannot impeach his own witness. As far as he can go is to show the witness to be mistaken or that the facts are different from the version the witness gives of them.—Sisson v. Conger, 1 Thomp. & C. 564.

[tt] (N. Y. 1877) Where, in an action for divorce on the ground of adultery, plaintiff calls as a witness the alleged paramour of defendant, plaintiff cannot assert that such witness is unworthy of belief.—Pollock v. Pollock, 71 N. Y. 137.

[u] (N. Y. 1887) A party is not bound by all the statements of a witness called by him, if adverse, even though no other witnesses are called to contradict him, but may rely, for making out a case, upon part of his testimony, although, in other parts, the witness denies the fact sought to be proved, and attempts to explain away the inference sought to be drawn from his previous statements.—Becker v. Koch, 104 N. Y. 394, 10 N. E. 701, 58 Am. Rep. 515.

[uu] (N. C. 1880) The general rule which forbids one to impeach the veracity of his own witness, and only allows evidence that the facts were otherwise than as testified by such witness, applies to examinations under Code, §§ 332–340, preliminary to trial of persons immediately interested in the action.—Strudwick v. Brodnax, 83 N. C. 401.

[v] (Ohio, 1880) A witness cannot be impeached on the ground of surprise by the party calling him if the witness does not testify adversely to him, but merely fails to give testimony as expected.—Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Schmidt, 6 Ohio Dec. 901.

[vv] (Pa. 1891) When, by the testimony of a witness called by plaintiff, the case of plaintiff is sworn away, he is bound by it, and there is nothing to go to the jury, as plaintiff cannot ask credit for him in one part of his testimony, and deny it to him in another.—Guinney v. Hand (Com. Pl.) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 67.

[w] (S. C. 1839) The rule that a party shall not discredit his own witness, being for the protection of the witness himself, cannot be waived by agreement of the parties to the action.—Farr v. Thompson, Cheves, 37.

[x] (Tex. 1882) Where a state witness testified that certain cattle, among which was the cow, the subject of the prosecution, were seen by him at a time earlier than the state claimed they could have been, held, that the testimony was injurious to the state, and the witness could therefore be impeached.—Tyler v. State, 13 Tex. App. 205.

[xx] (Tex. 1887) Defendant was being tried for larceny of a heifer. The state's witness testified on main examination: "I never heard defendant say anything about the Sparks yearling." In order to impeach this testimony the witness was asked by the state whether he had ever stated to counsel for prosecution "that defendant had tried to hire him (witness) to go before the grand jury, and testify for him in this cause, and that he had offered to hire him to testify before the jury, and that he was so drunk when before the grand jury that he did not know what he then swore." Held, that the attempt to impeach the witness was not authorized by Code Cr. Proc. art. 755.—Bennett v. State, 24 Tex. App. 73, 5 S. W. 527, 5 Am. St. Rep. 875.

[y] (Tex. 1887) Before one's own witness can be impeached under Code Cr. Proc. art. 755, it must appear not only that the witness has testified differently from what was anticipated but also that his testimony is injurious to the party calling him.—Bennett v. State, 24 Tex. App. 73, 5 S. W. 527, 5 Am. St. Rep. 875.

[yy] (Tex. 1888) The state may impeach its own witness testifying unfavorably, but the court should charge that such testimony can be considered only as affecting the credit of the witness.—Williams v. State, 25 Tex. App. 76, 7 S. W. 661.

[z] (Tex. 1895) Code Cr. Proc. art. 755, providing that a party introducing a witness may attack his testimony when facts stated by the witness are injurious to his cause, does not authorize the state to attack a witness called by it, who does not testify to any facts injurious to it, but simply fails to make out its case.—Gibson v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 471.

[zz] (Wyo. 1879) Where a party's witness has established a fact, the party cannot request that it be left to the jury to find against his evidence that there was no such fact, as a party cannot complain that he is held to the effect of the evidence which he vouched for by producing the witness who gives it.—Fillmore v. Union Pac. R. Co., 2 Wyo. 94.

[a] (Ind. 1892) An indispensable witness, within Rev. St. 1881, § 507, providing that a party producing a witness shall not be allowed to impeach his credit by evidence of bad character unless it was indispensable that the party should produce him, etc., is one whom a party is compelled to produce to satisfy the requirements of the law.—Diffenderfer v. Scott, 5 Ind. App. 243, 32 N. E. 87.

[b] (Me. 1840) The rule that a party cannot discredit his own witness does not apply to those cases where the party is under the necessity of calling the subscribing witnesses to an instrument.—Dennett v. Dow, 17 Me. (5 Shep.) 19.

[c] (N. H. 1885) The common-law rule forbidding a party to discredit his own witness has no application when the party, by legal intendment, has no choice, as in the case of an attesting witness.—Whitman v. Morey, 63 N. H. 448, 2 Atl. 899.

[d] (N. J. 1862) The rule is by no means well settled that because a party cannot avoid making an individual his witness, as in case of a subscribing witness, he is, therefore, at liberty to impeach his veracity. The authorities are in conflict upon this subject.—Brown v. Bulkley, 14 N. J. Eq. (1 McCart.) 294.

[e] (Pa. 1849) A party who has been obliged to examine the subscribing witnesses to a deed for the sole purpose of complying with the legal necessity of this formal proof of his execution may impeach the credibility of such witness by general evidence when he has been subsequently called and examined in chief by the other party in relation wholly to other matters than those connected with the execution of such deed.—Hart v. Burns, 4 Clark, 337.

[f] (S. C. 1846) Where a party is bound to produce a subscribing witness, if his testimony tends to invalidate the instrument, the party may impeach him, and show, by other testimony, the validity of the instrument.—Williams v. Walker, 2 Rich. Eq. 291, 46 Am. Dec. 53.

[a] (Fla. 1891) Whether or not a witness has proved adverse to the party producing him, so as to permit his impeachment under McClel. Dig. p. 518, § 26, is a question as to which a large discretion is necessarily reposed in the trial judge; and where the record on appeal does not clearly show that his refusal to permit the impeachment was erroneous, his ruling will not be disturbed.—Williams v. Dickenson, 28 Fla. 90, 9 South. 847.

[b] (Fla. 1894) Under Rev. St. § 1101, permitting a party producing a witness to impeach him when he proves adverse, a witness cannot be impeached who simply fails to testify to beneficial facts that were expected from him, but he must become adverse by giving evidence that is prejudicial to the cause of the party producing him.—Adams v. State, 34 Fla. 185, 15 South. 905.

[c] (N. Y. 1882) It is competent to show that a witness is hostile to the party to the suit against whom he has testified, and this may be shown by the witness himself or otherwise.—Schultz v. Third Ave. R. Co., 89 N. Y. 242, reversing (1880) 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. (14 Jones & S.) 211.

[d] (N. Y. 1889) Where a witness called by the people states that what he testified before the grand jury was untrue, the people may cross-examine him as to the details of his testimony before the grand jury, and may show to the court the grand jury's minutes, to show that the witness is an unwilling one.—People v. Ricker, 51 Hun, 643, 7 N. Y. Cr. R. 19, 4 N. Y. Supp. 70, judgment affirmed (1889) 115 N. Y. 668, 22 N. E. 1126.

Inconsistent statements, see post, § 1215.

[a] (U. S. 1889) As Rev. St. § 914, providing that the practice, etc., in federal courts shall conform as near as may be to that in state courts in like causes, expressly excepts equity causes, where plaintiffs read in evidence, in a suit in equity in the federal courts, depositions of defendants, they make defendants their own witnesses, and cannot contend that they are unworthy of credit, though the depositions were taken "as under cross-examination," under a state statute (1 Brightly, Purd. Dig. Pa. p. 728) providing that a party to any civil proceeding may be examined "as if under cross-examination," at the instance of the adverse party, "but the party calling for such examination shall not be concluded thereby."—Dravo v. Fabel, 132 U. S. 487, 10 Sup. Ct. 170, 33 L. Ed. 421.

[b] (U. S. 1885) A party who has voluntarily put his adversary on the witness stand cannot insist that his testimony be ignored if it happen to disappoint him. It is competent testimony in the case, and, unless self-contradictory or inherently improbable, it must prevail in the absence of countervailing evidence.—Dravo v. Fabel (D. C.) 25 Fed. 116.

[c] (U. S. 1887) Where a party is called as a witness by the opposite party, the latter is not bound by his general statement as to his motives or intentions in a particular transaction, but may draw any inference from his testimony which the facts stated by the witness seem to justify.—McLean v. Clark (C. C.) 31 Fed. 501.

[d] (U. S. 1892) A complainant who has called defendants as his witnesses is bound by what they say, and cannot ask the court to disbelieve them, or to infer that they have testified falsely.—Graves v. Davenport (D. C.) 50 Fed. 881.

[e] (Ala. 1874) Where a party takes the deposition of his adversary as a witness and reads it in evidence on the trial, he thereby makes him his witness, and cannot afterwards impeach his general character for truth and veracity.—Warren v. Gabriel, 51 Ala. 285.

[f] (Ark. 1854) When a party makes his election to rest his case upon the testimony of the adverse party, he is not allowed to disprove or impeach him by calling other witnesses.—Drennen v. Lindsey, 15 Ark. 359.

[g] (Ga. 1878) A party who calls his adversary as a witness thereby vouches for his credibility to the extent of putting him upon the footing of an ordinary witness, and he cannot be impeached by general reputation.—Gabbett v. Sparks, 60 Ga. 582.

[h] (Ga. 1881) Where one party makes a witness of his adversary, relying upon his testimony at a former trial, and is entrapped by the witness changing his testimony, he may impeach him.—Cox v. Prater, 67 Ga. 588.

[hh] (Ill. 1884) Where a party calls the adverse party as a witness, all of his testimony, both favorable and unfavorable, is to be considered.—Sawyer v. Moyer, 109 Ill. 461.

[i] (Ill. 1888) Where a party has called and examined the adverse party as his own witness, he is precluded from introducing evidence for the mere purpose of impeachment.—United States Life Ins. Co. v. Kielgast, 26 Ill. App. 567.

[j] (Iowa, 1872) Where a party calls his adversary as a witness he cannot afterwards attempt to show that he is unworthy of belief.—Hunt v. Hoover, 34 Iowa, 77.

[k] (Mich. 1878) A complainant, who makes the defendant his sole witness to show fraud on the latter's part, cannot discriminate between favorable and unfavorable testimony where it is all equally probable, merely on suspicion that the unfavorable testimony is false.—Darling v. Hurst, 39 Mich. 765.

[m] (Mo. 1891) In an action to subject certain lands to the satisfaction of a judgment, the complaint alleged that the legal title thereof was in one to whom the judgment debtor had conveyed fraudulently and without consideration, but stated that the wife of the latter claimed to own such lands, and she was therefore made a defendant. Held, that the introduction by plaintiff of a deposition of the wife, taken in another proceeding, does not make her his witness, and bar him from impeaching her statements; she being a party to the suit.—Jamison v. Baggot, 106 Mo. 240, 16 S. W. 997.

[mm] (Mo. 1891) Where a party calls on the other to testify, he vouches for his credit as a witness.—Bensberg v. Harris, 46 Mo. App. 404.

[n] (N. Y. 1851) Having made the plaintiff a witness, the defendant cannot impeach his credibility, nor contradict him for the mere purpose of impeachment; but has a right to show by the further examination of the plaintiff or otherwise, that although he had no direct knowledge or information of the alleged fraud, he had notice enough to put him on inquiry.—Holbrook v. Mix, 1 E. D. Smith, 154.

[o] (N. Y. 1856) Where a defendant calls the adverse party as a witness, and thereby represents him as worthy of credit, he is precluded from denying it by introducing evidence for the purpose of impeaching him by showing that his general character for truth was bad.—Pickard v. Collins, 23 Barb. 444.

[p] (N. Y. 1880) Where the purpose for which plaintiff called defendant as a witness was not formal, and he was not obliged by law to call him, held, that the judge was bound to hold the witness credible, even upon cross-examination or on direct examination as a witness for the defense.—Branch v. Levy, 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. (14 Jones & S.) 428.

[r] (N. C. 1893) The fact that a party has examined an adverse party, under Code, § 581, prior to the trial, does not make him the witness of the party examining him.—Shober v. Wheeler, 113 N. C. 370, 18 S. E. 328.

[s] (Tex. 1846) Where one party to a suit makes a witness of the other, he thereby places his testimony beyond impeachment. He may prove the witness mistaken by proving the facts to be otherwise, but he will not be allowed to impeach his credibility.—Paxton v. Boyce, 1 Tex. 317.

[t] (Wis. 1895) The fact that plaintiff called defendant as his witness does not relieve the jury of its duty to weigh the testimony of such witness, and plaintiff is not bound to hold out such witness as worthy of credit as to everything he may testify to.—Garny v. Katz, 89 Wis. 230, 61 N. W. 762.

[u] (Wis. 1895) It is not error to refuse to charge that when a party calls his opponent as a witness he holds him out as worthy of credit, as his credibility must be considered in view of his character, intelligence, and interest in the case, and the manner in which he testifies.—Garny v. Katz, 89 Wis. 230, 61 N. W. 762.

Inconsistent statements, see post, § 1217.

[a] (Ala. 1893) A party to an action may, on cross-examination, prove a fact by a witness of the adverse party without making such witness his own; and he does not thereby vouch for his credibility, or forfeit the right to impeach him as being a witness of his adversary.—Johnson v. Armstrong, 97 Ala. 731, 12 South. 72.

[b] (Ga. 1887) Interrogatories had been answered by a witness for plaintiff, and were crossed by defendant, but the latter, to lay a foundation to impeach that witness, sued out and was allowed a second set of cross-interrogatories. Held no error, and defendant did not thereby make him its witness.—Augusta & K. R. Co. v. Killian, 79 Ga. 234, 4 S. E. 165.

[c] (Iowa, 1892) The rule that a party cannot impeach a witness called by him does not apply to a matter brought out by the opposite party on cross-examination.—Smith v. Utesch, 85 Iowa, 381, 52 N. W. 343.

[d] (Ky. 1837) Where a cross-examination of a witness elicits facts entirely distinct from those which he was called to prove, and altogether favorable to the other party, he is still the witness, and his testimony is the evidence of the party who called him.—Gregory v. Nesbit, 35 Ky. (5 Dana) 419.

[e] (N. Y. 1836) A party who cross-examines a witness to prove facts wholly disconnected with the direct examination makes the witness his own, and cannot subsequently discredit him.—People v. Moore, 15 Wend. 419.

[a] (Colo. 1888) Where two depositions were taken by defendant, who read the second, and plaintiff read the first to show contradictory statements, the court properly refused to instruct the jury that "plaintiff is bound by the statement contained in the deposition [the first one taken] read by him, as by reading the same he put it in evidence and vouched for its credibility."—Thompson v. Gregor, 11 Colo. 531, 19 Pac. 461.

[b] (Conn. 1794) If the plaintiff call a witness, but does not use him, and he is used by the defendant, the plaintiff may impeach his character.—Bebee v. Tinker, 2 Root, 160.

[c] (Ill. 1891) A deposition taken by plaintiff, but introduced by defendant, may be contradicted by plaintiff on rebuttal.—City of Bloomington v. Osterle, 139 Ill. 120, 28 N. E. 1068.

[d] (Kan. 1882) One introducing in evidence the deposition of the other party to the suit is not bound by its statements. He may prove his case by other evidence going to discredit and contradict statements made in the deposition.—Wallach v. Wylie, 28 Kan. 138.

[e] (Ky. 1861) Where a party in a suit takes a deposition, or a cross-examination, or has a witness sworn, and then refuses to read such document or examine such witness, the other party has the privilege of doing so, and the evidence will be considered to be that of the party who so reads, or examines, and he will not be permitted to impeach it.—Musick v. Ray, 60 Ky. (3 Metc.) 427.

[g] (N. Y. 1874) Where plaintiff takes the deposition of a witness and rests without reading it and defendant reads it, plaintiff cannot introduce evidence to impeach the witness.—Jordan v. Jordan, 3 Thomp. & C. 269.

[h] (N. C. 1849) Where a party takes the deposition of a witness and does not use it, or subpœnas a witness and does not call him, he does not make him his witness.—Neil v. Childs, 32 N. C. 195.

[i] (S. C. 1851) Plaintiff, on the first trial, read the testimony of a witness taken by commission; on the second trial he declined reading it, and it was read by the defendant. Held, that the witness, under these circumstances, was the defendant's witness, and that the plaintiff might impeach his credibility.—Cudworth v. South Carolina Ins. Co., 4 Rich. Law, 416, 55 Am. Dec. 692.

[j] (Tenn. 1837) Where the complainant refuses to use a deposition taken by him, and the defendant reads it, the deponent is the defendant's witness, and the complainant may introduce evidence to impeach him.—Richmond v. Richmond, 18 Tenn. (10 Yerg.) 343.

Inconsistent statements, see post, § 1218.

Recalling witness for purpose of impeachment, see post, § 1109.

[a] (U. S. 1895) Plaintiff, after calling and using a witness to prove certain things, cannot impeach with respect to facts testified to by him when a witness for defendant.—Smith v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. of New York, 65 Fed. 765, 13 C. C. A. 284.

[b] (Ala. 1871) Where a witness is called back after being dismissed by the party who summoned him, he becomes the witness of the party calling him back, and cannot be impeached by the party so calling him.—Barker v. Bell, 46 Ala. 216.

[c] (Colo. 1894) Where a party makes the witness of his adversary his own, he cannot discredit his testimony, and is concluded by it, except where a different state of facts in regard to the same proposition is established by other competent evidence.—Tourtelotte v. Brown, 4 Colo. App. 377, 36 Pac. 73.

[d] (Ga. 1872) When interrogatories are taken out by defendant and crossed by plaintiff, and defendant introduces and reads to the jury the answers to the direct interrogatories, failing to read the answers to the cross-interrogatories, plaintiff by reading the answers to the latter does not make the witness his witness, so that he cannot impeach him.—McArdle v. Bullock, 45 Ga. 89.

[e] (Ind. 1858) The court may, in its discretion, refuse to permit a deposing witness' mental capacity to be impeached, both parties having used his depositions at previous ineffectual trials of the same case, without objection, and the witness living out of the state, so that proper evidence as to his capacity could not be procured during the trial.—Carpenter v. Dame, 10 Ind. 125.

[f] (Mich. 1859) Where, after the plaintiff had closed his case, the defendant recalled one of the plaintiff's witnesses, having had due opportunity, at the proper time, to cross-examine such witness, and not being compelled to call him, and examined such witness, not as to matters testified to in chief, but as to material facts in support of the defendant's own case, it was held that the defendant had made the witness his own and could not afterwards impeach his testimony.—Craig v. Grant, 6 Mich. 447.

[g] (N. Y. 1860) To call the adversary's witness to prove a party's case does not make him the party's witness, so as to prevent that party from impeaching him.—Mattice v. Allen, 33 Barb. 543.

[h] (N. Y. 1860) A witness of the plaintiff was cross-examined in part, and the cross-examination then "suspended." The plaintiff having rested his case, the defendant recalled the witness, and continued to cross-examine him. The plaintiff then re-examined, and elicited important testimony from him, upon which he was again cross-examined by the defendant, who then offered evidence to impeach him. Held, that the recalling by the defendant, who did not attempt to draw new matter from the witness to prove his defense, was but the continuance of the cross-examination, and was not making him the defendant's witness.—Mattice v. Allen, 33 Barb. 543.

[j] (N. Y. 1895) In an action by a judgment creditor to set aside a deed as fraudulent, where plaintiff puts in evidence the deposition of the judgment debtor in supplementary proceedings, and the debtor testifies for defendants, plaintiff may, on cross-examination, impeach him by showing that his deposition was untrue.—Salt Springs Nat. Bank v. Fancher, 92 Hun, 327, 36 N. Y. Supp. 742.

[k] (N. C. 1883) Since a party cannot contradict his own witness, where the state examined a witness, who was afterwards put upon the stand and examined by the defendant, it was incompetent for the state, on cross-examination, to discredit him.—State v. Taylor, 88 N. C. 694.

[l] (Tenn. 1848) Where the deposition of a witness is taken by both parties, neither party can impeach his credibility.—Story v. Saunders, 27 Tenn. (8 Humph.) 663.

6. IMPEACHMENT OF CAPACITY, KNOWLEDGE, OR RECOLLECTION OF WITNESS.

IMPEACHMENT OF CAPACITY IN GENERAL, § 1101.
INTOXICATION, § 1102.

§ 1101. Impeachment of capacity in general.

[a] (Ala. 1853) It is no objection to the credibility of a witness that he is subject to fits of mental derangement, if he is sane at the time he is offered.—Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44.

[b] (Ala. 1853) If the competency of a witness be attacked on the ground of insanity, and the court decides he is sane, the evidence given to the court cannot be submitted to the jury to affect his credibility.—Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44.

[c] (Conn. 1859) The question whether a witness, sane at the time he testifies, was insane at the time of the transaction with regard to which he testifies, goes to the credibility of his testimony and not to his competency, and is therefore a subject for evidence to the jury, to be adduced by the opposing party with his other evidence.—Holcomb v. Holcomb, 28 Conn. 177.

[d] (Del. 1838) It is not permissible to attempt to impeach the credibility of a witness by showing that his mind has been so impaired by disease and temporary insanity that his memory cannot be relied on.—Phillips v. Short, 2 Har. 339.

[e] (Del. 1838) Evidence that a witness was temporarily insane between the time of the occurrence of the facts narrated by him and the giving of his testimony is inadmissible to impeach his credibility.—Phillips v. Short, 2 Har. 339.

[f] (Ill. 1873) On the trial of a case where plaintiff, a man of culture, testified, while the witnesses on the other side were Germans, apparently of little education, and one or two of whom spoke English quite imperfectly, the court instructed the jury that a witness might be impeached just as effectually by his manner of testifying, his feelings toward the parties, inconsistency in his statements, if any, his want of intelligence, or the want of means of knowing the facts of which he testifies, as by the direct testimony of other witnesses. Held, that the instruction was erroneous, as it was calculated to give the jury to understand that a witness might be just as effectually impeached by a lack of intelligence as by the positive testimony of other witnesses.—Chicago W. D. Ry. Co. v. Bert, 69 Ill. 388.

[g] (Ill. 1892) Where the evidence shows merely that defendant was often ill, and at such times got excited, it is prejudicial error to charge that, if the jury find that she was suffering from hysteria or other illness, whose tendency was to give her false and imaginative ideas of things, such fact is to be considered with the other evidence on the question of her credibility as to matters occurring during her times of sickness.—Schoen v. Schoen, 48 Ill. App. 382.

[h] (Iowa, 1879) For the purpose of impeaching a witness, a physician may testify that his mind was impaired by disease, and that his memory was thereby affected.—Alleman v. Stepp, 52 Iowa, 626, 3 N. W. 636.

[i] (N. H. 1876) Where defendants, in an indictment for an assault, set up that the testimony of the prosecuting witness originates in insane delusions, to which he is subject, they should not be confined to evidence of his insane condition on the very day of the alleged assault. Circumstances showing his mental condition at previous times may have a bearing on the question of his sanity at that time.—State v. Kelley, 57 N. H. 549.

[j] (N. Y. 1854) Evidence to affect the credibility of a witness, tending to show that he has been of imbecile mind and memory, is admissible, though no objection to his competency was made when he was sworn.—Rivara v. Ghio, 3 E. D. Smith, 264.

[k] (N. Y. 1876) A personal and self-regarding incident occurring during a period of insanity, and testified to by its subject, either while still insane or when recovered from that state, is not per se an evidential fact, and its probative force rests wholly upon corroborating circumstances.—People v. New York Hospital, 3 Abb. N. C. 229.

[l] (N. C. 1844) On trial of an issue of bastardy, the examination of the prosecutrix being made, by act of assembly, prima facie evidence, defendant cannot show on the trial that she was an incompetent witness at the time of her examination before the magistrates, as that she was a colored woman, or had previously been convicted of some infamous offense which disqualified her from taking the oath.—State v. Patton, 27 N. C. 180.

[m] (Ohio, 1864) The credibility of a competent witness cannot be impeached by general evidence that the witness is not possessed of ordinary intelligence or powers of mind.—Bell v. Rinner, 16 Ohio St. 45.

[n] (Vt. 1834) Evidence that a party is of poor health, and subject to depression of spirits, is admissible to invalidate his declarations, at such a time, as to his affairs.—Brackett v. Wait, 6 Vt. 411.

[o] (Vt. 1862) A witness having testified as to the sanity of a testatrix, held, that the other side might prove, as affecting the degree of credit to be given to such witness, that his mind was still affected by a severe disease of the brain which he had had a year previous.—Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398.

[a] (Conn. 1805) The credit of a witness may be impeached by showing that, at the time the facts sworn to took place, the witness was intoxicated; but such intoxication must be proved by direct testimony, or by acts and conduct of the witness, and not by evidence of the quantity of spirits he had previously drunk.—Tuttle v. Russell, 2 Day, 201, 2 Am. Dec. 89.

[b] (Iowa, 1883) The intoxication of a witness at the time of the events to which he testifies does not destroy, though it may impair, his credibility. He is entitled to belief if his recollection of the events is clear, or if he is corroborated by other witnesses.—State v. Gastello, 62 Iowa, 404, 17 N. W. 605.

[c] (Mass. 1889) The plaintiff having testified as to his going to the city marshal's office on the morning after the arrest complained of, and as to what took place there, it was competent to show, as affecting his credit as to this portion of his testimony, that he was under the influence of liquor at that time.—Joyce v. Parkhurst, 150 Mass. 243, 22 N. E. 899.

[d] (Neb. 1894) In a criminal case the state may show in rebuttal that a witness who testified for defendant was intoxicated at the time of the happening of the events about which he testified.—Willis v. State, 43 Neb. 102, 61 N. W. 254.

[e] (N. Y. 1873) Where a physician who had attended a deceased person gives material evidence as to the capacity of such person to do a testamentary act, the opposing party may show that the witness, during the time of his attendance on deceased, was under the influence of liquor and not capable of judging of the mental condition of deceased.—Sisson v. Conger, 1 Thomp. & C. 564.

[f] (N. Y. 1885) Defendant sold furniture to plaintiff, taking a mortgage for the price. Defendant seized the furniture, and plaintiff sued for a conversion, and for insults, abuse, and damage to plaintiff's premises. Held, that evidence of defendant's intoxication when he took the furniture was admissible as affecting the reliance to be placed on his version of the transaction.—Van Loan v. Willis, 13 Daly, 281.

[g] (N. C. 1893) Evidence that one who testified as an eyewitness to the homicide was "very drunk" at the time of the homicide is competent, as going to his credibility.—State v. Rollins, 113 N. C. 722, 18 S. E. 894.

[h] (Tenn. 1845) A witness may be discredited by proving that he was drunk at the time the transaction he attempts to relate took place. The large quantity of liquor drank is a circumstance tending to prove drunkenness, and, as such, is competent evidence to prove that fact.—Fleming v. State, 24 Tenn. (5 Humph.) 564.

[i] (Wis. 1895) Testimony of a witness may be discredited by showing that he was drunk while the events to which he testified were taking place.—Mace v. Reed, 89 Wis. 440, 62 N. W. 186.

Credibility depending on means of knowledge, see ante, § 1076.

Cross-examination to test recollection, see post, § 1105.

[a] (U. S. 1896) Evidence of a person, familiar with the particular department of history, as to the date of an historical fact, of which the court will take judicial notice, may be received for the purpose of testing the recollection of another witness who has testified to various facts and dates, material to the pending issue, some of which were fixed by the date of such historical fact.—Ludtke v. Hertzog, 72 Fed. 142, 18 C. C. A. 487, 30 U. S. App. 637.

[b] (Cal. 1896) It was not competent for the defendant to attempt to impeach the memory of a witness by the testimony of others to the effect that he was a person of weak memory.—Ah Tong v. Earl Fruit Co., 112 Cal. 679, 45 Pac. 7.

[c] (Ga. 1856) A witness cannot be called to impeach the memory merely of another witness.—Goodwyn v. Goodwyn, 20 Ga. 600.

[d] (Iowa, 1886) When, on an indictment for larceny, a witness for the prosecution identified the accused as a person he had seen under circumstances connecting him with the larceny, and, on cross-examination, testified to his custom of taking notice of his customers, and his ability to recognize any man with whom he had held business relations two years after such transactions, an offer by defendant's counsel to show that two men in the court-room, whom, at defendant's request, the witness identified as customers of his, had never held business relations with the witness, is irrelevant, since the only proper subject of impeachment is witness' particular recollection of accused, not his general powers of memory.—State v. Falconer, 70 Iowa, 416, 30 N. W. 655.

[e] (Mo. 1882) A letterpress copy of a letter, if otherwise competent, may be shown to be in the handwriting of a party who, as a witness, denies all knowledge of it.—Clark v. Finn, 12 Mo. App. 583.

[f] (N. Y. 1854) Where it is sought to impeach the credibility of a witness by showing that he had no positive knowledge of facts stated in his affidavit to be true of his own knowledge, it is competent to show that he did not understand the full import of the language used in the deposition. Thus, where the affidavit of a foreigner, imperfectly acquainted with English, was in English, and his cross-examination at the trial in his own language by means of an interpreter, it is competent, on resuming the direct examination, to show that he had a different understanding of the language used, from that given it by the court and jury.—Lemoine v. Gauton, 2 E. D. Smith, 343.

[g] (N. C. 1876) To prove, of a witness, that his memory is weak, is a legitimate way of impeaching his testimony, and the opinions of those who knew him may be resorted to for that purpose.—Isler v. Dewey, 75 N. C. 466.

7. CROSS-EXAMINATION TO DISCREDIT OR TEST RELIABILITY.

CROSS-EXAMINATION TO TEST RELIABILITY, § 1104.
—— RECOLLECTION OR MEMORY, § 1105.
CROSS-EXAMINATION TO DISCREDIT WITNESS OR DISPARAGE TESTIMONY, § 1106.
INQUIRY AS TO CONVERSATION BETWEEN WITNESS AND OTHER PERSON RELATIVE TO FACTS, § 1107.
PERSONAL AFFAIRS, ACTS, AND TRANSACTIONS OF WITNESS NOT PERTAINING TO ISSUES, § 1108.

Impeachment by showing inconsistent statements, see post, §§ 1228–1252.
—— of character, see post, §§ 1135–1149.
—— on ground of bias or prejudice, see post, §§ 1192–1199.

[a] (U. S. 1814) A witness cannot be asked a collateral question, irrelevant to the matter in issue, merely to test his credibility.—Odiorne v. Winkley, Fed. Cas. No. 10,432 [2 Gall. 51, 1 Robb, Pat. Cas. 52].

[b] (Ala. 1893) In an action against a bank to recover a deposit paid out by defendant on checks to which plaintiff's name was forged, plaintiff may be asked to point out in a package of checks, part of which are genuine and part forged, the genuine from the forged.—First Nat. Bank of Birmingham v. Allen, 100 Ala. 476, 14 South. 335, 46 Am. St. Rep. 80, 27 L. R. A. 426.

[c] (Ala. 1893) The extent to which a witness may be cross-examined for the purpose of testing his credibility is within the discretion of the court.—Tobias v. Treist, 103 Ala. 664, 15 South. 914.

[d] (Cal. 1857) In replevin against an attaching creditor of plaintiff's vendor, plaintiff having shown no title but possession, it is competent for defendant to cross-examine as to the nature and length of possession, to show that it was colorable, and to test the witness' means of knowledge.—Thornburgh v. Hand, 7 Cal. 554.

[e] (Ga. 1894) The court may refuse to allow a witness' power of vision to be tested by requiring the witness to go to the window, and look at an object on the street, which was not visible to the judge and jury from their positions in the court room.—Heath v. State, 93 Ga. 446, 21 S. E. 77.

[f] (Ill. 1802) Where a witness testifies that he signed a certain instrument without reading it, it is proper, on cross-examination, to inquire as to his previous business, to show that he was a man of experience and affairs.—Poppers v. Peterson, 43 Ill. App. 571.

[h] (Iowa, 1890) A witness for defendant, who has testified that the place did not have the reputation of a house of ill fame, may be asked whether he is married, whether he has sons, what interest he has in such places, and whether he has talked with others in regard to the house, since the answers sought to be brought out may tend to show that, from his habits, the witness would not be apt to know the reputation of the house.—State v. Lee, 80 Iowa, 75, 45 N. W. 545, 20 Am. St. Rep. 401.

[i] (Kan. 1884) On a trial for murder, had more than a year after the homicide, a witness for defendant testified to certain material facts. This witness had resided in the immediate vicinity all the time, was aware of the homicide, and the consequent excitement, of the arrest and commitment of defendant. The facts so testified to were the appearance of three strangers riding rapidly away from the place of the homicide right after the time it must have taken place. Held, that the state might, on cross-examination, ask the witness whom, if any one, he told of these facts.—State v. McKinney, 31 Kan. 570, 3 Pac. 356.

[j] (La. 1881) A witness may be cross-examined as to matters not embraced in the direct examination, for the purpose of testing his credibility.—State v. Willingham, 33 La. Ann. 537; Same v. Gregory, Id. 737.

[l] (Mich. 1879) Where the plaintiff, in an action to recover damages for false imprisonment, had introduced evidence that she was a physician, and offered proof as to the extent and value of her practice, it was proper on cross-examination to inquire fully as to the nature of her practice and whether she secured it by advertising through handbills or otherwise.—Van Deusen v. Newcomer, 40 Mich. 90.

asked whether it charged him with forgery. It was objected that the bill was the best evidence. Held, that the question was relevant as tending to test the witness' memory, and as a step towards impeachment; and that, in the absence of an objection that the bill ought first to be shown to the witness, the exception might be treated as if that had been done, and the allowance of the question was therefore within the discretion of the trial judge.—Ives v. Leonard, 50 Mich. 296, 15 N. W. 463.

[n] (Mich. 1888) In replevin for logs it is competent to show the quantity of logs which a witness, who has testified as to the quantity of logs in question, made in scaling other lands of which plaintiff had the actual scales, in order to test his accuracy.—Busch v. Nester, 70 Mich. 525, 38 N. W. 458.

[o] (Minn. 1871) Allowing irrelevant questions to be put to a witness, on cross-examination, for the purpose of discrediting his testimony, is matter of discretion with the trial court.—State v. McCartey, 17 Minn. 76 (Gil. 54).

[p] (N. Y. 1890) A witness having testified on his direct examination that he had had experience in judging what was indicated by refuse after fires, it was competent for defendant to ask him on cross-examination as to how many other fires he had had.—Schlesingen v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 58 N. Y. Super. Ct. (26 Jones & S.) 112, 9 N. Y. Supp. 727.

[q] (S. C. 1895) On a trial for arson, a question asked of a witness who was at defendant's house on the evening of the fire, whether he got any liquor there, was admissible to test his ability to identify those who were present.—State v. Rhodes, 44 S. C. 325, 21 S. E. 807, 22 S. E. 306.

[r] (Tex. 1890) Evidence as to the willingness with which a witness would have trusted testator to make an important bargain for him is irrelevant, even on a cross-examination for the purpose of testing the ground and extent of a favorable opinion as to testator's sanity expressed by the witness on his direct examination.—Prather v. McClelland, 76 Tex. 574, 13 S. W. 543.

[a] (Ala. 1893) The extent to which the cross-examination of a witness may be pursued to test his memory is within the discretion of the court.—Noblin v. State, 100 Ala. 13, 14 South. 767.

[b] (Cal. 1890) In an action to quiet title, defendant claimed under a grant made by the Mexican governor of California in 1838, but plaintiff alleged that such grant was really made in 1848, after California had become subject to the United States. The Mexican ex-governor himself testified to a positive recollection that he wrote the grant on the day of its date. Held, that it was proper on cross-examination to ask the ex-governor as to another grant, to show that he had no special recollection of it, when no effort was made to contradict him, or to show that the making of such grant was a wrongful act.—Davis v. California Powder Works, 84 Cal. 617, 24 Pac. 387.

[c] (Conn. 1868) The plaintiff claimed to recover on a policy of insurance on the life of his first wife, and being himself a witness, he was, on cross-examination, asked how nearly he could tell the date of his second marriage, in order to test the accuracy of his memory. The plaintiff was charged with having procured a large insurance upon the life of his wife at a time when he knew or might have known that she had a fatal disease fastened upon her. Held, that under the circumstances of the case the court exercised its discretion properly in allowing the question to be put.—Kelsey v. Universal Life Ins. Co., 35 Conn. 225.

[d] (Conn. 1889) Where the justice testifies that defendant, on the first trial, made certain admissions, and defendant denies having made them, it is in the discretion of the court to allow counsel to cross-examine defendant as to what occurred on the justice's trial, to test his recollection.—State v. Duffy, 57 Conn. 525, 18 Atl. 791.

[e] (Conn. 1889) A witness having testified to defendant's residence in another state, and as to how often and under what circumstances he had seen her there, he may be cross-examined respecting one who lived next door to defendant to test his memory and his habits of observation.—City of Hartford v. Champion, 58 Conn. 268, 20 Atl. 471.

[f] (Iowa, 1882) In an action on a note, the execution of which was denied by defendant, plaintiff, having testified as to what defendant said when the note was shown him, was properly asked on cross-examination what his business was, and how many notes he had at that time, in order to show the untrustworthiness of his memory.—Smith v. Wagaman, 58 Iowa, 11, 11 N. W. 713.

[g] (Me. 1848) On the cross-examination of a witness, the presiding judge, in the exercise of a sound discretion, may rightly permit an inquiry of a witness for his reasons why he did certain acts, to test the accuracy of the recollection of the witness, or to affect his credibility, although it may have no direct tendency to support or disprove the issue.—Inhabitants of New Gloucester v. Bridgham, 28 Me. (15 Shep.) 60.

[h] (Mass. 1885) In a will contest, where a witness who testified as to testatrix's capacity is asked, on cross-examination, for the purpose of testing his memory, how many days he attended a former trial, and how many days he was paid for, there is no ground for exception, as the questions are either competent or immaterial.—Sewall v. Robbins, 139 Mass. 164, 29 N. E. 650.

[i] (N. H. 1859) Hearsay evidence is generally inadmissible, and it cannot be asked, even on cross-examination, what others have said, though the apparent object is to ascertain a reason for the party's noticing and recollecting another fact.—Dudley v. Elkins, 39 N. H. 78.

[j] (R. I. 1892) On a prosecution for burglary, where a manufacturer, as a witness for the state, has identified an article as having been sold by him eight years before to a person other than defendant, he cannot, for the purpose of testing his recollection, be required, on cross-examination, to give the amount of his yearly business, as that is a private matter, wholly foreign to the investigation.—State v. Ellwood, 17 R. I. 763, 24 Atl. 782.

[a] On cross-examination of a witness, a question irrelevant to the matter in issue cannot be asked to impeach him.

—(U. S. 1840) United States v. Dickinson, Fed. Cas. No. 14,958 [2 McLean, 325];

[b] (U. S. 1861) A cross-examination going to the credit of the witness is limited only by the discretion of the court.—Johnston v. Jones, 66 U. S. (1 Black) 209, 17 L. Ed. 117.

[c] (Ala. 1858) In an action to establish a will, a witness may be asked on cross-examination if, at the time of such cross-examination, he was not under the influence of ardent spirits.—Pool's Heirs v. Pool's Ex'r, 33 Ala. 145.

[cc] (Ark. 1855) Defendant was indicted for an assault with a deadly weapon, with intent to murder. Held, that the following questions, asked by defendant's counsel of the government witness, were proper, and should have been admitted: (1) Were you excited from anger when this assault took place? (2) Did you not have a fight or a scuffle immediately before this took place?—Hofler v. State, 16 Ark. 534.

[d] (Cal. 1893) A. had been tried three times for the murder of G. A witness, L., did not appear at the first trial, but on the second trial testified that he saw A. shoot G. Held, that it was error to refuse to allow defendant, on trial for perjury committed in that action, to ask L. who took him up to the district attorney's office, in that it appeared somewhat suspicious that he should come at so late a time to tell what he knew about the case.—People v. Lem You, 97 Cal. 224, 32 Pac. 11.

[e] (Fla. 1893) A witness testified that while standing at the east side of a house called a "commissary," where deceased was killed, shortly before the killing, he heard accused use language indicating a purpose to kill deceased. On cross-examination the witness was asked what kind of a building was that commissary. Held, that the question was proper, as the witness' answer might have shown the falsity of his statement.—Williams v. State, 32 Fla. 251, 13 South. 429.

[f] (Ind. 1890) Where accused becomes a witness in his own behalf, his accuracy may be tested, on cross-examination, in the same method as that of an ordinary witness.—Keyes v. State, 122 Ind. 527, 23 N. E. 1097.

[g] (Iowa, 1879) In an action of slander a witness for defendant called upon a point in mitigation of damages, was, on cross-examination, for the purpose of discrediting him, asked in regard to certain alleged fraudulent practices of defendant in which the witness aided, having no connection with the issue. Held improper.—Madden v. Koester, 52 Iowa, 692, 3 N. W. 790.

[h] (Me. 1862) A party, whose goods were attached, having testified for the receiptor, in an action on the receipt, that they were of less value than the amount of the judgment, the plaintiff, on cross-examination, was permitted to interrogate the witness if subsequent attachments of the goods were not made by his own procurement, in favor of certain other creditors, whom he desired to secure.—Thompson v. Smiley, 50 Me. 67.

[j] (Mass. 1877) Where, on a trial for perjury of one alleged to have falsely sworn, on a prosecution for forging certain bonds, that he saw a certain person write a name in a hotel register, such person testifies that he never wrote the name in the register, but that he signed the forged bonds as surety by the same name, which was fictitious, there was no error in excluding a question asked by defendant on cross-examination for the purpose of discrediting him, "When you signed the fictitious name to the bond did you swear before the magistrate that you had sufficient property to respond, and was that true?"—Commonwealth v. McLaughlin, 122 Mass. 449.

[k] (Mich. 1864) A question to a witness, whether he did not testify on a former trial, that "he said yes and no, and played good Lord and good devil, because he did not know into whose hands he might fall," is admissible, as affecting his candor and fairness.—Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 459.

[l] (Mich. 1874) On cross-examination of a witness, claiming to have been robbed of a large amount of money, questions tending to elicit the fact that he was considerably indebted and straitened, and that his stock of goods was small, and also to show that he made statements, on a preliminary examination of the prisoner, making his inventory to have been much larger than he knew it to have been in fact, are admissible, as bearing upon the probabilities, and to test his candor and credibility.—People v. Morrigan, 29 Mich. 4.

[m] (Mich. 1893) A prosecuting attorney has no right to imply that a witness for defendant is swearing falsely by asking him if he knows the penalty for perjury.—People v. O'Brien, 96 Mich. 630, 56 N. W. 72.

[n] (Minn. 1871) The question of the propriety of allowing questions not relevant to the issue to be put to a witness, for the purpose of discrediting him with the jury, rests in the discretion of the presiding judge.—State v. McCartney, 17 Minn. 76 (Gil. 54).

[o] (Minn. 1882) A witness cannot be cross-examined as to a matter wholly immaterial to the issue in the case for the purpose of discrediting him.—Allen v. Coates, 29 Minn. 46, 11 N. W. 132.

[p] (Mo. 1895) Where defendant is a witness, the prosecuting attorney can cross-examine him as to matters not testified to in chief for purposes of impeachment.—State v. Anderson, 126 Mo. 542, 29 S. W. 576.

[q] (Neb. 1887) A question on cross-examination, the object of which is to show that the witness had tried to suborn another witness in the case, is not competent, where the answer contemplated by the question could only have shown that the witness under examination offered the other witness an extravagant inducement to go to court and testify, the presumption being that she would testify truly.—Oberfelder v. Kavanaugh, 21 Neb. 483, 32 N. W. 295.

[r] (N. Y. 1821) Where the teller of a bank was called as a witness for a party, to prove the correctness of his entry, it was held that he might be asked, on cross-examination, "whether he was not in the constant habit of making mistakes."—Mechanics' & Farmers' Bank v. Smith, 19 Johns. 115.

[s] (N. Y. 1880) Where in an action on a note the payee is called by plaintiff to prove that it was an accommodation note, on cross-examination evidence may be received that he had negotiated other notes of the defendant, which he stated at the time to be business paper, as it was competent to show by him his own declaration in regard to like notes by way of weakening his credibility.—Bayliss v. Cockcroft, 81 N. Y. 363.

[t] (N. Y. 1891) In an action for breach of a contract for the sale of a business, which contained a stipulation that the seller should not carry on the same line of business for five years, questions put to the vendor on his cross-examination, as to business transacted by him after the commencement of the suit, were competent to affect his credit.—Breck v. Ringler, 59 Hun, 623, 13 N. Y. Supp. 501.

[u] (N. C. 1890) Defendant was asked on cross-examination "what he played off crazy for," reference being had to the fact that, when the case stood for trial at a former term, he either was, or professed to be, insane. Held competent, as, if he had admitted that he feigned insanity, it would have discredited his testimony, and tended, with the other evidence, to prove his guilt.—State v. Pritchett, 106 N. C. 667, 11 S. E. 357.

[w] (Or. 1886) Under Laws 1880, p. 28, providing that, when the accused offers himself as a witness in his own behalf, "the offer, when so made, shall be deemed to have given to the prosecution a right to cross-examine him upon all the facts to which he has testified, tending to his conviction or acquittal," it is error to permit the accused to be asked on his cross-examination, with a view to discrediting him, questions not relating to facts to which he has testified on his examination in chief.—State v. Saunders, 14 Or. 300, 12 Pac. 441.

[x] (Or. 1888) A juror in a former trial, in which there was a disagreement as to defendant, and one S. was acquitted, was called by defendant to testify as to the testimony of S. at the former trial, S. having since died. On cross-examination, he was asked "whether he did not hang the jury for 36 hours," and other questions relating to the deliberations of the jury. Held improper.—State v. Huffman, 16 Or. 15, 16 Pac. 640.

[y] (Pa. 1896) In scire facias on a lien for street paving done under the supervision of the assistant commissioner of highways, and accepted by the city, defendants alleged that the work was improperly done, and a witness so testified. Held, that it was proper to attack the credibility of the witness by asking him whether he had not charged such officer with corruptly receiving the fruits of perjury by a clerk in connection with the same paving contract.—City of Philadelphia v. Reeder, 173 Pa. 281, 34 Atl. 17, 38 Wkly. Notes Cas. 52.

[z] (Tex. 1887) At the trial of an action on a promissory note, where an expert has been called by the defendant to testify to the genuineness of the signature to the note, it is not error for the court to refuse to allow the plaintiff to ask the witness questions going to his credibility, and not to his competency as an expert, before the latter has answered the questions propounded by the defendant; the witness upon cross-examination being interrogated and answering fully as to the matters concerning which inquiry was made by the plaintiff.—Smyth v. Caswell, 67 Tex. 567, 4 S. W. 848.

[zz] (Wis. 1874) In an action for conversion, on the issue whether the goods in controversy were delivered by plaintiffs to the defendant, or to a third party for sale on commission, one of the plaintiffs as a witness was asked by defendant on cross-examination whether plaintiffs had at any time heard that such third party had failed. Held, that while it was within the discretion of the court to admit the question, if its object was to discredit the witness by showing that plaintiffs had a motive for seeking to hold defendants liable instead of the third party, there was no error in rejecting it.—Zimmerman v. Fairbank, 35 Wis. 368.

[a] (U. S. 1895) In a personal injury suit against a master where plaintiff, on cross-examination, was asked whether his counsel did not tell him that his whole case depended on his swearing that he complained of the defects in the machinery which caused his injury, and answered "No," it was not error to exclude the further question whether he did not know that his whole case depended on his so swearing.—Homestake Min. Co. v. Fullerton, 69 Fed. 923, 16 C. C. A. 545, 36 U. S. App. 32.

[b] (U. S. 1843) The prisoner has a right to show the spirit and temper with which the prosecution has been conducted, and if it has been brought to bear against the accused he has a right to bring it to the attention of the jury, and hence it is proper to ask the government's witness on cross-examination whether any person engaged in the prosecution has tampered with the witness.—United States v. Dowden, Fed. Cas. No. 14,990a [1 Hayw. & H. 145].

[c] (Ala. 1893) A witness testifying to deceased's dying declarations may be asked if deceased's wife did not repeat to him such declarations before he went on the stand.—Boulden v. State, 102 Ala. 78, 15 South. 341.

[d] (Iowa, 1889) Two persons jointly indicted with defendant for murder, having had no communication with each other, gave the same account of the killing at the time of their arrest. Held, that a refusal to allow defendant, on cross-examination, to ask one of such persons whether he had not had a private conversation with the other at a place named, two or three days after the murder, was proper, as the question was not necessary for impeachment.—State v. Munchrath, 78 Iowa, 268, 43 N. W. 211.

[e] (Minn. 1895) Two witnesses testified that, while walking together on the night of the homicide, they met a person in a buggy, and the facts each testified he observed were the same. Held, that it was proper to permit them on cross-examination to be questioned as to whether there was any concert between them as to their testimony, and, one of them having testified as to the features of the person in the buggy, to permit the other to be asked whether the former had before claimed to be able to recollect the features of such person.—State v. Hayward, 62 Minn. 474, 65 N. W. 63.

[f] (Tenn. 1889) In an action for seduction and breach of promise of marriage, it was proper to allow defendant to ask plaintiff's mother, on cross-examination, if her husband did not say that if she did not swear plaintiff's child to defendant he would send her to hell, there being evidence that her husband was a violent and desperate man; that he was not on friendly terms with defendant; that his wife and daughter were afraid of him; that he had threatened to do plaintiff bodily harm if she did not swear her child to defendant; and that the witness had made statements out of court contradictory to her testimony.—Graham v. McReynolds, 88 Tenn. (4 Pickle) 240, 12 S. W. 547.

[g] (W. Va. 1871) Although the rules of courtesy among counsel discountenance the practice if inquiring if a witness has had any private conversation with the counsel of the party calling him, yet no legal reason exists why such inquiry, when important, may not be made.—Forney v. Ferrell, 4 W. Va. 729.

[a] (Iowa, 1895) A witness for the state testified that he knew defendant, and that, on the night of the robbery, defendant was at witness' place of business for a minute or two, and on cross-examination he said he was working for one L. Held, that it was within the discretion of the court to refuse to permit the witness to answer the question, "What business is conducted in that place?"—State v. Osborne, 96 Iowa, 281, 65 N. W. 159.

[b] (Ky. 1890) It was proper, in order to discredit a witness, to ask him with whom he was living, in order to show his surroundings, and how they might influence him.—Roberts v. Commonwealth, 20 S. W. 267.

[c] (N. H. 1879) In an action for entering plaintiff's house, the defendant asked the plaintiff's husband on cross-examination if he had been notified to quit every house he had lived in for 10 years and been put out by legal proceedings in every case. The question was excluded. Held, that the question being asked for the purpose of disparaging his credibility, it was discretionary with the trial term as to how far a cross-examination should be allowed to proceed for that purpose, and the exercise of such discretion will not be disturbed.—Merrill v. Perkins, 59 N. H. 343.

[d] (N. Y. 1874) At the trial of an action to set aside a mortgage as usurious, a witness for the defense who had acted for defendant in the negotiation of the mortgage was questioned as to whether he had not, on other loans by defendant to other parties, taken notes from them for sums in excess of legal interest paid to defendant. Held, that the evidence was inadmissible for the purpose of affecting the credit to be given to witness.—Pooler v. Curtiss, 3 Thomp. & C. 228.

[e] (N. Y. 1889) On an issue of negligence, testimony of a witness cannot be impeached by asking him if he voted at an election a certain ticket, which was blasphemous. The voter cannot be compelled to state how he voted; the New York statute requiring ballots to be folded so as to conceal their contents (Laws 1842, c. 130, tit. 4, § 7), and forbidding that they be marked to designate the voter (Laws 1880, c. 366, § 3), and that the inspectors open them, or allow them to be opened (Laws 1842, c. 130, tit. 4, § 28).—Martin v. Wood (Sup.) 4 N. Y. Supp. 208, judgment affirmed (1889) 52 Hun, 613, 5 N. Y. Supp. 274.

[f] (N. Y. 1891) On the cross-examination of a witness in a criminal trial the court may, without error, in the exercise of judicial discretion, exclude questions whose answers cannot affect or impeach the credibility of the witness' testimony, such as, "You are somewhat of an amateur detective, are you not?"—People v. Fleming, 60 Hun, 576, 14 N. Y. Supp. 200.

[g] (N. Y. 1892) In an action against a railroad company for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence, defendant cannot show on cross-examination of plaintiff, for the purpose of discrediting his evidence, that he had made similar claims against other corporations, not connected with the claims in suit.—Hansee v. Brooklyn El. R. Co., 66 Hun, 384, 21 N. Y. Supp. 230.

8. RECALLING WITNESS FOR PURPOSE OF IMPEACHMENT.

[a] (Ala. 1874) Where the cross-examination of a witness has been temporarily suspended with the knowledge and assent of the court, and the prosecuting officer for the purpose of preparing questions on which to found impeachment, it is error to refuse to allow him to be recalled and the cross-examination continued.—Hall v. State, 51 Ala. 9.

[b] (Ala. 1883) It is within the discretion of the trial court to refuse to allow a witness to be recalled to lay a foundation to impeach him.—Bell v. State, 74 Ala. 420.

[c] (Ala. 1890) It is within the discretion of the court, after a witness has been examined by defendant, and cross-examined, to allow him to be recalled by plaintiff to lay the foundation for his impeachment by proof of contradictory statements.—Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Vance, 93 Ala. 144, 9 South. 574, 30 Am. St. Rep. 41.

[d] (Cal. 1896) A witness for the prosecution, near whose house the shooting took place, testified that he stood in his yard at the time of the shooting, and had an unobstructed view of both men. A witness for the defense testified that the prosecuting witness had told him that he stood in the barn. A request for the recall of the prosecuting witness, for the purpose of laying a predicate for his impeachment, was refused. All of the facts in the testimony sought to be impeached had been established by other witnesses, or admitted by accused. Held, that the ruling, while not commended, was not sufficient ground for reversal.—People v. Shaw, 111 Cal. 171, 43 Pac. 593.

[e] (Ill. 1890) Where the attention of counsel has been called by the court to the rule that a witness cannot be impeached by evidence of statements made by him out of court, unless his attention has been called on cross-examination to the time and place of the alleged statement, it is not an abuse of discretion to refuse to allow them, after an objection to the impeaching evidence has been sustained, to recall the witness for the purpose of laying the proper foundation for the impeaching testimony.—Aneals v. People, 134 Ill. 401, 25 N. E. 1022.

[f] (Iowa, 1851) Where the court and counsel have already allowed irregularities at a trial, the defendant may recall one of the plaintiff's witnesses for the purpose of impeaching him by other evidence.—Ross v. Hayne, 3 G. Greene, 211.

[g] (Iowa, 1859) A party cannot claim the privilege as a matter of right to recall a witness for the purpose of impeachment or to settle the question as to what he testified to when previously on the stand.—State v. Ruhl, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 447.

[h] (Iowa, 1886) After defendant has rested his case, leave to recall one of his witnesses for the purpose of laying the foundation for his impeachment may be granted plaintiff, such leave being a matter within the discretion of the court.—Huff v. Aulman, 69 Iowa, 71, 28 N. W. 440, 58 Am. Rep. 218.

[i] (Iowa, 1887) The defendant recalled a witness for further cross-examination, and, for the purpose of showing his contradictory statements, asked him if he had not made a statement of the transaction to one Alonzo Wallace which was materially different in some respects from the account given by him when on the witness stand, which was excluded by the court on the objection urged by the district attorney that the defendant had no right to recall the witness for that purpose at that time, which was sustained; the court incorrectly remarking at the time that the question had been answered by the witness on his former examination. Held, though the question had not been previously answered by the witness, and the ruling of the court was erroneous, those facts were not ground for reversal, inasmuch as, by subsequently being allowed to call Wallace as a witness, and examine him in regard to the contradictory statements without the impeached witness first having had an opportunity to explain the statement or correct his testimony, the defendant had all the benefit and advantage he would have had had the question been allowed.—State v. Winter, 72 Iowa, 627, 34 N. W. 475.

[j] (Kan. 1872) Where a defendant in a criminal cause has testified in his own behalf and left the stand, it is not error for the court to allow him to be recalled by the state and cross-examined for the purpose of laying the foundation for impeaching his testimony, if the cross-examination related to the testimony he had given in his own behalf.—State v. Horne, 9 Kan. 119.

[k] (La. 1892) Under Acts 1886, No. 29, § 2, which provides that, if accused avail himself of the privilege of testifying in his own behalf, he shall be subject to all the rules which apply to other witnesses, an accused, after being dismissed as a witness, may be recalled by the state for the purpose of laying a foundation for his contradiction.—State v. Walsh, 44 La. Ann. 1122, 11 South. 811.

[l] (La. 1895) Though the cross-examination of a state's witness is closed, defendant should be allowed to question him as to contradictory statements, as the basis to introduce proof of such statement as impeaching.—State v. Nixon, 47 La. Ann. 836, 17 South. 303.

[m] (La. 1896) Although a defense witness has been cross-examined and dismissed without being questioned as to contradictory statements out of court, the state, not having commenced rebutting, may be permitted to recall and examine the defense witness, to lay the basis for contradicting him, and to prove such contradictory statements.—State v. Goodbier, 48 La. Ann. 770, 19 South. 755.

[n] (Mo. 1877) A party, after cross-examining a witness of the other side, may, by permission of court, recall and question him for the purpose of impeaching him, and afterwards introduce other testimony to that end. He does not, by so recalling him, make the witness his own.—State v. Jones, 64 Mo. 391.

[o] (Pa. 1853) When the object of recalling a witness for cross-examination is to lay the foundation for proving his declarations out of court, it is error to refuse permission to recall him if proof of the witness' declarations be afterwards rejected because he had no previous opportunity of explanation.—Covanhovan v. Hart, 21 Pa. (9 Harris) 495, 60 Am. Dec. 57.

[p] (S. C. 1890) It is a matter wholly within the discretion of the court to permit a witness to be recalled for further cross-examination, for the purpose of laying the foundation for his impeachment.—Huff v. Latimer, 33 S. C. 255, 11 S. E. 758.

[q] (Tenn. 1879) The trial court may, in its discretion, permit witnesses for the accused to be recalled by the prosecuting attorney, and re-examined with a view to contradicting their previous testimony.—Lawless v. State, 72 Tenn. (4 Lea) 173.

[r] (Tex. 1878) It was error to refuse to allow the defendant to recall a state's witness for the purpose of laying a predicate for the introduction of evidence to prove that he had made contradictory statements.—Harvey v. State, 37 Tex. 365.

[s] (Tex. 1890) By recalling a state witness for the sole purpose of laying a foundation for his impeachment, defendant does not make him his own witness, and is not thereby deprived of the right of impeaching him.—Bennett v. State, 28 Tex. App. 539, 13 S. W. 1005.

[t] (Tex. 1890) On trial for gaming, a state's witness, who alone testifies that defendant played the game, may be recalled by defendant, and asked questions for the purpose of laying a foundation for his impeachment.—Bennett v. State, 28 Tex. App. 539, 13 S. W. 1005.

[u] (Tex. 1891) On a trial for murder a witness may be recalled for the purpose of laying a foundation to impeach him by showing that in previous proceedings he had testified differently as to certain facts.—Fuller v. State, 30 Tex. App. 559, 17 S. W. 1108.

[v] (Tex. 1895) The court can recall defendant, after he has been examined on his own behalf, for the purpose of laying a predicate to impeach him by another witness.—Chapman v. State (Cr. App.) 30 S. W. 225.

[w] (Utah, 1895) It is within the discretion of the trial court to permit the prosecution, after the introduction of evidence in rebuttal, to recall a witness of defendant for further cross-examination, and to lay a foundation for his impeachment.—People v. Thiede, 11 Utah, 241, 39 Pac. 837.

[x] (Va. 1874) The defendant in a criminal case, wishing to show that a witness for the state, who has already testified and left the stand, has made a different statement at another time, is entitled to have such witness recalled and to examine him on the particular point, whether his failure to examine him when he was on the stand was from inadvertence or from the fact that he or his counsel were not informed of the contradicting evidence.—Little v. Commonwealth, 25 Grat. 921.

[y] (Wis. 1891) A witness of the opposite party may be recalled for further cross-examination touching statements made by him out of court, to lay the foundation of his contradiction by way of impeachment; and, where he has been so recalled, it is error to rule out the impeaching evidence, on the ground that the party had made the witness his own by recalling him.—Perkins v. State, 78 Wis. 551, 47 N. W. 827.

9. REBUTTAL OR EXPLANATION OF EVIDENCE TO DISCREDIT WITNESS.

Of contradicting evidence, see post, § 1281.
Of evidence impeaching character, see post, §§ 1165–1175.
—— of inconsistent statements, see post, §§ 1258–1264.
—— of interest or bias, see post, §§ 1204–1207.

[a] (N. C. 1886) Evidence elicited on cross-examination, calculated and intended to discredit the witness, may be explained, notwithstanding such explanatory testimony would have been incompetent on the examination in chief.—State v. Glenn, 95 N. C. 677.

[b] (Va. 1877) Where to impeach the credibility of a witness evidence is admitted to show that he was drunk at the time of the acts concerning which he has testified, he can rebut such evidence only by proof of his actual condition at the time; and statements or declarations made by himself or others which might prejudice the adverse party are not admissible for the purpose of showing that they were such statements as only a sober man could have made.—Haynes v. Commonwealth, 28 Grat. 942.

(B) CHARACTER AND CONDUCT OF WITNESS.

PARTY AS WITNESS IN CIVIL ACTION OR PROCEEDING, § 1112.
ACCUSED AS WITNESS IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTION, § 1113.

Impeachment of impeaching witness as to character, see post, § 1174.
Witness whose testimony may be discredited, in general, see ante, §§ 1089–1092.

[a] (Ind. 1881) Where, in a criminal trial, the defendant moves to postpone the trial in order to obtain the testimony of an absent witness, and the prosecution admits that such witness would testify, if present, as stated in defendant's affidavit, which is thereupon read in evidence, it is incompetent to show such witness' character to be bad.—Powers v. State, 80 Ind. 77.

[b] (Ky. 1893) Where the affidavit as to what an absent witness would testify to is admitted in evidence as a deposition so as to prevent a continuance, the reputation of the absent witness may be impeached by the commonwealth.—Johnson v. Commonwealth, 94 Ky. 578, 23 S. W. 507.

[c] (Ohio, 1878) Where an affidavit for the continuance of a case, on the ground of inability to procure the testimony of an absent witness, contains a statement of what is expected to be proved by the witness, and such statement is given in evidence on the trial as the testimony of the witness, its credibility may be attacked in the same manner as that of a deposition, by impeaching the veracity of the witness.—United States Life Ins. Co. v. Wright, 33 Ohio St. 533.

Right to discredit testimony in general, see ante, § 1091.

[a] (Ind. 1884) Where plaintiff testifies, defendant may prove his general moral character for the purpose of impeaching his credibility.—Wright v. Hanna, 98 Ind. 217.

[b] (Mass. 1881) The fact that a party to an action has testified to the court on a preliminary question does not, after such question has been decided, warrant the introduction of evidence that he has pleaded guilty to an indictment charging him with a crime.—McLaughlin v. Cowley, 131 Mass. 70.

[c] (N. Y. 1874) Where plaintiff is sworn as a witness in chief and has testified in reply, the defendant may offer evidence in rebuttal impeaching his character for truth and veracity.—Foster v. Newbrough, 58 N. Y. 481, reversing (1873) 66 Barb. 645.

[d] (N. Y. 1884) Where a party to a suit testifies in his own behalf, he may be impeached.—Mather v. Parsons, 32 Hun, 338.

[f] (N. C. 1819) Under Acts 1756, c. 4, providing that a book may be given in evidence if a party makes out by his own oath that it contains a true account of all the dealings, evidence is admissible to show that a person who swears to his own book account is not to be believed under oath, as such act only removes the incompetency of the party who is examined as a witness and leaves his credibility open to inquiry.—Kitchen v. Tyson, 7 N. C. 314.

[g] (Tenn. 1858) Although one made a party respondent by a bill in equity is, as far as he is required to answer, made a witness thereby, and his statements may be attacked by circumstances intrinsic or extrinsic, yet his general character cannot be impeached.—Murray v. Johnson, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 353.

[h] (Wis. 1853) Under the statutes of this state, evidence to impeach the character for truth and veracity of a party swearing to his account books is inadmissible.—Winne v. Nickerson, 1 Wis. 1.

Cross-examination, see post, §§ 1144–1148.
Nature and scope of attack, see post, §§ 1129–1132.
Right to discredit testimony in general, see ante, § 1092.

[a] (Ark. 1885) Where a defendant has become a witness in his own behalf, his character may be impeached, though his good character may not have been previously put in issue.—McCoy v. State, 46 Ark. 141.

[b] (Ga. 1886) A defendant in a criminal case who avails himself of the privilege given by Code, § 4376, of making a statement not under oath, which is to have such force as the jury think right to give it, cannot be impeached by proof of his bad character, and by testimony that witnesses would not believe him if he were under oath.—Doyle v. State, 77 Ga. 513.

[c] (Mo. 1878) A defendant in a criminal case who avails himself of Acts 1877, p. 356, testifying in his own behalf, subjects himself to the same rules as to the impeachment as other witnesses.—State v. Clinton, 67 Mo. 380, 29 Am. Rep. 506.

[d] (Mo. 1878) The character of defendant testifying in his own behalf may be impeached, though he has offered no evidence that it is good.—State v. Cox, 67 Mo. 392.

[e] (Mo. 1878) Where the accused volunteers as a witness, he makes his general character a proper subject of evidence.—State v. Rugan, 5 Mo. App. 592, affirmed (1878) 68 Mo. 214.

[f] (N. Y. 1876) In a prosecution for misdemeanor, defendant offered no evidence of good character. After he had testified in his own behalf, the prosecution gave evidence to establish his bad character, and he subsequently offered evidence in rebuttal of this. Held, that the jury could consider the evidence of bad character given by the prosecution only as impeaching his credibility as a witness.—Adams v. People, 9 Hun, 89.

[g] (Pa. 1886) A witness who avails himself of the privilege to testify in his own behalf, given by Act May 21, 1885, is subject to have his character for truth and veracity attacked.—Commonwealth v. Duckworth, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 443.

[h] (R. I. 1885) Pub. St. c. 214, § 38, provides that a person who has been convicted of a felony may testify like any other witness, except that such conviction may be shown to affect his credibility. Section 39 provides that "no respondent in a criminal prosecution, offering himself as a witness, shall be excluded from testifying because he is such respondent." Held, that a defendant in a criminal proceeding, who testifies in his own behalf, becomes liable to impeachment.—State v. McGuire, 15 R. I. 23, 22 Atl. 1118.

[i] (Tenn. 1895) The character of an accused since the charge may be considered as going to his credibility as a witness in his own behalf. —Lea v. State, 94 Tenn. (10 Pickle) 495, 29 S. W. 900.

[b] (U. S. 1859) It certainly is inadmissible to ask in the first instance what is the reputation of the impeached witness for moral character. The first question, at least, must be confined to his reputation for truth and veracity.—Teese v. Huntingdon, 64 U. S. (23 How.) 2, 16 L. Ed. 479.

[c] (U. S. 1888) A witness may be impeached by showing that his general character for truth in the community where he lives is bad.—United States v. Hughes (D. C.) 34 Fed. 732.

[d] (Ala. 1891) Where defendant in a criminal case has testified in his own behalf, the state may, for the purpose of impeaching his credibility, ask witnesses the general character of defendant in the neighborhood in which he lived, without restricting the inquiry to his reputation for truth and veracity.—Mitchell v. State, 94 Ala. 68, 10 South. 518.

[e] (Idaho, 1886) The provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 897, that "the credibility of witnesses may be drawn in question by evidence affecting their character for truth, honesty, and integrity," is simply declaratory of the common law, and establishes no new rule for the impeachment of witnesses.—People v. Barnes, 2 Idaho, 148, 9 Pac. 532.

[f] (Iowa, 1859) It is not competent to show, in order to impeach a witness, that he is a man of notorious bad character.—State v. Sater, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 420.

[g] (Iowa, 1859) In an effort to impeach a witness, the proper inquiry is as to his general reputation for veracity where he is best known. The general character and standing of a witness, as a good or bad man, without reference to his character for truth, is not admissible for the purpose of impeaching him.—Carter v. Cavenaugh, 1 G. Greene, 171.

[h] (Iowa) Under Code 1873, § 3649, the moral character of a witness may be proved for the purpose of testing his credibility.—(1884) State v. Kirkpatrick, 63 Iowa, 554, 19 N. W. 660; (1885) Same v. Hart, 67 Iowa, 142, 25 N. W. 99.

[i] (Iowa, 1886) On a trial for murder, the court erred in refusing to allow a witness to be asked if he knew what was the general moral character of one of the principal witnesses for the prosecution.—State v. Froelick, 70 Iowa, 213, 30 N. W. 487.

[j] (Iowa, 1890) In order to impeach a witness, it must be shown that his reputation is generally reported and considered bad in the community.—Winter v. Central Iowa Ry. Co., 80 Iowa, 443, 45 N. W. 737.

[k] (Me. 1844) It is not competent for the respondent to prove, on the trial of an indictment, that a witness introduced by the state "bore a notoriously infamous character." — State v. Bruce, 24 Me. (11 Shep.) 71.

[l] (Me. 1856) Evidence to impugn the character of a witness is commonly to be confined to his character for truth.—Shaw v. Emery, 42 Me. 59.

[m] (Me. 1877) Evidence cannot be introduced in a criminal cause to prove that the general reputation of a witness is bad.—State v. Morse, 67 Me. 428.

[n] (Mich. 1883) Testimony impeaching the general reputation of a witness is admissible, its weight being for the jury.—Dovey v. Lane, 52 Mich. 49, 17 N. W. 272.

[o] (Minn. 1872) The only object in inquiring into the character of a witness is to ascertain whether his statements, in themselves, are entitled to credit. If he is a truthful person, they are; otherwise they are not. A witness, therefore, in coming into court, would perhaps properly be considered as asserting his character for truthfulness to be good, and be charged with notice to defend it; but is not responsible to answer, or be required to meet an attack upon his character in any other respect. A man may indulge in vices which destroy his general character, yet his truthfulness, and his reputation for truthfulness, may be unimpeachable. An inquiry in such a case as to his moral character would mislead, instead of assist, in arriving at the object of investigation, namely, his credibility; it would in any event be an unnecessary attack and exposure of him to contempt and disgrace. Further, by such general inquiry as to character, the administration of justice would be hindered and delayed by collateral issues, and be more easily made the channel of venting private hatred and malice.—Rudsdill v. Slingerland, 18 Minn. 380 (Gil. 342).

[p] (Mo. 1877) Where a witness has testified that he knows the character of a party for truth and veracity to be bad, it is not error to refuse to admit his further testimony relative to the moral character of such party.—Brown v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 66 Mo. 588.

[q] (Mo. 1887) Evidence was given as to the general reputation of a witness for morality, but, when instructing as to the weight to be attached to the testimony of the witness, the judge directed the jury to consider the "reputation of the witness for morality," omitting the word "general." Held, no cause for reversal.—State v. Miller, 98 Mo. 263, 6 S. W. 57.

[r] (Mo. 1894) The inquiry on the impeachment of a witness may extend to his general moral character, but not to his general character as a law-abiding, orderly man in the community.—State v. Ragsdale, 59 Mo. App. 590.

[s] (N. J. 1869) The general reputation in the community where a witness is known, as to his habit in respect to telling the truth, is the only test which the law allows as to character.—Atwood v. Impson, 20 N. J. Eq. (5 C. E. Green) 150.

[t] (N. Y. 1818) The rule of evidence as to impeaching the credit of witnesses who have been examined should be the same in equity as in law. The inquiry ought to be general as to the general character of the witnesses for veracity, but it seems that on a special application to the court the inquiry may be allowed to go beyond the general credit as to particular facts affecting his character, provided those facts are not material to the matter in issue between the parties.—Troup v. Sherwood, 3 Johns. Ch. 558.

[v] (N. Y. 1852) Proof of the general bad character of a witness, as that term is generally understood and used in society, does not necessarily and legally prove the fact that his character for veracity is bad.—Gilbert v. Sheldon, 13 Barb. 623.

[w] (N. Y. 1852) Proof of general bad character of a witness is immaterial evidence, if the party avows his intention to stop with that inquiry. In order to render the impeachment of a witness effectual, further questions must be put.—Gilbert v. Sheldon, 13 Barb. 623.

[x] (N. C. 1894) In a prosecution for bastardy, the answer of a witness for the state, on cross-examination, "I do not keep a bawdyhouse," cannot be impeached by evidence of bad character.—State v. Cagle, 114 N. C. 835, 19 S. E. 766.

[xx] (Or. 1876) "Character" and "reputation" are not synonymous terms. Character is what one is morally; reputation is what one is reputed to be—the estimate which the community has of a person's character.—Leverich v. Frank, 6 Or. 212.

[y] (S. C. 1818) Evidence offered to impeach the credibility of a witness is properly rejected where it has no relation to the general character of the witness.—State v. Alexander, 2 Mill, Const. 171.

[z] (Tex. 1880) The inquiry must be limited to the general reputation of the assailed witness for truth, and the impeaching witness must predicate his testimony on that reputation, and not upon his personal knowledge or opinion.—Holbert v. State, 9 Tex. App. 219, 35 Am. Rep. 738.

[zz] (Va. 1849) A witness called to impeach the credibility of another witness cannot be questioned as to the character of the latter in any respect except as to veracity.—Uhl v. Commonwealth, 6 Grat. 706.

[a] (Ala. 1895) It is proper to refuse to permit a witness to be asked, for the purpose of impeaching the testimony of another witness, as to the latter's reputation for "honesty and integrity," and also whether he was not a "common thief."—McCutchen v. Loggins, 109 Ala. 457, 19 South. 810.

[b] (Ark. 1890) Where one of the witnesses for the state testifies that he has no fixed habitation or business, but lives in unlawful cohabitation with a woman who worked as a menial servant, and another testifies that his occupation is to "fight, and sometimes shoot a little craps," it is error to charge the jury that proof that a witness has been guilty of gambling, fighting, or unlawful cohabitation does not in any manner affect his credibility.—Hollingsworth v. State, 53 Ark. 387, 14 S. W. 41.

[c] (Mass. 1859) Witnesses called to impeach the credit of another witness, and who have testified that his character for truth was bad, may be asked by the party calling them whether this related wholly or in part to that witness' punctuality in paying his debts.—Pierce v. Newton, 79 Mass. (13 Gray) 528.

[d] (Mo. 1888) An instruction, in such case, that "the character of a person in the neighborhood in which he lives, consists in the general opinion and estimation in which he is held by his neighbors, founded upon their opportunity to observe his conduct," should be limited to their opinion of his moral character; and a statement that he was regarded as "a stubborn, contentious man in politics, in church, and in his school-district," is properly excluded.—State v. Parker, 96 Mo. 382, 9 S. W. 728.

[e] (Mo. 1890) Evidence that a witness for the state had the reputation of being a rash, dangerous, and turbulent man when in liquor, is not competent to discredit his testimony.—State v. Nelson, 101 Mo. 464, 14 S. W. 712.

[f] (Mo. 1895) A witness may be impeached by proof that his reputation for fair dealing was bad.—Kingman & Co. v. Shawley, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 281, 61 Mo. App. 54.

[g] (N. H. 1884) A witness for the defendant testified that one of plaintiff's witnesses had made obscene and profane threats against the defendant, and stated that she had sent her son from the room to prevent his hearing them. Held that, as the statement was calculated to strengthen her credit before the jury, it was competent for plaintiff to prove that the witness herself was in the habit of using profane and obscene language.—Quimby v. Blackey, 63 N. H. 77.

[h] (N. Y. 1892) The fact that plaintiff is an habitual litigant is no ground of impeachment as a witness.—Palmeri v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 133 N. Y. 261, 30 N. E. 1001, 28 Am. St. Rep. 632, 16 L. R. A. 136, affirming (1891) 60 Hun, 579, 14 N. Y. Supp. 468.

[i] (Tex. 1894) A witness for defendant cannot be impeached by testimony that he is a confidence man and a thief.—Conway v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 327, 26 S. W. 401.

[j] (Vt. 1846) It is not competent, for the purpose of impeachment, to prove that the witness is a notorious counterfeiter.—Crane v. Thayer, 18 Vt. 162, 46 Am. Dec. 142.

[k] (Va. 1886) Evidence that witness was "given to rows, and to putting them off on others," is inadmissible, as it does not render witness incompetent for infamy, nor does it impeach his veracity.—Briggs v. Commonwealth, 82 Va. 554.

[l] (Va. 1894) Evidence of bad conduct on the part of the state's witnesses, that a warrant had been issued for their arrest for petit larceny, and that deceased and his wife kept a house of ill fame, was properly excluded.—Vance v. Commonwealth, 19 S. E. 785.

§ 1117. —— Intemperance and use of drugs.

Intoxication as impeachment of capacity or knowledge, see ante, § 1102.

[a] (Fla. 1891) Evidence of the use of opium cannot be introduced to impair the credit of a witness unless it be shown that the witness was under the influence of it when examined, or when the litigated event occurred, or that his mind was impaired generally by the use of it.—Eldridge v. State, 27 Fla. 162, 9 South. 448.

[b] (Ga. 1858) To show that a witness is in the habit of using laudanum does not discredit her testimony in the absence of proof that her mind is thereby affected, or that she was under the influence of the opiate when her deposition was taken.—McDowell v. Preston, 26 Ga. 528.

[c] (Me. 1849) Evidence of intemperate habits is inadmissible to impeach a witness.—Thayer v. Boyle, 30 Me. (17 Shep.) 475.

[d] (Mo. 1883) Evidence that a witness was a common drunkard is admissible to impeach his testimony.—State v. Grant, 79 Mo. 113, 49 Am. Rep. 218.

[e] (N. H. 1850) Evidence of the intemperate habits of a witness is not competent for the purpose of impeaching his character for truth.—Holtt v. Moulton, 21 N. H. (1 Fost.) 586.

[f] (N. Y. 1893) Evidence that a witness who testified that she had been an eyewitness of the crime was addicted to the opium habit, and of the extent of said habit's influence over her, is competent in impeachment.—People v. Webster, 139 N. Y. 73, 34 N. E. 730, affirming (1893) 68 Hun, 11, 22 N. Y. Supp. 634.

§ 1118. Race.

[a] (U. S. 1888) While race distinctions, affecting the intelligence and moral stamina of the witnesses, are to be considered in weighing their testimony, care should be taken not to exaggerate the consideration into a mere aversion for the witness' testimony on account of his race.—The General Rucker (D. C.) 35 Fed. 152.

[b] (Ky. 1893) Testimony of a witness, who was formerly a slave, that he is 117 years old, does not affect his credibility as to events that he testifies to, nor does the discrepancy as to dates in the statements of other witnesses, who also were slaves, affect their credibility.—Davis v. Meaux, 22 S. W. 324.

[c] (Mo. 1887) Plaintiff in ejectment was allowed, as introductory to his testimony, to state that "he lived in Mississippi before the war; was a slave." Held that, as it is proper for the jury to know who the witness is, where from, and such personal matters as will enable them to appreciate his character, and estimate the value of his testimony, the admission of such statement was not error.—Avery v. Fitzgerald, 94 Mo. 207, 7 S. W. 6.

[d] (Va. 1847) The fact that a witness is of negro descent, though not so near as to render him incompetent as a witness, is not competent to impeach his credibility.—Dean v. Commonwealth, 4 Grat. 541.

Cross-examination to show religious belief, see post, § 1139 [oo].

[a] (Cal. 1887) A question put by defendant's counsel to a prosecuting witness seeking to impeach him by showing him to be an atheist may well be objected to under Const. art. 1, § 4, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1879, which provide that a witness shall not be incompetent on account of "opinion in matters of religious belief."—People v. Copsey, 71 Cal. 548, 12 Pac. 721.

[b] (Iowa, 1881) Under Code 1873, § 3637, which provides that "facts which have heretofore caused the exclusion of testimony may still be shown for the purpose of lessening its credibility," the religious belief of a witness may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credibility, but it must be by voluntary statements previously made, and not by his examination upon the stand.—Searcy v. Miller, 57 Iowa, 613, 10 N. W. 912.

[c] (Me. 1842) Evidence that a witness had stated "that he had lost his devotion, that he intended now to serve the devil as long as he had served the Lord, and that he had a pack of cards which he carried about in his pocket and called them his Bible," is not admissible to discredit the witness, not conflicting with any statement of his.—Halley v. Webster, 21 Me. (8 Shep.) 461.

[d] (N. Y. 1845) Though it appears on cross-examination that a witness has not the moral sense requisite to make him a competent witness, the court will not strike out his testimony, but will leave it to the jury with instructions as to its due weight.—People v. Harper, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. 180.

[e] (N. Y. 1858) Under the constitution of this state which came in force January 1, 1848, and which permits infidels and atheists to testify, witnesses may be cross-examined as to their religious belief, and their answers will go to their credibility.—Stanbro v. Hopkins, 28 Barb. 265.

[f] (N. Y. 1883) It appearing probable that a party to a suit disbelieves in a future life, he may be asked the question when he testifies in his own behalf.—Higgins v. Higgins, 14 Abb. N. C. 13.

[g] (Pa. 1867) Where there is a conflict of testimony as to the belief of a witness in a Supreme Being, the court should refer the testimony on the point to the jury, to go to the credibility of the witness.—Commonwealth v. Winnemore, 2 Brewst. 378.

§ 1120. Business, occupation, or official position of witness.

[a] (U. S. 1881) The illegal occupation of a person may always be shown as bearing on his credibility as a witness.—United States v. Duff (C. C.) 6 Fed. 45, 19 Blatchf. 9.

[b] (Ga. 1857) It is not competent to ask a witness whether the former owner of property, alleged to have been stolen from him by the defendant, was not a professional gamester to impeach his testimony.—Long v. State, 22 Ga. 40.

[c] (Ill. 1857) Spies and informers are not odious to the law, and their evidence is not to be discredited as coming from that source.—Town of St. Charles v. O'Malley, 18 Ill. (8 Peck) 407.

[d] (Ill. 1890) The jury in determining the credibility of a witness cannot consider the business of the witness, as it permits the credibility to depend on the prejudice that might exist in the mind of the jury against any class of business that might be obnoxious to him.—Wiedemann v. Ryan, 34 Ill. App. 568.

[e] (Mich. 1878) Where a public officer is a witness in a case in which his own conduct is involved, it is improper in charging the jury to call attention to his high character, as tending in itself to establish his credibility.—Wisner v. Bardwell, 38 Mich. 278.

[f] (Mo. 1896) It is error to admit evidence of third parties showing the positions of trust plaintiff had held in his county.—Carson v. Smith, 133 Mo. 606, 34 S. W. 855.

[g] (N. Y. 1898) A witness is not to be discredited because he is in the lottery business, as that is a question for the jury.—Upington v. Keenan, 67 Hun, 648, 21 N. Y. Supp. 699.

[h] (N. C. 1821) The testimony of a witness does not necessarily acquire any additional weight because he is a clergyman.—Sneed v. Creath, 8 N. C. 309.

[i] (Pa. 1834) If it were competent on a question as to the credibility of a witness to establish that he had been elected constable, the fact could not be established by the certificate of the clerk of the sessions, but the record should be produced.—Brewster v. Yourd, 3 Watts, 99.

[j] (Pa. 1834) On the question as to the credibility of a witness, it was not competent to show that he had been elected constable.—Brewster v. Yourd, 3 Watts, 99.

[k] (Tex. 1896) It is not error in a civil case to refuse to permit defendant to show by a witness that plaintiff, who testified in her own behalf, kept an assignation house.—Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. v. Faires, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 111, 35 S. W. 55.

[l] (Vt. 1896) It is not competent, for the purpose of general impeachment, to show that a witness had formerly kept a house of ill fame.—State v. Fournier, 68 Vt. 262, 35 Atl. 178.

[m] (Wis. 1881) Any party to an action is entitled to the testimony of any person who is cognizant of facts material to his case, and the witness is not to be discredited merely because he is engaged in some particular lawful avocation.—Connolly v. Straw, 53 Wis. 645, 11 N. W. 17.

[a] The fact that a witness is a prostitute cannot be singled out as a ground for impeaching her credibility.

—(Ala. 1890) McInerny v. Irvin, 90 Ala. 275, 7 South. 841; (1894) Rhea v. State, 100 Ala. 119, 14 South. 853;

(N. Y. 1816) Jackson v. Lewis, 13 Johns. 504; (1835) Bakeman v. Rose, 14 Wend. 105, affirmed (1837) 18 Wend. 146;

(Vt. 1835) State v. Smith, 7 Vt. 141; (1843) Spears v. Forrest, 15 Vt. 435.

(Ga. 1860) Weathers v. Barksdale, 30 Ga. 888;

(Mass. 1817) Commonwealth v. Murphy, 14 Mass. 387.

[b] Want of chastity cannot be singled out and made a special ground for impeaching a witness.

—(Ala. 1875) Holland v. Barnes, 53 Ala. 83, 25 Am. Rep. 595; (1894) Spicer v. State, 105 Ala. 123, 16 South. 706;

(Nev. 1876) State v. Larkin, 11 Nev. 314;

(Pa. 1835) Gilchrist v. McKee, 4 Watts, 380, 28 Am. Dec. 721.

[c] (U. S. 1834) Evidence is inadmissible that the witness is a common prostitute, to discredit her testimony. The question must go to her general reputation for veracity.—United States v. Masters, Fed. Cas. No. 15,739 [4 Cranch, C. C. 479].

[d] (U. S. 1840) A witness called to impeach the character of another witness cannot be asked whether she was not a lewd person, as the question must be restricted to her general character for veracity.—United States v. Dickinson, Fed. Cas. No. 14,958 [2 McLean, 325].

[f] (Cal. 1895) On a trial for murder, evidence that the wife of deceased, who was a witness for the state, was an inmate of a house of prostitution, was not admissible to affect her veracity.—People v. Chin Hane, 108 Cal. 597, 41 Pac. 697.

[g] (Conn. 1877) A common prostitute may be a reliable witness; it is for the jury to judge, taking the habits of the woman and all the circumstances into consideration, whether she is a credible witness.—State v. Shields, 45 Conn. 256.

[h] (Ga. 1858) That a woman is a prostitute does not necessarily affect her character for truthfulness.—Smithwick v. Evans, 24 Ga. 461.

[i] (Iowa, 1867) To impeach the credibility of a witness, it is improper to ask as to her character for chastity; the question should be as to her general moral character.—Kilburn v. Mullen, 22 Iowa, 498.

[j] (La. 1892) The character of a witness cannot be impeached by showing that he associates with lewd and abandoned women, but the showing must be of such moral turpitude in the witness that no one would be justified in believing his uncorroborated statements.—State v. Jackson, 44 La. Ann. 160, 10 South. 600.

[k] (Md. 1794) In a petition for freedom, where a white woman was offered as a witness to prove the descent of the petitioner from a free white woman, the court would not permit evidence to be offered that the witness was reputed to associate with negroes, in order to impeach her credit with the jury.—Thomas v. Pile, 3 Har. & McH. 241.

[m] (Mo.) A male witness cannot be impeached by evidence of his reputation for unchastity. —(1888) State v. Clawson, 30 Mo. App. 139; (1891) Same v. Coffey, 44 Mo. App. 455; (1895) Same v. Sibley (Sup.) 31 S. W. 1033.

[n] (Tenn. 1879) The admission of testimony for the prosecution in a criminal case, against the objection of the defendant, to show that a witness for the defendant was a woman of bad character, and had had bastard negro children, is ground for reversal of the judgment.—Merriman v. State, 71 Tenn. (3 Lea) 393.

[o] (Tex. 1893) In a prosecution for theft, defendant could not prove by a witness that she, the witness, was a common prostitute, solely for the purpose of disgracing her in the eyes of the jury.—Stayton v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 33, 22 S. W. 38.

§ 1122. Relevancy to issue.

[a] (Ga. 1847) On an indictment for assault with intent to rape, evidence that the prosecutrix was a common prostitute is admissible to impeach her credibility, and disprove her statement that the attempt was forcible.—Camp v. State, 3 Ga. (3 Kelly) 417.

[b] (Ind. 1873) When a female has testified to certain indecent conduct toward herself, evidence relating to her general character for chastity is admissible to impeach her.—Indianapolis, P. & C. Ry. Co. v. Anthony, 43 Ind. 183.

[c] (Iowa, 1886) On indictment for bigamy, evidence of the unchaste character of the complaining witness, with whom the illegal marriage is alleged to have been contracted, is inadmissible to discredit her testimony.—State v. Nadal, 69 Iowa, 478, 29 N. W. 451.

[d] (Mich. 1892) On a trial for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor, the fact that a witness is in the habit of drinking beer does not affect his credibility, and the admission of evidence of that fact is error.—People v. Kahler, 93 Mich. 625, 53 N. W. 826.

[e] (N. C. 1877) Where a mother has testified on the issue of the legitimacy of her child, her character for chastity cannot be impeached.—Warlick v. White, 76 N. C. 175.

[f] (N. C. 1896) Where, in a prosecution for slandering prosecutrix by accusing her of unchastity, she goes upon the stand as a witness for the state, defendant may show her reputation for morality as of the time of the trial, to discredit her testimony.—State v. Spurling, 118 N. C. 1250, 24 S. E. 533.

[g] (Utah, 1889) On trial for adultery, where the only evidence against defendant is that of the girl with whom it is charged that the crime was committed, it is error to reject evidence of the bad character of the witness.—United States v. Bredemeyer, 6 Utah, 143, 22 Pac. 110.

[a] (Ill. 1886) A witness may be impeached by showing that his reputation for truth and veracity is bad.—Hoge v. People, 117 Ill. 35, 6 N. E. 796.

[b] (Ind. 1873) Where a witness has testified to certain indecent conduct toward herself, evidence relating to her general character for truth and veracity is admissible to impeach her.—Indianapolis, P. & C. Ry. Co. v. Anthony, 43 Ind. 183.

[c] (Ind. 1879) A charge to the effect that a man's reputation for truth is made by what his neighbors generally say of him in that respect; that if they generally say that he is untruthful that makes his reputation for truth bad, but if they say nothing whatever about him as to his truthfulness, the fact of itself is evidence that his general reputation for truth is good—is substantially correct.—Davis v. Foster, 68 Ind. 238.

[d] (Ind. 1892) Where, in a criminal case, defendant requests the court to instruct the jury that, "if a man's neighbors generally say he is untruthful, that makes his reputation for truth bad; but if, on the other hand, a man's neighbors generally say nothing about his truthfulness, that fact of itself is evidence that his general reputation for truth is good"—it is not error for the court to so modify the last clause as to make it read, "That fact of itself may be evidence that his general reputation for truth is good; whether it is or not is a question solely for the jury."—Conrad v. State, 132 Ind. 254, 31 N. E. 805.

[e] (Minn. 1868) In an action of libel, where the testimony of a witness tended to disprove malice, it was held that the character of the witness for truth and veracity might be shown, by witnesses residing in the same vicinity, to be such that he should not be believed.—Simmons v. Holster, 13 Minn. 249 (Gil. 232).

[f] (Mo. 1894) The inquiry on the impeachment of a witness may extend to his general reputation for truth and veracity.—State v. Ragsdale, 59 Mo. App. 590.

§ 1124. Place and time of acquiring reputation.

Competency of impeaching witness depending on time to which knowledge relates, see post, § 1156.

Time and place of conviction, see post, § 1127 [c, j, m].

—— of former conviction of accused as witness, see post, § 1132 [e, f].

[a] (Ark. 1874) The admission of testimony as to the reputation of a witness for truth and veracity, at some other time, and at a different place from that of his residence at the time of testifying, is in the discretion of the court; and it is only in cases of gross abuse that the discretion will be controlled, especially where no surprise is shown.—Snow v. Grace, 29 Ark. 131.

[b] (Ark. 1877) Evidence of the reputation of a witness for truth and veracity two years prior to the time of a trial and at a different place is admissible for the purpose of impeaching him.—Lawson v. State, 32 Ark. 220.

[c] (Ark. 1877) Testimony of the reputation of a witness as to truth and veracity is not rendered inadmissible by the fact that it relates to a time two years before the trial and to a different place or neighborhood; the remoteness of time and place merely affecting the weight to be given the testimony.—Lawson v. State, 32 Ark. 220.

[d] (Ark. 1879) A witness may be impeached by proof of his character for veracity in the neighborhood where he has been living until within a few months of the trial.—Holliday v. Cohen, 34 Ark. 707.

[dd] (Ga. 1889) A witness in a criminal case who resided in Georgia, formed there a bad general character, removed to another state while bearing such character (which was seven or eight years before the trial), and has resided there ever since, may be impeached by proof of such bad character left behind in Georgia, though there be no evidence touching the character formed or borne by the witness in the state to which he removed, and in which he resided at the time of testifying.—Watkins v. State, 82 Ga. 231, 8 S. E. 875, 14 Am. St. Rep. 155.

[e] (Ill. 1856) The character of a witness who resided several years in a certain place may be impeached by evidence showing what it was when he resided in that place, though the witness had, for several years before the trial, no particular place of abode.—Holmes v. Statler, 17 Ill. (7 Peck.) 453.

[ee] (Ill. 1877) It is not necessary that the impeaching testimony shall relate to the character of the witness for truth and veracity at the time and place where he lived when he gave his testimony, but his general reputation at a former period and in another neighborhood may, if not too remote, tend to prove the issue.—Brown v. Leuhrs, 1 Ill. App. (1 Bradw.) 74.

[f] (Ill. 1877) That a witness has since removed from a neighborhood by the inhabitants of which his character and reputation for truth and veracity is sought to be shown is no ground for excluding their evidence.—Blackburn v. Mann, 85 Ill. 222.

[ff] (Ind. 1851) Testimony as to character must relate to the time at which the witness sought to be impeached is examined.—Rucker v. Beaty, 3 Ind. 70.

[g] (Ind. 1862) Testimony, to impeach a witness, should go to his character at the time of the trial.—Rogers v. Lewis, 19 Ind. 405.

[gg] (Ind. 1863) Evidence designed to impeach the general character of a witness should relate to the time when he testified, and his character at the place where he then resided and among those who knew it there.—City of Aurora v. Cobb, 21 Ind. 492.

[h] (Ind. 1877) Evidence of the general moral character of a witness, introduced for the purpose of impeaching him, must be confined to the time at which he testifies, and in the neighborhood where he then resides.—Rawles v. State, 56 Ind. 433.

[hh] (Ind. 1879) The fact that a witness has not resided in the neighborhood for six weeks before the time when he testifies will not prevent his impeachment by evidence of his reputation therein.—Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Richardson, 66 Ind. 43.

[ii] (Ind. 1889) It is error to exclude evidence of the character of a witness, offered for purposes of impeachment, because it refers to his reputation in a place from which he had moved 60 days before giving evidence in the case.—Pape v. Wright, 116 Ind. 502, 19 N. E. 459.

[j] (Ind. 1891) A witness whose character it was sought to impeach was confined to prison for the seven years intervening between her residence in another state and the trial. Held, that it was not error to exclude inquiry as to her general moral character at "the present time" in the neighborhood of her residence, evidence of her character at the time of her residence having been given.—Sage v. State, 127 Ind. 15, 26 N. E. 667.

[jj] (Ind. 1896) The credibility of a witness can be impeached by evidence as to his reputation for veracity in the place in which he had lived nearly all his life, but from which he had removed four months before the trial.—Gemmill v. State, 16 Ind. App. 154, 43 N. E. 909.

[k] (Iowa, 1889) A witness who has lived in one place for five years next preceding a trial, and is well known there, cannot be impeached by witnesses from places where he had formerly lived, testifying that his reputation was bad when he lived at those places.—State v. Potts, 78 Iowa, 656, 43 N. W. 534, 5 L. R. A. 814.

[kk] (Kan. 1891) A witness, who had lived for many years in another state, had removed to his place of residence at the time of the trial only a few months previous thereto. Held, that evidence as to his reputation for truth and veracity in the place of his former residence was competent to impeach him.—Coates v. Sulau, 46 Kan. 341, 26 Pac. 720.

[l] (Ky. 1879) Without proof that a witness's character is bad at the time of the trial, evidence is inadmissible that it was bad long before the trial.—Mitchell v. Commonwealth, 78 Ky. 219.

[ll] (Ky. 1889) Evidence is admissible as to defendant's general character for morality and truthfulness at the time he testifies, and it need not relate to the time of the offense charged.—Commonwealth v. Hourigan, 89 Ky. 305, 12 S. W. 550.

[m] (Ky. 1893) Evidence of the bad character of a witness, sought to be impeached, two years before the trial, is competent.—Davis v. Commonwealth, 95 Ky. 19, 23 S. W. 585, 44 Am. St. Rep. 201.

[mm] (Ky. 1895) Evidence that the general reputation for veracity in B. county of a witness was bad, when that county was not then nor had been prior to the trial the residence of that witness, is inadmissible.—Combs v. Commonwealth, 97 Ky. 24, 29 S. W. 734.

[n] (Ky. 1895) The credibility of a witness cannot be impeached by evidence as to her chastity 16 years before the trial.—Turner's Guardian v. King, 98 Ky. 253, 32 S. W. 941, 33 S. W. 405.

[nn] (La. 1889) On an indictment for murder, a question as to the general reputation of a witness for veracity is properly excluded, where it does not call for such reputation in the neighborhood where such witness lives.—State v. Johnson, 41 La. Ann. 574, 7 South. 670.

[o] (La. 1893) Testimony as to what character defendant, who had testified as a witness, had in a neighborhood in which he resided at a period long prior to the trial is inadmissible to impeach him as a witness.—State v. Taylor, 45 La. Ann. 605, 12 South. 927.

[oo] (Mass. 1867) Evidence of the reputation of a witness for veracity a year and a half previous to the trial is admissible.—Commonwealth v. Billings, 97 Mass. 405.

[p] (Mich. 1875) Evidence of bad reputation for veracity four years previous to the trial is admissible to impeach a witness who has no fixed domicile and has been out of the state over a year of the time, and whose residence at the place of such reputation was as long as at any other.—Keator v. People, 32 Mich. 484.

[pp] (Mich. 1883) Where it is sought to impeach the credibility of a witness by showing his reputation for truth and veracity, the inquiry as to his reputation need not be confined to the immediate vicinity of his residence, but may extend to his reputation throughout any part of the city wherein he resides and is well known.—People v. Lyons, 51 Mich. 215, 16 N. W. 380.

[q] (Minn. 1884) Impeaching evidence of the bad reputation of a witness for truth and veracity is not restricted to his reputation at or very near the time of the trial at which he testifies. The limit of time is within the discretion of the court.—Buse v. Page, 32 Minn. 111, 19 N. W. 736, 20 N. W. 95.

[qq] (Miss. 1893) Evidence of the reputation of a witness for veracity in the neighborhood from which he moved two years before the trial is admissible.—Norwood & Butterfield Co. v. Andrews, 71 Miss. 641, 16 South. 262.

[r] (Mo. 1881) The only evidence offered to impeach a witness was that his character three years before was bad. Held inadmissible.—Wood v. Matthews, 73 Mo. 477.

[rr] (Mo. 1887) The general reputation of a witness cannot be impeached by evidence of his general reputation at a distant place where he visited for three months.—Waddingham v. Hulett, 92 Mo. 528, 5 S. W. 27.

[s] (Mo. 1888) Where defendant has lived in the county for 20 years, evidence as to his character before that time, while living in another state, is not admissible to impeach him as a witness.—State v. Parker, 96 Mo. 382, 9 S. W. 728.

[ss] (Neb. 1886) Where it is sought to impeach the testimony of a witness by showing a bad reputation for truth and veracity, the inquiry as to such reputation must be limited to the community in which the witness resides, or has recently resided.—Marion v. State, 20 Neb. 233, 29 N. W. 911, 57 Am. Rep. 825.

[t] (Neb. 1893) Evidence of the general reputation of a witness for untruthfulness, to be available for his impeachment, must have reference to his reputation at his present or recent place of residence, and should not relate to a residence which had ceased two and a half years before he testified.—Sun Fire Office of London v. Ayerst, 37 Neb. 184, 55 N. W. 635.

[tt] (N. H. 1838) Where testimony is offered to impeach the general character of a witness for truth, the inquiries are not limited to the character of the witness prior to the suit, but extend to the time of the examination of the witness.—State v. Howard, 9 N. H. 485.

[u] (N. Y. 1829) A witness who goes to the former residence of a party to learn his character will not be allowed to testify as to the result of his inquiries.—Douglass v. Tousey, 2 Wend. 352, 20 Am. Dec. 616.

[uu] (N. Y. 1838) Where the present character of a witness for truth and veracity is slightly impeached, evidence of bad character in that respect in years past is admissible.—People v. Abbot, 19 Wend. 192.

[v] (N. Y. 1847) The character of a witness may be impeached by persons in whose neighborhood he had lived until four years prior to the trial, though he had then removed to another place 14 miles from that neighborhood, where he had since resided, and the witnesses did not know the character which he bore at the latter place.—Sleeper v. Van Middlesworth, 4 Denio, 431.

[vv] (N. Y. 1866) Evidence of the bad character of a witness while residing in the town of A. for eight years was objected to on the ground that the witness sought to be impeached had had a fixed residence in another place for the last three or four years, and that the evidence must be directed to his present character at his present residence, about which the impeaching witness did not pretend to know anything. Held, that it was error to exclude the evidence.—Rathburn v. Ross, 46 Barb. 127.

[w] (N. Y.) Evidence to impeach a witness is not limited to the time of the taking of his deposition; it may be shown at the trial that his character was afterwards pronounced bad by his neighbors.—(1879) Dollner v. Lintz, 9 Daly, 17; (1881) Id., 84 N. Y. 669.

[ww] (N. C. 1878) It is not too remote for an impeaching witness to testify as to the general character of the witness attacked as it existed some two or three years before the trial.—State v. Lanier, 79 N. C. 622.

[x] (Pa. 1850) In support of the character of a witness who is impeached, he is not confined to the same neighborhood, or to the same time spoken of by the witnesses who impeach him, but he may prove his character for veracity years previously, and in a different country in which he had resided. Testimony of a person acquainted with the witness, and living in his neighborhood, that he never heard his character for truth spoken against or questioned, is competent.—Morss v. Ayres, 15 Pa. (3 Harris) 51; Same v. Palmer, Id.

[xx] (Tex. 1885) The impeaching testimony need not be restricted to the reputation of the witness in the place of his present residence.—Coffelt v. State, 19 Tex. App. 436.

[y] (Tex. 1886) Evidence of a witness' bad reputation for truthfulness in a county where he had lived until four years before is competent, as it will not be presumed that one of mature age, and of a notoriously bad reputation, has so reformed within four years as to acquire a different reputation.—Mynatt v. Hudson, 66 Tex. 66, 17 S. W. 396.

[z] (Tex. 1896) Where the evidence of a witness is such that it clearly raises the issue of his veracity, or the testimony of other witnesses relating to his character at or near the time of the trial tends to impeach his character for truth and veracity, or in case the person whose character is in issue has removed beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or has been transient, so that he has no fixed and known residence for a time sufficient to make a reputation for truthfulness, resort may be had to evidence of the reputation of such witness at the place of his former residence, and at a time remote from the trial.—Brown v. Peres, 89 Tex. 282, 34 S. W. 725, modifying Mynatt v. Hudson (1896) 66 Tex. 66, 17 S. W. 396.

[zz] (Vt. 1858) It is not competent, for the purpose of impeaching a witness, to inquire of others, as a distinct proposition, independent of their opinion of his present character for truth, what his reputation in that respect was at some former time.—Willard v. Goodenough, 30 Vt. 393.

Cross-examination, see post, § 1139.

[a] A witness' character can be impeached by general reputation only, and not by evidence of particular facts.

(Va. 1833) Rixey v. Bayse, 4 Leigh, 330.

[c] (Ark. 1855) In a criminal prosecution the character of the prosecutrix cannot be impeached by evidence of particular acts of unchastity, though it may be by general evidence of her reputation.—Pleasant v. State, 15 Ark. 624.

[cc] (Cal. 1856) Where, in a prosecution for rape, the prosecutrix is the only witness, proof of particular acts of lewdness are admissible, not so much to impeach her testimony as to do away with the presumption of resistance.—People v. Benson, 6 Cal. 221, 65 Am. Dec. 506.

[d] (Cal.) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051, a witness' credit cannot be impeached by evidence of specific wrongful acts.—(1889) Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633, 22 Pac. 26, 131; (1890) Barkly v. Copeland, 86 Cal. 483, 25 Pac. 1.

[dd] (Cal. 1892) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051, providing that a witness cannot be impeached by evidence of particular wrongful acts, it was error to compel one of defendant's witnesses to state whether he and defendant had participated in the alteration of a record other than that charged in the indictment.—People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171, 31 Pac. 45.

[e] (Cal. 1893) Testimony to show improper relations between the state's witnesses, a man and woman, in order to impeach the woman's testimony, is inadmissible.—People v. Sherman, 32 Pac. 879.

[ee] (Cal. 1893) Evidence that defendant had a pistol on his person at the time of his arrest is not admissible for the purpose of impeaching his character as a witness on a trial for assault with intent to commit murder.—People v. Wong Ah Leong, 99 Cal. 440, 34 Pac. 105.

[f] (Ga. 1860) That a female witness has borne a bastard child cannot be given in evidence to destroy her credit.—Weathers v. Barksdale, 30 Ga. 888.

[ff] (Ga. 1878) A witness cannot be impeached by proof of special acts of adultery.—Johnson v. State, 61 Ga. 305.

[g] (Ga. 1887) In an action for damages for a tort, where it is sought to show the general bad character of plaintiff, evidence of specific acts is inadmissible.—Ratteree v. Chapman, 79 Ga. 574, 4 S. E. 684.

[gg] (Ill. 1849) In impeaching the testimony of a witness, his general reputation for truth and veracity only can be inquired into, and no evidence of particular facts can be given.—Frye v. Bank of Illinois, 11 Ill. (1 Peck) 367.

[h] (Ill. 1876) Evidence that plaintiff has been guilty of adultery is inadmissible, in an action by a woman for assault and battery, for the purpose of impeaching her testimony.—Dimick v. Downs, 82 Ill. 570.

[hh] (Ill. 1886) Where it is sought to impeach a witness, the fact that he has been discharged by his employer is immaterial.—Hoge v. People, 117 Ill. 35, 6 N. E. 796.

[i] (Ind. 1886) Specific acts of immorality cannot ordinarily be proved to impeach a witness, although it may sometimes be proper, on cross-examination, to ask a witness about such matters; but the whole matter rests in the discretion of the trial court.—Spencer v. Robbins, 106 Ind. 580, 5 N. E. 726.

[ii] (Ind. 1892) In a prosecution for seduction, an inquiry of the prosecutrix as to whether she had not been asked by a certain person if he had "quit in time," to which she had replied that it was none of his business, was properly excluded where it was not shown how the answer would have tended to impeach her, or how it would otherwise have affected the matter in issue.—Williams v. State, 3 Ind. App. 350, 29 N. E. 1079.

[j] (Iowa, 1859) It is not competent to show, in order to impeach a witness, that he is esteemed a horse thief.—State v. Sater, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 420.

[jj] (Iowa, 1882) Where witness admitted that he had stolen horses, evidence of how long he had stolen horses, as tending to show his character, was immaterial.—State v. McIntire, 58 Iowa, 572, 12 N. W. 593.

[k] (Ky. 1895) The credibility of a witness cannot be impeached by proof of a particular instance of moral turpitude, but the evidence must be directed to the character of a witness for truth, or to her general moral character.—Commonwealth v. Wilson, 32 S. W. 166.

[kk] (La. 1832) One who seeks to show his witness worthy of credit cannot complain of evidence to prove him guilty of larceny.—Prevost v. Simeon, 4 La. 472.

[ll] (Mass. 1877) Where, on a trial for perjury of one alleged to have falsely sworn, on a prosecution for forging certain bonds, that he saw a certain person writing a name in a hotel register, such person testifies that he never wrote the name in such register, but that he signed the forged bonds as surety by the same name, which was fictitious, there was no error in excluding an offer of defendant to show by the magistrate what the witness stated under oath, when he signed the bond, concerning his property, for the purpose of discrediting him.—Commonwealth v. McLaughlin, 122 Mass. 449.

[m] (Mass. 1879) At the trial of an indictment under Gen. St. c. 161, § 54, charging the defendant with defrauding A. by means of false pretenses, a record of a proceeding for divorce, in which A. was a party, and in which the jury found that A. had committed adultery, is not admissible to affect the credibility of A. as a witness.—Commonwealth v. Stevenson, 127 Mass. 446.

[mm] (Mass. 1885) Defendant agreed to pay plaintiff commissions on all sales of machinery made in a certain town, in consideration of an agreement by plaintiff to use his undivided influence in favor of machinery manufactured by defendant. Plaintiff was a director in two mill corporations in such town which had purchased machinery from defendant, he having received commissions on one of such sales. In an action to recover commissions on the other sale, it was shown that plaintiff had not disclosed to his associates the fact that he was receiving commissions on the sales of machinery made to them. Held, that a charge that the jury had "a right to consider the commercial morality of such conduct as affecting plaintiff's veracity or truthfulness as a witness" was correct.—Jennings v. Whitehead & Atherton Mach. Co., 138 Mass. 594.

[n] (Mass. 1895) Evidence that the prosecuting witness made improper proposals to defendant's wife, after the arrest, is inadmissible, in a criminal action, to discredit that witness.—Commonwealth v. Smith, 162 Mass. 508, 39 N. E. 111.

[nn] (Mass. 1896) Where a defendant testified that he had seen the state's witness who testified as the accomplice only once, when he called on such defendant to be treated for a disease, it was proper to refuse to allow such defendant to state the nature of the disease.—Commonwealth v. Bishop, 165 Mass. 148, 42 N. E. 560.

[o] (Minn. 1859) On the trial of an indictment for larceny of clothing, the prosecution cannot, for the purpose of discrediting one of defendant's witnesses, prove a larceny by the accused of clothing not charged in the indictment.—Hoberg v. State, 3 Minn. 262 (Gil. 181).

[oo] (Minn. 1889) A witness may be discredited by evidence as to his reputation for truth and veracity, but specific and particular acts cannot be shown, except in certain cases.—State v. Barrett, 40 Minn. 65, 41 N. W. 459.

[p] (Minn. 1896) A witness cannot be impeached by showing particular acts of corruption or dishonesty.—Matthews v. Hershey Lumber Co., 65 Minn. 372, 67 N. W. 1008.

[pp] (Mo. 1850) The evidence of general bad character of a witness should not be confined to the single fact of want of veracity on oath.—Day v. State, 13 Mo. 422.

[q] (Mo. 1888) Evidence that the adverse party has attempted to tamper with a witness is admissible for the purpose of impeaching the testimony of such adverse party, but for no other purpose.—Bates v. Holladay, 31 Mo. App. 162.

[r] (Mo. 1894) The veracity of a witness cannot be impeached by evidence of specific past delinquencies.—State v. Gesell, 124 Mo. 531, 27 S. W. 1101.

[rr] (Mo. 1895) A female witness cannot be discredited by proof of specific acts of lewdness on her part.—State v. Sibley (Sup.) 31 S. W. 1033.

[s] (N. Y. 1818) In impeaching the credit of a witness, the inquiry ought to be general as to the general character of the witness for veracity; but on special application to the court the inquiry may be extended to particular facts not in issue.—Troup v. Sherwood, 3 Johns. Ch. 558.

[ss] (N. Y. 1860) An offer to show that a witness had been imprisoned for gross intoxication was properly excluded, as it was an effort to impeach a witness by proof of a particular offense.—Greaton v. Smith, 1 Daly, 380.

[t] (N. Y. 1860) It is not competent, in order to affect the credibility of a witness, to ask him if he had not been expelled from an Odd Fellows' Lodge.—Greaton v. Smith, 1 Daly, 380.

[tt] (N. Y. 1864) In impeaching a witness by the direct examination of another witness, the only proper inquiry is as to the general moral character, and the public reputation of the former as a truthful or untruthful person. It is not permissible to inquire into specified acts of immorality or misconduct.—Wehrkamp v. Willet, 4 Abb. Dec. 548.

[u] (N. Y. 1867) That a married woman should hang out signals to a man to induce him to come to her house is an impeachment of her general character.—Shepard v. Parker, 36 N. Y. 517.

[v] (N. Y. 1891) While interrogatories may be allowed for the purpose of showing, to impeach a witness, a plan by which his crimes are to be used to compel him to testify in a certain manner, and an arrangement that, in case he so testifies, he shall not be prosecuted for such crimes, interrogatories directed to establishing his unreliability as a witness because of specific offenses are not competent.—Gilpin v. Daly, 58 Hun, 610, 20 Civ. Proc. R. 91, 12 N. Y. Supp. 448; Same v. Appleby, 59 Hun, 624, 13 N. Y. Supp. 394.

[vv] (N. Y. 1892) In an action to recover the value of eggs sold and delivered, a witness who, on being called to impeach defendant, had testified that he knew and had dealt with defendant, and that defendant's reputation among the wholesale trade was bad, was asked, "What were his returns on eggs that he bought from you—large or small?" and replied, "His returns of losses with us were very heavy during the last portion of the time he dealt with us—the last month, or perhaps year." Held, that the evidence of transactions between witness and defendant was incompetent and irrelevant to impeach defendant's credibility.—Davey v. Lohrmann (Com. Pl.) 1 Misc. Rep. 317, 20 N. Y. Supp. 675.

[w] (N. Y. 1894) Evidence that a witness committed a specific act of forgery is not admissible to discredit him.—Carlson v. Winterson (Com. Pl.) 10 Misc. Rep. 388, 31 N. Y. Supp. 430, affirming judgment (City Ct. N. Y. 1894) 9 Misc. Rep. 711, 29 N. Y. Supp. 1142, and judgment affirmed (1895) 147 N. Y. 652, 42 N. E. 347.

[ww] (N. C. 1885) A witness who admits that he assisted in the perpetration of a fraud is impeached.—Davis v. Council, 92 N. C. 725.

[x] (N. C. 1888) On a trial for obtaining goods on false pretenses, a witness cannot be asked for the purpose of impeaching the defendant as a witness if it was not said that defendant had practiced some fraud on another firm, as such interrogatory related to another fraudulent act wholly collateral to the issue before the jury.—State v. Bullard, 100 N. C. 486, 6 S. E. 191.

[xx] (N. D. 1896) It does not impair the credibility of a witness to show the commission of a collateral crime more than 20 years before the examination.—State v. Pancoast, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052.

[y] (Ohio, 1817) Particular facts may be proven to support the character of a witness, but not to impeach it.—Gleason v. Williams, Tapp. 174.

[yy] (Ohio, 1896) Where a person who is a witness has committed a crime involving moral turpitude, such fact should be taken into consideration as affecting the weight and value of his testimony.—In re Franklin County Com'rs, 7 Ohio N. P. 450, 5 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 691.

[yyy] (Or. 1879) A. called witnesses to impeach the general reputation for truth of B., a witness on the other side. The cross-examination of A.'s witnesses elicited particular facts tending to show that B. was not worthy of belief. Held, that the jury might consider such facts as affecting the credibility of B.—Steeples v. Newton, 7 Or. 110, 33 Am. Rep. 705.

[z] (Pa. 1848) Proof of a voluntary confession or admission of an accomplice, to the officer having him in legal custody, is competent evidence for the defense for the purpose of discrediting the accomplice's testimony as a witness for the prosecution.—Commonwealth v. McGowan, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. 341.

[zz] (Tex. 1884) Defendant cannot impeach a state's witness by showing that he has harbored horse thieves.—McAfee v. State, 17 Tex. App. 135.

As affecting competency of witness, see ante, § 109.

[a] (Ala. 1853) Evidence that several indictments for libel are pending against a witness is not admissible to impeach him.—Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44.

[b] (Ala. 1880) A question put to one witness to impeach another, by showing that the latter had been indicted for burglary and sought to evade arrest, is inadmissible, being directed to a particular fact and not to general reputation.—Moore v. State, 68 Ala. 360.

[c] (Ark. 1879) A witness cannot be impeached by proving that he has been indicted for larceny.—Anderson v. State, 34 Ark. 257.

[d] (Ga. 1876) In an action on a contract, pending indictments, found by the grand jury after the suit was brought, are not relevant, although the person indicted be a principal witness for the defendant, and though the offenses charged be forgery and larceny by the witness in respect to the money constituting the consideration of the contract sued on.—City Bank of Macon v. Kent, 57 Ga. 283.

[e] (Ind. 1881) It is not admissible to impeach a witness by proof or suggestion that he has been indicted for any offense; and such error is not harmless, notwithstanding the witness denied his guilt and explained the circumstances, but still admitted that he had been indicted; this being calculated to prejudice the jury against him.—Canada v. Curry, 73 Ind. 246.

[f] (Iowa, 1859) It is not competent to show, in order to impeach a witness, that he is or has recently been under a charge of horse theft in another county.—State v. Sater, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 420.

[g] (Ky. 1868) An examination of an impeaching witness, as to the character of another witness for truth, must be confined to the general reputation of the witness; evidence as to particular facts is inadmissible, as that "he had been prosecuted for false swearing," or "belonged to a clique that were banded together to swear negroes out of any offense charged against them."—Taylor v. Commonwealth, 66 Ky. (3 Bush) 508.

[h] (Mich. 1882) A witness cannot be impeached by the direct testimony of other witnesses that he has himself been arrested; and, if the question is raised, it is collateral, and he may explain the fact, and his explanation cannot be contradicted.—Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 413, 11 N. W. 221.

[i] (Mo. 1886) Where one indicted with plaintiff in an action for malicious prosecution has appeared as a witness in such action, evidence of the indictment found against him previously to the one complained of is admissible to affect his credibility, it appearing that he had entered a plea of guilty to that indictment, but the government had dismissed the proceeding without entering judgment on the plea.—Peck v. Chouteau, 91 Mo. 138, 3 S. W. 577, 60 Am. Rep. 236.

[j] (N. J. 1887) A witness cannot be impeached by showing that he has been charged with and arrested for a crime.—Pullen v. Pullen, 43 N. J. Eq. (16 Stew.) 136, 6 Atl. 887.

[k] (N. Y. 1829) A witness is credible who has been indicted for perjury and forgery, not having been tried and convicted.—Jackson v. Osborn, 2 Wend. 555, 20 Am. Dec. 649.

[m] (N. Y. 1871) The rule that a judge may, in the exercise of his discretion, admit disparaging questions to be put to a witness, for the purpose of impairing his general credit, is confined to the acts or declarations of the witness, and does not extend to the acts or declarations of others; hence, a charge of perjury is inadmissible in evidence as affecting the credibility of a witness against whom it is made.—Berner v. Mittnacht, 2 Sweeny, 582.

[n] (N. Y. 1877) A mere indictment, or criminal charges made before a magistrate, are not admissible to discredit a witness.—West v. Lynch, 7 Daly, 245.

[o] (N. C. 1830) A witness to the character of another could not be asked if he had not heard the first accused of a particular larceny, as proof of particular facts is inadmissible in impeaching a witness.—Barton v. Morphes, 13 N. C. 520.

[p] (Tex. 1885) The state may not, on a criminal trial, put in evidence a pending indictment against defendant's witness for an offense wholly outside that on trial.—Clark v. State, 18 Tex. App. 467.

[q] (Tex. 1887) Upon a trial for perjury, as bearing upon the motives and credibility of a witness for the defense, but not to assail his competency, the state offered in evidence an indictment pending against the witness for perjury in the same trial in which defendant's perjury was alleged to have been committed. Held that, for the purposes for which it was introduced, the evidence was competent and admissible.—Brown v. State, 24 Tex. App. 170, 5 S. W. 685.

[r] (Tex. 1894) Evidence that witnesses for defendant had been indicted for the same crime, but that the prosecution had been dismissed, is admissible to attack their credibility.—Matkins v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 605, 28 S. W. 536.

[rr] (Tex. 1895) For the purpose of affecting the credibility of a witness, an indictment 10 years before might be objected to as too remote.—Linz v. Skinner (Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 915.

[s] (Wis. 1881) A witness cannot be impeached by mere proof that he was once charged with the commission of forgery, and arrested therefor.—McKesson v. Sherman, 51 Wis. 303, 8 N. W. 200.

Cross-examination, see post, § 1141.
Evidence, see post, § 1161.

[a] (U. S. 1893) In Ohio, in civil cases, though there is no express statutory provision concerning it, previous conviction of an infamous crime is relevant to impeach the credibility of a witness.—Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Rambo, 59 Fed. 75, 8 C. C. A. 6, 16 U. S. App. 277.

[b] (U. S. 1887) Proof of a conviction for obtaining goods under false pretenses tends to impeach the veracity of a witness.—Fisher v. Crescent Ins. Co. (C. C.) 33 Fed. 544.

[c] (Ala. 1853) The record of a conviction of a witness for libel in another state is not admissible to discredit him when testifying in Alabama.—Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44.

[d] (Cal. 1886) A record of conviction of a misdemeanor, if admissible in any case to impeach a witness, is admissible only when the offense involves moral turpitude or infamy.—People v. Carolan, 71 Cal. 195, 12 Pac. 52.

[e] (Conn. 1856) The record of the conviction of the offense of being a prostitute is not admissible on the trial of a cause, for the purpose of impeaching a witness who has testified.—State v. Randolph, 24 Conn. 363.

[f] (Conn. 1889) The record of a conviction of simple assault was received in evidence to impeach defendant's testimony, and the jury were specifically told that they might consider it for that purpose. Defendant was his own principal witness, and his testimony was important. Held, that the facts that the record was admissible for other purposes, and that an entry in a pass-book, showing that defendant had been tried and fined, was admitted for another purpose, without objection, do not make the error harmless.—Card v. Foot, 57 Conn. 427, 18 Atl. 713.

[g] (Conn. 1889) Even if proof of conviction by a justice's court of simple assault were authorized, only a final judgment of conviction could be shown, and not one from which an appeal had been taken.—Card v. Foot, 57 Conn. 427, 18 Atl. 713.

[i] (Ga. 1893) The fact that a witness has been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude is admissible for the purpose of discrediting his evidence, and when such conviction has been proved it is not error to charge the jury on the law as to the impeachment of witnesses, since evidence which discredits a witness on the ground of infamy tends to impeach him.—Ford v. State, 92 Ga. 459, 17 S. E. 667.

[j] (Ill. 1894) The fact that the conviction of a witness for a crime was had many years before the trial is no reason for excluding evidence thereof.—Wollf v. Van Housen, 55 Ill. App. 295.

[k] (Ind. 1872) The conviction of a person of felony, which by the Revised Statutes of 1843 rendered him incompetent to give evidence in a court, under the Revised Statutes of 1852, may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credibility.—Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Riley, 39 Ind. 568.

[l] (Ind. 1873) A record showing an indictment for an assault and battery with intent to commit a rape, and an acquittal of the intent and conviction for a simple assault and battery, is inadmissible in evidence for the purpose of affecting the credibility of a witness.—Glenn v. Clore, 42 Ind. 60.

[ll] (Md. 1894) For the purpose of discrediting a witness, it may be shown that he was convicted of drunkenness, and confined in jail.—McLaughlin v. Mencke, 80 Md. 83, 30 Atl. 603.

[m] (Mass. 1830) The record of the conviction of a witness, in another state, for an infamous crime, is admissible in evidence to affect his credibility.—Commonwealth v. Knapp, 26 Mass. (9 Pick.) 496, 20 Am. Dec. 491.

[mm] (Mass. 1846) The record of a conviction for the offense of obtaining money under false pretenses cannot be introduced to discredit a witness.—Utley v. Merrick, 52 Mass. (11 Metc.) 302.

[n] (Mass. 1862) Under Gen. St. c. 131, § 13, the conviction of any crime may be shown, to affect the credibility of a witness.—Commonwealth v. Hall, 86 Mass. (4 Allen) 305.

[nn] (Mass. 1868) "Conviction," as used in Gen. St. c. 131, § 13, permitting conviction of any crime to be shown to affect the credibility of a witness, held to mean a judgment of the court.—Commonwealth v. Gorham, 99 Mass. 420.

[o] (Mass. 1880) The record of a criminal court, showing that a person was indicted for an offense to which he pleaded guilty, and that he was discharged on probation, is not admissible in evidence to impeach his credibility as a witness, under St. 1870, c. 393, § 3.—Fay v. Harlan, 128 Mass. 244.

[oo] (Mass. 1888) Under Pub. St. c. 169, § 19, providing that "the conviction of a witness of a crime may be shown to affect his credibility," the conviction of the witness of any crime, whether a felony or a misdemeanor, may be shown to affect his credibility.—Commonwealth v. Ford, 146 Mass. 131, 15 N. E. 153.

[p] (Mass. 1889) Pub. St. c. 169, § 19, which provides that the conviction for a crime may be shown to affect the credibility of a witness, does not require the crime to be of such a nature as of itself to affect his credibility, and evidence of a conviction for assault is admissible for purposes of impeachment.—Quigley v. Turner, 150 Mass. 108, 22 N. E. 586.

[pp] (Mich. 1870) An entry on the records of a circuit court reciting that an attorney had been guilty of malpractice, and directing the prosecuting attorney to draft and perfect proper charges, whereupon the attorney appeared, confessed his misconduct, and tendered a return of his license, which was accepted, and his name stricken from the roll of attorneys, is not admissible to impeach the attorney's veracity when examined as a witness, as he can only be directly attacked by the record evidence of a conviction, and such document could not be used as a record of that kind.—Dickinson v. Dustin, 21 Mich. 561.

[q] (Mich. 1882) Under Comp. Laws, § 5966, the fact that a witness had been convicted of an infamous crime may be shown as a distinct fact bearing on his credit as a witness.—People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 482, 12 N. W. 665, 42 Am. Rep. 477.

[qq] (Mich. 1893) It is proper, for the purpose of discrediting a witness in a civil action, to show a former conviction for crime.—Cole v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 95 Mich. 77, 54 N. W. 638.

[r] (Mich. 1895) Where there is evidence that a witness has been convicted of a criminal offense, an instruction that the jury shall consider this fact in determining the credibility of his evidence is proper.—Comkey v. Carpenter, 106 Mich. 1, 63 N. W. 990.

[rr] (Miss. 1890) Under Code 1880, § 1607, providing that the record of conviction of a witness of any "crime" may be given in evidence as affecting his credibility, and section 3105, declaring that "any violation" of law is a crime, within the meaning of section 1607, the record of the conviction of a witness for larceny of a hog, without felonious intent, is admissible to affect his credibility.—Helm v. State, 67 Miss. 562, 7 South. 487.

[s] (Mo. 1882) When the defendant in a criminal case has been examined as a witness in his own behalf, it is competent for the state to introduce the record of his former conviction for another offense for the purpose of affecting his credibility.—State v. Kelsoe, 76 Mo. 505, reversing judgment (1881) 11 Mo. App. 91.

[ss] (Mo. 1889) On a trial for assault with intent to kill, where defendant has testified in his own behalf, evidence of his prior conviction of violating a municipal ordinance by frequenting a bawdy-house, a mere misdemeanor not infamous at common law, or by statute, is not admissible to impeach his credibility.—State v. Taylor, 98 Mo. 240, 11 S. W. 570.

[t] (Mo. 1894) The fact that a witness has been convicted of a public offense is not admissible to impeach his credibility, unless the record shows that the offense was an infamous crime.—State v. Warren, 57 Mo. App. 502.

[tt] (Mo. 1895) A record of a conviction for gambling is not admissible for the purpose of discrediting a witness.—State v. Donnelly, 130 Mo. 642, 32 S. W. 1124.

[u] (Mo. 1896) Error in admitting evidence of plaintiff's conviction of a misdemeanor to impeach him is not waived by plaintiff's introducing like evidence with reference to a witness of defendant.—Gardner v. St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co., 135 Mo. 90, 36 S. W. 214.

[uu] (Mo. 1896) Evidence that a witness has been convicted of a misdemeanor is not admissible to impeach him.—Gardner v. St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co., 135 Mo. 90, 36 S. W. 214.

[v] (N. Y. 1884) It may be shown, as affecting the credibility of a witness, that he has been convicted of misdemeanors.—People v. Burns, 33 Hun, 296.

[w] (N. Y. 1889) In an action by a wife under the "civil damage act" for the value of a horse killed by her husband while in a state of intoxication produced by liquor furnished by defendant, proof that defendant several times, both before and since the cause of action arose, had been convicted of selling liquor without license, is admissible for the purpose of affecting the weight of his testimony.—Morenus v. Crawford, 51 Hun, 89, 5 N. Y. Supp. 453.

[ww] (N. Y. 1893) In habeas corpus to remove a child from the custody of a person alleged to be the keeper of a house of ill fame, the record of defendant's conviction was read in evidence. Afterwards he testified in his own behalf. Held, that the admission of the record was not prejudicial error; since under Code Civ. Proc. § 832, it was competent evidence as to defendant's credibility as a witness.—People v. Paschal, 68 Hun, 344, 22 N. Y. Supp. 881.

[x] (N. Y. 1894) Judgment for penalty under a city ordinance for doing an act which is also a misdemeanor under the state law is not a conviction of a misdemeanor which may be shown (Code Civ. Proc. § 832) for the purpose of affecting the credibility of such person as a witness.—Arhart v. Stark (Super. Buff.) 6 Misc. Rep. 579, 27 N. Y. Supp. 301.

[xx] (Ohio, 1876) A conviction, which under Cr. Code, § 139, may be shown to affect the credibility of witness, is such only as, independently of said section, would have rendered the convict incompetent to testify; and proof that one charged with assault with intent to rob had on several occasions been arrested and convicted for violations of city ordinances cannot be introduced for the sole purpose of affecting his credibility.—Coble v. State, 31 Ohio St. 100.

[y] (R. I. 1885) Pub. St. c. 214, § 38, provides that a person who has been convicted of a felony may testify like any other witness, except that such conviction may be shown to affect his credibility. Section 39 provides that "No respondent in a criminal prosecution, offering himself as a witness, shall be excluded from testifying because he is such respondent." Held, that the record of a former conviction may be shown to affect the credibility of a defendant in a criminal proceeding, who testifies in his own behalf.—State v. McGuire, 15 R. I. 23, 22 Atl. 1118.

[z] (Tex. 1893) A witness may be impeached by showing on cross-examination, or by record evidence, that he has been convicted of a misdemeanor under an indictment charging him with felonious theft.—Chambless v. State (Cr. App.) 24 S. W. 899, following Carroll v. State (1893) 32 Tex. Cr. R. 431, 24 S. W. 100, 40 Am. St. Rep. 786, and Goode v. State (1893) 32 Tex. Cr. R. 505, 24 S. W. 102.

[zz] (Wash. 1893) Under Code Proc. § 1647, providing that no witness shall be excluded by reason of conviction of a crime, but such conviction may be shown to affect his credibility, only those crimes which, as infamous, were formerly ground for exclusion, may be shown to impeach a witness' credit, and of these petit larceny is not one.—State v. Payne, 6 Wash. 563, 34 Pac. 317.

Admissibility of pardon to sustain witness, see post, § 1168 [l].

[a] (Mich. 1884) In an action against one alleged to have negligently caused a collision in a highway, evidence that he had been convicted of murder and of assault with intent to kill, but that on retrials he was acquitted, was inadmissible for the purpose of either affecting his credibility as a witness or to show his disposition to do violence.—Pigott v. Lilly, 55 Mich. 150, 20 N. W. 879.

[aa] (N. H. 1870) The record of conviction is admissible as affecting the credit of a person for veracity, although he has been pardoned.—Curtis v. Cochran, 50 N. H. 242.

[b] (N. Y. 1843) Though a pardon restores the competency of a witness, yet the conviction may be used to affect the credibility of the witness.—Baum v. Clause, 5 Hill, 196.

[c] (Tex. 1887) In a prosecution for larceny defendant produced a witness who had served a term in the penitentiary on account of the commission of a felony, but who had been pardoned. He was allowed to testify, but in his argument the counsel for the prosecution insisted that the witness was not worthy of credit. To these remarks exception was taken. Held, that though the pardon of one convicted of felony will in general restore his competency as a witness, yet the conviction may still be used to affect his credit.—Bennett v. State, 24 Tex. App. 73, 5 S. W. 527, 5 Am. St. Rep. 875.

[d] (Tex. 1887) If a witness has been convicted of a felony, but pardoned, the record of the conviction is competent evidence for the purpose of attacking his credibility.—Dudley v. State, 24 Tex. App. 163, 5 S. W. 649.

[e] (Tex. 1895) The credibility of a witness who has been convicted of a felony and pardoned, and against whose reputation for truth and veracity there is testimony, is for the jury.—Douglass v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 228.

(b) ACCUSED IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTION.

CHARACTER AND REPUTATION IN GENERAL, § 1129.
REPUTATION AS TO VERACITY, §§ 1130.
PARTICULAR ACTS OR FACTS, § 1131.
FORMER CONVICTION OF CRIME, § 1132.

Cross-examination of accused, see post, §§ 1144–1148.

Privilege, see ante, §§ 1042–1046.

Right to impeach in general, see ante, § 1113.

§ 1129. Character and reputation in general.

[a] (Ala. 1893) Where a defendant in a criminal trial testifies in his own behalf, evidence as to his general character is "material" to show what credit he is entitled to as a witness.—McDaniel v. State, 97 Ala. 14, 12 South. 241.

[b] (Ala. 1894) Evidence of the "general character" of a defendant, who testifies in his own behalf, is admissible to impeach him.—Byers v. State, 105 Ala. 31, 16 South. 716.

[c, d] (Ind. 1881) Acts 1881, pp. 157, 158, § 230, providing that "in all cases affecting the credibility of a witness, his general moral character may be given in evidence," applies to a defendant in a criminal prosecution who testifies in his own behalf.—Morrison v. State, 76 Ind. 335.

[e] (Ind. 1890) Where the accused becomes a witness, his general character may be shown as bearing upon his credibility.—Keyes v. State, 122 Ind. 527, 23 N. E. 1097.

[f] (Ind. 1890) When the defendant in a criminal case testifies in his own behalf, the state may introduce evidence as to his general bad moral character.—Drew v. State, 124 Ind. 9, 23 N. E. 1098.

[g, h] (Ky. 1888) Where defendant becomes a witness in his own behalf, as permitted by act May 1, 1886, his credibility may be impeached by testimony assailing his general moral character.—Lockard v. Commonwealth, 87 Ky. 201, 8 S. W. 266.

[i] (Ky. 1889) Evidence of bad moral character of defendant is competent to impeach his testimony in his own behalf.—Hasson v. Commonwealth, 11 S. W. 286.

[j] (Ky. 1892) Defendant, in a homicide case, having testified in her own behalf, evidence of her reputation for morality and virtue was properly admitted.—Crump v. Commonwealth, 20 S. W. 390.

[k] (Ky. 1895) Where an accused, testifying in his own behalf, has not put his character in issue, it is error to permit the commonwealth to adduce proof as to his general character and moral standing in the community.—Montgomery v. Commonwealth, 30 S. W. 602.

[l] (Ky. 1895) Where accused testified as a witness, it was competent to prove that his general moral character was bad, though he did not introduce testimony as to his character.—Barton v. Commonwealth, 32 S. W. 171.

[m, n] (La. 1893) If a defendant in a criminal case, jointly indicted and tried with another defendant, testifies in his own behalf, and incriminates his codefendant, he is to be treated as any other witness, and his character for honesty may be put at issue by his codefendant in an examination as to his general character for truth and veracity.—State v. Taylor, 45 La. Ann. 605, 12 South. 927.

[o] (Mo.) In impeaching the accused as a witness, evidence of his reputation for general moral character is admissible.—(1878) State v. Cox, 67 Mo. 392; (1886) Same v. Palmer, 88 Mo. 568; (1887) Same v. Beaucleigh, 92 Mo. 490, 4 S. W. 666.

[p] (Mo.) Where defendant in a criminal case testifies in his own behalf, evidence of his general reputation for truth and veracity, chastity and morality, may be introduced by the state.—(1886) State v. Rider, 90 Mo. 54, 1 S. W. 825; (1888) Id., 95 Mo. 474, 8 S. W. 723.

[q] (Mo. 1888) Where it is sought to impeach defendant as a witness, the state may introduce evidence of his general moral character, and not alone as to the trait of character involved in the offense.—State v. Parker, 96 Mo. 382, 9 S. W. 728.

[r] (Mo. 1889) Where defendant in a criminal case is a witness, evidence as to his general reputation or character for morality is admissible.—State v. Day, 100 Mo. 242, 12 S. W. 365.

[s] (Mo. 1891) Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to rape, the accused has testified on his own behalf, he may be impeached by proof that his general reputation for virtue and chastity is bad.—State v. Shroyer, 104 Mo. 441, 16 S. W. 286, 24 Am. St. Rep. 344.

[t] (Mo. 1894) Evidence tending to impeach the moral character of defendant, after he has testified, is admissible.—State v. Smith, 125 Mo. 2, 28 S. W. 181.

[u] (Mo. 1895) On a prosecution for defiling a female confided to one's care, evidence that defendant's general character for chastity was bad was not admissible to impeach him as a witness.—State v. Sibley, 131 Mo. 519, 33 S. W. 167.

[v] (Mo. 1896) Where defendant in a criminal case testifies in his own behalf, evidence of his general moral character among his neighbors is admissible, as affecting his credibility, its weight being for the jury.—State v. Weeden, 133 Mo. 70, 34 S. W. 473.

[w] (N. C. 1881) Where the defendant in a criminal case avails himself of Acts 1881, c. 110, and becomes a witness in his own behalf, he thereby subjects himself to all the disadvantages of that position in the same manner as any other witness, and may be discredited by proof of his general bad moral character.—State v. Effler, 85 N. C. 585.

[x] (S. C. 1887) Where a defendant in a criminal case testifies in his own behalf, his character for truth and veracity may be impeached, but not his general moral character.—State v. Robertson, 26 S. C. 117, 1 S. E. 443.

[y] (Tenn. 1888) A defendant in a criminal prosecution, who voluntarily takes the stand in his own behalf, subjects himself to the same rules as other witnesses; and in impeaching his credit the inquiry is not restricted to his general reputation for veracity, but involves his whole moral character.—Peck v. State, 86 Tenn. (2 Pickle) 259, 6 S. W. 389.

[a] (Ala. 1893) In a criminal trial, where the credibility of defendant's evidence is not attacked, evidence sustaining his reputation for "truth and veracity" is not admissible.—Funderberg v. State, 100 Ala. 36, 14 South. 877.

[b] (Cal. 1881) If a defendant in a criminal case offers himself as a witness, the prosecution may introduce testimony to show that his general reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity is bad.—People v. Beck, 58 Cal. 212.

[c] (Cal. 1888) Testimony as to defendant's character for truth and veracity by a witness knowing his general reputation in that regard is admissible to impeach him.—People v. Bentley, 77 Cal. 7, 18 Pac. 799, 11 Am. St. Rep. 225.

[d] (Cal. 1896) Where accused testifies in his own behalf, to discredit him, testimony as to his general reputation in the community for "truth, honesty, and integrity" is admissible.—People v. Hickman, 113 Cal. 80, 45 Pac. 175.

[e] (Ind.) Where, on the trial of a criminal action, the defendant testifies in his own behalf, the state may give evidence to impeach him by showing that his character for truth is bad.—(1875) Mershorn v. State, 51 Ind. 14; (1879) State v. Beal, 68 Ind. 345, 34 Am. Rep. 263.

[f] (Ky. 1887) While the general rule prevails that the state cannot place the character of the accused in issue unless the latter shall have first attempted to establish his character by proof, yet, where the accused offers himself as a witness, his general character for truth and veracity may be impeached by the state, like that of any other witness.—McDonald v. Commonwealth, 86 Ky. 10, 4 S. W. 687.

[g] (Pa. 1886) A defendant, claiming the privilege to testify under Act May 21, 1885, may have his character for truthfulness attacked, though it may tend to prejudice the jury against him.—Commonwealth v. Duckworth, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 443.

[a] (Ind. 1886) On a murder trial, it is not error to instruct the jury that if the defendant has voluntarily testified that he has committed burglary, that fact may be considered in determining the credibility of his testimony, that being the law of the state since 1852.—Boyle v. State, 105 Ind. 469, 5 N. E. 203, 55 Am. Rep. 218.

[b] (Tenn. 1896) In a criminal case the records of indictments against defendant for other and distinct offenses are inadmissible, where he has been acquitted therein or nolle prosequi has been entered, for the purpose of affecting his credibility.—Ryan v. State, 97 Tenn. (13 Pickle) 206, 36 S. W. 930.

Cross-examination, see post, § 1147.

[a] (Ala. 1892) Under Code 1886, § 2766, providing that the objection that a witness has been convicted of an infamous crime goes to his credibility, and not to his competency, it is proper, where the accused testifies in his own behalf, to introduce evidence of a previous conviction of another crime, for the purpose, only, of attacking his credibility, if the evidence is expressly so limited by the court.—Prior v. State, 99 Ala. 196, 13 South. 681.

[b] (Ala. 1895) In a prosecution for larceny, evidence of a former conviction of defendant for another crime is admissible to impeach his credibility as a witness.—McQueen v. State, 108 Ala. 54, 18 South. 843.

[c] (Me. 1876) The provision of Rev. St. c. 82, § 94, that the record of a previous conviction of a witness for a felony may be shown to affect his credibility, applies to a case where a party offers himself as a witness in his own behalf in a criminal proceeding, although no evidence of his previous good character has been offered.—State v. Watson, 65 Me. 74.

[d] (Me. 1892) On a trial for keeping a liquor nuisance, it is no objection to the admission in evidence of an ancient record of the conviction of the accused of being a common seller of intoxicating liquors, for the purpose of discrediting him as a witness in his own behalf, that the chief purpose in introducing it is to create prejudice against him.—State v. Farmer, 84 Me. 436, 24 Atl. 985.

[e] (Me. 1892) The record of the conviction of the accused 27 years ago of being a common seller of intoxicating liquors is admissible to impeach his credibility as a witness in his own behalf, notwithstanding its age.—State v. Farmer, 84 Me. 436, 24 Atl. 985.

[f] (Minn. 1890) Where defendant in a criminal action became a witness in his own behalf, evidence of his conviction of assault several years previous was admissible as affecting his credibility under Pen. Code, § 531, providing that the record of any crime may be so received.—State v. Sauer, 42 Minn. 258, 44 N. W. 115.

[g] (Mo. 1887) On a trial for petit larceny, the court allowed the state to put in evidence a record showing a previous conviction of defendant for petit larceny. Held that, inasmuch as defendant had been examined on his own behalf, the evidence was properly admitted for the purpose of affecting his credibility.—State v. Loehr, 93 Mo. 103, 5 S. W. 696.

[h] (Mo. 1889) While it is not competent to attack the character of a defendant in a criminal cause, unless he puts in evidence of a good character, yet, as affecting his credibility as a witness in his own behalf, it is admissible to show his conviction of a former felony.—State v. Nelson, 98 Mo. 414, 11 S. W. 997.

[i] (Mo. 1894) Evidence of a prior conviction for an assault and battery is inadmissible to impeach defendant.—State v. Smith, 125 Mo. 2, 28 S. W. 181.

[j] (N. Y. 1885) On an indictment for uttering forged checks, evidence that defendant was arrested about a year before for disorderly conduct, followed by proof that she was convicted and fined therefor, is admissible, where she testifies in her own behalf, as bearing on the weight of her evidence.—People v. Elmore, 3 N. Y. Cr. R. 264.

[k] (Tex. 1893) On criminal trial, as bearing on his credibility, former convictions of defendant may be shown.—Childs v. State (Cr. App.) 22 S. W. 1039.

[l] (Tex. 1894) On trial for robbery, where defendant testifies on his own behalf, evidence that he has been convicted of other offenses is admissible, if the court charge that it can be considered only as affecting his credibility.—Thompson v. State (Cr. App.) 26 S. W. 1081.

3. CONDUCT OF WITNESS WITH REFERENCE TO CAUSE.

IN GENERAL, § 1133.
CONDUCT INCONSISTENT WITH TESTIMONY, § 1134.

Manner of testifying, see ante, § 1078.

[a] (U. S. 1887) The fact that post office inspectors resorted to test or decoy letters in order to bring to justice a person suspected of using the mails for the circulation of obscene literature does not operate to discredit their testimony upon the trial of that person for that offense.—United States v. Slenker (D. C.) 32 Fed. 691.

[b] (Ark. 1891) On trial for assault with intent to kill, it appeared that, on the occasion of defendant's assault upon A., but two shots were fired, one by each of the parties. There were no witnesses to the shooting, but the shots were heard by certain persons, who distinguished the order of firing by the character of the reports. Defendant offered to prove that before the trial it was proposed to A. that the guns used be fired in the hearing of the persons, so they might determine which gun was first fired, and that such proposition was declined. Held, that the experiment was not calculated to furnish a true test of the matter, and the rejection of the proposition by A. was not such evidence of falsehood as to warrant the admission of the testimony to discredit him.—Felker v. State, 54 Ark. 489, 16 S. W. 663.

[c] (Ga. 1893) The prosecuting witness in a criminal case may explain the delay of several months in instituting the prosecution, where defendant seeks to draw an inference from such delay unfavorable to him as a witness.—Fussell v. State, 93 Ga. 450, 21 S. E. 97.

[d] (Ill. 1857) The fact that a witness left court after his examination, and that an attachment, issued against him, is returned "not found," does not, as a presumption of law, necessarily prejudice his credibility, as raising a presumption that he avoided further examination.—Couglin v. People, 18 Ill. (8 Peck) 266, 68 Am. Dec. 541.

[e] (Ill. 1869) In an action to compel a conveyance of lands to which complainant claimed title through assignments of a certificate of purchase, the answer denied the assignment of the certificate by defendant, or by any assignee of defendant, and alleged that such assignments were fraudulent. It appeared that the witness for complainant, by whom the validity of the assignments was attempted to be proved, had written two letters in which he strongly intimated that, for a consideration, he would swear in favor of defendant; that there was money in it; and that the termination of the case depended upon his evidence. It also appeared that the assignee of defendant had left the state, and was absent at the time the assignment by him to complainant bore date. Held, that the court was justified in discrediting the testimony of the witness under such circumstances.—Richardson v. Mercer, 51 Ill. 263.

[f] (Ind. 1890) When there has been no issue joined as to a champertous agreement between plaintiff and her attorney, the agreement is a collateral matter, and a witness cannot be impeached in regard to it.—City of Elkhart v. Witman, 122 Ind. 538, 23 N. E. 796.

[g] (Iowa, 1877) An intentional suppression of material facts by a witness may be considered by the jury as affecting his credibility.—Lee v. Town of Cresco, 47 Iowa, 499.

[h] (Me. 1878) In assumpsit on an account annexed, plaintiff's refusal to show his books of account already in court, after refreshing his recollection in testifying, by an alleged memorandum therefrom, was a proper fact for the jury in determining his credibility.—Davie v. Jones, 68 Me. 393.

[i] (Mass. 1864) In replevin of goods obtained from their owner by fraud and false pretenses against one who claims under a subsequent purchase, it may be shown by cross-examination of the plaintiff that a few days before the trial he made a complaint against the person who obtained the goods from him, for obtaining them under false pretenses, and caused him to be arrested on the morning of the trial for the purpose of discrediting plaintiff's testimony.—Easter v. Allen, 90 Mass. (8 Allen) 7.

[j] (Mich. 1877) A vendor's testimony may be discredited by proof of his unexplained failure to take any steps to forfeit the contract or dispossess the vendee or demand further payment at a time when there were several unpaid and past-due installments, if the vendor's version of the contract is correct, and where he accepted several payments of considerably less amounts than he asserts to have been then due.—Rogers v. Odell, 36 Mich. 411.

[k] (Mich. 1892) In replevin for hogs seized under an attachment against plaintiff's vendor, where the attachment creditor attacks the bona fides of plaintiff's purchase, and claims that he informed plaintiff, before the latter purchased, that he owned a half interest in them, plaintiff may show that on the trial of the attachment suit the creditor abandoned all claim to the hogs, and based his right to judgment on other grounds.—Daniels v. Weeks, 90 Mich. 190, 51 N. W. 273.

[l] (Mo. 1882) A letter, suggesting to the grantor in a deed attacked as fraudulent to make false representations for the purpose of obtaining a fictitious credit, and offering to assist therein, is competent to discredit the writer as a witness.—Clark v. Finn, 12 Mo. App. 583.

[m] (N. H. 1845) On a trial for perjury, evidence that the principal witness had offered the prisoner to withdraw on receiving a certain sum of money is inadmissible.—State v. Gates, 17 N. H. 373.

[n] (N. Y. 1833) Evidence that the prosecutor had offered to leave court, and not appear as a witness against the party charged, in case he would settle with him the subject-matter of the charge, is not admissible.—People v. Genung, 11 Wend. 18, 25 Am. Dec. 594.

[o] (N. Y. 1848) Where, by a statute, a relative of the person killed is entitled to recover damages of the person killing, proof that the father had attempted by negotiation to obtain damages is no impeachment of him as a witness.—People v. Austin, 1 Parker, Cr. R. 154.

[p] (N. Y. 1889) In an action for damages for personal injuries, evidence that plaintiff offered a witness a sum of money to swear that the accident was caused by a corporation first sued for the same injury, together with plaintiff's denial and explanation, should be left to the jury to determine the amount of weight to give to plaintiff's evidence, and it is not error to refuse to charge that, if he made the offer, he is unworthy of belief.—O'Connor v. National Ice Co., 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. (24 Jones & S.) 410, 4 N. Y. Supp. 537, judgment affirmed (1890) 121 N. Y. 662, 24 N. E. 1092.

[r] (Vt. 1894) In trespass for assault on an infant, the father testified that defendant assaulted plaintiff, and broke his arm. Held, that the fact that before the suit the father offered to compromise for what he had paid out for doctor's bills incurred in treating the infant is not admissible to impeach him.—Neal v. Thornton, 67 Vt. 221, 31 Atl. 296.

[s] (Wis. 1864) A witness, and especially a party to the action, who has testified on his own behalf, may be impeached by showing that he has attempted to procure another person to give false evidence in the same suit.—Martineau v. May, 18 Wis. 54.

Omissions in former testimony, see post, § 1227.

[a] (Ala. 1855) When female relatives of the defendant, whose evidence is material to his defense, are examined on his behalf at the trial, they cannot be impeached by proof that they were present at the examination before the committing magistrate, and were not then examined as witnesses, although the same evidence was then adduced against him as upon the trial.—Brock v. State, 26 Ala. 104.

[b] (Ga. 1885) If what a landlord said about dealings with his tenants and croppers is admissible, it is also permissible to impeach him by showing his acts contradictory of his statements.—Burruss v. Smith, 75 Ga. 710.

[c] (Ga. 1893) In an action on a note against a maker and indorser, judgment was rendered against the indorser, but in favor of the maker on a plea of payment. A new trial was granted as against the maker, but the judgment stood against the indorser, and the latter was permitted to testify on the new trial that the maker had paid the note to him, and that he had paid the same to plaintiff, in cotton, before the suit was brought. Held, that it was error to reject, as evidence tending to affect the credit of the witness, the judgment rendered against him, where there was other evidence tending to show that he had made no defense, had acquiesced in the judgment, and had made no motion for a new trial, or otherwise attempted to set the same aside; since the testimony of a witness may be attacked by showing conduct on his part, in the nature of admissions inconsistent with such testimony, as well as by proof of contradictory statements.—Whitney v. Butts, 91 Ga. 124, 16 S. E. 649.

[d] (Ind. 1888) A question, asked the prosecuting witness on cross-examination, whether she had not voluntarily submitted to sexual intercourse a short time before the alleged rape, with one of defendants, who, according to her testimony, had participated in the rape, is relevant, as bearing upon her credit; and a refusal to compel her to answer is error, though the indictment had been nolle prossed as to such defendant, and the fact of such intercourse had been testified to by him.—Bedgood v. State, 115 Ind. 275, 17 N. E. 621.

[e] (Me. 1874) Where a witness testified that a deed was delivered to her by her husband for his minor son, the fact that many years after she joined with her husband in a warranty deed in which she released to a third person dower in part of the land included in the deed to her son, he being then a minor, and his deed (for aught appearing) being in her possession, may be regarded as inconsistent with her testimony and is admissible for the purpose of contradicting it.—Worthing v. Worthing, 64 Me. 335.

[f] (Mass. 1861) If a witness, who is not called as an expert, has testified to facts tending to show that a party to a contract was, at the time of making it, incompetent to contract by reason of mental imbecility, and his own opinion is not asked for or given in evidence, it is not competent to show, by way of contradiction of his testimony, that he has done acts indicating that he considered such party to be of sound mind.—Hubbell v. Bissell, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 196.

[g] (Mass. 1886) The failure of an executor to claim that a testator was of unsound mind, in a conversation about a mortgage deed, will not be evidence tending to impeach his testimony that the testator was incompetent to execute the mortgage deed.—Brigham v. Fayerweather, 140 Mass. 411, 5 N. E. 265.

[h] (Mass. 1889) In an action by a priest against the archbishop of his diocese for removing plaintiff from his office, defendant testified that he had the power to remove priests for misconduct. Plaintiff having testified that he had visited a house of ill fame, not knowing its character, and for an innocent purpose, evidence of his acts at such house, prior to the misconduct charged by defendant, which tends to contradict him, is admissible.—Fitzgerald v. Williams, 148 Mass. 462, 20 N. E. 100.

[i] (Mass. 1896) To impeach the testimony of a witness who testified that he laid gas pipes in a certain street in a proper manner, evidence that he laid pipes in another street in a different manner is admissible.—Lewis v. Boston Gaslight Co., 165 Mass. 411, 43 N. E. 178; Goodnow v. Same, Id.

[j] (Mich. 1883) In replevin by a wife for property claimed by her, but seized on execution against her husband, there was evidence that the husband had given a chattel mortgage on it; but, being called as a witness for his wife, he testified that he did not remember doing so. Held proper to put the mortgage in evidence to test his recollection, as well as credibility.—Gavigan v. Scott, 51 Mich. 373, 16 N. W. 769.

[k] (N. H. 1880) The conduct of a witness, supposed to be feigning an injury, when she supposed she was not observed, may be shown.—Chamberlin v. Ossipee, 60 N. H. 212.

[l] (N. Y. 1874) In an action against defendant as indorser of a note, where the defense was that the indorsement was a forgery, evidence that a certain witness called by plaintiff had been instrumental in causing the indictment of the maker of such note for such forgery was properly excluded as irrelevant and immaterial, when offered on the theory that it impaired the opinion of such witness, previously given in evidence, to the effect that the indorsement was genuine.—Marks v. King, 67 Barb. 225.

[m] (N. Y. 1880) Where, in an action by plaintiff, who claimed to be the widow of the decedent, to recover dower, her marriage with decedent was disputed, and her sister testified that plaintiff was married at a certain time, it was competent to show that after the date of such alleged marriage such sister executed a receipt for plaintiff and signed it with plaintiff's maiden name, since such act was inconsistent with her testimony, and was evidence for the jury's consideration on the credibility of such sister in connection with her explanation thereof.—Clark v. St. James' Church Soc., 21 Hun, 95.

[n] (N. C. 1886) The rule that an admission of the truth of a statement, made by another in the presence of a party to an action, will be inferred from his silence, applies to the prosecutor in a criminal action.—State v. Burton, 94 N. C. 947.

[o] (N. C. 1890) The rejection of the testimony of a witness for defendant that on the night of the murder other persons, and not defendant, were accused of the murder in the presence of a person who testified to receiving a letter threatening the deceased, and that he said nothing, was error, as his silence tended to show that he did not then know of the facts testified to by him.—State v. Morton, 107 N. C. 890, 12 S. E. 112, 10 L. R. A. 527.

[p] (Pa. 1822) A witness called to impeach a will on the ground of the incapacity of the testator may be asked on cross-examination whether he has not accepted a devise under the will.—Irish v. Smith, 8 Serg. & R. 573, 11 Am. Dec. 648.

[q] (Vt. 1861) The acts of a witness, and also his silence where good faith requires a disclo-

—— NECESSITY OF RECORD OF CONVICTION AS BEST EVIDENCE, § 1142.
REDIRECT EXAMINATION, § 1143.

[a] (U. S.) A party, in cross-examining a witness, has not a right to ask him any question tending to degrade him, unless it be in relation to a fact in issue in the record.—(1836) United States v. White, Fed. Cas. No. 16,676 [5 Cranch, C. C. 53]; (1838) Id., Fed. Cas. No. 16,679 [5 Cranch, C. C. 457].

[b] (U. S. 1837) A witness, upon cross-examination, is not to be questioned as to any fact tending to disgrace him which the party would not be permitted to prove aliunde.—United States v. Hudland, Fed. Cas. No. 15,411 [5 Cranch, C. C. 309].

[c] (Ark. 1853) On cross-examination of the prosecutrix of a slave for an attempt to commit a rape, the prisoner's counsel asked her if she had not proposed, before the institution of the proceedings, to take $200 from the master of the prisoner not to prosecute him. The state objecting, the question was ruled incompetent. Held, that the question was competent for the purpose only of impeaching her credibility.—Pleasant v. State, 13 Ark. (8 Eng.) 360.

[d] (Cal. 1890) It is proper on cross-examination of defendant's witness to allow a question whether she had not on a former occasion tried to induce another person to grant a request, involving a collateral matter, by promising that she would not testify for defendant, where the only object of the question is to show that she had been willing on a former occasion to suppress the testimony just given, and so to impeach her.—Barkly v. Copeland, 86 Cal. 483, 25 Pac. 1.

[e] (Ga. 1884) Where an administrator seeks to set aside an agreement of his intestate on the ground that the deceased was of insufficient mental capacity, and the administrator has testified that the deceased was always very deficient in business ability, and for many years previous to the agreement incompetent to make trades, it may be shown on cross-examination that five years before he had himself made trades with the deceased involving large interests.—Anderson v. Brown, 72 Ga. 713.

[f] (Ill. 1868) A cross-question to a detective in a capital case, "What is the character of your associates, in your business of a detective?" held objectionable, as irrelevant.—Yoe v. People, 49 Ill. 410.

[g] (Mass. 1890) A witness for the prosecution having testified on cross-examination that he had appeared in court before, a question as to the court in which he appeared was irrelevant in the absence of any record with which to identify the witness.—Commonwealth v. Mullen, 150 Mass. 394, 23 N. E. 51.

[h] (Mich. 1895) On a trial for murder, where a witness testified that deceased had tried to hire him to kill defendant, and admitted on cross-examination that he married his wife from a house of prostitution, the asking in good faith of the question whether she was a prostitute was not prejudicial to defendant, when the answer was excluded.—People v. Palmer, 105 Mich. 568, 63 N. W. 656.

[i] (Minn. 1867) In an action on a promissory note a witness was asked, on cross-examination for the purpose of affecting his credibility: "Have you more than one wife living at this time?" Held, on appeal, that the admission or exclusion of his answer, the witness not claiming any privilege, was matter of discretion with the court below, and would not be reviewed, unless abuse was shown.—McArdle v. McArdle, 12 Minn. 98 (Gil. 53).

[j] (N. H. 1877) The range of a cross-examination in disparagement of the character of the witness is within the discretion of the judge presiding at the trial.—Gutterson v. Morse, 58 N. H. 165.

[k] (N. Y. 1865) The court in which a cause is tried, in the exercise of its discretion, may exclude disparaging questions, not relevant to the issue, on the cross-examination of a witness, though put for the avowed purpose of impairing his general credit; and this may be done on the objection of the party without putting the witness to his claim of privilege.—Third Great Western Turnpike Road Co. v. Loomis, 32 N. Y. 127, 88 Am. Dec. 311.

[l] (N. Y. 1866) The extent of cross-examination of a witness for the purpose of impeaching his character is within the discretion of court, but should be rejected with great caution.—La Beau v. People, 34 N. Y. 223.

[m] (N. Y. 1891) Upon the cross-examination of the petitioner in a proceeding to appoint a committee for a person alleged to be of unsound mind, it is material and proper to ask the witness if he had not offered to settle the matter and drop the case for a money consideration.—In re Mason, 60 Hun, 46, 14 N. Y. Supp. 434.

[n] (N. Y. 1895) Where witnesses who testified in support of a charge against a policeman for receiving a bribe stated that at the time of the transactions narrated by them they were keeper and inmate, respectively, of a house of prostitution, it is error to refuse to allow them to be cross-examined as to their present whereabouts and occupations, and such refusal cannot be justified on the ground that they had reformed, and should be protected from exposure as to their past lives.—In re Cross, 85 Hun, 343, 32 N. Y. Supp. 933.

[o] (N. D. 1896) For the purpose of affecting the credibility of a witness, it is proper to ask him on cross-examination questions the answers to which may tend to degrade, disgrace, or criminate him, though he may refuse to answer any question the answer to which will tend to criminate him.—State v. Pancoast, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052, 35 L. R. A. 518.

[p] (Ohio, 1870) The limit to which a witness may be cross-examined on matters not relevant to the issue, for the purpose of judging of his character and credit from his own voluntary admissions, rests in the sound discretion of the court trying the cause.—Wroe v. State, 20 Ohio St. 460.

[q] (S. C. 1895) On a criminal trial it is error to rule that the only way to discredit a witness for the state is to put witnesses on the stand to prove that he is not worthy of belief, as the witness may be discredited by cross-examination.—State v. Wallace, 44 S. C. 357, 22 S. E. 411.

[r] (Utah, 1895) It is not error to refuse to permit a witness to be asked on cross-examination, for the purpose of discrediting her testimony, whether her husband was not in the habit of whipping her, and whether she had not had trouble with him in regard to another woman.—People v. Thiede, 11 Utah, 241, 39 Pac. 837.

[a] (U. S. 1883) Questions affecting the character of a witness are not incompetent, and may be properly allowed on cross-examination.—Brockett v. New Jersey Steamboat Co. (C. C.) 18 Fed. 156.

[b] (Iowa, 1888) No just complaint can be made when it happens that, as an incidental consequence of his answers to competent questions concerning his residence and occupation, a witness discloses facts that impair his credibility as a witness, or impeach his moral character.—State v. Pugsley, 75 Iowa, 742, 38 N. W. 498.

[c] (Mo. 1891) A witness cannot be required to testify concerning the immorality of his previous life, where such testimony does not tend directly to prove some issue.—State v. Houx, 109 Mo. 654, 19 S. W. 35, 32 Am. St. Rep. 686.

[d] (N. H. 1851) A witness on cross-examination was asked, "Do your neighbors call you 'lying Josh'?" Held, that the question was inadmissible.—Herson v. Henderson, 23 N. H. (3 Fost.) 498.

[e] (N. D. 1896) When it is sought to impair the credibility of a witness on cross-examination by showing bad moral character, the interrogatories should be confined to specific facts, and should be so framed that the witness can squarely admit or deny.—State v. Pancoast, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052, 35 L. R. A. 518.

[f] (Vt. 1868) No exception lies to the refusal of the presiding judge to admit evidence of the general bad reputation of a prosecutor for truth and veracity on his recross-examination by the defendant.—Pratt v. Rawson, 40 Vt. 183.

§ 1137. Particular traits of character or habits, and occupation.

Scope of inquiry, in general, see ante, §§ 1116–1120.

[a] (Ala. 1853) A witness may be cross-examined as to his habits of drinking.—Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44.

[b] (Cal. 1895) In a criminal case, it is error to allow the prosecution to ask one of defendant's witnesses whether he is connected with a gambling house, when the question is not called for by anything the witness has testified to.—People v. Un Dong, 106 Cal. 83, 39 Pac. 12.

[c] (Mich. 1892) Where a witness for defendant testified that plaintiff had been discharged for drunkenness, it was improper to ask, on cross-examination, if witness was a total abstainer.—Fox v. Peninsular White Lead & Color Works, 92 Mich. 243, 52 N. W. 623.

[d] (Mich. 1895) The court may allow a witness to be cross-examined as to his habits.—Johnston v. Farmers' Fire Ins. Co. of York, 106 Mich. 96, 64 N. W. 5.

[e] (Mont. 1895) It was proper to refuse to permit a witness to be asked, for the purpose of affecting her credibility, whether she was addicted to the morphine habit, unless it was intended to show that she was under the influence of the drug at the time the events happened about which she was testifying, or that her powers of recollection were impaired thereby.—State v. Gleim, 17 Mont. 17, 41 Pac. 998, 52 Am. St. Rep. 655, 31 L. R. A. 294.

[f] (N. Y. 1889) On the cross-examination of defendant in a criminal case, he may be interrogated as to his possession of certain dies and plates, and as to whether he had not visited an engraver to obtain a die for a certain figure, in order to impeach his credibility by connecting him with a nefarious occupation.—People v. Giblin, 115 N. Y. 96, 21 N. E. 1062, 4 L. R. A. 757.

[g] (N. Y. 1893) It is competent to ask a witness who testifies for defendant, and who was an eyewitness of the homicide, as to her habit of using opium, as tending to affect her credibility.—People v. Webster, 68 Hun, 11, 22 N. Y. Supp. 634, judgment affirmed (1893) 139 N. Y. 73, 34 N. E. 730.

[h] (S. C. 1891) A witness who testified for the defense that the deceased was of a violent character, and the accused of a peaceable character, may be asked, on cross-examination, as to his own character for violence, for the purpose of showing his ability to judge concerning that of others.—State v. Merriman, 34 S. C. 16, 12 S. E. 619.

Scope of inquiry, see ante, § 1121.

[a] (Ala. 1871) A female witness in a criminal case may be asked on cross-examination whether she is not a person of such ill fame as to exclude her from society, where such ill fame arises from a want of veracity or chastity, as such facts render her less worthy of belief.—Boles v. State, 46 Ala. 204.

[b] (Iowa, 1895) Where, on a murder trial, a witness for the state testified only that defendant was at a certain house on the night of the homicide, defendant was not prejudiced by the exclusion of questions on cross-examination as to whether the house was not a sporting house, and the witness a prostitute, where it was not disputed that defendant was at the house at the time testified to, or that he was present when deceased was killed.—State v. Weems, 96 Iowa, 426, 65 N. W. 387.

[c] (Tex. 1895) In an action to determine the right to administer upon an estate it was competent to inquire of a witness, on cross-examination, concerning her character for chastity, to show the proper weight to be given her testimony.—Ingersol v. McWillie, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 543, 30 S. W. 56.

[d] (Tex. 1896) It may be shown on cross-examination, to discredit the witness, that she was the kept woman of a codefendant.—Thompson v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 511, 34 S. W. 629.

[e] (Va. 1848) On a trial for felony, the counsel for the prisoner will not be allowed, on the cross-examination of a female witness for the commonwealth, to ask her "whether she is not generally reputed in the country to be a woman of unchaste habits, or whether she was not, or had not been, unchaste."—Howel v. Commonwealth, 5 Grat. 664.

[f] (Wash. 1891) For the purposes of impeachment a witness may be asked on cross-examination if she is a prostitute.—State v. Coella, 3 Wash. St. 99, 28 Pac. 28.

Privilege of witness, see ante, §§ 1018–1037.

Right to show particular act or facts in general, see ante, §§ 1125, 1131.

[a] (U. S. 1895) The credibility of a witness cannot be impeached by asking her whether she has not had some difficulty with her husband.—Thiede v. Utah, 159 U. S. 510, 16 Sup. Ct. 62, 40 L. Ed. 237.

[aa] (U. S. 1875) A customs officer, who has given evidence for defendant on a prosecution for smuggling, cannot be interrogated as to violations by him of the revenue laws not connected with the charge in question, for the purpose of discrediting him.—United States v. Harris, Fed. Cas. No. 15,314 [12 Blatchf. 434].

[b] (Ala. 1853) An unmarried woman may be asked on cross-examination, although she has a right to refuse an answer, whether she has any children.—Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44.

[bb] (Ala. 1882) A witness may be asked on cross-examination, for the sake of affecting his credibility, whether, two years before, in another county, his character had not been shown to be that of a hog thief.—Baker v. Trotter, 73 Ala. 277.

[c] (Ark. 1855) In a criminal prosecution the prosecutrix cannot be compelled to answer questions tending to criminate and discredit her.—Pleasant v. State, 15 Ark. 624.

[cc] (Cal. 1861) In a suit for divorce by husband against his wife, her adultery with one C. was alleged. Held, that on cross-examination of C., questions as to the conduct of himself and defendant toward each other when traveling, and as to their intimacy since suit brought, were proper, as affecting his credit and enabling the jury to see what effect these things had, or might have had, upon his evidence.—Fuller v. Fuller, 17 Cal. 605.

[d] (Cal. 1888) A witness cannot be asked whether he was not impeached as a witness on the trial of another cause, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2051, 2052, providing that witnesses may be impeached by contradiction, evidence of general reputation or conviction of felony, and former statements about which he has first been questioned.—Cockrill v. Hall, 76 Cal. 192, 18 Pac. 318.

[dd] (Cal. 1888) A witness cannot be asked on cross-examination, whether she is not in the habit of playing cards for money, and asking for money from her daughter for that purpose, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051, providing that evidence of a particular wrongful act is not admissible to impeach a witness.—People v. Bowers, 18 Pac. 660.

[e] (Cal. 1889) Since a witness cannot be impeached by evidence of particular wrongful acts, it is not proper to question the witness as to such matters on cross-examination.—Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633, 22 Pac. 26, 131.

[ee] (Cal. 1895) On a prosecution for vagrancy, defendant cannot be required to testify as to whether he had at another time and place passed under an assumed name.—People v. Denby, 108 Cal. 54, 40 Pac. 1051.

[f] (Conn. 1881) It is not error to permit defendant's witness to be asked against defendant's objection as to whether he lived with a woman who kept a house of ill fame when the court instructs the witness that he may answer the question or not as he chooses.—State v. Ward, 49 Conn. 429.

[ff] (Dak. 1887) The defendant in a murder trial insisted that he was acting in self-defense. The only witness who was present at the shooting was the wife of the deceased, and her testimony was in direct opposition to that of the defendant. On her cross-examination, the defense offered to prove by her that she had previously been married to one man, from whom she had never been divorced; that she then lived with another, who, by reason of her conduct, became jealous, and shot her, afterwards killing himself; that she and the deceased lived together as man and wife until the previous fall, and that they were married by reason of the regulations governing the military reservation on which they lived. This offer was rejected. Held error; the rejected questions were proper cross-examination for the purpose of impeaching her testimony.—United States v. Wood, 4 Dak. 455, 33 N. W. 59.

[g] (Ind. 1885) On cross-examination a witness cannot be discredited by eliciting proof of specific acts of misconduct or immorality.—Bessette v. State, 101 Ind. 85.

[gg] (Ind. 1890) Defendant asked a witness for plaintiff on cross-examination if his general reputation for truth had not been impeached in a previous case, and if a suit for damages was not pending against him on account of his false swearing in that case. Held, that an objection to said question was properly sustained, as it was not proper cross-examination, was in regard to an irrelevant matter, and was not a proper method of impeachment.—Pennsylvania Co. v. Bray, 125 Ind. 229, 25 N. E. 439.

[h] (Ind. 1895) A witness cannot be impeached by showing particular acts of good or bad conduct; and, although it may be proper under extraordinary circumstances to ask a witness questions on cross-examination for the purpose of showing his character and antecedents, this is a matter resting in the discretion of the court.—Blough v. Parry, 144 Ind. 463, 40 N. E. 70, 43 N. E. 560.

[hh] (Iowa, 1866) It is improper to ask a witness on cross-examination if he was not successfully impeached as a witness on the trial of another case.—State v. Wooderd, 20 Iowa, 541.

[i] (Iowa, 1886) On an issue as to the satisfaction of notes, the testimony of a witness was based mainly on his examination of the books of the plaintiff, whose bookkeeper he was. When asked, on cross-examination, if he had not embezzled his employer's funds and falsified the books to conceal his embezzlement, he refused to answer. Held, that neither the questions nor refusal to answer should go to the jury.—Slocum v. Knosby, 70 Iowa, 75, 30 N. W. 18.

[ii] (La. 1846) Where a witness, to whom a question had been propounded while under cross-examination, for the purpose of impeaching his credibility, by showing that he had been guilty of gross fraud on another occasion, voluntarily answers it, and thereby admits his own turpitude, notwithstanding the objections of the party by whom he was introduced, his answer cannot be excluded on the ground of irrelevance.—Fink v. Lewis, 1 La. Ann. 395.

[j] (Mass. 1858) A witness who testifies that he absconded to avoid arrest for debt cannot be cross-examined upon the amount of money in his possession at the time of his flight, in order to show that he ran away through fear of a criminal prosecution, and thus to affect his credibility.—Quinsigamond Bank v. Hobbs, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 250.

[jj] (Mass. 1859) A party to an action, who is called as a witness, cannot be asked on cross-examination, in order to affect his credibility, about his part in transactions irrelevant to the issue on trial.—Holbrook v. Dow, 78 Mass. (12 Gray) 357.

[k] (Mass. 1888) On trial of one charged with illegal sales of liquors, the state having introduced evidence tending to prove that, although defendant was an employé, he had sometimes assumed control during absence of the proprietor, it was not error to ask a witness for the defense, who testified that he had often visited the saloon, and that the proprietor was always there, if witness was not drunk, at about the time in question, in the vicinity of the saloon.—Commonwealth v. Brady, 147 Mass. 583, 18 N. E. 568.

[l] (Mich. 1883) It is improper, on a criminal prosecution, to ask the wife of the accused on cross-examination if she was not concerned in the larceny of a pair of shoes.—People v. Wolcott, 51 Mich. 612, 17 N. W. 78.

[m] (Mich. 1892) On a trial for larceny a witness for the people admitted that, though not the wife of defendant, she had been living with him as such, and was so doing when she testified that he committed the offense charged. On cross-examination, to show her bad moral character, she was asked if she had ever been married or ever had a child; if she had not been in a family way in her mother's house, some time ago; and if she did not have a child there. To each question she answered, "No." The court refused to permit any further questions in that line. Held, that the court did not abuse its discretion.—People v. Harrison, 93 Mich 594, 53 N. W. 725.

[mm] (Mich. 1895) Questions to a prosecuting witness on cross-examination as to whether he had been arrested for being drunk, and how many times he had been drunk, since the trouble, are properly excluded as irrelevant.—People v. Sutherland, 104 Mich. 468, 62 N. W. 566.

[n] (Minn. 1871) Allowing irrelevant questions to be put to a witness on cross-examination, tending to criminate, is within the discretion of the trial court.—State v. McCartey, 17 Minn. 76 (Gil. 54).

[nn] (Mo. 1893) It is proper cross-examination, as bearing on the credibility of a witness, to ask her if she had not kept girls for the purpose of prostitution.—State v. Hack, 118 Mo. 92, 23 S. W. 1089.

[o] (Mo. 1895) The court may, in its discretion, refuse to compel a witness to answer questions concerning his relations to his wife before their marriage, for the purpose of discrediting his testimony.—Goins v. City of Moberly, 127 Mo. 116, 29 S. W. 985.

[oo] (N. H. 1879) It is proper to refuse to permit a witness to be cross-examined as to his religious belief for the purpose of discrediting his testimony.—Free v. Buckingham, 59 N. H. 219.

[p] (N. Y. 1857) On the trial of an indictment for rape, it is not competent to prove acts of illicit sexual intercourse between the prosecutrix and persons other than defendant, though the prosecutrix had previously been asked on cross-examination in relation to such illicit acts and had denied them, as the character of a prosecutrix for chastity cannot be impeached by particular facts.—People v. Jackson, 3 Parker, Cr. R. 391.

[pp] (N. Y. 1859) The court has a discretionary power to interfere, and protect witnesses against any inquiries not relevant to the issues, as, for example, concerning a single act of bad conduct on their part.—Varona v. Socarras, 8 Abb. Prac. 302.

[q] (N. Y. 1866) In an action for damages for assault and battery, plaintiff could not be asked on cross-examination whether a certain person had not obtained a verdict against him for assault and battery, as the inquiry, if permissible, should have been as to the specific act of the witness, and not as to the litigation.—Yager v. Person, 42 Hun, 400.

[qq] (N. Y. 1867) It is within the discretion of the court to permit counsel on cross-examination to ask a witness whether he has not sworn falsely in a particular suit, or on some occasion, but not whether third persons have accused him of swearing falsely.—Hannah v. McKellip, 49 Barb. 342.

[r] (N. Y. 1867) Where, in an action on a promissory note, the question was whether it was given in settlement of the charge of rape, and the person on whom the offense was alleged to have been committed gave evidence tending to show that it was not given in settlement of the criminal offense, it was held to be competent to inquire of the witness whether at the trial of the indictment therefor she did not admit hanging out signals to induce the prisoner to visit her; such acts being proper for the consideration of the jury in estimating her character.—Shepard v. Parker, 36 N. Y. 517.

[rr] (N. Y. 1889) On a trial for assault in the first degree, defendant's counsel, for the purpose of impeaching the credibility of the complaining witness, asked him, on cross-examination, whether he had not procured the discharge of 30 workmen, which was proposed to be followed by testimony showing that he had done so by giving false information to their employer. Held properly disallowed.—People v. Ryan, 55 Hun, 214, 8 N. Y. Supp. 241, 7 N. Y. Cr. R. 448.

[s] (N. Y. 1890) At the trial of an action to recover damages for loss of services of plaintiff's infant daughter by reason of her seduction by defendant while a domestic in his family, where it appears that the girl made no disclosure to her parents for 18 months, and not until after she had been accused of taking things from defendant's residence, it is prejudicial error to prevent defendant from fully cross-examining her in respect to the articles which she was charged with taking, for the purpose of impairing her credibility as a witness.—Zopfi v. Smith, 55 Hun, 547, 8 N. Y. Supp. 876.

[ss] (N. Y. 1892) In an action to recover damages for an assault, it is improper to ask defendant, on cross-examination, "How many rows have you had within five or six years?"—Depan v. Wallace, 63 Hun, 632, 18 N. Y. Supp. 274.

[sss] (N. Y. 1895) Disparaging questions put to a witness called by plaintiff, as to his relations with plaintiff in regard to the misappropriation of moneys collected by him as agent, are not admissible.—Doolittle v. Gambee, 88 Hun, 364, 34 N. Y. Supp. 861, following Third Great Western Turnpike Road Co. v. Loomis (1865) 32 N. Y. 127, 88 Am. Dec. 311.

[t] (N. Y. 1895) The extent to which a witness may be cross-examined in regard to the commission of crimes for which he has not been tried, for the purpose of impeaching his credibility, is largely within the discretion of the trial court.—People v. Williams, 92 Hun, 354, 36 N. Y. Supp. 511.

[tt] (N. Y. 1896) It is not competent, on cross-examination, to ask a witness, for the purpose of impeaching him, if he had not recently been taken out of his sulky, at a certain race course, for "crooked driving," as such question is in respect to the acts of third persons.—

Lindsley v. Miller, 8 App. Div. 127, 39 N. Y. Supp. 393.

[ttt] (N. C. 1854) A witness, on cross-examination, may be asked, in order to discredit him, if he had not committed perjury in another state.—State v. March, 46 N. C. 526.

[u] (N. C. 1886) A woman was on trial for adultery with A. The principal witness for the prosecution was B. The woman swore that B. had had sexual intercourse with her. This B. denied. Held, that he could not be asked, for the purpose of discrediting him, whether, since his marriage, he had at any time had sexual intercourse with any other woman than his wife.—State v. Gay, 94 N. C. 814.

[uu] (N. C. 1891) On a trial for slandering an "innocent woman," after the examination of the prosecutrix, the court refused to allow defendant to ask her how many times she and her husband had separated, and the cause. Held that, since defendant had fair opportunity for cross-examination, it was discretionary with the court to allow this question.—State v. Morris, 109 N. C. 820, 13 S. E. 877.

[uuu] (N. C. 1893) In an action for slander, defendant may be asked, on cross-examination, if he did not compromise an action by him for slander, for $175, without requiring defendant in that action to retract the charge, as such question is competent as tending to impeach him as a witness to show he had put a low estimate on his own character.—Byrd v. Hudson, 113 N. C. 203, 18 S. E. 209.

[v] (Or. 1867) No error lies to the refusal below to permit the following question on cross-examination of a state witness on trial of an indictment for a murder alleged to have been committed in an affray: "Were you present at a public meeting called for the purpose of hanging these prisoners without a trial?"—State v. Fitzhugh, 2 Or. 227.

[vv] (Or. 1886) A witness may be cross-examined as to certain of his acts in order to lay the foundation for impeaching his testimony, where, if the facts elicited were true, the witness' acts were inconsistent with his testimony. —Krewson v. Purdom, 13 Or. 563, 11 Pac. 281.

[vvv] (Or. 1889) On a murder trial a witness was asked, on cross-examination, "Did you not kill a man in Chicago, and flee from there?" Held, that it was within the discretion of the court to exclude such inquiry.—State v. Chee Gong, 17 Or. 635, 21 Pac. 882.

[w] (Pa. 1857) A witness cannot be asked on cross-examination whether, on the trial of another cause, he had committed willful and corrupt perjury.—Elliott v. Boyles, 31 Pa. (7 Casey) 65.

[ww] (Tenn. 1896) A witness may be questioned on cross-examination as to recent specific acts of moral turpitude on his part, not involving a criminal offense, for the purpose of affecting his credibility.—Zanone v. State, 97 Tenn. (13 Pickle) 101, 36 S. W. 711, 35 L. R. A. 556.

[www] (Tex. 1889) A question asked of a witness on cross-examination, as to whether witness did not, on the trial of one for rape, endeavor to get this defendant to procure false testimony against the defendant in the rape case, was properly disallowed, as immaterial.—McCoy v. State, 27 Tex. App. 415, 11 S. W. 454.

[x] (Tex. 1892) Where defendant called a witness, who contradicted plaintiff in regard to the accident, it was error for the court to require the witness to state, over defendant's objection, that he (the witness) was a deserter from the United States army, since the testimony was irrelevant, and not the proper way to impeach the witness.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 83 Tex. 628, 19 S. W. 151.

[xx] (Tex. 1894) On indictment for rape, defendant's wife, having testified in his behalf, may be asked if she had not lived with defendant before marriage as his mistress.—Exon v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 461, 26 S. W. 1088.

[xxx] (Tex. 1895) On prosecution for rape, prosecutrix's father, who was a witness for the state, may be asked, on cross-examination, if he did not offer, on payment of a certain sum, to leave the state, and not prosecute defendant, for the purpose of discrediting his testimony.—Jenkins v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 201, 29 S. W. 1078.

[y] (Tex. 1895) The cross-examination of a witness for the purpose of affecting his credibility as to embezzlements committed by him ten years previously may be properly excluded on the ground that such embezzlements are too remote.—Linz v. Skinner, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 512, 32 S. W. 915.

[z] (Va. 1848) On a trial for felony, the counsel for the prisoner having, on the cross-examination of a female witness, asked her if she was married, to which she answered in the negative, will not be allowed to ask her how old her youngest child was, or whether the said child was not a bastard.—Howel v. Commonwealth, 5 Grat. 664.

[zz] (W. Va. 1871) It is improper to ask a female witness—even with a view to impeach her upon her statement that she has been twice married, and that her first husband is dead—whether she did not marry her last husband before the death of the first.—Forney v. Ferrell, 4 W. Va. 729, following Howel v. Commonwealth (1848) 5 Grat. 664.

[zzz] (Wis. 1857) On trial of an indictment for adultery, a witness for the prosecution cannot be required on cross-examination to answer the question whether defendant or any other person had ever produced an abortion on her.—Ketchingman v. State, 6 Wis. 426.

[zzzz] (Wis. 1890) In an action for libel for sending demands for the payment of a debt through the mail, inclosed in envelopes on which was printed the words "For collecting bad debts," plaintiff was asked, on cross-examination, "How many men in this city did you owe besides defendant?" Held, that the question was incompetent because of its specific nature, instead of being directed to plaintiff's character and reputation.—Muetze v. Tuteur, 77 Wis. 236, 46 N. W. 123, 20 Am. St. Rep. 115, 9 L. R. A. 86.

§ 1140. Accusation or indictment for crime.

Cross-examination with reference to record for purpose of identification, see post, § 1162.

Right to show accusation or indictment in general, see ante, § 1126.

[a] (U. S. 1887) Plaintiff's husband was asked, on cross-examination, whether he was not out upon bail, charged with an assault with intent to murder. Held, that such question was within the discretion of the court, and its exclusion could not be claimed as error.—Plinsky v. Germania Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (C. C.) 32 Fed. 47.

[b] (Ala. 1894) On trial for assault with intent to murder, where it appeared that the prosecution was not begun for several months after the commission of the offense, and the one assaulted testified that he began it immediately after being informed by one who was a witness on the trial that she heard defendant and another, on the night of the assault, conspiring to rob him, evidence obtained on cross-examination of such witness that, a short time prior to giving such information, she had been arrested on a criminal charge preferred by defendant, is admissible to impair the credibility of her testimony in regard to the conspiracy.—Yarbrough v. State, 105 Ala. 43, 16 South. 758.

[c] (Cal. 1874) When a witness, called by the people in a criminal case, on his cross-examination, testifies that he is in jail, and, for the purpose of affecting his credibility, is then asked if he is not in jail charged with housebreaking, it is in the discretion of the court either to overrule or sustain an objection to the question; and if there are no facts which show an abuse of this discretion, a new trial will not be granted.—People v. Ah Who, 49 Cal. 32.

[d] (Cal. 1884) A witness' reputation cannot be attacked by asking him if he has ever been "arrested" for any crime.—People v. Elster, 3 Pac. 884.

[e] (Iowa, 1882) Code 1873, §§ 3648, 3649, providing that a witness may be interrogated as to his previous conviction of felony, and that his general moral character may be shown, for the purpose of impeaching his credibility, will not admit of his being asked whether he has been indicted for assault and battery, since that does not necessarily impair his moral character.—Kitteringham v. Dance, 58 Iowa, 632, 12 N. W. 612.

[f] (Ky. 1892) On a prosecution for murder, it is proper, in order to discredit a witness for the state, to ask him if he had not been indicted for a robbery and confessed the crime, if he did not stand indicted for conspiracy, and if he had not offered to swear for accused if he were assisted to get rid of the conspiracy charge.—Roberts v. Commonwealth, 20 S. W. 267.

[g] (Mass. 1854) An attorney at law, who testifies on the trial of an action on a promissory note to the time when the defendant's signature was affixed to the note, cannot be asked on cross-examination whether he has not been expelled from the bar, after a hearing before the court, because he had committed perjury, and whether the judge, upon whom the hearing was had, did not intimate to him that he had sworn falsely.—Smith v. Castles, 67 Mass. (1 Gray) 108.

[h] (Mich. 1881) In trover for converting pension money collected by defendant, a witness for plaintiff cannot be cross-examined as to whether he had ever been arrested for conspiring to procure fraudulent pensions.—Marx v. Hilsendegen, 46 Mich. 336, 9 N. W. 439.

[i] (Mich. 1882) A witness may be cross-examined, within the proper discretion of the court, not only as to whether he has ever been convicted of crime, but as to any serious charge brought against him.—Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 413, 11 N. W. 221.

[ii] (Mich. 1882) In a civil action for an indecent assault it is proper to cross-examine defendant as to whether he was ever arrested on a criminal charge made by a woman, and whether he settled it by payment of money.—Leland v. Kauth, 47 Mich. 508, 11 N. W. 292.

[j] (Mich. 1883) In a criminal prosecution it is improper to ask a witness for accused if he did not know that a warrant had been issued for him, and to permit him to be taken in custody as he was leaving the stand, as such proceeding was entirely unnecessary to any proper purpose.—People v. Wolcott, 51 Mich. 612, 17 N. W. 78.

[k] (Mich. 1883) In a criminal prosecution it is improper to ask a witness for the accused if he had ever been arrested and if he did not know that a warrant had been issued for his arrest.—People v. Wolcott, 51 Mich. 612, 17 N. W. 78.

[l] (Neb. 1894) On a trial for murder, it is not an abuse of discretion to permit a witness for defendant to be asked, on cross-examination, if he had been arrested for vagrancy, drunkenness, and other misdemeanors.—Hill v. State, 42 Neb. 503, 60 N. W. 916.

[m, n] (N. Y. 1885) A witness cannot be asked whether he has ever been indicted.—Kober v. Miller, 38 Hun, 184.

[o] (N. Y. 1886) A witness who, on cross-examination, admits that he has been arrested, cannot be asked on what charge.—Smith v. Mulford, 42 Hun, 347.

[p] (N. Y. 1888) In an action against a street car company for injury to a passenger, the driver, having been called to contradict the testimony of plaintiff, may be asked whether he had not been discharged by a previous employer for embezzling money, as tending to show bad moral character, and break down his credibility.—Allen v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. (City Ct. N. Y.) 2 N. Y. Supp. 738.

[q] (N. Y. 1891) It was not competent, on an accounting, to discredit defendant by asking him if he was under indictment for perjury.—Van Bokkelein v. Berdell, 130 N. Y. 141, 29 N. E. 254, reversing (1888) 33 Hun, 605, 3 N. Y. Supp. 333.

[r] (N. Y. 1891) After the impeaching evidence was in, defendant testified that there was much ill feeling between him and certain of the impeaching witnesses—as to one of them, that a false report had been circulated that defendant had slandered his daughter; also that he had slandered other girls; and that these false reports had created bitter feeling in the vicinity. Held, that it was proper to ask him on cross-examination if he had not also been charged with having committed adultery with a girl there.—Van Bokkelein v. Berdell, 50 Hun, 605, 3 N. Y. Supp. 333, judgment reversed (1891) 130 N. Y. 141, 29 N. E. 254.

[s] (N. Y. 1891) Evidence was given tending to impeach defendant, and he was asked if he had not been indicted for perjury, and if certain suits had not been decided against him. He admitted the indictment, and denied the result of the suits as claimed. Held, that the evidence was harmless.—Van Bokkelein v. Berdell, 50 Hun, 605, 3 N. Y. Supp. 333, judgment reversed (1891) 130 N. Y. 141, 29 N. E. 254.

[t] (N. Y. 1892) While, on cross-examination, a witness may be required to testify that he has been convicted of a crime, it is not competent to compel him to testify that he has been indicted, simply.—Sullivan v. Newman, 63 Hun, 625, 17 N. Y. Supp. 424.

[u] (N. Y. 1892) In an action on a note an objection to the question, "Were you ever arrested?" propounded to a witness, was properly sustained, since the mere fact of an arrest could not lessen his credibility.—V. Loewer's Gambrinus Brewery Co. v. Bachman (Com. Pl.) 18 N. Y. Supp. 138.

[v] (Or. 1886) Subject to the discretion of the court, and to the witness' right to claim his privilege, he may be compelled to answer on cross-examination, whether he had not been arrested for robbery.—State v. Bacon, 13 Or. 143, 9 Pac. 393, 57 Am. Rep. 8.

[w] (Tex. 1893) For the purpose of impeaching a witness, he may be asked if he is not under indictment for theft, and the fact that he has been released on bail does not relieve him from answering the question.—Carroll v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 431, 24 S. W. 100, 40 Am. St Rep. 786.

[x] (Tex. 1895) The statement of a witness on cross-examination, that he had been indicted for embezzlement, and was then in jail awaiting trial, was admissible as bearing on his credibility.—Texas & P. Coal Co. v. Lawson, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 491, 31 S. W. 843.

[y] (Utah, 1893) Where a witness for the defense testified that defendant was a peaceable, law-abiding man, it was competent to interrogate such witness as to whether he (witness) had ever been indicted, in order to test his credibility.—People v. Hite, 8 Utah, 461, 33 Pac. 254.

[z] (Va. 1848) On the cross-examination of a female witness for the commonwealth, on a trial for felony, the witness was asked if, while she lived with A., she was not accused of stealing or taking things not her own, and whether, when she left there, she was not followed, and the things taken from her. Held, that it was proper for the court to inform the witness that she was not bound to answer the question unless she thought proper.—Howell v. Commonwealth, 5 Grat. 664.

[zz] (Wis. 1891) The question to a witness, whether he was ever arrested for fast driving in a certain place, and an offer to show by the record that he had pleaded guilty to a violation of the ordinance of that place against fast driving, are properly excluded, since the question is not sufficiently definite to lay a foundation for the introduction of the record to contradict the witness if he should deny the fast driving.—Sieber v. Amunson, 78 Wis. 679, 47 N. W. 1126.

Right to show conviction or imprisonment, in general, see ante, § 1127.

[a, b] (Cal. 1886) A party seeking to impeach a witness may ask him with respect to a judgment in a prosecution for felony against him, and this includes the right to ask him whether he was convicted of felony, and, if so, what sentence was imposed on him.—People v. Rodrigo, 69 Cal. 601, 11 Pac. 481.

[c] (Cal. 1886) A witness cannot be asked, upon cross-examination, for the purpose of discrediting him, whether he has been arrested and convicted of a misdemeanor, as Code Civ. Proc. § 2051, limits such evidence to conviction of felony.—People v. Carolan, 71 Cal. 195, 12 Pac. 52.

[d] (Cal. 1890) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051, providing that a witness cannot be impeached by evidence of particular wrongful acts, it is improper to ask a witness, on cross-examination, whether he is not the person who was arrested for beating a woman of the town, and who appeared, pleaded guilty, and paid a fine therefor.—Jones v. Duchow, 87 Cal. 109, 23 Pac. 371, 25 Pac. 256.

[e] (Cal. 1893) A witness cannot on cross-examination, for the purpose of impeaching him, be asked as to his having been in jail, etc., as, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051, he cannot be questioned as to particular wrongful acts.—Clements v. McGinn, 33 Pac. 920.

[f] (Cal. 1895) In order to impeach the credibility of a witness, he may be asked if he was ever convicted of a felony, and, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051, the name of the particular felony may be mentioned.—People v. Chin Hane, 108 Cal. 597, 41 Pac. 697.

[g] (Ga. 1889) The court did not err in admitting the answer of defendant's witness, who of his own motion answered that he had served time in the penitentiary, though defendant's counsel had objected to the question.—Taylor v. State, 83 Ga. 647, 10 S. E. 442.

[h] (Ill. 1889) Under Rev. St. c. 51, § 1, providing that the fact of a conviction of a witness for a crime may be proven like any fact not of record, either by the witness himself or by any other witness cognizant of such conviction, as impeaching testimony, on a claim for services sought to be collected from the estate of a deceased person, it is proper as affecting the credibility of the claimant to allow him to be interrogated on cross-examination as to whether he was ever convicted of a crime or confined in the penitentiary.—Handlin's Estate v. Law, 34 Ill. App. 84.

[i] (Iowa, 1888) Under Code 1873, § 3648, providing that "a witness may be interrogated as to his previous conviction for a felony," etc., the question, "Were you ever convicted of a crime?" is improper, a crime not necessarily being a felony.—Hanners v. McClelland, 74 Iowa, 318, 37 N. W. 389.

[j] (Iowa, 1890) A witness may be questioned on cross-examination as to his past and present residence, even though such questioning elicit the fact that he has been an inmate of the county jail.—State v. Row, 81 Iowa, 138, 46 N. W. 872.

[k] (Mich. 1867) It is competent, within the discretion of the presiding judge, on cross-examination, to ask the witness whether he has ever been confined in the state prison, and to sift thoroughly his character and antecedents.—Wilbur v. Flood, 16 Mich. 40, 93 Am. Dec. 203.

[m] (Mo. 1893) In a criminal prosecution a witness may be asked whether he has been convicted of a crime, to discredit his testimony.—State v. Taylor, 22 S. W. 806, following State v. Miller (1890) 100 Mo. 606, 13 S. W. 832, 1051.

[n] (Mo. 1894) For the purpose of discrediting a witness, he may be asked if he has not been in jail for stealing.—State v. Pratt, 121 Mo. 566, 26 S. W. 556.

[o] (Mo. 1894) So, it may be asked him if he was not put in jail for assaulting and beating a woman.—State v. Pratt, 121 Mo. 566, 26 S. W. 556.

[p] (Neb. 1884) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 330, providing that facts which have hitherto caused the exclusion of testimony may be shown to lessen its credibility, and section 338, providing that "a witness may be interrogated as to his previous conviction of a felony," a witness cannot be asked whether he had previously "pleaded guilty" of a penitentiary offense.—Marion v. State, 16 Neb. 349, 20 N. W. 289.

[q] (Nev. 1876) The rule that a witness may be questioned as to matters that impair his credit, subject to his right to refuse to answer, does not extend to asking if he has been convicted of assaults and batteries; for this does not legitimately affect his credibility.—State v. Huff, 11 Nev. 17.

[r] (N. J. 1807) A witness need not answer a question as to whether he had been convicted and punished for larceny.—State v. Bailey, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 415.

[s] (N. Y. 1869) A witness cannot be asked whether he has been convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary, although he does not himself object.—In re Real, 55 Barb. 186, 7 Abb Prac. (N. S.) 26.

[t] (N. Y. 1870) A witness upon cross-examination may be asked whether he has been in jail, the penitentiary, or state prison, or any other place that would tend to impair his credibility, and how much of his life he has passed in such places. The extent of the cross-examination of this character is somewhat in the discretion of the court, and must necessarily be so to prevent abuse. This discretion should be liberally exercised with a view to arrive at truth.—Real v. People, 42 N. Y. 270.

[u] (N. Y. 1871) A witness cannot be questioned on cross-examination as to his having been convicted of crime, for the purpose of impeaching his testimony.—Tifft v. Moor, 59 Barb. 619.

[v] (N. Y. 1889) Under Pen. Code, § 714, which permits a witness' conviction of a crime to be shown upon cross-examination, without production of the record, a witness who has stated how long it is since he came out of prison may be asked what crime he was convicted of.—Spiegel v. Hays, 118 N. Y. 660, 22 N. E. 1105.

[w] (S. C. 1891) It is competent, on cross-examination, for the purpose of attacking the witness' credibility, to ask him whether he has ever been convicted of larceny.—State v. Merriman, 34 S. C. 16, 12 S. E. 619; Id., 34 S. C. 576, 13 S. E. 328.

[x] (Tex. 1886) For the purpose of discrediting him, a witness may be asked if he has not been in the penitentiary, and was not sent there from a certain county.—Lights v. State, 21 Tex. App. 308, 17 S. W. 428, overruling State v. Ezell (1874) 41 Tex. 35.

[y] (Tex. 1895) A witness may be impeached by asking him on cross-examination as to whether he is at the time working out a fine for theft.—Sentell v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 260, 30 S. W. 226.

[z] (Va. 1882) The question to a witness, "Were you not arrested, tried, and convicted?" before a certain magistrate's court, no offense being specified, does not indicate that he was convicted of any offense involving his character, nor his truth on oath: and such question was improper.—Langhorne v. Commonwealth, 76 Va. 1012.

[zz] (Wis. 1853) It is not proper to ask a witness whether he has ever been convicted of a felony.—Kirschner v. State, 9 Wis. 140.

Accused as witness in criminal prosecution, see post, § 1148.

[a] (Ala. 1877) A witness may be asked on cross-examination if he had not pleaded guilty of stealing from a store in a certain place, where it appears that the plea referred to was before a justice of the peace, and it is not shown that any record was made of it.—Childs v. State, 58 Ala. 349.

[b] (Ga. 1873) It is not competent to show by a witness, for the purpose of degrading and impeaching him, that he had, during the term of the court then in session, pleaded guilty to a criminal offense. The record of the plea of guilty is the highest and best evidence.—Johnson v. State, 48 Ga. 116.

[c] (Md. 1894) A witness may be asked, for the purpose of impairing his credibility, if he had been convicted of any crime, without first introducing the record evidence of such conviction.—McLaughlin v. Mencke, 80 Md. 83, 30 Atl. 603.

[d] (Mass. 1855) The fact that a witness has been in the house of correction cannot be proved by cross-examination of the witness, but must be proved by the record of his conviction.—Commonwealth v. Quin, 71 Mass. (5 Gray) 478.

[e] (Mass. 1894) A witness cannot be asked, for the purpose of impeachment, whether he has ever been in jail, unless the record of a conviction be produced.—Commonwealth v. Sullivan, 161 Mass. 59, 36 N. E. 583.

[f] (Mo. 1890) It was not error to ask a witness whether he had not been in the penitentiary two or three times. When the purpose is only to discredit the witness, it is not necessary to produce the record to prove a previous conviction.—State v. Miller, 100 Mo. 606, 13 S. W. 832, 1051; Id., 14 S. W. 311.

[g] (Mo. 1893) For the purpose of discrediting a witness he may be asked whether he has not been arrested and sent to jail for stealing, as, in such case, it is not necessary to produce the records.—State v. Taylor, 118 Mo. 153, 24 S. W. 449.

[h] (Mo. 1894) It is proper in a criminal cause to ask a witness, for the purpose of discrediting his testimony, how often he has been in the county jail on sentence for crime, and it is unnecessary in such case to produce the record of convictions.—State v. Martin, 124 Mo. 514, 28 S. W. 12.

[i] (Mo. 1895) The record of a conviction is the best evidence thereof; and questions to a witness as to whether he had been convicted, or did not plead guilty, of hog theft, are properly excluded.—Berman v. Hoke, 61 Mo. App. 376, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 629.

[j] (N. H. 1842) On the cross-examination of a witness, it is improper to ask him, and he need not answer, whether he has been a convict in a state prison; as the record of his conviction is the best evidence, and should be produced, if the party desires to prove the fact.—Clement v. Brooks, 13 N. H. 92.

[k] (N. Y. 1862) Where a witness is asked whether he has not been convicted of petit larceny, though he do not himself object to answer, yet objection may be taken by the counsel for the party interested in the answer, who may claim that the fact, if admissible at all in evidence, must be proved by record.—Newcomb v. Griswold, 24 N. Y. 298.

[l] (N. Y. 1869) The court in a criminal prosecution cannot properly permit a witness, whose testimony for the prisoner is material, to be asked if he had been convicted of a criminal offense and sentenced to the penitentiary, for the purpose of impeaching his testimony, since the conviction could only be proved by the record.—In re Real, 55 Barb. 186.

[m] (Tenn. 1895) That one offered as a witness has been convicted of an infamous crime cannot be shown by cross-examining him, but the record of his conviction must be introduced.—Boyd v. State, 94 Tenn. (10 Pickle) 505, 29 S. W. 901.

§ 1143. Redirect examination.

[a] (N. Y. 1895) A witness who testified on cross-examination that he was once in prison, may, on redirect examination, state the crime for which he was imprisoned.—Carlson v. Winterson, 147 N. Y. 652, 723, 42 N. E. 347.

(b) ACCUSED AS WITNESS IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTION.

IN GENERAL, § 1144.
PARTICULAR ACTS OR FACTS, § 1145.
FORMER ACCUSATION OR INDICTMENT FOR CRIME, § 1146.
FORMER CONVICTION OR IMPRISONMENT, § 1147.

Privilege of accused as witness, see ante, §§ 1043–1046.

Scope and inquiry as to character, in general, see ante, §§ 1129–1132.

[b] (N. Y. 1878) Where on a criminal trial the prisoner offers himself as a witness in his own behalf, he may be asked questions on cross-examination disclosing his past life and conduct to impeach his credit, though tending to show he has been guilty of the same crime for which he is on trial.—People v. Casey, 72 N. Y. 393.

[c] (S. D. 1894) In the absence of statutory limitation as to the extent to which an accused person testifying in his own behalf can be cross-examined, a defendant who testifies in his own behalf, without reservation on all the issues, may, within the discretion of the court, be cross-examined concerning matters which tend to impugn his moral character, or lay the foundation for impeachment.—State v. Phelps, 5 S. D. 480, 59 N. W. 471.

[d] (Utah, 1893) Defendant having testified in his own behalf, it was competent to inquire of him what his business and antecedents were for 20 years past, and to interrogate him as to past transactions to test his recollection, and to bring to light conduct that would affect his credibility.—People v. Hite, 8 Utah, 461, 33 Pac. 254.

[a] (Ala. 1885) Defendant, testifying for himself, cannot be asked on cross-examination whether he did not belong to the "Jesse James gang."—Clarke v. State, 78 Ala. 474, 56 Am. Rep. 45.

[b] (Ark. 1894) One charged with murder cannot be cross-examined to show that he had left another state five years before because he had committed rape there, and was afraid to remain.—Holder v. State, 58 Ark. 473, 25 S. W. 279.

[c] (Cal. 1885) A defendant who has testified on his own behalf cannot be asked on cross-examination concerning the unlawful nature of the business carried on at the place where he was doorkeeper.—People v. Hamblin, 68 Cal. 101, 8 Pac. 687.

[d] (Cal. 1888) On trial for embezzling $550 received by defendant on a certain state warrant, it is not error to cross-examine him as to whether he had received money on other state warrants, as tending to convict him of another crime.—People v. McCarthy, 18 Pac. 862.

[e] (Cal. 1889) On the trial for an assault with intent to commit murder, it is error to permit the prosecution to ask defendant, on cross-examination, whether he had not assaulted certain other persons with a deadly weapon, as to which he had not been examined in chief, and an objection that such evidence is immaterial is sufficient.—People v. Bishop, 81 Cal. 113, 22 Pac. 477.

[f] (Cal. 1890) On a trial for burning property with intent to defraud the insurers, where the keeper of a bawdy house testifies to admissions made by defendant to her within a few days after the fire, it is error to permit defendant to be cross-examined as to whether or not he was at the house on a day six months after the fire, as such evidence is clearly immaterial, and evidently offered for the sole purpose of degrading his character, and prejudicing the jury against him.—People v. Tiley, 84 Cal. 651, 24 Pac. 290.

[g] (Cal. 1894) Where, in a prosecution for forgery, defendant's direct examination is confined entirely to the document which he is charged with forging, it is error to permit him, against objection, to be cross-examined concerning a similar document, also claimed to have been forged.—People v. Baird, 104 Cal. 462, 38 Pac. 310.

[h] (Cal. 1895) On a trial for assault, it is error to allow the prosecuting attorney to question defendant as to whether he lived in a house of prostitution; and the fact that his answers are in the negative, or objections to the questions are sustained, does not cure the error.—People v. Un Dong, 106 Cal. 83, 39 Pac. 12.

[i] (Ill. 1877) On a trial for rape, it is error to compel the defendant to state on cross-examination that he had visited houses of ill fame and had connection with the inmates.—Gifford v. People, 87 Ill. 210.

[j] (Ill. 1880) A defendant, on trial for murder, was compelled, against objection, to testify on cross-examination that he had frequented saloons, and at divers times drank, and played cards and billiards in saloons. Held error.—Hayward v. People, 96 Ill. 492.

[k] (Iowa, 1890) A witness who testifies on his own behalf may, in order to impeach him, be questioned on cross-examination as to his former offenses.—State v. O'Brien, 81 Iowa, 93, 46 N. W. 861.

[l] (Kan. 1894) Allowing an extended cross-examination of defendant with reference to his conduct 15 years before the homicide, as to acts of adultery that had no connection with the offense charged, was error.—State v. Reed, 53 Kan. 767, 37 Pac. 174, 42 Am. St. Rep. 322.

[m] (Ky. 1892) Upon trial for assault with a dangerous weapon, the accused, after he had been examined by his counsel and directed to take his seat, announced to the jury that he was a peaceable citizen, and had no idea of shooting the prosecuting witness; whereupon the state's attorney asked him whether he had had trouble with many other neighbors. Held, that although this method of cross-examination was improper, yet, as the defendant had placed his character as a peaceable man in issue, the error was not sufficient to reverse the judgment.—Taylor v. Commonwealth, 18 S. W. 852.

[n] (Me. 1876) In a murder trial, counsel for the state was permitted, against objection, to ask the prisoner as a witness in his own behalf whether he had not, while drunk, assaulted certain persons named. These matters had not been brought out in the examination in chief, nor had any defense of good character been set up. Held error.—State v. Carson, 66 Me. 116.

[o] (Me. 1876) Where one on trial for murder is a witness in his own behalf, it is not proper to ask him about committing other crimes.—State v. Carson, 66 Me. 116.

[p] (Mass. 1891) In a prosecution for keeping intoxicating liquors with intent to sell, defendant's attorney stated, in opening the case, that defendant had previously been engaged in the business of liquor keeping, and was convicted of the same. Held, in consequence of such statement, that the prosecution was properly allowed to ask defendant, on cross-examination, if he had not sold intoxicating liquors at his hotel in another place four or five years ago.—Commonwealth v. Goodnow, 154 Mass. 487, 28 N. E. 677.

[q] (Neb. 1892) On a trial for larceny of horses, it is reversible error for the prosecuting attorney, in his cross-examination of defendant, to ask him whether it is not a fact that he stole a horse in another place and on another occasion, and whether he does not know that the sheriff has a warrant for him for stealing horses at such place, though such questions are answered in the negative.—Elliott v. State, 34 Neb. 48, 51 N. W. 315.

[r] (N. H. 1874) Although an accused is under no obligation by his testimony to criminate himself concerning any collateral matters, even though he volunteers to become a witness in chief, yet where he voluntarily testifies on cross-examination that he has been guilty of a felony, such testimony is competent as affecting his credit as a witness.—State v. Archer, 54 N. H. 465.

[s] (N. M. 1895) Where, on a prosecution for larceny, defendant appears herself as a witness, it is proper, on cross-examination, to draw from her, as affecting her credibility, the fact that she was living in adultery.—Territory v. De Gutman, 8 N. M. 92, 42 Pac. 68.

[t] (N. Y. 1876) Where accused testified in his own behalf, it was proper to show on cross-examination that he had committed other offenses of the kind charged, to affect his credit as a witness.—Maine v. People, 9 Hun, 113.

[u] (N. Y. 1884) Upon the trial of an indictment for an assault, when defendant in his own behalf had given material testimony, conflicting with that given by the prosecution, he might be asked if he had not committed an assault on another person.—People v. Irving, 95 N. Y. 541, reversing (1884) 31 Hun, 614.

[v] (N. Y. 1884) In a prosecution for arson for the purpose of securing the insurance on the property burned, defendant, for the purpose of discrediting his testimony, may be questioned as to his connection with other fires, and the insurance on the buildings burned.—People v. Hooghkirk, 96 N. Y. 149, 67 How. Prac. 256.

[w] (N. Y. 1887) On the trial for an indictment for murder, the accused does not suffer any prejudice by being cross-examined as to having shot a man on another occasion, where his counsel, during the examination of accused's father, has already proved that fact, and that accused had been honorably acquitted.—People v. Ogle, 104 N. Y. 511, 11 N. E. 53, affirming (1886) 4 N. Y. Cr. R. 349.

[ww] (N. Y. 1892) On the cross-examination of one indicted for murder, the question whether, some months before the homicide, he did not draw a pistol on two disreputable women in a saloon, and threaten to shoot them, is admissible as affecting defendant's credibility.—People v. McCormack, 135 N. Y. 663, 32 N. E. 26.

[x] (S. C. 1891) An accused person, who becomes a witness in his own behalf, assumes the position of an ordinary witness; and where he has put his character for peaceableness in issue, he may be cross-examined as to particular acts of violence which he is alleged to have committed.—State v. Merriman, 34 S. C. 16, 12 S. E. 619, affirmed (1891) 34 S. C. 576, 13 S. E. 328.

[y] (S. C. 1891) He may also be asked whether he ever told persons named of an act of violence which he at one time purposed, but was prevented from consummating, with a view to contradicting him by the evidence of the persons named.—State v. Merriman, 34 S. C. 16, 12 S. E. 619, affirmed (1891) 34 S. C. 576, 13 S. E. 328.

[yy] (S. C. 1892) One accused of crime, who takes the stand in a criminal case, places himself in the position of an ordinary witness, and may be interrogated, therefore, as to his disbelief in religion, or as to any other matter tending to affect his credibility.—State v. Turner, 36 S. C. 534, 15 S. E. 602.

[z] (Tex. 1892) A defendant in a criminal case, who has testified in his own behalf, may be asked by the state, for purpose of impeachment, if he did not secretly send a letter while he was confined in jail, though he had not testified about any letter when examined in his own behalf.—White v. State, 30 Tex. App. 652, 18 S. W. 462.

[zz] (Wis. 1881) Where the testimony of a defendant in a criminal action on material points was in direct conflict with that of the prosecuting witness, and also showed that he was a married man, and had not been with his wife for some weeks, it was not error to sustain an inquiry, on cross-examination, as to the length of time since he had lived with her, as the answer might have had some bearing on his credibility.—Yanke v. State, 51 Wis. 464, 8 N. W. 276.

Cross-examination with reference to record of conviction, see post, § 1162.

Right to show former accusation or indictment, in general, see ante, § 1132.

[a] (Ala. 1885) A defendant, testifying for himself, cannot be cross-examined, against his objection, as to former indictments against him for other offenses.—Smith v. State, 79 Ala. 21.

[b] (Ark. 1895) It was improper to ask accused, on cross-examination, if he had not previously been three times indicted for felony, and his answer that he had been each time acquitted did not cure the error.—Bates v. State, 60 Ark. 450, 30 S. W. 890.

[c] (Cal. 1885) A defendant who has testified on his own behalf cannot be asked, on cross-examination, whether he had not been arrested for shooting at people.—People v. Hamblin, 68 Cal. 101, 8 Pac. 687.

[d] (Ind. 1894) A defendant on a trial for murder, who testifies in his own behalf, may be cross-examined as to past arrests and prosecutions against him, to discredit his testimony.—Parker v. State, 136 Ind. 284, 35 N. E. 1105.

[e] (La. 1893) On a trial for larceny, where defendant testifies in his own behalf, but does not put his character in issue, the state, not for the purpose of attacking his character as a defendant, but in order to test his credibility as a witness, may ask him on cross-examination whether he had ever been arrested for stealing.—State v. Murphy, 45 La. Ann. 958, 13 South. 229.

[f] (La. 1893) Where defendant, in his own behalf, in a criminal case, testifies, his credibility may be attacked by interrogating him in reference to his having been previously prosecuted or criminally punished.—State v. Alexis, 45 La. Ann. 973, 13 South. 394.

[g] (La. 1896) It is competent to ask the defendant, who is a witness in his own behalf, if he is charged with other offenses, and whether there are other bills pending against him.—State v. Southern, 48 La. Ann. 628, 19 South. 668.

[h] (Mich. 1882) Where a person on trial for crime voluntarily offers himself as a general witness in his own behalf, it is discretionary with the trial judge to allow him to be cross-examined as to whether he has been arrested before, or has not been in the state prison.—People v. Cummins, 47 Mich. 334, 11 N. W. 184, 186.

[i, j] (Mich. 1892) It is permissible, as affecting his credibility, to show, on cross-examination of defendant, that he has before been arrested for another crime.—People v. Foote, 93 Mich. 38, 52 N. W. 1036.

[k] (N. J. 1896) Upon the trial of an indictment for keeping a disorderly house, the defendant was permitted to be asked on cross-

Privilege of accused as witness, see ante, §§ 1043–1046.

Scope and inquiry as to character, in general, see ante, §§ 1129–1132.

[b] (N. Y. 1878) Where on a criminal trial the prisoner offers himself as a witness in his own behalf, he may be asked questions on cross-examination disclosing his past life and conduct to impeach his credit, though tending to show he has been guilty of the same crime for which he is on trial.—People v. Casey, 72 N. Y. 393.

[c] (S. D. 1894) In the absence of statutory limitation as to the extent to which an accused person testifying in his own behalf can be cross-examined, a defendant who testifies in his own behalf, without reservation on all the issues, may, within the discretion of the court, be cross-examined concerning matters which tend to impugn his moral character, or lay the foundation for impeachment.—State v. Phelps, 5 S. D. 480, 59 N. W. 471.

[d] (Utah, 1893) Defendant having testified in his own behalf, it was competent to inquire of him what his business and antecedents were for 20 years past, and to interrogate him as to past transactions to test his recollection, and to bring to light conduct that would affect his credibility.—People v. Hite, 8 Utah, 461, 33 Pac. 254.

[a] (Ala. 1885) Defendant, testifying for himself, cannot be asked on cross-examination whether he did not belong to the "Jesse James gang."—Clarke v. State, 78 Ala. 474, 56 Am. Rep. 45.

[b] (Ark. 1894) One charged with murder cannot be cross-examined to show that he had left another state five years before because he had committed rape there, and was afraid to remain.—Holder v. State, 58 Ark. 473, 25 S. W. 279.

[c] (Cal. 1885) A defendant who has testified on his own behalf cannot be asked on cross-examination concerning the unlawful nature of the business carried on at the place where he was doorkeeper.—People v. Hamblin, 68 Cal. 101, 8 Pac. 687.

[d] (Cal. 1888) On trial for embezzling $550 received by defendant on a certain state warrant, it is not error to cross-examine him as to whether he had received money on other state warrants, as tending to convict him of another crime.—People v. McCarthy, 18 Pac. 862.

[e] (Cal. 1889) On the trial for an assault with intent to commit murder, it is error to permit the prosecution to ask defendant, on cross-examination, whether he had not assaulted certain other persons with a deadly weapon, as to which he had not been examined in chief, and an objection that such evidence is immaterial is sufficient.—People v. Bishop, 81 Cal. 113, 22 Pac. 477.

[f] (Cal. 1890) On a trial for burning property with intent to defraud the insurers, where the keeper of a bawdy house testifies to admissions made by defendant to her within a few days after the fire, it is error to permit defendant to be cross-examined as to whether or not he was at the house on a day six months after the fire, as such evidence is clearly immaterial, and evidently offered for the sole purpose of degrading his character, and prejudicing the jury against him.—People v. Tiley, 84 Cal. 651, 24 Pac. 290.

[g] (Cal. 1894) Where, in a prosecution for forgery, defendant's direct examination is confined entirely to the document which he is charged with forging, it is error to permit him, against objection, to be cross-examined concerning a similar document, also claimed to have been forged.—People v. Baird, 104 Cal. 462, 38 Pac. 310.

[h] (Cal. 1895) On a trial for assault, it is error to allow the prosecuting attorney to question defendant as to whether he lived in a house of prostitution; and the fact that his answers are in the negative, or objections to the questions are sustained, does not cure the error.—People v. Un Dong, 106 Cal. 83, 39 Pac. 12.

[i] (Ill. 1877) On a trial for rape, it is error to compel the defendant to state on cross-examination that he had visited houses of ill fame and had connection with the inmates.—Gifford v. People, 87 Ill. 210.

[j] (Ill. 1880) A defendant, on trial for murder, was compelled, against objection, to testify on cross-examination that he had frequented saloons, and at divers times drank, and played cards and billiards in saloons. Held error.—Hayward v. People, 96 Ill. 492.

[k] (Iowa, 1890) A witness who testifies on his own behalf may, in order to impeach him, be questioned on cross-examination as to his former offenses.—State v. O'Brien, 81 Iowa, 93, 46 N. W. 861.

[l] (Kan. 1894) Allowing an extended cross-examination of defendant with reference to his conduct 15 years before the homicide, as to acts of adultery that had no connection with the offense charged, was error.—State v. Reed, 53 Kan. 767, 37 Pac. 174, 42 Am. St. Rep. 322.

[m] (Ky. 1892) Upon trial for assault with a dangerous weapon, the accused, after he had been examined by his counsel and directed to take his seat, announced to the jury that he was a peaceable citizen, and had no idea of shooting the prosecuting witness; whereupon the state's attorney asked him whether he had had trouble with many other neighbors. Held, that although this method of cross-examination was improper, yet, as the defendant had placed his character as a peaceable man in issue, the error was not sufficient to reverse the judgment.—Taylor v. Commonwealth, 18 S. W. 852.

[n] (Me. 1876) In a murder trial, counsel for the state was permitted, against objection, to ask the prisoner as a witness in his own behalf whether he had not, while drunk, assaulted certain persons named. These matters had not been brought out in the examination in chief, nor had any defense of good character been set up. Held error.—State v. Carson, 66 Me. 116.

[o] (Me. 1876) Where one on trial for murder is a witness in his own behalf, it is not proper to ask him about committing other crimes.—State v. Carson, 66 Me. 116.

[p] (Mass. 1891) In a prosecution for keeping intoxicating liquors with intent to sell, defendant's attorney stated, in opening the case, that defendant had previously been engaged in the business of liquor keeping, and was convicted of the same. Held, in consequence of such statement, that the prosecution was properly allowed to ask defendant, on cross-examination, if he had not sold intoxicating liquors at his hotel in another place four or five years ago.—Commonwealth v. [i, j] (Mich. 1892) It is permissible, as affecting his credibility, to show, on cross-examination of defendant, that he has before been arrested for another crime.—People v. Foote, 93 Mich. 38, 52 N. W. 1036.

[k] (N. J. 1896) Upon the trial of an indictment for keeping a disorderly house, the defendant was permitted to be asked on cross-examination whether he had not been indicted for keeping a disorderly house at another place. Held error.—Roop v. State, 58 N. J. Law (29 Vroom) 479, 34 Atl. 749.

[l] (N. Y. 1870) Where the plaintiff in error, on her trial for grand larceny, was sworn as a witness in her own behalf, and, on her cross-examination, was asked, "Have you ever been arrested before for theft?" and the question was objected to as an attack upon her character, which she had not herself put in issue, held, that the question was a proper one; and, no suggestion of privilege having been made, the objection was properly overruled.—Brandon v. People, 42 N. Y. 265.

[ll] (N. Y. 1876) Upon the trial of an indictment, the prisoner was asked, on cross-examination, with a view of impeaching his character, "How many times have you been arrested?" Held, that the question was improper, as the mere fact of his arrest had no tendency to impeach his character in any particular.—Brown v. People, 8 Hun, 562.

[m] (N. Y. 1879) On trial of an indictment for burglary and larceny, a cross-question to the prisoner as to whether he had not been arrested on a charge of bigamy was incompetent for any purpose whatever.—People v. Crapo, 76 N. Y. 288, 32 Am. Rep. 302, affirming Crapo v. People (1878) 15 Hun, 269.

[n] (N. C. 1887) A defendant in a criminal action who offers himself as a witness in his own behalf, under Code, § 1353, may be asked if he was accused of the commission of a criminal offense in the state from which he came, and what such offense was.—State v. Thomas, 98 N. C. 599, 4 S. E. 518, 2 Am. St. Rep. 351.

[o] (Tenn. 1896) It is not error to ask a defendant, when on the stand, for the purpose of discrediting his testimony, if he has not been indicted for other crimes.—Ryan v. State, 97 Tenn. (13 Pickle) 206, 36 S. W. 930.

[p] (Tex. 1894) A defendant who makes himself a witness may, like any other witness, on cross-examination have his credibility attacked by questions as to whether he had not been previously arrested for crimes.—Jackson v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 281, 26 S. W. 194, 622, 47 Am. St. Rep. 30.

[q] (Tex. 1894) Where the defendant, in a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, takes the witness stand in his own behalf, he may be asked, to impeach his credibility, if he has not been before arraigned on a similar charge.—Hutchins v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 298, 26 S. W. 399.

[r] (Tex. 1894) Defendant, charged with theft, having testified in his own behalf, may be asked if there was not an indictment against him for other offenses.—Warren v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 502, 26 S. W. 1082.

[s] (Tex. 1894) A defendant who testifies in his own behalf may be asked, for the purpose of attacking his credibility, if he has been accused of other crimes.—Oliver v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 541, 28 S. W. 202.

[t] (Tex. 1895) On a trial for murder the prosecuting attorney asked defendant whether he had not before been indicted for murder, and, receiving the answer, "No," asked defendant, after relating the circumstances of the murder, whether he recollected it, to which the defendant replied that he did, but that his brother was the person indicted. Held proper cross-examination.—Craft v. State (Cr. App.) 31 S. W. 367.

[u] (Tex. 1896) One accused of burglary may be asked if he was not under indictment for the same offense in another case, in order to attack his credibility, by showing moral turpitude.—Peryda v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 981.

[v] (Utah, 1894) Where a defendant has testified in his own behalf he may be asked on cross-examination, for the purpose of affecting his credibility, whether he had been previously arrested for a similar offense.—People v. Larsen, 10 Utah, 143, 37 Pac. 258.

Right to show former conviction or imprisonment, in general, see ante, § 1132.

[a] (Ark. 1894) It is proper to ask defendant if he was confined in the penitentiary in another state, in order to attack his credibility.—Holder v. State, 58 Ark. 473, 25 S. W. 279.

[aa] (Ark. 1894) An accused may be asked on cross-examination if he had not been confined in the penitentiary.—Baker v. State, 58 Ark. 513, 25 S. W. 603.

[b] (Cal. 1881) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051, providing that a witness may not be impeached by evidence of particular wrongful acts, except that it may be shown by his examination or the record of the judgment that he had been convicted of a felony, and Pen. Code, § 102, declaring that rules of evidence in civil actions are applicable also in criminal actions, one indicted for a felony may be asked, on cross-examination, whether he had been convicted of a felony.—People v. Johnson, 57 Cal. 571.

[d] (Cal. 1888) Pen. Code, § 1323, provides that defendant in a criminal action cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself; but, if he offer himself as witness, may be cross-examined as to all matters about which he was examined in chief. Defendant testified in chief merely that he had been drinking, and, as he was walking along, fell over something, and the first thing he knew somebody grabbed him. Questions, on cross-examination, if he had ever gone under an alias, or had ever been convicted of felony, held permissible.—People v. Meyer, 75 Cal. 383, 17 Pac. 431.

[e] (Cal. 1893) Though Pen. Code, § 1323, authorizes the cross-examination of defendant in a criminal case only as to matters about which he was examined in chief, still, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051, providing that, for the purpose of impeaching "a witness," it may be shown by the examination of the witness that he has been convicted of a felony, a defendant in a criminal case may, on cross-examination, be asked if he has been convicted of a felony.—People v. Crowley, 100 Cal. 478, 35 Pac. 84.

[f] (Ind. 1877) Where no evidence has been introduced in support of the general moral character of the defendant in a criminal cause, it is error to allow counsel for the state, in cross-examining the defendant while testifying as a witness, to ask him whether he had ever been convicted of a crime.—Farley v. State, 57 Ind. 331.

[g] (Kan. 1886) A codefendant who voluntarily became a witness, and has not appealed, was asked by the state, on cross-examination, if he had not recently been tried and convicted several times for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, and, over objection, was allowed to give an affirmative answer. Held to be no error.—State v. Pfefferle, 36 Kan. 90, 12 Pac. 406.

[h] (Kan. 1891) A defendant in a criminal prosecution who voluntarily becomes a witness in his own behalf is subject to the same rule as any other witness, and may be asked by the state, on cross-examination, if he had not been convicted of larceny at the previous term of the same court in which he was being tried.—

State v. Probasco, 46 Kan. 310, 26 Pac. 749, following Same v. Pfefferle (1886) 36 Kan. 90, 12 Pac. 406.

[i] (Ky. 1890) A defendant who testifies in his own behalf may be required on cross-examination to state whether he has been in state prison.—Mitchell v. Commonwealth, 14 S. W. 489.

[j] (Ky. 1892) On a trial for larceny, where the defendant had testified in his own behalf, it was proper, for the purpose of discrediting him, to ask him on cross-examination whether he had ever been convicted of stealing, and whether he had been arrested for breaking into a house and stealing coffee, and sent to the workhouse therefor.—Burdette v. Commonwealth, 93 Ky. 76, 18 S. W. 1011.

[k] (Mich. 1895) On a trial for assault, defendant was asked if he had not been convicted before for assault on the complaining witness, and on his admission that he had the prosecuting attorney asked other questions in regard to the details of that assault; but the court held them inadmissible, and instructed the jury that the sole use for which such conviction was admitted was to affect defendant's credibility as a witness. Held, that defendant had no cause for complaint.—People v. Conley, 106 Mich. 424, 64 N. W. 325.

[l] (Minn. 1888) Under Pen. Code, § 531, providing that a person convicted of crime is a competent witness, but the conviction may be proved by the record or cross-examination, a defendant in a criminal case, sworn as a witness in his own behalf, may, on cross-examination, be asked if he has been convicted of crime.—State v. Curtis, 39 Minn. 357, 40 N. W. 263.

[m] (Mo. 1881) It is error to compel a defendant in a criminal case to answer a question as to whether or not he had been previously convicted of another crime and sent to the penitentiary under another name.—State v. McGraw, 74 Mo. 573.

[n] (Mo. 1890) On the trial of indictment for a felonious assault, where defendant is a witness in his own behalf, it is error to require him, upon cross-examination, to answer the question, "Were you not convicted of a felony in this state?"—State v. Brent, 100 Mo. 531, 13 S. W. 874.

[o] (Mont. 1894) Where defendant in a criminal case testifies, it is proper, for the purpose of discrediting him, to ask him whether he has been convicted of a felony.—State v. Black, 15 Mont. 143, 38 Pac. 674.

[p] (N. Y. 1883) A defendant in a criminal case may be asked, upon cross-examination, how many times he has been in prison.—People v. Hovey, 29 Hun, 382.

[q] (N. Y. 1883) On an indictment for selling lottery tickets, the prisoner, on cross-examination, may be asked whether he had been in that business and had been convicted of mailing lottery circulars.—People v. Noelke, 94 N. Y. 137, 46 Am. Rep. 128.

[r] (N. C. 1883) A defendant who avails himself of the privilege of testifying in his own behalf may be asked, on cross-examination, whether he has been convicted of a certain criminal offense, with a view to affect his standing as a witness.—State v. Lawhorn, 88 N. C. 634.

[s] (Tex. 1893) On a trial for robbery, it is not error for the court to permit the state to prove by defendant, who had taken the stand in his own behalf, that he had been convicted of an attempt to commit burglary; such evidence being admissible to affect the credit of the witness.—Clayton v. State (Cr. App.) 22 S. W. 404.

[t] (Tex. 1894) One indicted for murder, having testified in his own behalf, may be asked on cross-examination whether he had not been convicted for murder of another man, though the conviction was set aside, and upon a new trial he was acquitted; Code Cr. Proc. art. 783, providing that, on granting a new trial, there shall be no presumption of guilt from the former conviction, or allusion thereto in argument, applying only when defendant is on trial a second time for the same offense.—Hargrove v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 431, 26 S. W. 993.

[u] (Tex. 1894) Defendant cannot be asked, for the purpose of impeaching him as a witness, if he was not convicted of the offense for which he is on trial at a former trial.—Richardson v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 518, 27 S. W. 139.

§ 1148. —— Necessity of record as best evidence.

Necessity of record in general, see ante, § 1142.

[a] (Cal.) A defendant examined as a witness in his own behalf, cannot be asked on cross-examination whether he had not been convicted of certain offenses, over objection that the record of the conviction was the best evidence.—(1870) People v. Reinhart, 39 Cal. 449; (1884) Same v. Schenick, 65 Cal. 625, 4 Pac. 675; (1884) Same v. Buckner, 4 Pac. 489.

[b] (Mass. 1867) Under St. 1866, c. 260, allowing a defendant in a criminal proceeding to become a witness in his own behalf at his own election, a defendant who testifies may be asked on cross-examination, for the purpose of affecting his credibility as a witness, if he has been in the house of correction for any crime, on a waiver of objection that the record is the best evidence thereon.—Commonwealth v. Bonner, 97 Mass. 587.

[c] (Tex. 1895) For the purpose of impeaching defendant he may be asked on cross-examination whether he had been convicted of a felony, and it is not necessary to introduce the record of the conviction.—Bratton v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 477, 31 S. W. 379.

(c) CONCLUSIVENESS OF ANSWERS ON CROSS-EXAMINATION AND CONTRADICTORY EVIDENCE.

Right to contradict collateral matters in general, see post, § 1278.

[a] (Mich. 1890) When a witness denies his former conviction, it may be shown by the record under How. Ann. St. § 7543, providing that no person shall be disqualified as a witness by reason of crime, but conviction of crime may be shown to affect his credibility.—Helwig v. Lascowski, 82 Mich. 619, 46 N. W. 1033, 10 L. R. A. 377.

[b] (N. J. 1887) A witness, who, on cross-examination, is asked if he had not at one time committed larceny, and denies it, cannot be contradicted in regard thereto.—Pullen v. Pullen, 43 N. J. Eq. (16 Stew.) 136, 6 Atl. 887.

[c] (N. Y. 1838) Where a witness is sought to be impeached on a cross-examination, his answer, if favorable to himself, is conclusive against the party.—People v. Rector, 19 Wend. 569.

[d] (N. Y. 1873) On cross-examination of a material witness for the accused, she was asked whether she had taken things not belonging to her, when she left a place where she had been at service, to which she answered, "No." Held, that the matter being collateral, the prosecution was bound by the answers of the witness; and to allow rebutting evidence was error.—Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 164, 13 Am. Rep. 492.

[e] (N. Y. 1893) The statements of a witness for defendant, on cross-examination, as to her use of opium, being in regard to a collateral fact, and for the purpose of affecting her credibility, cannot be contradicted by other witnesses; but where defendant's guilt is clearly proved, the admission of such contradictory evidence is not prejudicial error, under Cr. Code, § 542, which requires judgment to be given on appeal "without regard to technical errors, or to exceptions which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties."—People v. Webster, 68 Hun, 11, 22 N. Y. Supp. 634, judgment affirmed (1893) 139 N. Y. 73, 34 N. E. 730.

[f] (N. D. 1893) While a party to an action cannot object to questions asked a witness on cross-examination, tending to elicit proof that the witness had been guilty of practices that would affect his credit before the jury, yet, when such matters are purely collateral to the issue, the answer of the witness is final, and it is not proper to introduce contradicting evidence.—State v. McGahey, 3 N. D. 293, 55 N. W. 753.

[g] (Ohio, 1876) The state, asking an accused on cross-examination how many times he has been arrested, for the purpose of affecting his credibility, is bound by his voluntary answer, stating a certain number of times, and cannot contradict him by showing that he has been arrested a greater number of times.—Coble v. State, 31 Ohio St. 100.

[h] (Pa. 1879) Where a defendant in a criminal cause testifies in his own behalf, and states in his examination in chief that he has never been charged with any crime, and on cross-examination says that he has never been charged with a particular larceny, not the one on trial, the commonwealth may show that he has been charged with such larceny.—Commonwealth v. Murray, 13 Phila. 454.

[i] (Pa. 1896) When a witness states, in answer to a question, that he was never sent to the penitentiary from a certain county, testimony that he was missing for a year directly after one of exactly the same name was convicted of larceny and sent to the penitentiary, and that he was the only person of that name in that part of the country, was admissible.—Eifert v. Lytle, 172 Pa. 356, 33 Atl. 573, 37 Wkly. Notes Cas. 416.

[j] (S. C. 1887) In a trial for murder a witness for the state denied, when asked about the same, that he had been accused and taken up on charge of stealing cotton. Held not error for the trial court to reject testimony offered to prove that he had been so accused and taken up, where there is no record of a conviction or other legal proceedings as to the larceny.—State v. Prater, 26 S. C. 198, 613, 2 S. E. 108.

[k] (S. C. 1891) Where an accused person, who testifies in his own behalf, on cross-examination denies that he was arrested and convicted of a larceny before a justice of the peace, his conviction may be proved by the record of such case.—State v. Wise, 33 S. C. 582, 12 S. E. 556.

[l] (Tenn. 1892) One on trial for carrying a weapon having on cross-examination answered in the affirmative a question as to whether or not he had been "charged with stealing money," and then denied the truth of the charge, his denial was conclusive on the state, and the court should not have stated that the charge was to be considered in determining his credibility.—Hill v. State, 91 Tenn. (7 Pickle) 521, 19 S. W. 674.

[m] (Tex. 1896) Where, on cross-examination, it is brought out that the witness has been rendered infamous by a conviction for murder, the party bringing out such evidence is bound by the witness' further statement that he had been pardoned.—St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co. v. Campbell (Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 186.

[n] (Tex. 1896) On trial for murder, where defendant testified that he had not been charged with an assault with intent to murder, it was proper to introduce an indictment for such offense, to impeach him.—Floyd v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 969.

[o] (Wash. 1893) The state, having asked defendant on cross-examination whether he has ever been confined in the county jail, and whether he has ever been convicted of crime before, cannot rebut his negative by proof that he has been so convicted and confined.—State v. Payne, 6 Wash. 568, 34 Pac. 317.

Prosecutions for perjury in testimony affecting character or credit of witness, see "Perjury," vol. 39, cc. 621, 622, § 51.

§ 1150. Laying foundation for impeaching evidence.

[a] (Ill. 1888) Evidence that a brother of prosecutrix, who was a witness for the people, had, soon after the alleged offense, proposed defendant as a leader of the village band, is not admissible for any purpose, where no ground for the impeachment of such witness had been laid.—Bean v. People, 124 Ill. 576, 16 N. E. 656.

[b] (Mo. 1888) A party to impeach the testimony of an adverse party by showing that he attempted to tamper with a witness must first lay a foundation for such evidence by asking the party whether he has made such an attempt.—Bates v. Holladay, 31 Mo. App. 162.

[c] (N. Y. 1880) A question to A., who had testified that B.'s character for veracity was bad, "Did B. state to you that he regarded it as no wrong to swear falsely against such a man as C.?" held to be improper; it calling for a specific declaration upon a collateral matter to which the attention of B. (the plaintiff) had not been called on his cross-examination.—Wilder v. Peabody, 21 Hun, 376.

[d] (N. C. 1880) Evidence offered to prove an independent collateral matter affecting the credit of the prosecuting witness on a trial for larceny, not elicited by an inquiry addressed to him, but by the testimony of another person, is incompetent.—State v. Johnston, 82 N. C. 589.

[e] (Wis. 1864) A party to an action having testified in his own behalf, an attempt was made to impeach him by showing that he had attempted to procure another person to give false evidence in the same suit. The impeaching evidence was received without any previous examination of the party as to the alleged transaction, and without giving him first an opportunity to explain, but afterwards he was called and testified on the subject as fully as he desired. Held, that the mere disregard of the order of time in which the testimony should have been heard furnished no ground for a reversal of the judgment.—Martineau v. May, 18 Wis. 54.

[f] (Wis. 1864) Where it is sought to impeach a witness by showing that he has attempted to procure another person to give false evidence in the same suit, it is necessary as a general rule to interrogate him as to such attempt before introducing the impeaching evidence, so that he may have an opportunity to explain the transaction.—Martineau v. May, 18 Wis. 54.

[g] (Wis. 1881) In a trial for assault with intent to kill, where, without any previous foundation therefor in the testimony of the prosecuting witness, a witness for the defense was asked whether the prosecuting witness had requested him to "bail out" defendant, there was no error in ruling out such question.—Yanke v. State, 51 Wis. 464, 8 N. W. 276.

§ 1151. Notice of intention as prerequisite to evidence.

[a] (Md. 1868) Where a party to a cause has been sworn as a witness, the opposite party may offer evidence impeaching his veracity without first giving notice of such intention.—Knight v. House, 29 Md. 194, 96 Am. Dec. 515.

[b] (N. Y. 1818) Where, after publication passed, a party files articles and gives notice of examination of witnesses to impeach the credit of former witnesses as to their general character for veracity, a copy of the articles filed with the notice of examination to discredit the witness must be served on the adverse party within 14 days after obtaining a copy of the deposition.—Troup v. Sherwood, 3 Johns. Ch. 558.

§ 1152. Competency of impeaching evidence in general.

Opinions, see post, § 1158.

Privileged communication to physicians, see ante, § 773 [n].

Admission of incompetent evidence to impeach accused ground for new trial in criminal prosecution, see "Criminal Law," vol. 15, c. 45, § 2207 [k].

[a] (U. S. 1884) Where a suit is brought by plaintiff against the administrator of deceased and others to recover his share of deceased's estate, the testimony of a witness as to the admissions and conduct of deceased cannot be impeached by statements of deceased to a third person as to the character of the witness.—Maryland v. Baldwin, 112 U. S. 490, 5 Sup. Ct. 278, 28 L. Ed. 822.

[b] (Ala. 1891) Bad character may be proved against a witness for the purpose of impeaching his credibility, though the witnesses who testify as to his character fail to state that his character or reputation is such that he would not be believed when testifying on his oath.—Mitchell v. State, 94 Ala. 68, 10 South. 518.

[c] (Ark. 1874) Under Gantt's Dig. § 2524, providing that a witness may be impeached by evidence that his general reputation for truth and immorality rendered him unworthy of belief, it is improper to exclude testimony of an impeaching witness that he knew the witness for a number of years, and knew his general character for immorality in the community in which he lived, and that his general character as such was very bad; and that from his general character he would not believe him on oath.—Majors v. State, 29 Ark. 112.

[d] (Ark. 1894) Defendant's credibility as a witness on his own behalf cannot be attacked by showing that he left another state because of debt.—Holder v. State, 58 Ark. 473, 25 S. W. 279.

[e] (Ga. 1866) A. gave in evidence declarations of a testator, which tended to show a covert illegality in his will. Held, that to discredit A. as a witness evidence of other declarations of the testator, showing his distrust of A., was admissible.—Cobb v. Battle, 34 Ga. 458.

[f] (Ga. 1891) The fact that a person was induced by others to prosecute for a criminal offense should not discredit his testimony before the jury, nor should the trial judge allow the fact to be proven for that purpose.—Allgood v. State, 87 Ga. 668, 18 S. E. 569.

[g] (Iowa, 1879) It is error, in proving one's reputation for truth and veracity, to limit it to his reputation among business men with whom he deals; but where there is other competent evidence as to his good reputation the admission of such improper evidence is not ground for reversal.—Bays v. Herring, 51 Iowa, 286, 1 N. W. 558.

[h] (Ky. 1894) The character of a witness for veracity can be impeached only by direct testimony of those who are acquainted with his reputation, and not by showing the bad reputation of the neighborhood of his residence.—White v. Commonwealth, 96 Ky. 180, 28 S. W. 340.

[i] (Me. 1852) A deposition impeaching the reputation of a witness for truth and veracity cannot be excluded because it appears from the deposition that such reputation was founded upon the witness' neglect to perform his agreement.—Hapgood v. Fisher, 34 Me. 407, 56 Am. Dec. 663.

[j] (Mass. 1861) If a medical witness, on cross-examination, has identified certain medical advertisements as his, they may be read to the jury as a portion of the cross-examination, for the purpose of affecting his credit, but the newspaper in which they are contained cannot be laid before the jury.—Commonwealth v. Hersey, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 173.

[k] (Mass. 1888) The prosecution, to discredit an expert witness called for defendant, introduced a letter written by the witness more than three years previously, and containing suggestions derogatory to his own character. The letter had no relation to the case on trial, and the witness had no opportunity to object to or explain it. Held, that defendant was entitled to a new trial, as the effect of the letter might have been to impeach the character of the witness.—Commonwealth v. Schaffner, 146 Mass. 512, 16 N. E. 280.

[l] (Mich. 1891) In a contest of a will on the ground of testatrix's mental incompetency, where a deposition of a person whom testatrix was visiting showed actions on the part of testatrix which, in their nature, should have been communicated to her husband at the time, it was error to exclude letters written at the time by deponent to testatrix's husband, as bearing on the credibility of deponent.—Prentis v. Bates, 88 Mich. 567, 50 N. W. 637.

[m] (Minn. 1872) Where suit was brought on a promissory note by an indorsee, after maturity, evidence that the transfer was made by the payee for the purpose of having suit brought in the name of the indorsee is not competent to affect the credibility of the testimony of such payee; it appearing that he is liable as indorser.—Wilder v. De Cou, 18 Minn. 470 (Gil. 421).

[n] (Minn. 1890) On an indictment for forgery, a letter written by one jointly indicted with defendant to a witness proposing that he shall testify in support of a certain line of defense, which proposal corresponds to the testimony actually given by such witness, and which appears on its face to be a mere fabrication, is admissible to impeach such witness.—State v. Tall, 43 Minn. 273, 45 N. W. 449.

[o] (Minn. 1895) Letters written by a witness to one of the parties in reference to matters involved in the suit, which tended to show a corrupt disposition to conceal or pervert the truth, for a money consideration, as to the matters to which he testified, should have been admitted to impeach the witness.—Alward v. Oaks, 63 Minn. 190, 65 N. W. 270.

[p] (Neb. 1884) Evidence of what two persons had said about the dishonesty of a witness, who had been their employé, should not be admitted in an attempt to impeach the testimony of such witness.—Taylor v. Ryan, 15 Neb. 573, 19 N. W. 475.

[q] (N. J. 1875) The credit of a witness cannot be impeached by proof that he testified, on a former trial, to the same facts, and the jury discredited his testimony.—Schenck v. Griffin, 38 N. J. Law (9 Vroom) 462.

[r] (N. Y. 1808) Where the plaintiff having filed a bill in chancery for a divorce for adultery, suborned a witness to prove the fact, and upon discovery of this subornation withdrew his bill and filed another, charging adultery with another person, these facts cannot be given in evidence to impeach the credibility of a witness produced to prove such second fact of adultery.—Doe v. Roe, Anth. N. P. 80.

[s] (N. Y. 1882) Upon the question of general repute of the plaintiff in a civil action for assault to rape, witness will not be allowed to state what he heard certain people say or what stories he had heard.—Gulerette v. McKinley, 27 Hun, 320.

[t] (Or. 1876) The rule that a witness is to be impeached by proof of general bad reputation, and not of particular acts of immorality, forbids introducing a letter written by the witness, the language of which might evince a depraved or unchaste character.—Leverich v. Frank, 6 Or. 212.

[u] (Pa. 1871) Where a witness has testified that she has seen the execution of a note by a decedent and the circumstances attending it, the evidence of the declarations of decedent was admissible on the question of her credibility.—Burkholder's Ex'rs v. Plank, 69 Pa. (19 P. F. Smith) 225.

[v] (S. C. 1833) The credit of a witness may be attacked by proof that he had said that on some occasions he would swear to a lie.—Anonymous, 1 Hill, Law, 251.

[w] (Tex. 1879) The reputation of a witness cannot be impeached by evidence based on the matter under investigation—as, for instance, that of the subscribing witness to a will contested for alleged forgery, by the opinion of the community arising from the transaction.—Johnson v. Brown, 51 Tex. 65.

§ 1153. Competency of impeaching witnesses.

Competency of husband or wife of witness sought to be impeached, see ante, § 135.
—— of sustaining witness, see post, § 1170.

[a] (Ind. 1878) An impeached witness is not an incompetent witness to impeach a witness by whom he was impeached, his impeachment merely affecting his credibility.—Citizens' Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Short, 62 Ind. 316.

[b] (Iowa, 1891) A witness to character is not shown to be incompetent by his stating on cross-examination: "I am able to judge of a man's character by his business dealings, and what I know of him. I pay attention to people's character only as I deal with them."—State v. Farrell, 82 Iowa, 553, 48 N. W. 940.

[c] (Pa. 1837) A witness who has prejudices may still be competent to testify as to the character of another.—Cook v. Miller, 6 Watts, 507.

[d] (Pa. 1847) An attorney for plaintiff was not competent as a witness to impeach the credit of one of defendant's witnesses by detailing a conversation he had with the witness after the attorney had been retained in the case.—Mishler v. Baumgardner, 4 Clark, 266.

§ 1154. —— Knowledge or means of knowledge.

Examination as to knowledge or means of knowledge, see post, § 1157.
Knowledge of sustaining witness, see post, § 1171.

[a] (U. S. 1838) The general reputation of a witness for veracity cannot be proven by the testimony of a juror as to what witnesses testified to at a former trial.—United States v. White, Fed. Cas. No. 16,679 [5 Cranch, C. C. 457].

[b] (U. S. 1883) Evidence that a witness is acquainted with the character of another is not sufficient to authorize him to state that he would not believe such a witness under oath. It is necessary that he should say that he knew the character of the witness for truth and veracity.—Marks v. Fox (C. C.) 18 Fed. 713.

[d] (Ala. 1846) The testimony of a witness, who stated that he was acquainted with the general character of one who had been examined on the other side, but disavowed all knowledge of the estimation in which he was held in the neighborhood of his residence, is inadmissible to discredit the latter, it not appearing that the impeached witness had changed his residence or that his employment was such as to cause his reputation to be as well known elsewhere as in the vicinity of his home.—Sorrelle v. Craig, 9 Ala. 534.

[e] (Ala. 1854) A witness may testify to the general character of an impeached witness for truth and veracity, both from his own knowledge and from what he has heard from other persons; and he may state that it is "very unfavorable."—Martin's Ex'x v. Martin, 25 Ala. 201.

[f] (Ala. 1854) A person who removed into the neighborhood of an impeached witness about the time the latter left is competent to testify to his general reputation in that neighborhood at that time.—Martin's Ex'x v. Martin, 25 Ala. 201.

[g] (Ala. 1876) Where a witness states that he does not know the general reputation of a person in the neighborhood, although he has known him all his life, he is not competent to testify as to his character.—Hadley v. State, 55 Ala. 31.

[gg] (Ala. 1885) A witness who states that he knows the character of the person inquired about "in the upper portion of the neighborhood in which he lives, but not in the lower," is competent to testify as to his character.—Jackson v. State, 78 Ala. 471.

[h] (Ala. 1894) One witness may testify to the good character of another in the neighborhood in which both have lived, though at the time of the trial they lived in different neighborhoods.—Prater v. State, 107 Ala. 26, 18 South. 238.

[hh] (Ark. 1894) Before a witness should be allowed to impeach another on the ground of his reputation for truth, it should be first shown that he has sufficient knowledge of such person's general character to base an opinion thereon.—Cole v. State, 59 Ark. 50, 26 S. W. 377.

[i] (Cal. 1884) If a witness called to impeach the character of another has any knowledge of the witness' character, he is qualified to speak, no matter what the quality or quantity of such knowledge may be, and it is for the jury to determine the value of his testimony.—Heath v. Scott, 65 Cal. 548, 4 Pac. 557.

[ii] (Cal. 1891) Where the witness has stated the reputation of another for veracity from what he has heard of it in the neighborhood, it is error for the court to state that he can only testify to what he knows of it of his own personal knowledge.—People v. Webster, 89 Cal. 572, 26 Pac. 1080.

[jj] (Ga. 1892) Witnesses who testify that they do not know that they are acquainted with the general character of the prosecutor, but that they have been acquainted with him for a long time, and that they have never heard any one speak ill of him, show substantially that they do know his general character sufficiently to qualify them to swear that they would believe him on oath.—Hodgkins v. State, 89 Ga. 761, 15 S. E. 695.

[jj] (Ill. 1859) The impeaching witness must be able to state what is generally said of the person to be impeached, among his associates.—Crabtree v. Kile, 21 Ill. (11 Peck) 180.

[k] (Ill. 1894) An impeaching witness who testifies that he is not acquainted with the general reputation of another witness is not competent to testify further on the subject.—Overstreet v. Dunlap, 56 Ill. App. 486.

[kk] (Iowa, 1882) A witness called to testify to the general reputation of plaintiff for truth and veracity said, "I have heard it questioned, and can only give my opinion on the subject." Held, that he was not competent.—Kitteringham v. Dance, 58 Iowa, 632, 12 N. W. 612.

[l] (Kan. 1892) A person who states that he is not much acquainted with the general reputation for veracity of a witness in the community where he lived, and that he cannot say exactly what his reputation is, is not competent to testify as to his reputation.—Redden v. Tefft, 48 Kan. 802, 29 Pac. 157.

[ll] (Ky. 1878) A witness who testified that he was acquainted with another witness, that he knew her neighbors, and that he knew her character through rumor, cannot testify as to her character for truth.—Furnish v. Commonwealth, 77 Ky. (14 Bush) 180.

[m] (Mass. 1863) If a witness who is called to impeach another witness testifies, in reply to a question as to the general reputation of the latter for truth and veracity, that he has heard it called in question to a limited extent, it is no error to submit this evidence, with proper instructions as to the weight to which it is entitled, to the consideration of the jury.—Rundell v. La Fleur, 88 Mass. (6 Allen) 480.

[mm] (Mich. 1856) A witness having sworn that he did not know the general reputation for truth and veracity of a prior witness where he resided, it was held that a subsequent question, whether he "had heard people acquainted with him speak of such character," was inadmissible.—Webber v. Hanke, 4 Mich. 198.

[n] (Minn. 1883) The character of a witness for truth and veracity cannot be impeached by evidence of the individual opinions or declarations of the party calling them, or of others, to the effect that he is unworthy of belief.—Horton v. Chadbourn, 31 Minn. 322, 17 N. W. 865.

[nn] (Mo. 1894) One who is acquainted with another's general reputation for truth in the neighborhood in which he (other) lives may testify as to such other's general character.—State v. Fairlamb, 121 Mo. 137, 25 S. W. 895.

[o] (Neb. 1888) An impeaching witness who testifies that he knows the general reputation of the person attacked for truth and veracity will not be excluded from giving testimony as to such reputation at the time of the trial.—Long v. State, 23 Neb. 33, 36 N. W. 310.

[oo] (N. H. 1879) A belief in the want of veracity of a witness, founded on personal dealings with him, is not admissible to impeach him.—Sargent v. Wilson, 59 N. H. 396.

[p] (N. J. 1864) A stranger sent by a party to the neighborhood of a witness to learn his character will not be permitted to testify as to the result of his inquiries.—Reid v. Reid, 17 N. J. Eq. (2 C. E. Green) 101.

[pp] (N. Y. 1862) Where a witness testified that he made inquiries in the place of the impeached witness' residence to satisfy himself as to his character, but did not himself know the townspeople of whom he inquired, his testimony upon reputation was ruled inadmissible.—Curtis v. Fay, 37 Barb. 64.

[q] (N. Y. 1862) A witness to impeach or sustain the character of another witness can testify to his reputation only when he has a knowledge thereof founded upon acquaintance and intercourse with the neighbors and acquaintances of the witness in question, extending over some length of time, sufficient to enable him to gather the general estimation in which he is held by the community where he resides.—Curtis v. Fay, 37 Barb. 64.

[qq] (N. Y. 1877) One who has given evidence importing an acquaintance with the associates of an impeached witness, and a knowledge of his character, which he had heard questioned, is competent to say whether he would believe such witness under oath.—Adams v. Greenwich Ins. Co., 70 N. Y. 166.

[r] (N. Y. 1887) Where a witness called by the prosecution to impeach the general character of the defendant for truth and veracity testified that he had known defendant in his boyhood and had seen him more or less for the last two years, perhaps half a dozen times, and that he had had conversations about the defendant with persons who knew him, associated with him, and had business with him, but his testimony did not show that he had any acquaintance with the speech of people generally concerning the defendant's character, it was error to permit him to testify.—People v. Ouley, 7 N. Y. St. Rep. 794.

[rr] (N. Y. 1891) Where the testimony of witnesses as to their knowledge of the reputation of a party is sufficient at least to make its credibility a question for the jury, they may be allowed to testify thereto.—Morrison v. Press Pub. Co., 59 N. Y. Super. Ct. (27 Jones & S.) 216, 14 N. Y. Supp. 131, affirmed (1892) 133 N. Y. 538, 30 N. E. 1148.

[s] (N. Y. 1891) Where defendant fails to identify the principal witness for the people, whom he wishes to impeach, as the same person about whose reputation the impeaching witness is prepared to testify, the only approach to identification being that the impeaching witness knew of a person of the same name as the witness for the prosecution, who lived at the same house, where many others lived, but that he did not know the witness personally, it is not error to exclude the testimony of such impeaching witness.—People v. Smiler, 125 N. Y. 717, 26 N. E. 312.

[ss] (N. Y. 1892) A witness may testify that from his personal knowledge of another he would believe him under oath, though he knows nothing of the reputation of such person among others for truth and veracity.—National Bank v. Scriven, 63 Hun, 375, 18 N. Y. Supp. 277.

[t] (N. Y. 1894) Before a witness can testify to the general reputation of another witness it must be shown that he is familiar therewith. —Carlson v. Winterson (Com. Pl.) 10 Misc. Rep. 388, 31 N. Y. Supp. 430, affirming judgment (City Ct. N. Y. 1894) 9 Misc. Rep. 711, 29 N. Y. Supp. 1142, and judgment affirmed (1895) 147 N. Y. 652, 723, 42 N. E. 347.

[u] (N. C. 1889) Defendant's witness, having, to his inquiry, denied knowledge of his general character, cannot be further asked by him as to his general character for truth.—State v. Wheeler, 104 N. C. 893, 10 S. E. 491.

[uu] (N. C. 1894) A witness cannot testify as to character till he qualifies by stating that he knows the general reputation of the person in question.—State v. Coley, 114 N. C. 879, 19 S. E. 705.

[v] (Ohio, 1878) The reputation of a witness for veracity cannot be shown by the testimony of another, which is based on his personal knowledge, rather than the general reputation of the witness sought to be discredited.—Cowan v. Kinney, 33 Ohio St. 422.

[vv] (Pa. 1817) One who has derived his knowledge of another's general character for truth and veracity from common report may testify as to such character.—Kimmel v. Kimmel, 3 Serg. & R. 336, 8 Am. Dec. 655.

[w] (S. C. 1892) The fact that one does not know another personally does not preclude him from testifying to the general reputation of such person for the purpose of impeachment.—State v. Turner, 36 S. C. 534, 15 S. E. 602.

[ww] (S. C. 1892) Where one testifies to a knowledge of the general reputation of another, and to having "heard general conversations" in regard to his character, and the court admits him as having shown sufficient knowledge for the purpose of impeachment, the ruling of the court will not be disturbed.—State v. Turner, 36 S. C. 534, 15 S. E. 602.

[x] (Tex. 1859) It is not necessary that a man's character should have been matter of discussion among his neighbors to enable a witness to speak of his reputation for truth.—Boon v. Weathered's Adm'r, 23 Tex. 675.

[xx] (Tex. 1864) A witness introduced for the purpose of contradicting the testimony and impeaching the character of another witness does not show himself qualified to testify with reference to the character of the witness for truth and veracity merely from a belief based upon his individual opinion and feelings, and not upon any knowledge of the reputation of the witness in the community in which he lived, as to which he was wholly uninformed.—Ayres v. Duprey, 27 Tex. 593, 86 Am. Dec. 657.

[y] (Tex. 1882) A witness is not competent to testify as to the general character of persons for peace or violence simply on his statement that he was well acquainted with them and had lived in their community for several years. —Brownlee v. State, 13 Tex. App. 255.

[yy] (Tex. 1888) Where the cross-examination of impeaching witnesses shows that they know nothing of the reputation of the witness for truth and veracity in the neighborhood in which he lives, their testimony should be excluded.—Clapp v. Engledow, 72 Tex. 252, 10 S. W. 462.

[z] (Wis. 1883) A witness who is called to testify as to the reputation for truth and veracity of another witness is not incompetent simply because he does not live in the immediate neighborhood of the witness sought to be impeached, although this fact may affect his credibility.—Wallis v. White, 58 Wis. 26, 15 N. W. 767.

Cross-examination, see post, § 1159.

[a] (Ala.) A witness who states that he is acquainted with the general character of the impeached witness, although he may never have heard it canvassed, is competent to testify in reference to it.—(1856) Ward v. State, 28 Ala. 53; (1876) Childs v. Same, 55 Ala. 28.

[b] (Ala. 1876) A witness may be competent to testify as to the character of a person in the neighborhood in which he lives, though he has never heard it discussed.—Hadley v. State, 55 Ala. 31.

[c] (Ala. 1895) A witness introduced to impeach T. stated that he had lived for 10 or 12 years about 25 miles from T., and that the only way he knew his character in the community was that a year or two ago a man who lived about 12 miles from T. told witness that T. was "the same old lying T." Held, that the witness was incompetent to testify as to T.'s character.—Buchanan v. State, 109 Ala. 7, 19 South. 410.

[d] (Cal. 1889) One may testify as to the reputation of a witness for truth and honesty, although he may never have heard such reputation discussed.—First Nat. Bank v. Wolff, 79 Cal. 69, 21 Pac. 551, 748.

[e] (Fla. 1878) A witness, called as to the reputation of another for truth and veracity, in order to impeach him, need not necessarily know what the majority of the neighbors or associates say or think of his character for truth. —Robinson v. State, 16 Fla. 835.

[f] (La. 1876) That a witness who has testified relative to the reputation of another witness for truth and veracity has not heard a majority of the people in the neighborhood express an opinion of the character of the witness whom it is sought to impeach is not ground for a charge directing the jury to disregard the impeaching testimony.—State v. Thomas, 28 La. Ann. 827.

[g] (La. 1889) When a witness, properly introduced to impeach the reputation for chastity of the prosecutrix in a rape case, has stated positively that he knew her general reputation, his competency is not destroyed because, on cross-examination as to the nature of his knowledge, he states that he has heard 10, 15, or 20 persons speak of her character in that respect, and say that it was bad.—State v. Reed, 41 La. Ann. 581, 7 South. 132.

[h] (Md. 1883) An impeaching witness, who states that he never heard the character for truth of the witness sought to be impeached discussed, except by one person, but that he thinks he would have heard it, if there was any general talk on the subject of such character, is not qualified to testify to the general reputation for truth in the community of the impeached witness.—Sloan v. Edwards, 61 Md. 89.

[i] (Mass. 1883) A witness, who knows of another's reputation for truth and veracity only from what he has heard said of the latter on two specified occasions, is not competent to testify thereto.—Commonwealth v. Rogers, 136 Mass. 158.

[j] (Miss. 1884) It is sufficient, if the impeaching witness knows what the neighbors of the proposed witness generally think of him as a man of truth, regardless of any definite number. It is not enough that he state what he has heard others, who may be but few, say in this regard.—Pickens v. State, 61 Miss. 563.

[k] (Neb. 1877) Evidence to impeach must go to the general estimation in which the witness is held in his community. Proof of opinions of two or three persons is not competent.—Matthewson v. Burr, 6 Neb. 312.

[l] (Tenn. 1872) In order competently to testify on cross-examination touching character, the witness must have heard a sufficient number of persons speak of the assailed to be able to express the well-founded opinion that he believes he knows what a majority would say, if called on to speak.—Poole v. State, 61 Tenn. (2 Baxt.) 288.

§ 1156. —— Time to which knowledge relates.

Place and time of acquiring reputation, see ante, § 1124.

[a] (U. S. 1859) Where a witness replied, in answer to a question as to what was the reputation of another witness for truth and veracity, that he had no means of knowing, not having had any transaction with him for five years, the question was properly excluded, within the discretion of the trial court, on the ground that the period was too remote.—Teese v. Huntingdon, 64 U. S. (23 How.) 2, 16 L. Ed. 479.

[b] (Ala. 1878) The character of a witness may be impeached by the testimony of a person who three years before, and previously, lived in the same neighborhood with him, and knew his past and present general reputation there, though such person knows nothing of it in another neighborhood, to which the witness removed, and where he then resided.—Kelly v. State, 61 Ala. 19.

[c] (Ala. 1893) Evidence of the character of a witness, when it appeared that the one testifying thereto had lived with such witness for 20 years in the community, but had not seen him for 7 or 8 years, is competent to prove the present character of the witness in the community.—Jones v. State, 104 Ala. 30, 16 South. 135.

[d] (Ind. 1870) Where a witness has resided in a distant state for two years before he testified, the evidence of persons who have known him only before his removal, and do not pretend to be acquainted with his general reputation for truth in the neighborhood where he then resides, will not be admitted for the purpose of impeaching his testimony.—Chance v. Indianapolis & W. Gravel Road Co., 32 Ind. 472.

[e] (Kan. 1878) The fact that an impeaching witness knows nothing of the reputation for veracity, etc., except what he has learned since the commencement of the action, affects the weight, but not the competency, of the impeaching testimony.—Fisher v. Conway, 21 Kan. 18, 30 Am. Rep. 419.

[f] (Md. 1887) In the impeachment of a witness, the want of recent opportunity for knowledge as to his character in respect to truth and veracity is a matter which goes to the effect of the evidence, rather than the question of its admissibility.—Wagoner v. Wagoner, 10 Atl. 221.

[g] (Mich. 1856) A witness testified that he knew a previous witness in the old country, and that said witness had resided in this country about five years. The question then asked, whether he knew his character for truth and veracity in the old country, was held improper.—Webber v. Hanke, 4 Mich. 198.

[h] (Miss. 1858) A witness, who never heard about the character of another witness until after the controversy arose, is yet competent to state what he knows of it.—Mask v. State, 36 Miss. 77.

[i] (N. Y. 1865) Persons who have known nothing of a witness for eight or ten years prior to the trial are nevertheless competent to impeach him by testifying that in former years his character was bad, and by testifying they would not believe him under oath; for no certain limit in point of duration can be laid down for such inquiries.—Graham v. Chrystal, *41 N. Y. (2 Keyes) 21, 2 Abb. Dec. 263, 37 How. Prac. 279.

[j] (Tenn. 1846) The general reputation of a witness, as connected with his credibility in a court of justice, is the estimate his neighbors place upon his veracity; and an impeaching witness must state whether he knows the general reputation of the person in question, what that reputation is, and whether, from his knowledge of such reputation, he would believe him in a court of justice.—Ford v. Ford, 26 Tenn. (7 Humph.) 92.

[k] (Tex. 1889) Persons who for a long while lived in the same neighborhood with a witness are competent to testify to his reputation at that time for truth and veracity, though he moved from such neighborhood 18 months before the trial in which he is offered as a witness.—Thurmond v. State, 27 Tex. App. 347, 11 S. W. 451.

[l] (Tex. 1894) Where defendant, who had been in the state but two years, put his character in evidence, a witness who up to three years before had known him in another state may testify that he knew his general reputation there, and that it was not good.—Thomas v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 607, 28 S. W. 534.

[m] (Tex. 1895) A person's reputation for truth and veracity may be shown by witnesses who had a long acquaintance with him, though they have not seen him for several years, and are ignorant of the place of his present residence.—Brown v. Perez (Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 546.

§ 1157. Examination of impeaching witness.

[a] (U. S. 1873) Where the purpose of testimony is to impeach a witness for want of veracity, it is not improper to ask the person on the stand what is the general "reputation" for truth of the witness sought to be impeached. It is even more proper than to ask what is his general "character" for truth, though the question is sometimes asked in the latter form; the word "character" then being synonymous with "reputation."—Knode v. Williamson, 84 U. S. (17 Wall.) 586, 21 L. Ed. 670.

[b] (U. S. 1837) The usual questions asked, in order to discredit a witness, are: What is the witness' general reputation for truth? Is it good or bad?—Gass v. Stinson, Fed. Cas. No. 5,261 [2 Sumn. 605].

[c] (Ala. 1843) Where articles of impeachment are filed, and an order granted permitting the party to examine witnesses on general interrogatories as to the credit of the person whose testimony is sought to be impeached on such examination, no fact material to the matter in issue can be inquired into; but, if the witness has voluntarily stated a fact falsely not in issue between the parties, it may be contradicted, and whether the impeachment is made in this mode, or under the forty-fourth rule of chancery practice, dispensing with the filing of articles of impeachment, and permitting the testimony of witnesses to be impeached by deposition in the usual mode, the examination must be confined to the credit of the witness sought to be impeached.—Evans v. Bolling, 5 Ala. 550.

[d] (Ala. 1893) Evidence as to whether or not the witness had heard of any "improvement in the character or reputation for truth and veracity of the witness Pool" is inadmissible, in the absence of evidence of his previous character.—Jones v. State, 104 Ala. 30, 16 South. 135.

[e] (Ark. 1855) Before the opinion of a witness can be asked as to the truth and veracity of another witness whose testimony is impeached, he must be interrogated as to his knowledge of the witness' reputation among his neighbors.—Pleasant v. State, 15 Ark. 624.

[f] (Ark. 1855) A question as to the rumor and belief of people about a witness whose impeachment is attempted will not be allowed in that form.—Pleasant v. State, 15 Ark. 624.

[g] (Cal. 1884) To impeach a witness, the question, "Do you know the general reputation of Morss for truth and 'integrity' in the community in which he resides?" is proper.—Heath v. Scott, 65 Cal. 548, 4 Pac. 557.

[h] (Conn. 1856) Where a witness is called to impeach the character of another witness, the proper inquiry is, "Are you acquainted with the character of the witness?" If the witness responds in the affirmative, the further inquiry may be made as to whether his character for truth and veracity is equal to that of mankind in general.—State v. Randolph, 24 Conn. 363.

[i] (Fla. 1878) If a witness testifies that he knows the reputation for truth and veracity of a party to be impeached where he lives, questions as to whether that reputation is good or bad, and whether from that reputation he would believe him under oath, are proper.—Robinson v. State, 16 Fla. 835.

[j] (Fla. 1893) It is not error for the trial court to refuse to permit a party who has called an impeaching witness to ask him on the direct examination if he had ever heard the reputation of the witness sought to be impeached discussed, since the usual practice is to leave it to the cross-examination to enter primarily upon a test of the knowledge from which the impeaching witness has spoken.—Wood v. State, 31 Fla. 221, 12 South. 539.

[k] (Ga. 1853) On the trial of a cause witnesses called to impeach the credibility of a former witness testified that they had known him eight or ten years in the county of Russell, Ala., and that he was generally known and had a reputation in said county. They were then asked: "Do you know the general character of A. for truth and veracity in the county of Russell?" Held, that the question, under the preliminary proof, was proper.—Boswell v. Blackman, 12 Ga. 591.

[l] (Ill. 1861) The question, to an impeaching witness, "whether he is acquainted with the general reputation of the witness sought to be impeached among his friends, neighbors, and associates," is competent.—Crabtree v. Hagenbaugh, 25 Ill. (15 Peck) 233, 79 Am. Dec. 324.

[m] (Ill. 1887) Where a witness is called to impeach the credit of another witness, he must state that he knows the reputation for truth and veracity of the person impeached among his neighbors, and that such reputation is bad.—Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320.

[n] (Ind. 1877) Evidence of the general moral character of a witness, introduced for the purpose of impeaching him, must be confined to the time at which he testifies and to the neighborhood wherein he then resides. The question, "Are you acquainted with the general moral character of M?" is too broad.—Rawles v. State, 56 Ind. 433.

[o] (Ind. 1879) A question asked for the purpose of impeaching the character of a witness for truth and veracity should be directed to his "general" character for truth, etc.—Meyncke v. State, 68 Ind. 401.

[p] (Kan. 1891) The omission, from questions to witnesses as to the reputation for truth and veracity of a previous witness, of the word "general," does not render their testimony on the subject incompetent, where their answers show that they understood the question in a general sense, and the answers themselves are sufficiently general.—Coates v. Sulau, 46 Kan. 341, 26 Pac. 720.

[pp] (Ky. 1859) The regular mode of inquiring into the reputation of a witness is to ask of those introduced for that purpose whether they know the general reputation of the person in question among his neighbors, and what that reputation is. The inquiry must be as to his general reputation where he is best known, or with those among whom he dwells.—Henderson v. Hayne, 59 Ky. (2 Metc.) 342.

[q] (La. 1848) A party may be interrogated as to a witness' character; but the questions must be such as could be put to any other witness.—Gilmore v. Brenham, 3 La. Ann. 32.

[qq] (Me. 1841) A witness introduced to impeach the credit of another should be examined as to the general character of the witness for truth and veracity. The proper inquiry is whether the witness knows the general character of the witness attempted to be impeached, and, if so, what is his general reputation for truth?—Inhabitants of Phillips v. Inhabitants of Kingfield, 19 Me. (1 App.) 375, 36 Am. Dec. 760.

[r] (Md. 1883) A witness called to prove character should be interrogated as to his means of knowledge of the general reputation of the person in question among his neighbors, and what that reputation is, and the evidence must be confined to general reputation.—Sloan v. Edwards, 61 Md. 89.

[rr] (Mass. 1849) Where a witness is called to testify against the reputation of another witness for truth and veracity, he can only be inquired of as to what he has heard, and cannot be asked, "Whether, from the treatment and conduct of the community generally toward the witness sought to be impeached, he knows enough about his general character to say what it is for truth and veracity."—Bates v. Barber, 58 Mass. (4 Cush.) 107.

[s] (Mass. 1866) After a witness, called to impeach another, had been asked as to the general reputation of the latter for truth, and had answered that he had not heard it "talked of a great deal," it was held that no exception lay to the refusal of the judge to permit the following additional questions: "Have you heard his character for truth and veracity called in question?" "If you have heard his character for truth and veracity called in question, state what the common speech of people is as to his character for truth and veracity." "What is the general reputation of C. for truth and veracity among those who speak of it at all?"—Commonwealth v. Lawler, 94 Mass. (12 Allen) 585.

[ss] (Mass. 1870) The omission of the preliminary question to an impeaching witness, whether he knows the reputation of the witness for truth, etc., is within the discretion of the presiding judge.—Wetherbee v. Norris, 103 Mass. 565.

[t] (Mo. 1885) The admission of testimony in a criminal case relative to the general reputation of one of the defendant's material witnesses, without any showing as a foundation that the witness giving the testimony was acquainted with such reputation, was error.—State v. Brady, 87 Mo. 142.

[tt] (N. H. 1860) In impeaching a witness by showing his generally bad reputation for truth, it must appear that the impeaching witnesses are acquainted with the general reputation of such witness for truth among his neighbors before they are inquired of as to what that reputation is. The particular form of the question is immaterial, if all the necessary facts be made to appear.—Kelley v. Proctor, 41 N. H. 139.

[u] (N. Y. 1890) A witness called to impeach another testified that he had been in the same business as the latter for 18 years, and had had dealings with him, and was then asked what was the reputation of such witness for truth and veracity, and whether he would believe him under oath. Held, that it was not error to exclude the question for want of proper foundation.—Healey v. Terry, 16 Daly, 117, 9 N. Y. Supp. 519.

[uu] (N. C. 1843) The party impeaching a witness cannot inquire of the attacking witnesses, simply, "in what estimation the witness impeached was held in his neighborhood."—State v. O'Neale, 26 N. C. 88.

[v] (N. C. 1849) Though an impeaching witness may be examined as to the general moral character of the witness impeached, and also as to his character for truth when on oath and when not on oath, it is not necessary to put such questions in any particular order.—State v. Dove, 32 N. C. 469.

[vv] (N. C. 1888) A question put to a witness whether there were not some hard reports concerning the character of another witness in his neighborhood is unprejudicial where the answer is, "I have heard of none."—Blackwell's Durham Tobacco Co. v. McElwee, 100 N. C. 150, 5 S. E. 907.

[w] (Ohio, 1816) An impeaching witness should be first examined as to his knowledge of the character of the witness sought to be impeached, and then asked if that character for truth and veracity is as good as that of men in general.—Mallory v. Smith, Tapp. 108.

[ww] (Ohio, 1851) The proper question to be put to an impeaching witness is as to the general reputation of the witness sought to be impeached for truth and veracity, and not what his character for truth and veracity is.—Bucklin v. State, 20 Ohio, 18.

[x] (Ohio, 1853) When a witness is called to impeach another witness, it is not error to ask: "Are you acquainted with A.'s reputation for truth and veracity? If so, what is it?" By the word "reputation" will be intended the general repute of the witness sought to be impeached.—French v. Millard, 2 Ohio St. 44.

[xx] (Ohio, 1855) Any form of words may be used which will ascertain if the witness has sufficient knowledge of the public estimation for truth in which the witness to be impeached is held.—Craig v. State, 5 Ohio St. 605.

[y] (S. C. 1887) When a witness is offered for the purpose of impeaching or sustaining the general character of another, there is no set form of words which must be followed with rigid exactness in interrogating such witness.—State v. Prater, 26 S. C. 198, 613, 2 S. E. 108.

[yy] (Tenn. 1851) There is no objection to the form of question put to a witness in support of an impeached witness' credit in the following manner: "Are you acquainted with the general character of the witness?"—Hancock v. Stephens, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 507.

[z] (Tex. 1880) An objection as to the extent to which the examination of impeaching witness should be permitted cannot be legitimately raised for the first time either in argument or by a charge to the jury, but should be raised on the examination of the witness.—Holbert v. State, 9 Tex. App. 219, 35 Am. Rep. 738.

§ 1158. —— Opinion or belief.

[a] It is competent to ask an impeaching witness, who has testified that the general reputation of another witness for truth and veracity in the vicinity in which he lives is bad, whether he would give him full credit upon his oath.

—(Kan. 1888) State v. Johnson, 40 Kan. 266, 19 Pac. 749;

(Mich. 1875) Keator v. People, 32 Mich. 484;

(Ohio, 1875) Hillis v. Wylie, 26 Ohio St. 574;

(Pa. 1850) Commonwealth v. McLain, 4 Clark, 462;

(S. C. 1826) Dollard v. Dollard's Ex'r, Harp. 564;

(Wis. 1854) Wilson v. State, 3 Wis. 798.

[b] The question as to whether a witness would believe another witness on oath cannot be asked, unless he testifies to a knowledge of the general reputation of the witness sought to be discredited.

—(La. 1851) Paradise v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 6 La. Ann. 596;

(N. Y. 1894) Carlson v. Winterson (Com. Pl.) 10 Misc. Rep. 388, 31 N. Y. Supp. 430, affirming judgment (City Ct. N. Y. 1894) 9 Misc. Rep. 711, 29 N. Y. Supp. 1142, and judgment affirmed (1895) 147 N. Y. 652, 42 N. E. 347;

(Tex. 1877) Spence v. State, 1 Tex. App. 541.

[c] The proper question to be put to a witness called to impeach another is as to whether he would believe him on oath.

—(Ky. 1819) Mobley v. Hamit, 8 Ky. (1 A. K. Marsh.) 590;

(N. Y. 1830) People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 229, 21 Am. Dec. 122.

[d] (U. S. 1827) When a witness is produced to testify as to the credibility of another witness, the proper questions to be put to the witness are: "Do you know the common reputation of the witness for veracity among the generality of his acquaintance? From your knowledge of his general reputation for veracity, would you believe him on his oath?"—Patriotic Bank v. Coote, Fed. Cas. No. 10,807 [3 Cranch, C. C. 169].

[e] (U. S. 1840) An impeaching witness, under examination, may be asked whether, from his knowledge of the general character of the witness, he would believe him under oath.—United States v. Vansickle, Fed. Cas. No. 16,609 [2 McLean, 219].

[f] (Ala. 1853) The individual opinion of a witness, founded on rumor, respecting the guilt of another witness of the crime of murder, is not admissible for the purpose of impeaching the latter.—Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44.

[g] (Ark. 1874) An impeaching witness may testify as to his belief.—Snow v. Grace, 29 Ark. 131.

[h] (Ark. 1888) A witness testified that he knew the principal witness for the state; that he had lived near her for seven years, and knew that her general reputation for truth and morality in the neighborhood was not good; that he considered it bad. Held, that witness should have been permitted to answer whether, taking such a reputation as a basis, he would believe her under oath.—Hudspeth v. State, 50 Ark. 534, 9 S. W. 1.

[i] (Ark. 1888) Under Mansf. Dig. § 2902, allowing a witness to be impeached by evidence of his general reputation for truth or immorality, an inquiry as to whether one, from his knowledge of his "reputation for truth and veracity, morality, and chastity," would believe him on oath, is not permissible.—Cline v. State, 51 Ark. 140, 10 S. W. 225.

[j] (Cal. 1859) An impeaching witness may swear he would not believe the other witness on oath.—Stevens v. Irwin, 12 Cal. 306.

[k] (Cal. 1868) It is not essential to the successful impeachment of a witness' character for truth that the impeaching witness should state that he would not believe him under oath. —People v. Tyler, 35 Cal. 553.

[l] (Colo. 1889) In impeaching the credibility of a witness, the question asked, "From what you know of his truth and veracity, would you believe him under oath?" is incompetent, as calling for the opinion of a witness, based upon his personal knowledge, and not upon the general reputation of the witness sought to be impeached.—Benesch v. Waggner, 12 Colo. 534, 21 Pac. 706, 13 Am. St. Rep. 254; Same v. Mitchelson, 12 Colo. 539, 21 Pac. 708.

[m] (Fla. 1851) An impeaching witness may be asked if he has the means of knowing the general character of the witness sought to be impeached, and, if so, from such knowledge, whether he would believe him on oath.—Porter v. Ferguson, 4 Fla. 102.

[mm] (Ga. 1855) The regular mode of examining into general character is to inquire of the witnesses whether they have the means of knowing the former witness' general character, and whether, from such knowledge, they would believe him on his oath.—Stokes v. State, 18 Ga. 17.

[n] (Ill. 1858) Where it is shown that the general character of a witness among his neighbors for truthfulness is bad, it is erroneous to refuse to let the impeaching witness answer whether he would believe such witness upon oath.—Eason v. Chapman, 21 Ill. (11 Peck) 33.

[nn] (Ill. 1882) Instead of the question usual in such cases, witnesses were asked if, in a case where defendant was personally interested, they would believe him on oath, and they answered that if he was interested they would hesitate to believe him. In the result of the case on trial defendant was personally interested, the suit being upon a note the signature to which he denied to be his, and his testimony consisted of such denial. Held, that the question was inadmissible.—Massey v. Farmers' Nat. Bank, 104 Ill. 327.

[o] (Ill. 1884) One called to impeach a witness need not necessarily be asked whether he would believe the witness under oath.—Laclede Bank v. Keeler, 109 Ill. 385.

[oo] (Ind. 1882) In a criminal case, a witness examined to impeach another cannot be asked whether he would believe the other under oath. —Walton v. State, 88 Ind. 9.

[p] (Iowa, 1882) Under Code 1873, § 3649, providing that "the general moral character of a witness may be proved for the purpose of testing his credibility," the word "character" means "reputation," and it is not competent for one to testify as to his individual opinion of the witness' moral character.—State v. Egan, 59 Iowa, 636, 13 N. W. 730.

[pp] (La. 1843) To discredit a witness, the proper question is whether, from a knowledge of his general character, he would be believed on oath.—Stanton v. Parker, 5 Rob. 108, 39 Am. Dec. 528.

[q] (La. 1843) A witness, who states he does not know the general character of another, cannot be asked whether he would believe the latter on oath. One is presumed not always ready to explain particular actions, but always to have within reach evidence of his general good character.—Stanton v. Parker, 5 Rob. 108, 39 Am. Dec. 528.

[qq] (La. 1892) Where witnesses introduced by defendant to impeach a witness for the state testify that they know the latter's general reputation for truth and veracity in the community in which he lives, and that it is bad, it is error to refuse to permit them to answer whether, from their knowledge of his general reputation for truth and veracity, they would believe him under oath.—State v. Christian, 44 La. Ann. 950, 11 South. 589, following Stanton v. Parker (1843) 5 Rob. 108, 39 Am. Dec. 528, and Paradise v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co. (1851) 6 La. Ann. 596.

[r] (Md. 1868) Where an impeaching witness has testified that a party's general reputation for truth and veracity in the community where he lives is unfavorable, he may be asked "whether, from that reputation, he [the witness] would believe him on oath in a matter in which he was interested."—Knight v. House, 29 Md. 194, 96 Am. Dec. 515.

[rr] (Mo. 1883) A witness cannot be asked whether he would believe another witness on oath.—State v. Rush, 77 Mo. 519.

[s] (N. H. 1838) Where witnesses are called to impeach the general character of a witness for truth, the proper inquiries are as to what is the general reputation of the witness as to truth, and whether, from such general reputation, the person testifying would believe such witness under oath as soon as men in general. —State v. Howard, 9 N. H. 485.

[ss] (N. J. 1869) A statement by the witness testifying that, from what he knew of the reputation of the witness impeached, he would not believe him under oath, is not sufficient. —King v. Ruckman, 20 N. J. Eq. (5 C. E. Green) 316.

[t] (N. Y. 1838) An impeaching witness may be required to declare whether the character of the principal witness is so very bad that, in his opinion, the witness is utterly unworthy of credit on oath.—People v. Rector, 19 Wend. 569.

[tt] (N. C. 1843) A witness, who is introduced for the purpose of discrediting another witness in the cause, must profess to know the general reputation of the witness sought to be discredited, before he can be heard to speak of his own opinion, or of the opinion of others, as to the reliance to be placed on the testimony of the impeached witness.—State v. Parks, 25 N. C. 296.

[u] (N. C. 1856) An impeaching witness, after he has stated that the character of another witness is bad, cannot be asked whether, from his knowledge of that character, he would, if he were a juror, believe the witness upon his oath.—Hooper v. Moore, 48 N. C. 428.

[uu] (N. C. 1878) It is not permissible to ask a witness, relative to another witness whose evidence it is sought to impeach, whether, from the latter's general character in the neighborhood, he would believe him on oath.—State v. Caveness, 78 N. C. 484.

[v] (Ohio, 1851) When a witness is called to impeach the character for truth and veracity of a witness called by the other side, such impeaching witness can only speak of the general reputation in the community of the witness sought to be impeached, and cannot give his own opinion of his character.—Bucklin v. State, 20 Ohio, 18.

[vv] (Pa. 1864) To discredit a witness, the first inquiry of the witnesses called for that purpose must be as to their acquaintance with him and his general character for truth and veracity in the neighborhood where he resides; next, what that reputation is; then the question may be asked whether, from their knowledge of his general reputation for truth, they would believe him under oath.—Bogle's Ex'rs v. Kreitzer, 46 Pa. (10 Wright) 465.

[w] (Pa. 1868) A witness must state his own knowledge of another's general good reputation for truth before he will be permitted to say he would believe him on oath.—Lyman v. City of Philadelphia, 56 Pa. (6 P. F. Smith) 488.

[ww] (S. C. 1896) It is not error to permit a witness to testify that he would not believe another witness under oath where he states that he knows his general reputation, though he is unable to state the particular reputation of the witness for veracity.—State v. Murphy, 48 S. C. 1, 25 S. E. 43.

[x] (Tenn. 1858) The proper questions to be put to the impeaching witness are whether he knows the general reputation of the person whose credibility is in question, what that reputation is, and whether, from such knowledge, the witness would believe him upon his oath.—Gilliam v. State, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 38, 73 Am. Dec. 161.

[xx] (Tex. 1878) In impeaching the credibility of a witness, the inquiry should be restricted to his general reputation for veracity in the community where he is best known. The impeaching witness is not to be asked whether, from such reputation, he would believe the impugned witness, but whether that reputation is such as entitles him to belief.—Marshall v. State, 5 Tex. App. 273.

[yy] (Tex.) After a witness has stated that he knows the general reputation for truth of the person whom it is sought to impeach, he may be asked whether, from that reputation, he is worthy of belief. This is not equivalent to asking the witness whether he would believe him.—(1882) Bluitt v. State, 12 Tex. App. 39, 41 Am. Rep. 666; (1893) Mayes v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 33, 24 S. W. 421.

[z] (Tex. 1888) Questions as to the reputation of an impeached witness for truth and veracity, and whether he is entitled to be believed under oath, are improper, as calling for the opinion of the witness and not restricted to general character and reputation.—Griffin v. State, 26 Tex. App. 157, 9 S. W. 459, 8 Am. St. Rep. 460.

[zz] (W. Va. 1881) A witness who states that he is acquainted with the general reputation for truth and veracity of another witness, and that it is bad and he would not believe him on oath, is competent, and what his opinion is founded on only affects the weight of the evidence.—State v. Meadows, 18 W. Va. 658.

Conclusiveness of answer on cross-examination, see post, § 1275.

[a] (U. S. 1827) Where a witness is produced to testify as to the credibility of another witness, and such impeaching witness testifies that the persons who are acquainted with the witness say that his reputation for veracity is not good, the impeaching witness will not be required to state the names of the persons from whom he has learned the general reputation of the witness for veracity.—Patriotic Bank v. Coote, Fed. Cas. No. 10,807 [3 Cranch, C. C. 169].

[b] (Ala. 1889) Where a person has testified to his friendship for a witness whose character he is called to impeach, it is competent, on cross-examination, to ask him if he did not once go to arrest the witness with a gun, on a warrant sworn out by himself, since the evidence sought to be elicited tends to contradict his previous testimony.—Barnett v. State, 89 Ala. 165, 7 South. 414.

[c] (Ala. 1890) A witness to character may be cross-examined as to what he has heard in the community touching the character in question.—Montgomery v. Crossthwait, 90 Ala. 553, 8 South. 498, 24 Am. St. Rep. 832, 12 L. R. A. 140.

[d] (Ala. 1890) A witness who states on cross-examination that he has heard much adverse criticism as to the character of the person in question cannot testify that he has heard people say that they would not believe him under oath.—Montgomery v. Crossthwait, 90 Ala. 553, 8 South. 498, 24 Am. St. Rep. 832, 12 L. R. A. 140.

[e] (Conn. 1849) A witness, called to impeach the character for veracity of another witness who had given material testimony, swore that the character of the last-mentioned witness was not upon a par with that of mankind in general, and was asked, on cross-examination, what individual he had heard speak against the character of that witness. Held, that this question was a proper one.—Weeks v. Hull, 19 Conn. 376, 50 Am. Dec. 249.

[f] (Fla. 1878) The opposing party is entitled, on cross-examination of an impeaching witness, to ascertain the extent of the information of the witness and the source of his knowledge.—Robinson v. State, 16 Fla. 835.

[g] (Fla. 1893) Where a witness, offered to impeach the character of another for veracity, testifies that he knows the general reputation of the party to be impeached in the neighborhood in which such party lives for truth and veracity, the foundation for proving what that reputation is has been sufficiently laid, and the witness should be permitted to go on and testify as to what the reputation is, and whether he would believe such party under oath, and he cannot be cross-examined to test the extent and sources of his information until he has been turned over in regular order for cross-examination in general at the close of the examination in chief.—Nelson v. State, 32 Fla. 244, 13 South. 861.

[h] (Ky. 1814) Where witnesses are introduced to discredit others, and testify that their general character is bad, the adverse party will be permitted to ask as to their character in point of veracity.—Noel v. Dickey, 6 Ky. (3 Bibb) 268.

[i] (Ky. 1886) Where the character of a witness is in question, it is improper, on the cross-examination of an impeaching witness, to ask if the witness has any personal knowledge of any particular act of bad conduct on the part of the witness whose character is being assailed.—Fox v. Commonwealth, 1 S. W. 396.

[j] (Ky. 1896) A witness called by the state to impeach the character of defendant's witness may testify on cross-examination as to the character and reputation of other witnesses for the state.—Jackson v. Commonwealth, 34 S. W. 901.

[k] (Me. 1841) On the cross-examination, the inquiry should be limited to the witness' opportunity for knowing the character of such witness, for how long a time and how generally such unfavorable reports have prevailed, and from what sources they have been derived. It is not allowable to ask the impeaching witness whether he would believe the witness attempted to be impeached on oath.—Inhabitants of Phillips v. Inhabitants of Kingfield, 19 Me. (1 App.) 375, 36 Am. Dec. 760.

[l] (Mass. 1849) An impeaching witness may be asked, on cross-examination, to state the names of all persons whom he has heard speak against the reputation of the witness impeached.—Bates v. Barber, 58 Mass. (4 Cush.) 107.

[m] (Mich. 1865) Where a witness has testified that the reputation of another witness for truth and veracity was bad, and on cross-examination had testified that he had heard A. speak against him before the commencement of the suit, it was held that the question, "What did A. say?" was competent.—Annis v. People, 13 Mich. 511.

[n] (Mich. 1885) Cross-examination of an impeaching witness, to show that he is himself disreputable, may be restricted, in the discretion of the trial judge; and, where the offer was to show that he was a procurer and blackmailer, it is properly excluded.—Hollywood v. Reed, 57 Mich. 234, 23 N. W. 792.

[o] (Mich. 1894) A witness who had testified to defendant's good character could properly be asked if, after the crime, he did not say to another witness that he knew defendant to be dangerous; that he had had trouble with him before this.—People v. Pyckett, 99 Mich. 613, 58 N. W. 621.

[p] (Mich. 1895) When defendant brought out the fact that plaintiff had been arrested for a criminal offense, it was proper, on defendant's cross-examination, on the question of animus, to ask him whether he had not caused plaintiff's arrest.—Burt v. Long, 106 Mich. 210, 64 N. W. 60.

[q] (Miss. 1884) An impeaching witness, who states that he knows the general reputation of another witness, may be cross-examined as to the sources and extent of such information.—Pickens v. State, 61 Miss. 563.

[r] (Mo. 1879) A liberal cross-examination is allowable, where a witness impeaches another by testimony as to general character.—State v. Miller, 71 Mo. 89.

[s] (N. H. 1838) On cross-examination of impeaching witnesses, inquiries as to the means of knowledge of the character of the witness, the origin of reports against him, how generally such reports have prevailed, and from whom and when they heard them, are admissible.—State v. Howard, 9 N. H. 485.

[t] (N. H. 1851) A witness, being called to impeach another witness, and having testified that from his general reputation he would not believe him under oath, may be asked what his testimony would be, laying aside the impressions which he received at a previous trial referred to.—Titus v. Ash, 24 N. H. (4 Fost.) 319.

[u] (N. Y. 1827) Where a witness states that the general reputation of a witness previously sworn is bad in point of truth and veracity, he may be asked, in cross-examination, to name the persons he has heard impeach the character of the witness.—Lower v. Winters, 7 Cow. 263.

[v] (N. Y. 1829) A witness, testifying as to the character of another witness, may be asked on what circumstances he founds an unfavorable impression as to his character.—Fulton Bank v. Benedict, 1 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Hall) 480.

[vv] (N. Y. 1886) The right to test evidence that the general character of a witness is not good, by cross-examination, goes to the inquiry of the particular charges heard by the impeaching witness and the character of such specific imputations, but not to the question as to whether or not they are true.—Mather v. Freelove, 3 N. Y. St. Rep. 424.

[w] (N. Y. 1887) Where a witness in plaintiff's behalf had testified that the reputation of the plaintiff in the community in which he lived was good, it was competent to ask him on cross-examination if he had heard certain things repeated concerning the plaintiff, showing that his reputation was not good.—Calkins v. Colburn, 10 N. Y. St. Rep. 778.

[ww] (N. Y. 1893) A witness examined to impeach plaintiff's character testified that he would not believe plaintiff under oath "as soon as he would men in general." On cross-examination witness was asked if good men were not spoken ill of there (meaning the town where plaintiff lived), and if he had not heard as good men as plaintiff berated. Held that, though such questions might properly have been excluded, their admission was not such error as would require a reversal of the verdict.—Davis v. Willis, 67 Hun, 650, 22 N. Y. Supp. 339.

[x] (N. C. 1869) An impeaching witness may be impeached by cross-examination.—State v. Cherry, 63 N. C. 493.

[xx] (N. C. 1872) When a witness swears to the general bad character of another witness, he may be asked upon cross-examination to name the individuals whom he heard speak disparagingly of the witness, and what was said.—State v. Perkins, 66 N. C. 126.

[y] (Ohio, 1817) An impeaching witness may be cross-examined as to how he formed his opinion, and may be asked whom he heard give the witness a bad character.—Gleason v. Williams, Tapp. 174.

[yy] (Tex. 1880) An impeaching witness is amenable to cross-examination in like manner and to the same extent as other witnesses.—Holbert v. State, 9 Tex. App. 219, 35 Am. Rep. 738.

[z] (Vt. 1858) It is not proper for counsel to inquire, upon the cross-examination of one witness who has testified to the bad character of another for truth, whether he would believe the latter on oath.—Willard v. Goodenough, 30 Vt. 393.

[zz] (W. Va. 1881) An impeaching witness, testifying to the general reputation for truth and veracity of the witness sought to be impeached, and as to whether he would believe him under oath, may be asked whether his opinion is formed from his own knowledge or from what he has heard his neighbors say, and whether he ever heard a majority of his neighbors speak of the character of the impeached witness.—State v. Meadows, 18 W. Va. 658.

§ 1160. Redirect examination.

[a] (Ala. 1853) If a witness be introduced for the purpose of impeaching another by proof of his general character, and on cross-examination testifies that public rumor imputed to the impeached witness "a bad moral character as to drinking, fighting, murder, shooting at men, and certain publications, reputed false, in his newspaper," he cannot be asked, on re-examination in chief, "what other moral delinquencies public rumor attributed to him," nor "what rumor said in regard to those publications," nor "whether he did not know, of his own knowledge, that they were false."—Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44.

[b] (Ind. 1895) On a criminal trial, after defendant had testified in his own behalf, a witness for the prosecution testified that defendant's general reputation for morality was bad, and on cross-examination he was asked if he ever heard any one besides the prosecuting attorney state that defendant's general reputation for morality was bad, and his answer was that he could not name any specific person. Held, that the prosecution, on redirect examination, had no right to question the witness as to specific charges of moral delinquency made against defendant.—Griffith v. State, 140 Ind. 163, 39 N. E. 440.

[c] (Ky. 1886) Where the character of a witness is in question, it is improper, on redirect examination of an impeaching witness, to ask if the witness has any personal knowledge of any particular act of bad conduct on the part of the witness whose character is being assailed.—Fox v. Commonwealth, 1 S. W. 396.

[d] (S. C. 1884) Where, in a criminal case, a witness for defendant, offered to impeach the general character of the prosecutor for veracity, is permitted on cross-examination to testify as to certain offenses with which such prosecutor has been charged, defendant may in reply examine such witness further as to such offenses. —State v. Hicks, 20 S. C. 341.

§ 1161. Evidence of accusation or conviction of crime.

Contradiction of record of conviction, see post, § 1169.

Cross-examination to show accusation or conviction, see ante, §§ 1142, 1148.

[a] (U. S. 1880) Conviction of an infamous crime, going to the credibility of a witness, must be shown by the record.—United States v. Biebusch (C. C.) 1 Fed. 213, 1 McCrary, 42.

[b] (Cal. 1870) Since the record is the best evidence of the previous conviction of a witness for crime, it is not competent to prove that fact by parol against the objection of the opposite party.—People v. Reinhart, 39 Cal. 449; Same v. Melvane, Id. 614; Same v. McDonald, Id. 697.

[c] (Cal. 1877) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051, allowing a cross-examiner to ask a witness if he has been convicted of a felony, a witness on cross-examination may be asked whether he has been convicted of a felony, or such fact may be proved by the record of the conviction, as such section continues the right to prove such fact by the record as was the rule before the Code. —People v. Chin Mook Sow, 51 Cal. 597.

[d] (Conn. 1862) Under Rev. St. tit. 1, § 141, providing that the conviction of a person may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credit as a witness, a conviction of crime can be proved against a witness for the purpose of affecting the credibility of his testimony only by the record of his conviction.—Hall v. Brown, 30 Conn. 551.

[e] (Ga.) The record of the conviction of a witness of larceny is admissible in evidence to impeach him.—(1884) Georgia R. R. v. Homer, 73 Ga. 251; (1894) Coleman v. State, 94 Ga. 85, 21 S. E. 124.

[f] (Ga. 1888) To prove a conviction in another court, an incomplete transcript is not sufficient. Exemplification of docket entry, plea of guilty, and judgment thereon, is not admissible to discredit a witness as a convict, without either a transcript of the accusation or indictment, or, if lost, some evidence of their contents.—Doggett v. Simms, 79 Ga. 253, 4 S. E. 909.

[g] (Ill. 1882) Where defendant in a criminal case testifies, and an attempt is made to discredit him by showing that he has been convicted of an infamous crime, legal proof of the conviction must be made; it is not enough to show authority to detain him in the penitentiary. The prison record, therefore, is inadmissible in evidence in such a case.—Bartholomew v. People, 104 Ill. 601, 44 Am. Rep. 97.

[h] (Ill. 1888) It is error to admit a copy of only a part of record of previous conviction, consisting of the final judgment order only, for the purpose of affecting the credit of a witness. —Kirby v. People, 123 Ill. 436, 15 N. E. 33.

[i] (Mass. 1891) A witness having admitted conviction of larceny, and the record of the conviction being in evidence, he cannot be asked as to the circumstances connected with the transaction.—Commonwealth v. Galligan, 155 Mass. 54, 28 N. E. 1129; Same v. Taber, Id.

[j] (Mich. 1882) The credit of a witness cannot be impeached or assailed by the direct testimony of other witnesses to any charge of criminality formerly made against him, unless he has been adjudged guilty; and this must be shown by a record of the judgment.—Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 413, 11 N. W. 221.

[k] (Mo. 1883) A witness' conviction of crime cannot be proved by parol against objection.—State v. Douglass, 81 Mo. 231.

[l] (Mo. 1885) Proof by oral evidence of the previous conviction of a witness of a crime is competent if such evidence is not objected to.—State v. Rockett, 87 Mo. 666.

[m] (Mo. 1893) Where defendant is a witness in his own behalf, it is not error to permit the state to read in evidence a certified copy of the records of the court of another county, showing his conviction therein for assault with intent to rape, for the purpose of affecting his credibility as a witness.—State v. Minor, 117 Mo. 302, 22 S. W. 1085.

[n] (Neb. 1888) Where the fact that a witness has been convicted of a felony appears beyond question from his own testimony, and other evidence introduced, the refusal of the court to admit the record of such conviction is error without prejudice.—Long v. State, 23 Neb. 33, 36 N. W. 310.

[o] (N. Y. 1871) A recital in a bond, signed by a witness, that he has been charged with perjury, and that there was probable cause to believe him guilty, is no evidence whatever against the credibility of such witness.—Berner v. Mittnacht, 82 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sweeny) 582.

[p] (N. Y. 1875) Where on a trial for rape the prisoner is sworn and testifies in his own behalf, a record of his conviction of petit larceny is admissible as affecting his credit.—People v. Satterlee, 5 Hun, 167.

[q] (Tex. 1895) Where defendant, over his objection, when asked if he was under indictment for certain other offenses, stated that he had been served with some papers, but, if he was indicted for the offenses, he did not know it, it was proper to admit the indictments in evidence, where the court charged that they could be considered only on the question of defendant's credibility.—Brazos v. State (Cr. App.) 33 S. W. 540.

[r] (Vt. 1894) A record of conviction which merely shows that a witness was charged with having found stolen property, and that he was found guilty and fined, is not admissible to impeach the witness, as it does not show that he was convicted of any crime.—Norton's Adm'r v. Perkins, 67 Vt. 203, 31 Atl. 148.

§ 1162. —— Identification of witness as person named in record.

[a] (Ala. 1893) Where a justice's docket is introduced to prove defendant's prior conviction of petit larceny, to affect his credibility (Code, § 2766), the state may be allowed to recall defendant, who has testified for himself, and examine him as to his identity with the person so convicted.—Thompson v. State, 100 Ala. 70, 14 South. 878.

[b] (Mass. 1889) Under Pub. St. c. 169, § 19, providing that the conviction of a witness of a crime may be shown to affect his credibility, when the defendant testifies in his own behalf, the record of his conviction of a crime is admissible, and he can be asked questions tending to identify him with the person named in the record. — Commonwealth v. Sullivan, 150 Mass. 315, 23 N. E. 47.

§ 1163. Cumulative testimony.

[a] (Tex. 1892) The fact that a defendant has already successfully attacked the character of the state's witness for truth and veracity would not preclude him from introducing cumulative testimony.—Browder v. State, 30 Tex. App. 614, 18 S. W. 197.

§ 1164. Sufficiency of evidence.

[a] (U. S. 1849) Where there are conflicting statements in regard to the credibility of a witness, which are equally balanced for and against his credibility, the jury should throw out his testimony.—Ray v. Donnell, Fed. Cas. No. 11,590 [4 McLean, 504].

[b] (Ala. 1866) If witnesses, called to discredit the character of another witness, testify that they are acquainted with his character, and would not believe him on oath, and on cross-examination they make admissions tending to show that they do not understand what is meant by character, and do not speak of his general reputation, this evidence will not be excluded.—Bullard v. Lambert, 40 Ala. 204.

[c] (Cal. 1883) The general reputation of a witness for truth, honesty, and integrity cannot be established by his reputation as to those particulars among the police officers of a small town.—People v. Markham, 64 Cal. 157, 30 Pac. 620, 49 Am. Rep. 700.

[d] (Ga. 1882) Where a witness, when asked the reputation of another witness for truth and veracity, answered incoherently, obscurely and contradictorily, not apprehending, evidently, the point of the inquiry, held, that his answers were properly submitted to the jury for what they were worth.—Sims v. State, 68 Ga. 486.

[e] (Iowa, 1884) When the general moral character of a witness has been stated to be bad, such impeaching evidence cannot be wholly destroyed by showing on cross-examination that the reports referred to his character relative to a particular vice.—State v. Woodworth, 65 Iowa, 141, 21 N. W. 490.

[f] (N. Y. 1862) Where, in the attempt to impeach a witness, she is shown to be of bad moral character, reputed dishonest, untruthful, thievish, unchaste, a keeper of a drinking shop for low characters, the court cannot instruct the jury that the impeaching evidence is of no force, simply on the ground that the impeaching witnesses were not asked if they would believe her on oath.—Wright v. Paige, 36 Barb. 438, affirmed (1868) *42 N. Y. (3 Keyes) 581, 33 How. Prac. 618, note, 3 Trans. App. 134.

[g] (Pa. 1889) Where the reputation of a witness is impeached, a charge that in weighing the impeaching testimony the jury are to consider whether the persons giving it know the witness well, and the community in which he lives, and whether they are able to judge as to what his general reputation in the neighborhood is, and that the individual opinions of such persons do not go to make up a man's character, is proper.—Oberholtzer v. Heist, 16 Atl. 804.

[h] (Tex. 1876) To impeach a witness for truth and veracity, his character must be shown to be notoriously bad in that respect; and while this may be done by one witness, yet, in weighing the testimony, one witness will not, ordinarily, be satisfactory.—Wafford v. State, 44 Tex. 439.

[i] (Tex. 1877) Bad character for truth must be notorious in the neighborhood of the witness' residence, but it may be proved by one witness, as the law does not fix any required number.—Butler v. State, 3 Tex. App. 48.

[j] (Tex. 1888) An impeachment of the reputation for truth and veracity of one of the state's witnesses by the testimony of a single witness is not sufficient to require a special instruction on the matter.—Rider v. State, 26 Tex. App. 334, 9 S. W. 688.

[k] (Vt. 1882) The weight of testimony as to a witness' reputation just before the commencement of a pending suit is lessened if the reports impeaching his reputation grew out of the subject-matter of the suit.—Amidon v. Hosley, 54 Vt. 25.

6. EVIDENCE TO SUSTAIN CHARACTER OF WITNESS OR TO IMPEACH IMPEACHING WITNESS.

NATURE OF ATTACK OR SUFFICIENCY OF IMPEACHMENT TO AUTHORIZE EVIDENCE OF GOOD CHARACTER, § 1165.
REBUTTAL OF EVIDENCE IMPEACHING CHARACTER, § 1166.
EVIDENCE TO SUSTAIN CHARACTER OF WITNESS IMPEACHED, § 1167.
—— OF WITNESS ACCUSED OR CONVICTED OF CRIME, § 1168.
—— CONTRADICTION OF RECORD OF CONVICTION, § 1169.
COMPETENCY OF SUSTAINING WITNESS, § 1170.
—— KNOWLEDGE OR MEANS OF KNOWLEDGE, § 1171.
EXAMINATION OF SUSTAINING WITNESS, § 1172.
CROSS-EXAMINATION, § 1173.
IMPEACHMENT OF IMPEACHING WITNESSES, § 1174.
SUSTAINING IMPEACHING WITNESS, § 1175.

Corroboration of impeached witness, see post, §§ 1284–1289.
Evidence of good character of contradicted witness, see post, § 1282.
—— of interested or prejudiced witness, see post, § 1206.
—— of unimpeached witness, see ante, § 1086.
—— of witness impeached by inconsistent statements, see post, § 1259.

[a] (Conn. 1833) Evidence of the general good character of a witness is inadmissible, where his general character has not been impeached, although an attempt has been made to prove facts inconsistent with his testimony, and to show that he had been privy to a fraud in a deed, under which the plaintiff claimed title.—Rogers v. Moore, 10 Conn. 13.

[b] (Ind. 1894) Where a replevin action and an action by the wife of the defendant in replevin and by another for the return of the property are consolidated, and the wife denies having made admissions against her ownership, which had been introduced in evidence, it is error to admit evidence of the wife's reputation for veracity, as, her admissions being only admissible against her, evidence thereof was original, and not impeaching, testimony.—Gaar, Scott & Co. v. Shaffer, 139 Ind. 191, 38 N. E. 811.

[c] (Ky. 1890) On trial for murder, where witnesses for the state in their chief examination disclose the fact that they were bawds at the time of the occurrence to which they are testifying, and defendant on cross-examination elicits and emphasizes the same fact, it is competent for the commonwealth, in support of their credibility, to introduce evidence that the women have since abandoned their evil ways, and are leading respectable lives.—Carter v. Commonwealth, 13 S. W. 921.

[d] (La. 1892) On a murder trial, evidence as to the character of one of the state's witnesses for peace and quiet is irrelevant, when such witness was in no manner connected with the homicide, though he was with deceased at the time of its occurrence.—State v. Jackson, 44 La. Ann. 160, 10 South. 600.

[e] (La. 1892) The state may offer evidence of the good reputation for truthfulness of its own witness, in case his veracity is attacked by defendant's counsel in course of his cross-interrogation.—State v. Fruge, 44 La. Ann. 165, 10 South. 621.

[f] (Me. 1861) Where plaintiff has introduced evidence of declarations by the defendant unfavorable to the character for truth and veracity of one of his own witnesses, this amounts to an impeachment of the witness, and the defendant may testify to his good character for truth and veracity.—Prentiss v. Roberts, 49 Me. 127.

[g] (Mass. 1856) Proof that a witness had made material false statements, which are relied on as proving him unworthy of credit, will not authorize the party calling him to introduce evidence of his general reputation for truth.—Brown v. Mooers, 72 Mass. (6 Gray) 451.

[h] (Mass. 1856) An attempt to impeach a witness, by asking another witness what was his character for truth, warrants the introduction of evidence to support his character, although the answer to the question was that his character was good.—Commonwealth v. Ingraham, 73 Mass. (7 Gray) 46.

[i] (Mo. 1893) Evidence that plaintiff attempted to suborn witnesses is not impeaching evidence, but an admission against plaintiff's interest; and therefore the introduction of such evidence will not justify plaintiff in introducing proof of his general reputation for veracity.—Fulkerson v. Murdock, 53 Mo. App. 151.

[j] (N. Y. 1851) That a witness admitted on his cross-examination that he had been prosecuted, but not tried, for perjury, does not authorize the party calling him to give evidence of his general good character.—People v. Gay, 1 Parker, Cr. R. 308, affirmed (1852) 7 N. Y. (3 Seld.) 378.

[k] (N. Y. 1852) Where a witness, on cross-examination, testified that he had been prosecuted before a magistrate on a charge of perjury, and committed for trial, it was held that this was not such impeachment of his character as to authorize the admission of witnesses to sustain it.—People v. Gay, 7 N. Y. (3 Seld.) 378.

[l] (N. C. 1869) If a question put to a witness is an imputation on his character and is calculated to degrade him before the jury, evidence as to his character is admissible by the other party.—State v. Cherry, 63 N. C. 493.

[m] (Tex. 1885) A witness whose character has been attacked without success may defend it.—Wilson v. State, 17 Tex. App. 525.

[n] (Tex. 1893) Where defendant for the purpose of impeaching the state's witness voluntarily introduces evidence tending to impeach his own witness, he cannot afterwards introduce testimony to show that the reputation of his witness for truth and veracity was good, since the necessity for such testimony, if any existed, was voluntarily made by defendant himself.—Mealer v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 102, 22 S. W. 142.

[o] (Tex. 1893) To entitle a party to introduce witnesses in support of his character for truth it is not necessary that his general character be first impeached, but it is sufficient that his veracity as a witness has been fairly challenged, especially where he is a stranger at the place of trial.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Raney (Civ. App.) 23 S. W. 340.

[p] (Tex. 1893) Evidence that defendant conspired to defraud plaintiff by having goods procured for defendant by an irresponsible person charged to the latter is an attack on defendant's character, and he may prove his reputation for truth and honesty.—Loomis v. Stuart (Civ. App.) 24 S. W. 1078.

[q] (Tex. 1894) In an action for personal injuries, plaintiff could show his reputation for truth and honesty, where defendant cross-examined plaintiff, showed that he paid a physician for dressing his injuries and received a receipt, and then offered in evidence the receipt and plaintiff's bond for costs, to enable the jury, from comparison of the writings, to determine whether plaintiff wrote the receipt.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Raney, 86 Tex. 363, 25 S. W. 11.

[r] (Tex. 1894) Where the fact that a witness for defendant was jointly indicted with him for the robbery is kept prominently before the jury, thereby affecting his credibility, he should be allowed to testify that he was acquitted.—Jackson v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 281, 26 S. W. 194, 622, 47 Am. St. Rep. 30.

[s] (Vt. 1848) It is now well settled that whenever the character of a witness for truth is attacked in any way, whether by cross-examination, or by general evidence of want of character for truth, or by proving statements made by him out of court different from those sworn to, it is competent for the party calling him to give general evidence of his good character.—Paine v. Tilden, 20 Vt. 554.

[t] (Vt. 1892) Where no attempt is made to impeach or discredit a witness, except to show by cross-examination that the facts were otherwise than as testified to by her, sustaining evidence as to her character for truth and veracity is inadmissible.—Stevenson v. Gunning's Estate, 64 Vt. 601, 25 Atl. 697.

[u] (Va. 1895) In an action for personal injuries alleged to have been due to a fall from defendant's car, that plaintiff, on cross-examination, was asked as to other injuries received by him, to show that his present condition was not the effect of his fall, is not an attack on his credibility, so as to entitle him to evidence of his reputation for veracity.—Reynolds v. Richmond & M. Ry. Co., 92 Va. 400, 23 S. E. 770.

[v] (Wis. 1847) Where a party on cross-examination attempts to weaken or impair the testimony of a witness, the party calling him may prove that his character for truth and veracity is good.—Eaton v. White, 2 Pin. 42.

§ 1166. Rebuttal of evidence impeaching character.

[a] (Ark. 1855) After an attempt to impeach the testimony of a witness, former witnesses may be recalled to offer rebutting testimony.—Pleasant v. State, 15 Ark. 624.

[b] (Md. 1883) A witness having equal means of knowledge with the impeaching witness may contradict his statement that the general reputation of the impeached witness for truth was bad.—Sloan v. Edwards, 61 Md. 89.

[c] (S. C. 1888) When the state attacks the character of a witness for the defense, a new issue is then raised, which could not have been before presented; and upon such issue the defense has the right to offer testimony, as it could not before have been offered.—State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 201, 7 S. E. 296.

§ 1167. Evidence to sustain character of witness impeached.

[a] (U. S. 1871) Where, on cross-examination of a witness, collateral facts are called out from him tending to create distrust of his integrity, fidelity, or truth, it is competent for the adverse party to ask of the witness an explanation which may show the consistency of such facts with his integrity, fidelity, and truth, although circumstances may thus be proved which are foreign to the principal issue, and which, but for such previous cross-examination, would not be permitted to be proved.—United States v. Eighteen Barrels High Wines, Fed. Cas. No. 15,033 [8 Blatchf. 475].

[b] (Ala. 1839) A witness, whose credibility is impeached, is sufficiently sustained by proof that his general character was good, and that he was entitled to full credit on his oath.—McCutchen's Adm'r v. McCutchen, 9 Port. 650.

[c] (Conn. 1830) After the testimony of the principal witness, who was deaf and dumb, on the trial of a prosecution for an attempt to commit a rape, was attempted to be discredited, by proving that she had given different accounts of the transaction, and after she had sworn that she had concealed the transaction more than a year on account of the threats and influence of the prisoner and through fear of him, the prosecutor offered to prove by an instructor of the deaf and dumb, who had been her teacher, that the deaf and dumb generally have a sense of inferiority to other people, and, as a class, are easily intimidated; that they are credulous, sincere, and submissive; and that, from his acquaintance with the witness, he believed such to be her character. Held, that such evidence was inadmissible, as opening a door for inquiries in their nature interminable, without producing any satisfactory result.—State v. De Wolf, 8 Conn. 93, 20 Am. Dec. 90.

[d] (Ga. 1874) When a witness has been impeached by proof of general bad character, one who is called to sustain him should, if not able to say that his general character is not bad, at least be required to state that it is not such as to render him unworthy of credit on his oath, and that, from this character, the sustaining witness would believe him on his oath.—Artope v. Goodall, 53 Ga. 318.

[e] (Ga. 1892) An impeached witness may be sustained by evidence going to his character generally, but not by evidence disproving particular facts brought out on cross-examination of the impeaching witness.—Surles v. State, 89 Ga. 167, 15 S. E. 38.

[f] (Ind. 1850) Defendant gave evidence of the bad character of two of plaintiff's witnesses. Held, that plaintiff might be permitted, in her rebutting evidence, as to the characters of said witnesses, to prove that they were good before the suit was commenced.—King v. Kersey, 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 402.

[g] (Ind. 1870) After the defendant in a criminal action had closed his evidence, the prosecution introduced evidence as to the character of one of the defendant's witnesses. Held, that after the prosecution had closed its rebutting testimony, the defendant was entitled to introduce evidence to sustain the character of the witness.—Clackner v. State, 33 Ind. 412.

[h] (Iowa, 1880) Evidence that a witness is industrious and attentive to business, offered in rebuttal of testimony impeaching his veracity, is irrelevant and incompetent.—Herzman v. Oberfelder, 54 Iowa, 83, 6 N. W. 81.

[i] (Iowa, 1882) Where a witness' reputation for truth and morality is assailed, the negative testimony of his neighbors that they never heard anything said about his character, good or bad, is competent to show a good reputation.—State v. Nelson, 58 Iowa, 208, 12 N. W. 253.

[j] (Iowa, 1884) Evidence as to the moral character of a witness must be confined to his general reputation when it is sought thus to impeach him; and, while he may limit and define, by cross-examination, the character of the bad reports against him, and by evidence in chief may show his general moral character to be good, he may not show the foundation of the bad reports, and then show that he was not guilty of a particular wrong act of which he was suspected.—State v. Woodworth, 65 Iowa, 141, 21 N. W. 490.

[k] (La. 1885) After the accused has elicited evidence tending to discredit a state's witness who swore that his reason for not sooner informing against defendant was because he feared him, evidence may be introduced to sustain his credibility by proving that he had declared his fears of defendant at the time, and that such fears were reasonable, owing to the character and conduct of defendant.—State v. Redmond, 37 La. Ann. 774.

[l] (Md. 1849) The plaintiff, with a view to rebut the evidence given by the defendant to impeach the integrity of the plaintiff, offered to give evidence that the plaintiff had always been reputed and considered among all his acquaintances as a man of integrity. Held, that the court below erred in admitting this testimony.—Dorsey v. Whipps, 8 Gill, 457.

[m] (Mass. 1858) After a party has introduced evidence that the reputation of a witness for truth is bad, the party who called him may introduce evidence that his reputation was good until his failure in business some months previous, although bad since.—Quinsigamond Bank v. Hobbs, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 250.

[n] (Mo. 1895) Where the character of a witness for truth is attacked, the party calling him can prove his good character.—Walker v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 62 Mo. App. 209, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 478.

[o] (N. H. 1844) Where the character of a witness for truth and veracity is impeached, the party calling him cannot, for the purpose of sustaining his credit, cumulate evidence on an immaterial fact as to which such witness has testified.—McClintock v. Whittemore, 16 N. H. 268.

[p] (N. Y. 1838) Where the general moral character of a witness is impeached on his own cross-examination, evidence may be introduced in support of his character for truth and veracity.—People v. Rector, 19 Wend. 569.

[q] (N. Y. 1856) Where it is sought to impeach the credibility of witness by his cross-examination, letters from the adverse party, showing his high esteem, are admissible.—Stacy v. Graham, 14 N. Y. (4 Kern.) 492.

[r] (N. Y. 1867) Evidence of the general good character of a witness, or of good reputation for truth and veracity, is incompetent to rebut proof of particular facts against him elicited from his own statements.—Hannah v. McKellip, 49 Barb. 342.

[s] (N. Y. 1878) In an action by a woman for assault and battery it appeared that plaintiff and her sister, who was a witness for plaintiff, were engaged in business, and defendant offered evidence that their moral character was bad. Held, that it was not competent for plaintiff to testify that she enjoyed the patronage of the better class of ladies in the town.—Hagadorn v. Kearney, 13 Hun, 236.

[t] (Tenn. 1891) In an action for seduction and breach of promise of marriage, plaintiff's stepmother, who was also defendant's sister, testified that she allowed plaintiff to go to defendant's house after she knew of the improper relations between them, and that plaintiff was 21 years old when her child was born. In reply to a question whether a previous statement of witness that plaintiff was a child was not incorrect, witness stated that "she was a child in ways and manners, and as innocent as a child"; defendant "almost raised her, and I taught her to love and respect him." Held admissible to explain why witness allowed plaintiff to go to defendant's house, the sufficiency of the explanation being a question for the jury.—Graham v. McReynolds, 90 Tenn. (6 Pickle) 673, 18 S. W. 272.

[u] (Tex. 1894) Where evidence has been offered to impeach a witness, evidence to establish his general reputation for truth and veracity is admissible.—Howard v. Galbraith (Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 689.

[v] (Tex. 1895) Where the character for veracity of an accomplice who testified for the prosecution is attacked, it may be sustained in the same manner as if the witness was not an accomplice.—Anderson v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 546, 31 S. W. 673, 53 Am. St. Rep. 722.

[w] (Vt. 1845) Where defendant in an action for slander attempted to impeach the credit of the witnesses by whom the speaking was proved, the plaintiff was entitled to prove, as tending to sustain the credibility of the witnesses, that the witnesses resided in another state, and that the defendant had, by solicitation, money, and threats, endeavored to induce them to decline attending court and testifying in the case. —Kirkaldie v. Paige, 17 Vt. 256.

[x] (Va. 1877) A party whose witness is impeached may sustain him by evidence of his general reputation for truth.—George v. Pilcher, 28 Grat. 299, 26 Am. Rep. 350.

[y] (Wash. 1896) Where the reputation of a witness has been attacked, evidence as to his reputation in a city five miles from the place of his residence, acquired in the course of business dealings or otherwise, is admissible.—State v. Cushing, 14 Wash. 527, 45 Pac. 145, 53 Am. St. Rep. 883.

§ 1168. —— Of witness accused or convicted of crime.

[a] (Cal. 1875) If the defendant proves that a witness, called and examined by the prosecution, has been convicted of a felony, it is an assault upon the character of the witness for integrity and truth, and the prosecution may, in rebuttal, examine witnesses to prove that the reputation of the witness for truth and integrity is good in the community where he resides.—People v. Amaracus, 50 Cal. 233.

[b] (Cal. 1895) On a trial for murder committed in an affray, defendants introduced evidence showing that a certain witness for the state was an active friend of deceased during the fight, and was arrested, shortly after the murder, for carrying concealed weapons, and had such weapons on his person at the time. Held, that it was proper for the state to show in rebuttal that the charge against said witness was subsequently dismissed.—People v. Chin Hane, 108 Cal. 597, 41 Pac. 697.

[c] (Colo. 1893) Where a witness for plaintiff testified that one of defendant's witnesses had been arrested for a certain crime, but was immediately released, it was not prejudicial error to allow the witness to prove his innocence.—Denver Tramway Co. v. Reid, 4 Colo. App. 53, 35 Pac. 269.

[d] (Ga. 1889) Where plaintiff in an action for personal injuries is asked, on cross-examination, if he was not arrested for stealing from his employer some years before, and his employer testifies that he was so arrested, he may put in evidence of his general good character; it having been subjected to such an attack as might discredit his testimony, if it were not sustained by such evidence.—Central Railroad & Banking Co. v. Dodd, 83 Ga. 507, 10 S. E. 206.

[e] (Ky. 1893) Where, on a trial for murder, defendant's witness has been asked if he was not under indictment for perjury, it is competent, as tending to explain the discrediting circumstances, to show by the witness that certain relatives and friends of the deceased, who were prosecuting defendant, had procured it.—Roberts v. Commonwealth, 94 Ky. 499, 22 S. W. 845.

[f] (Mass. 1854) On the trial of an action brought by a corporation against one of its agents to recover money fraudulently taken from it by the defendant, when the successor of the defendant in the same office has been called as a witness, and is sought to be impeached on the ground that he committed the acts with which the defendant is charged, evidence that money had been taken from the office while the defendant was employed there, prior to the time embraced in the plaintiff's specification of claim, is admissible for the purpose of sustaining the credit of the witness.—Boston & W. R. Corp. v. Dana, 67 Mass. (1 Gray) 83.

[g] (Mass. 1856) Testimony of a witness, on cross-examination, that he had been tried for a crime in another state and acquitted, does not authorize the party calling him to introduce evidence of his general character for truth and integrity. Whether such evidence would be admissible, if it had not appeared that he was acquitted on that trial, quære.—Harrington v. Inhabitants of Lincoln, 70 Mass. (4 Gray) 563, 64 Am. Dec. 95.

[h] (Mass. 1884) To rebut evidence of a witness' conviction of crime, his present character and reputation for truth may be shown, but not his innocence of the crime.—Gertz v. Fitchburg R. Co., 137 Mass. 77, 50 Am. Rep. 285.

[i] (Mo. 1891) Where to impeach a witness parol evidence is given of his arrest and imprisonment in another county, testimony of the district attorney of the acquittal of such person is admissible in rebuttal.—Wills v. Cape Girardeau S. W. R. Co., 44 Mo. App. 51.

[j] (N. Y. 1842) An admission by a witness, called on behalf of a prisoner, that he himself had been complained of and bound over upon a charge of passing counterfeit money, does not prevent the prisoner's giving testimony of the witness' good character.—Carter v. People, 2 Hill, 317.

[k] (N. Y. 1863) After it has been proved by the record that a witness has been convicted of larceny, it is not competent to give evidence explanatory of the conviction and in favor of the innocence of the witness.—Gardner v. Bartholomew, 40 Barb. 325.

[l] (N. Y. 1891) On a direct conflict between the testimony of plaintiff and that of defendants, an exemplified copy of a record of conviction of defendants of perjury was admitted in evidence, containing at the end a statement under a certain date, "Copy of pardon filed." Held, that testimony of defendants showing the promptitude with which the pardon was granted, the reasons why it was granted, and the time when it was discharged, was admissible.—Sisson v. Yost, 58 Hun, 609, 12 N. Y. Supp. 373.

[m] (Ohio, 1876) Although evidence cannot be given to prove an infamous crime against a witness, of which he has not been convicted, for the purpose of impeaching his credit, yet, where the question as to whether the witness is guilty of such crimes becomes the legitimate subject of inquiry on the trial, his reputation for truth may be proved, to rebut the imputation of guilt which the evidence makes against him.—Webb v. State, 29 Ohio St. 351.

[n] (Ohio, 1894) Where a witness, on cross-examination, admits his conviction and confinement in a penitentiary for a crime involving moral turpitude, the party who called him may establish his good character for truth.—Wick v. Baldwin, 51 Ohio St. 51, 36 N. E. 671.

[o] (Tex. 1874) When the district attorney was allowed by the court to ask the defendants' witnesses where they came from when they came on the witness stand, to which they answered, that they came from jail, held, that it was error not to allow them to state on what charge and under what circumstances they were committed to jail; they could not be discredited by such means.—State v. Ezell, 41 Tex. 35.

[q] (Tex. 1895) Where defendant claims that a certain witness for the state committed the murder, and the state claims that if he did he was a tool of defendant and another, it is not error to permit the state to show that such witness had a good reputation in the community in which he lived for being a quiet and peaceable man.—Kidwell v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 264, 33 S. W. 342.

§ 1169. —— Contradiction of record of conviction.

[a] (Me. 1876) Under Rev. St. c. 82, § 94, providing that the record of a previous conviction of a witness for felony may be shown to affect his credibility, the record of a previous conviction is conclusive evidence that he was guilty of such previous offense.—State v. Watson, 65 Me. 74.

[b] (Mass. 1878) If, in a criminal case, the defendant testifies, and the record of his prior conviction and sentence in another case is put in evidence to impeach him, such record is conclusive evidence of such conviction and sentence; and his testimony that he was innocent, and that the officer who made the complaint in that case afterwards told him that he was satisfied of his innocence, is immaterial.—Commonwealth v. Gallagher, 126 Mass. 54.

[c] (N. Y. 1878) S. having testified in a civil action in New York as a witness in his own behalf, the opposite party offered in evidence a record of the conviction of S. in Ohio for having counterfeit money in his possession, and the same was received; whereupon S.'s counsel asked him if he was guilty of the offense, but the question was excluded. Held, that this was error.—Sims v. Sims, 75 N. Y. 466.

[d] (N. Y. 1891) When it appears, upon the cross-examination of a witness, that he has been convicted of a criminal offense affecting his credit, he may, upon the redirect examination, testify as to his innocence thereof, though the record of his conviction be produced.—Wolkoff v. Tefft, 59 N. Y. Super. Ct. (27 Jones & S.) 52, 12 N. Y. Supp. 464.

§ 1170. Competency of sustaining witness.

Competency of impeaching witness, see ante, § 1153.

[a] (Ga. 1888) It was error to allow plaintiff, testifying in his own favor, to say that his character for truth had never been attacked, and that he boarded with K., who could testify to his good character.—Savannah, F. & W. Ry. Co. v. Harrigan, 80 Ga. 602, 7 S. E. 280.

§ 1171. —— Knowledge or means of knowledge.

Knowledge of impeaching witness, see ante, § 1154.

[a] (Ala. 1848) A witness, called to prove the general reputation of another witness for truth, stated that he was acquainted with some of his neighbors, but not with all, that he lived 12 miles from him, and that he had never heard the witness' character called in question on that point. Held, that he was a competent witness to that point.—Hadjo v. Gooden, 13 Ala. 718.

[b] (Ala. 1894) A witness whose general character and character for truth are assailed cannot be sustained by evidence of an opinion of him based on witness' individual dealings with him.—Jackson v. State, 106 Ala. 12, 17 South. 333.

[c] (Ga. 1854) Where the reputation of witnesses for truthfulness among their neighbors was impeached, the testimony of other witnesses that they knew the character of the impeached witnesses for truthfulness in their neighborhood, and from such knowledge would believe them, though they had never heard anything for or against their truthfulness, is proper to be considered by the jury in connection with the impeaching evidence.—Taylor v. Smith, 16 Ga. 7.

[d] (Ga. 1888) Witness testified that she knew the general character of the prosecutrix; that she had never heard any one say anything against it; that she was not testifying from what people said, but from her own knowledge. Held admissible.—Flemister v. State, 81 Ga. 768, 7 S. E. 642.

[e] (Ill. 1860) Witnesses called to sustain another must swear that they know his general character for truth and veracity, or they cannot be heard.—Cook v. Hunt, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 535.

[f] (Ill. 1891) Where the testimony of a witness has been impeached, and others testified that they knew the witness, but were unacquainted with his reputation for truth and veracity, though they had never heard it assailed, the testimony of such others does not tend to disprove the evidence of the impeaching witnesses.—Magee v. People, 139 Ill. 138, 28 N. E. 1077.

[g] (Mich. 1878) One who testifies that he does not know a witness' reputation for truth and veracity may, if he was called to support said witness, be asked if he has ever heard it questioned.—Lenox v. Fuller, 39 Mich. 268.

[h] (Mich. 1881) After a witness, called to sustain the credit of a defendant, has testified that he is acquainted with him and has lived in his neighborhood for many years, but does not know his reputation for veracity, he may also testify whether he has ever heard it questioned.—McLaughlin v. Salley, 46 Mich. 219, 9 N. W. 256.

[i] (N. Y. 1839) A witness, called to sustain the character of an impeached witness, testifying that he has known him for a number of years, and that he knows his associates, but is not acquainted with his general character for truth and veracity, will be permitted to testify that he would believe him on his oath.—People v. Davis, 21 Wend. 309.

[j] (Va. 1880) A witness, asked if he knew the general character of the plaintiff for truth and veracity, replied that he had known him for six or seven years, and knew his general character for truth and veracity as well as any other man's character against whom he had never heard anything alleged; that he had never heard plaintiff's character called in question. Held proper evidence to go to the jury.—Davis v. Franke, 33 Grat. 413.

[k] (W. Va. 1874) In an action on a bond, the plaintiff having examined a witness to impeach the character of M., another witness, for truth and veracity, the defendant in rebuttal introduced a witness whom he asked if he knew the character of M. for truth and veracity among his neighbors, to which the witness answered, "I cannot say I do." The witness then proceeded to state that he lived four or five miles from M., had known him four or five years, and had never heard a word against him as a man of truth and veracity. Defendant then asked him "whether he would or would not believe said M. on oath." Held, that refusal of the court to allow an answer to the question was not error.—Clay v. Robinson, 7 W. Va. 348.

§ 1172. Examination of sustaining witness.

[a] (Ill. 1893) Where the evidence of the state, in a trial for rape, depends almost entirely upon the testimony of the prosecutrix, and evidence has been introduced tending to show her bad character for truth and veracity, it is reversible error to allow a witness to testify that her character is good, where the witness is merely asked, as a preliminary question, whether he knows "what her reputation among the people where she lived at that time was, for truth and veracity," instead of asking him whether he knew her general reputation among her neighbors for truth and veracity.—Gifford v. People, 148 Ill. 173, 35 N. E. 754.

[b] (Me. 1863) Where a party attempted to impeach the character of a witness for truth, and it appeared that the witness had lived many years in a certain town, the other party was allowed to inquire of witnesses introduced to sustain his character, "What is his general character for truth in that town?" It was held that the form of the question, in respect to reputation and locality, must depend on the testimony in regard to the position and business of the witness.—Woodman v. Churchill, 51 Me. 112.

[c] (N. Y. 1837) Where a witness called to sustain an impeached witness states, on his direct examination, that he has heard the character of the witness spoken against, the party calling him may ask the names of the persons referred to by him.—Bakeman v. Rose, 18 Wend. 146, affirming (1835) 14 Wend. 105.

§ 1173. Cross-examination.

[a] (Ga. 1892) In the cross-examination of a witness who has testified in support of the character and credit of another witness, it is not error to refuse to allow him to be asked the question, "Would you believe him upon his oath if he were to swear to something different from what you did?"—Ramsey v. State, 89 Ga. 198, 15 S. E. 6.

[b] (Ind. 1878) Where a witness has testified as to the good reputation of another, he may be asked on cross-examination what constitutes reputation.—Hutts v. Hutts, 62 Ind. 214.

[c] (Ind. 1884) Where A. testifies that the reputation for truth and veracity of B., a witness whom it is sought to impeach, is good, the court, in its discretion, may permit A. to be asked on cross-examination whether he had heard of B.'s arrest for grand larceny, if he had heard a discussion of charges of robbery against him, etc.—Wachstetter v. State, 99 Ind. 290, 50 Am. Rep. 94.

[d] (Iowa, 1880) Where a witness testified in support of the reputation of H. for truth, and on cross-examination his attention was called to a newspaper article written by him, assailing the moral character of H., he was properly allowed to explain the circumstances under which the article was written, showing that the attack did not involve H.'s character for veracity.—Smith v. Weeks, 54 Iowa, 411, 6 N. W. 592.

[e] (Mich. 1874) Where a witness testifies that another witness, whose testimony had been impeached, had a good reputation for truth and veracity, such witness may be asked on cross-examination if he would believe the other witness on oath.—Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173.

[f, g] (N. C. 1888) After a witness has voluntarily testified as to his own immoral acts, it is unobjectionable to ask another witness, who testifies as to the other's good character, whether he would allow the former to visit his family; the obvious purpose being to ascertain the latter's estimate of a good character.—State v. Brown, 100 N. C. 519, 6 S. E. 568.

[h] (Va. 1880) A plaintiff, for the purpose of sustaining his character for truth and veracity, introduced a witness who had lived near him, and who testified that he had never heard anything against his veracity until this and a former suit by one of the defendants against plaintiff had been instituted. On cross-examination, defendant asked witness "if he had not heard a number of plaintiff's neighbors testify in both suits that they were acquainted with plaintiff's character for truth and veracity; that it was bad, and they would not believe him on oath." Held, that the answer to this question was properly excluded from the jury.—Davis v. Franke, 33 Grat. 413.

§ 1174. Impeachment of impeaching witnesses.

[a] (Ind. 1882) An impeaching witness may be himself impeached.—Phillips v. Thorn, 84 Ind. 84, 43 Am. Rep. 85.

[b] (Ind. 1896) An impeaching witness cannot himself be impeached by showing that the statements of others, on which he testified that his knowledge of the reputation of the impeached person was based, were never made by them.—Brower v. Ream, 15 Ind. App. 51, 42 N. E. 824.

[c] (Iowa, 1862) An impeaching witness giving material testimony may be impeached.—State v. Brant, 14 Iowa, 180.

[d] (Iowa, 1868) On a criminal trial, the state, in rebuttal, may introduce witnesses to attack the character of impeaching witnesses, introduced by the defendant to impeach witnesses in behalf of the state.—State v. Moore, 25 Iowa, 128, 95 Am. Dec. 776.

[e] (N. Y. 1847) A party has a right to impeach the general character of a witness for his adversary, though the testimony which such witness had given related solely to the general character of another witness.—Starks v. People, 5 Denio, 106.

[f] (N. C. 1869) Where a defendant calls for a statement from a witness for the prosecution, and then attacks him with an impeaching witness, if the prosecution attempts to impeach the impeaching witness, defendant cannot object on the ground that the matter called for is collateral.—State v. Kirkman, 63 N. C. 246.

[g] (N. C. 1869) An impeaching witness may be impeached by proof of general character.—State v. Cherry, 63 N. C. 493.

§ 1175. Sustaining impeaching witness.

[a] (N. C. 1869) Where an impeaching witness is impeached by proof of general character, the impeaching witness may be supported by proof of general character.—State v. Cherry, 63 N. C. 493.

7. EFFECT OF IMPEACHMENT.

Instructions as to purpose and effect of impeaching evidence, see "Criminal Law," vol. 14, cc. 2646–2649, § 1875.

§ 1176. In general.

[a] (Ala. 1884) The impeachment of a witness' character for veracity is rendered less important in the weight of its influence by the facts that he has no interest in the result of the suit, and that he is corroborated by all the intrinsic probabilities of the case.—May v. Wilkinson, 76 Ala. 543.

[b] (Ala. 1894) It is proper to refuse to charge that the jury cannot convict on the testimony of a witness against whom impeaching testimony has been given.—Spicer v. State, 105 Ala. 123, 16 South. 706.

[c] (Cal. 1881) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051, providing that a witness may not be impeached by evidence of particular wrongful acts, except that it may be shown by his examination that he had been convicted of a felony, and Pen. Code, § 102, declaring that the rules of evidence in civil actions are applicable also in criminal actions, evidence that a witness had been previously convicted of a felony goes only to his credibility.—People v. Johnson, 57 Cal. 571.

[d] (Ga. 1894) A verdict of guilty will not be disturbed because it was rendered on the evidence of a witness who had been guilty of a crime involving moral turpitude, and who was shown to have a general bad character, where the jury evidently did not believe that the witness was effectually impeached.—Davis v. State, 94 Ga. 399, 19 S. E. 243.

[e] (Ga. 1895) A jury is not constrained to discard all of the testimony of even a corrupt witness when he is satisfactorily corroborated on material points by circumstances, or by other unimpeached evidence, although the corroboration may not extend to the main issue in the case.—Duncan v. State, 97 Ga. 180, 25 S. E. 182.

[f] (Ga. 1895) The testimony of a witness attacked by proof of general bad character, though not specifically corroborated, should not be wholly disregarded by the jury, if, from the deportment on the witness stand, or the probability of the truth of what he states, when considered in connection with all the evidence in the case, they feel justified in believing him without such corroboration.—Duncan v. State, 97 Ga. 180, 25 S. E. 182.

[g] (Ind. 1857) An instruction that, if the witnesses for defendant are credible and all swear that they know the general character of the prosecuting witness to have been bad and that judging from that character they would not believe her on oath, the jury cannot go further than such witnesses and should not confide in the prosecuting witness, is properly refused, as the jury are not bound by the opinions of the impeaching witnesses, and could believe or disbelieve the prosecuting witness on their own judgment of the facts bearing on the point.—Spivey v. State, 8 Ind. 405.

[h] (Ind. 1885) The credibility of a witness is not destroyed by the impeachment of his character so as to preclude the court or jury from believing his testimony.—Overton v. Rogers, 99 Ind. 595.

[i] (Ind. 1885) Where an attempt has been made to impeach a witness by testimony regarding his reputation for truth and veracity, the court may instruct the jury that they are to determine his credibility under all the facts and circumstances proved, and that if he gave a fair, candid, and honest statement of the whole transaction under controversy, they should not disregard his testimony.—McCasland v. Kimberlin, 100 Ind. 121.

[j] (Iowa, 1878) In an action for divorce, wherein the defendant denied the marriage, his confession of seduction to escape the consequences of bigamy held to cause a forfeiture of any claim to credit as a witness.—Borton v. Borton, 48 Iowa, 697.

[k] (Iowa, 1880) An instruction to the jury in a criminal trial that, where it is shown that the reputation for truth of a witness is bad, his evidence is not necessarily destroyed, but is to be considered under all the circumstances described in the evidence, and given such weight as the jury believe it entitled to, is correct.—State v. Miller, 53 Iowa, 209, 4 N. W. 1083.

[l] (Iowa, 1896) That a witness' moral character and reputation for truth and veracity has been impeached does not require that the jury disregard his testimony if unsupported by corroborating evidence.—State v. Van Vliet, 97 Iowa, 387, 66 N. W. 748.

[m] (Kan. 1866) The testimony of a woman is not to be rejected by the jury merely because she is a common prostitute.—Craft v. State, 3 Kan. 450.

[n] (Minn. 1871) Whether evidence tends directly to prove a fact, or merely raises a presumption that it is so, can never depend on the bad character of the witness.—State v. Beebe, 17 Minn. 241 (Gil. 218).

[o] (Neb. 1890) Where the general reputation of a witness for truth and veracity in the neighborhood where he resides is proven bad, the jury may entirely disregard the testimony of such witness, except in so far as he is corroborated by other credible testimony.—Watson v. Roode, 30 Neb. 264, 46 N. W. 491.

[p] (N. J. 1866) Where the character of a witness, in a judicial proceeding, is questionable, he is to be relied on only so far as his testimony is intrinsically probable, or is corroborated by circumstances.—Adams v. Adams, 17 N. J. Eq. (2 C. E. Green) 324.

[q] (N. Y. 1866) Where a witness is impeached as to his character for truth and veracity, the court may submit his credit to the jury and instruct them that though they thought him unworthy of credit they might believe him so far as he was corroborated by other testimony.—Lee v. Chadsey, 3 Abb. Dec. 43.

[r] (N. Y. 1878) The testimony of a witness who is impeached, although it is uncontradicted, cannot be taken as conclusive; and the fact which such testimony is intended to establish must be submitted to the jury.—Gildersleeve v. Landon, 73 N. Y. 609.

[s] (N. Y. 1883) Where, in a suit for dissolution and accounting between partners, their testimony is contradictory, and it appears that one has in several instances misused the partnership moneys and has admitted it in a letter to his co-partner, his testimony, when it contradicts that of the other partner, should be rejected as unworthy of belief.—Kehr v. Stauf, 12 Daly, 115.

[t] (N. Y. 1886) In an action against a bank, the jury were at liberty to reject as untrue statements made by a witness who, as it appeared by his examination, had been the president of the bank and had been using the funds of the bank in speculation and had misappropriated its funds, been indicted, convicted, and imprisoned therefor, and was awaiting sentence for the misappropriation.—Bingham v. Marine Nat. Bank, 41 Hun, 377, 17 Abb. N. C. 431.

[u] (N. Y. 1887) Since convicts are made competent witnesses by Code Civ. Proc. § 832, the weight to be given to their testimony is for the jury.—Lindeman v. York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 11 N. Y. St. Rep. 837.

[v] (Or. 1892) A court is not bound to disregard the evidence of an impeached witness, but it should be compared with the other evidence in the case, and given such weight as it is entitled to under the circumstances.—Wimer v. Smith, 22 Or. 469, 30 Pac. 416.

[vv] (Pa. 1878) A justice of the peace who took and formally certified the acknowledgment of a married woman to a mortgage afterwards testified that her execution was not voluntary. Ten witnesses swore that he could not be believed on oath. Held, that the effect of such impeachment of his testimony was to destroy the effect of his certificate, as well as the credibility of his testimony.—Beam v. Hamilton, 10 Lanc. Bar, 69.

[w] (Pa. 1878) The rule of law is that, when the character of any witness is successfully impeached, his testimony should be discredited, unless it is corroborated by other unimpeached testimony in the case.—Commonwealth v. Burton, 1 Sus. Leg. Chron. 66.

[ww] (S. C. 1869) When a witness is successfully impeached, on the score of character, his evidence should not be altogether disregarded, but should be allowed such weight as it may be entitled to under the circumstances.—Belcher v. Conner, 1 S. C. (1 Rich.) 88.

[x] (Tenn. 1848) Where a witness is discredited by the testimony of other witnesses that because of her general character they would not believe her on oath, her testimony should not be relied on, unless corroborated in those points which are relied on, and it is not sufficient that the corroboration goes generally to the main question at issue.—Troxdale v. State, 28 Tenn. (9 Humph.) 411.

[xx] (Tenn. 1869) Where the character of a witness for his veracity has been put in issue, the jury must determine whether the witness has been overthrown or sustained, and what degree of credit is to be given to his testimony; and it was error for the court to instruct the jury that evidence of good character in this respect in refutation of evidence of bad character would reinstate the witness as though he had not been impeached.—Graves v. Fitzgerald, 46 Tenn. (6 Cold.) 643.

[y] (Tex. 1854) Where the character for truth and veracity of a witness is impeached by one witness, the jury may compare the testimony of the former with other facts proved, and give to it such weight as they deem it entitled to.—Jernigan v. Wainer, 12 Tex. 189.

[yy] (Tex. 1877) The credibility of a witness, though impeached, is for the jury, and the court should not instruct them to disregard his testimony.—Kelly v. State, 1 Tex. App. 628.

[z] (Tex. 1886) The statute prohibiting a conviction on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice does not apply to the uncorroborated testimony of an ex-convict, whose competency to testify has been restored by pardon.—Thornton v. State, 20 Tex. App. 519.

[zz] (Tex. 1896) On a prosecution for murder, it is not error to charge that, notwithstanding testimony had been introduced tending to impeach the witnesses, the credibility of such witnesses was a question for the jury.—Trotter v State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 468, 36 S. W. 278.

§ 1177. Interest as ground of impeachment in general.

[a] (U. S. 1864) Evidence of disinterested witnesses in favor of libelant is not overcome by testimony of an equal number of interested witnesses for respondent.—Laing v. The G. L. Buckman, Fed. Cas. No. 7,988.

[b] (U. S. 1872) Where witnesses are not excluded on account of interest in the event of the suit, the rule still applies that their veracity or impartiality may be affected by such interest.—Andrews v. Hyde, Fed. Cas. No. 377 [3 Cliff. 516].

[c] (U. S. 1886) In a case of collision, where all upon one vessel are lost, the narrative of those on the other, considering the natural bias of the witnesses, should be received with caution, and not adopted beyond what is consistent, rational, and probable.—The Columbia (D. C.) 27 Fed. 704.

[d] (U. S. 1889) In weighing the testimony of witnesses as to trade usage, the jury should consider the extent to which any of the witnesses may have an interest in the result of the litigation which might color their evidence.—Dodge v. Hedden (C. C.) 42 Fed. 446.

[e] (U. S. 1892) Where testimony is conflicting, the jury should consider, in determining what weight to attach to the testimony of the witnesses, the interest they may have in the result of the suit.—United States v. Ybanes (C. C.) 53 Fed. 536.

[f] (Ill. 1878) In an action for damages claimed by reason of the grading of streets, it was competent to show the bias of feeling of witnesses, and in what direction were their sympathies.—City of Elgin v. Eaton, 2 Ill. App. (2 Bradw.) 90.

[g] (Ind. 1867) Under the statutes of this state, the interest of witnesses in the result of the trial may be regarded by the jury in considering their credibility.—Dailey v. State, 28 Ind. 285.

[h] (Ind. 1872) It is not error to charge that "an interested witness will not usually be as honest and candid as one that is not interested."—Carver v. Louthain, 38 Ind. 530.

[i] (Ind. 1877) An instruction in relation to the evidence that, "if the witness is interested in the result of the prosecution, this tends to discredit" him, is erroneous. At most this is only matter for the consideration of the jury.—Pratt v. State, 56 Ind. 179; Veatch v. Same, Id. 584, 26 Am. Rep. 44.

[j] (Iowa, 1855) It is not error to instruct the jury that the position of a witness and his feelings may be such that his testimony for one party may be entitled to more credit than that in favor of the other party, and that the jury are to judge from all the circumstances and relations of the witness and the parties and his appearance what part of his testimony is true and what false.—McCrary v. Crandall, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 117.

[k] (La. 1831) It is the interest of men exercising a particular art or profession, e. g., architects, physicians, etc., to value their services at the highest rate possible; and there is sometimes an esprit de corps among them formidable to those with whom they come in collision. The truth will be generally found in the lowest estimate of any one of them.—Villalobos v. Mooney, 2 La. 331.

[l] (Mich. 1889) It is proper to show the relation which a witness bears to a party to an action, and what interest or part he has taken in its prosecution or defense, as bearing on his credibility.—Michigan Condensed Milk Co. v. Wilcox, 78 Mich. 431, 44 N. W. 281.

[m] (N. Y. 1830) Where, at the time of the transfer of a note, the negotiability of which has been destroyed by an insolvent discharge granted to the maker, it was agreed between the payee and the assignee that the payee should be a witness to prove a new promise by the maker subsequent to the discharge, and the transfer was made expressly upon such understanding, though it seems that such agreement did not render the payee an incompetent witness, still the jury ought to be instructed that it went far to impeach his credibility.—Moore v. Viele, 4 Wend. 420.

[n] (N. Y. 1868) The feelings of the witness, and the motives and temper governing or influencing him in the particular matter or transaction, are the proper subjects of inquiry, and are not regarded as collateral to the issue.—Nation v. People, 6 Parker, Cr. R. 258.

[o] (N. Y. 1871) Where a witness has an interest in the question at issue, the jury are not bound to refrain from exercising their judgment and to adopt the statements of such witness.—Elwood v. Western Union Tel. Co., 45 N. Y. 549, 6 Am. Rep. 140.

[p] (N. Y. 1875) Where a witness who testified upon proceedings upon the probate of a will would secure, under the will, the supervision and control of the decedent's property, held, that that fact of itself was sufficient to justify a close scrutiny of his statements, and might reasonably induce the court before which his evidence was given to reject it as unreliable, if deemed improbable.—Rollwagen v. Rollwagen, 3 Hun, 121, 5 Thomp. & C. 402.

[q] (Tex. 1848) The competency of a witness is always a question for the court, and his credibility for the jury; any testimony, therefore, affecting his credibility, is competent to go to the jury. Though an interest in the question may not affect the competency of a witness, it may be shown to enable the jury to judge of his credibility.—Jones v. McCoy's Widow & Heirs, 3 Tex. 349.

[r] (Tex. 1890) Impeaching testimony offered for the purpose of showing the animus and ill will of the witness is relevant and admissible.—Bennett v. State, 28 Tex. App. 539, 13 S. W. 1005.

§ 1178. Showing interest or bias of one's own witness.

[a] (Miss. 1859) A party cannot ask his own witness, after cross-examination, whether he is not interested in the suit, for the purpose of impeaching his credit.—Fairly v. Fairly, 38 Miss. 280.

[b] (N. Y. 1829) A plaintiff who has called and had the benefit of the testimony of a witness cannot afterwards object to him on the ground of interest.—Fulton Bank v. Stafford, 2 Wend. 483.

[c] (N. Y. 1890) A party producing and examining a witness cannot afterwards impeach him by evidence showing his bias or interest in favor of the adverse party.—In re Mellen's Estate, 56 Hun, 553, 9 N. Y. Supp. 929.

[d] (Tenn. 1817) If a party once calls on a witness and examines him as competent, he cannot afterwards discredit him as being interested.—Roundtree v. Tibbs, 5 Tenn. (4 Hayw.) 108.

[e] (Va. 1893) A question put by the commonwealth to its own witness, inquiring as to his relationship to defendant, is not objectionable on the ground that it was an effort by the former to discredit its own witness.—Snodgrass v. Commonwealth, 89 Va. 679, 17 S. E. 238.

§ 1179. Interest of party of record in civil action or proceeding.

[a] (U. S. 1895) Where nephews who had taken possession of their uncle's lands under a written lease, and had made improvements at their own expense, claimed, after his death, that there was a parol agreement that on his death they were to have the lands, held, that while their own testimony was admissible as against devisees of their uncle, the court would not decree in their favor on their testimony alone, but would do so on sufficient corroboration.—Harman v. Harman, 70 Fed. 894, 17 C. C. A. 479.

[b] (U. S. 1845) The testimony of the libelants themselves in an action in rem, the one for the other, although legally admissible, ought to be narrowly scrutinized, and received with caution.—Graham v. Hoskins, Fed. Cas. No. 5,669 [Olcott, 224].

[c] (U. S. 1846) The testimony of a ship's crew, being joint libelants, each swearing for the other, will be received with great caution. The court will be more inclined to credit the master of the vessel, when the evidence between them is contradictory, and he has no interest in the action.—The Swallow, Fed. Cas. No. 13,665 [Olcott, 334].

[d] (U. S. 1866) The interest of a party in the result should be considered on the question of his credibility as a witness.—White v. Commonwealth, Fed. Cas. No. 17,544.

[e] (U. S. 1890) Where a witness swears that the expense of his steamer while undergoing repairs was a certain sum, and is not cross-examined as to the items, and there is nothing to throw suspicion on the charge, there is no reason for disallowing any portion thereof.—The North Star (D. C.) 44 Fed. 492.

[f] (Colo. 1890) Where the parties to the action and one of the attorneys of record are sworn as witnesses, in weighing the testimony the jury are at liberty to take into consideration the interest of each in the result of the action, so far as such interest is disclosed by the evidence.—Stewart v. Kindel, 15 Colo. 539, 25 Pac. 990.

[g] (Ga. 1871) Parties interested in a suit, who are introduced as witnesses under the provisions of the act of 1866, are lifted out of the general rule as to the weight to be given to testimony, and the jury may exercise their judgment on the credit of such witnesses from the fact of their interest, irrespective of other impeachment or attack.—Laramore v. Minish, 43 Ga. 282.

[h] (La. 1885) The unsupported testimony of the plaintiff will not justify a judgment against the estate of a deceased person.—Cutler v. Succession of Collins, 37 La. Ann. 95.

[i] (Me. 1874) The rule that a failure to contradict testimony given in a judicial proceeding imports no admission of the truth of the assertions is inapplicable since the passage of the statutes making parties witnesses.—Blanchard v. Hodgkins, 62 Me. 119.

[j] (Mo. 1893) It is not error to tell the jury, in passing on the question of whether defendant was of age at the time of making the note in controversy, that they might consider his testimony in relation thereto, his interest in the result and his motive, if any, for his testimony.—Lovell v. Davis, 52 Mo. App. 342.

[k] (N. Y. 1875) Under the provisions of the Code permitting parties to offer themselves as witnesses, they occupy the same position as other witnesses, and their testimony, if conflicting, presents a question of their credibility for the jury.—Stilwell v. Carpenter, 2 Abb. N. C. 238.

[l] (N. Y. 1879) The rule that, where a witness is unimpeached and his evidence not contradicted, his testimony cannot be disregarded by the court or jury, does not apply where such witness is a party, and the credibility of such party is always a question for the jury, and a verdict may be found against his uncontradicted evidence.—Nicholson v. Conner, 8 Daly, 212.

[m] (N. Y. 1889) The evidence of a plaintiff may be discredited on account of his interest in the result, though uncontradicted, and a referee is therefore justified in disallowing items of an account supported only by his testimony.—Ract v. Duviard-Dime, 51 Hun, 639, 4 N. Y. Supp. 156.

[n] (N. Y. 1889) The fact that the referee believed in regard to some matters the testimony of witnesses who were parties to the suit, and interested in the result, did not affect his right to reject as untrustworthy their testimony in regard to another matter which more nearly affected their interests.—Chester v. Jumel, 53 Hun, 629, 5 N. Y. Supp. 822.

[o] (N. Y. 1890) In an action for trespass, the defense was that plaintiff had no title, and defendant introduced in evidence a deed from plaintiff and wife to a third person. Plaintiff having testified that the deed, although absolute in its terms, was in fact a mortgage, defendant requested the court to instruct that they were not bound to believe plaintiff's statements, because he was an interested witness. Held, that it was prejudicial error to refuse so to charge.—Dean v. Metropolitan El. Ry. Co. 119 N. Y. 540, 23 N. E. 1054.

[p] (N. Y. 1891) In an action for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff from the negligence of defendant's employés, it was proper to instruct that the jury were not bound to give to the evidence of plaintiff the same credence they would give to a disinterested witness.—Uransky v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co., 59 Hun, 626, 13 N. Y. Supp. 670.

[q] (N. Y. 1892) In an action against an elevated railroad company to recover damages for personal injuries, the jury have the right to reject plaintiff's testimony because of interest.—Meeteer v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 63 Hun, 533, 18 N. Y. Supp. 561.

[r] (N. Y. 1893) The denial by a party to a contract, who had been in a business for a number of years, of knowledge of a well-known and prevalent custom in that trade, being that of a party in interest, is not conclusive.—De Cernea v. Cornell (Com. Pl.) 3 Misc. Rep. 241, 22 N. Y. Supp. 941.

[s] (N. Y. 1894) The testimony of a party to an action in his own behalf may be disregarded, though it is uncontradicted.—Olsen v. Ensign (Com. Pl.) 7 Misc. Rep. 682, 28 N. Y. Supp. 38.

[t] (N. Y. 1894) Where plaintiff is a witness in his own behalf, and is neither contradicted nor corroborated, a verdict in favor of defendant will not be disturbed on appeal as against the weight of evidence, as the uncontradicted testimony of a party to an action is not controlling.—O'Neil v. Third Ave. R. Co., 78 Hun, 183, 28 N. Y. Supp. 917.

[u] (Tex. 1890) In an action against a railroad company for injuries to a passenger, the conductor of the train was joined as a defendant. During the argument counsel for plaintiff remarked that he was an interested witness, being a defendant against whom a judgment was asked. After the arguments, the cause was dismissed as to the conductor, but without the knowledge of the company's counsel. Held, that the dismissal did not affect the credibility of the conductor's testimony, so far as that might be affected by his interest in the action.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Miller, 79 Tex. 78, 15 S. W. 264, 23 Am. St. Rep. 308, 11 L. R. A. 395.

§ 1180. —— Party called as witness by adversary.

[a] (N. Y. 1853) Where a party calls his adversary, and examines him as a witness against himself, the legislature must have intended, in regard to the witnesses thus admitted, to give the tribunals that weigh their testimony a wide discretion as to the credit to be given to them.—Roberts v. Gee, 15 Barb. 449.

[b] (N. Y. 1894) Where plaintiffs called the adverse party as a witness, they are not bound by all of his testimony; but the jury may believe so much as is favorable to plaintiffs, and reject that which is unfavorable, because of the interest of the witness.—Schwabeland v. Holahan (Com. Pl.) 10 Misc. Rep. 176, 30 N. Y. Supp. 910, affirming judgment (City Ct. N. Y. 1894) 6 Misc. Rep. 623, 26 N. Y. Supp. 880.

[c] (S. C. 1843) Where partners are sued within the summary jurisdiction, and one of them is examined by the plaintiffs on interrogatories, to prove their claim, and his codefendants examine him as a witness, without objection by him or the plaintiffs, his answers have the same weight as other testimony.—Allen v. Owens, 2 Speers, 170.

[d] (Tex. 1874) Where a party offers himself as a witness, and, on being cross-examined on subjects different from his direct examination, testifies as to matters material for his case, the jury need not believe him, but may, considering the entire case, disregard such statements, though not contradicted.—Pridgen v. Walker, 40 Tex. 135.

§ 1181. Interest of prosecuting witness.

Credibility of prosecutrix in bastardy proceedings, see "Bastards," vol. 6, c. 1940, § 158.

[a] (N. Y. 1822) Less credit ought to be given to the testimony of a prosecutor than to a disinterested witness.—People v. McMurray, 1 Wheeler, Cr. Cas. 62.

§ 1182. Interest of defendant in criminal prosecution.

Credibility of accused as question of law or fact, see "Criminal Law," vol. 14, cc. 2444, 2445, § 1722.

Instructions as to credibility of accused, see "Criminal Law," vol. 14, cc. 2517–2525, §§ 1786–1789.

[a] (Ala. 1888) On a trial for rape the court properly refused defendant's request to charge that "while the jury, in considering the evidence of the defendant, may look to the fact that he is a party to the suit, yet being a defendant or party to the suit does not render him any less credible than he would be if he were not a party to the suit."—Dick v. State, 87 Ala. 61, 6 South. 395.

[b] (Cal. 1892) On a trial for murder, defendant testified in his own behalf, and then requested the court to charge that "defendant is a competent witness in this case, and it is the duty of the jury to weigh, examine, and take into consideration the testimony of defendant, and give it due consideration; the same as it does the testimony of all the other witnesses in the case." Held, that the charge was properly modified by striking out the last clause.—People v. Cowgill, 93 Cal. 596, 29 Pac. 228.

[c] (Conn. 1893) Accused testified in his own behalf, and the court charged the jury to regard accused "as every other witness is to be regarded," and to consider his appearance, the reasonableness of his story, and, "above all, the fact that he is the accused." Held, that the use of the words, "above all," was not prejudicial to the accused.—State v. Fiske, 63 Conn. 388, 28 Atl. 572.

[d] (Ill. 1885) On the trial of two persons for robbery there were four witnesses—the two defendants for themselves, and two others for the prosecution. All were present when the alleged crime was committed, and all had the same knowledge of the facts. The court charged as to each that, while defendant was a competent witness in his own behalf, his credibility and the weight to be given his testimony were for the jury; and that, while they should not disregard it through mere caprice, they were not bound to believe him, or to treat his testimony the same as that of other witnesses, but might take into consideration his interest, and give his testimony the weight to which they might think it entitled. Held erroneous in charging that the jury were under no obligation to treat defendants' testimony like that of other witnesses, whereas in fact they should have been led only to consider their interest, and to treat their testimony the same as other testimony, after it had been subjected to the tests employed to elicit truth from interested witnesses.—Sullivan v. People, 114 Ill. 24, 28 N. E. 381.

[e] (Ill. 1886) Where the accused testifies in his own behalf, the jury are authorized, under the statute, to consider to what extent that circumstance should affect his credibility.—Bressler v. People, 117 Ill. 422, 8 N. E. 62.

[f] (Iowa, 1880) The fact that certain testimony in a criminal case is that of the defendants may be called to the attention of the jury as one of the facts which would formerly have caused its exclusion, and which, therefore, may still be shown, under Code 1873, § 3637, for the purpose of lessening its credibility.—State v. Moelchen, 53 Iowa, 310, 5 N. W. 186.

[g] (Iowa, 1887) In a murder trial, where the accused had testified in his own behalf, the court instructed the jury that he was a competent witness, and that, in determining the question of his guilt or innocence, they must consider his testimony, but that he was an interested witness, and, as such, they should consider his testimony, and give it such weight, in connection with all the circumstances and other testimony in the case as they thought it entitled to, and no more. Held not error.—State v. Sterrett, 71 Iowa, 386, 32 N. W. 387.

[h] (Miss. 1890) Where the defendant testifies in his own behalf, it is error to charge that, if the jury believed "that any witness who has testified in this case has any feeling or interest in the result of this trial, then the jury should consider such feeling or interest, in connection with all the evidence in the case, in determining how far, if at all, they will believe such witness, or consider such testimony."—Woods v. State, 67 Miss. 575, 7 South. 495.

[i] (Miss. 1892) It is error, in a criminal case, where defendant, though not the only witness in his own behalf, was still the only one interested, to charge that the jury might consider the interest of any witness, in connection with all the evidence, in determining how far, if at all, they would believe him, as this was in effect to single out and mark defendant for discredit.—Townsend v. State, 12 South. 209, following Buckley v. State (1885) 62 Miss. 705, and Woods v. State (1890) 67 Miss. 575, 7 South. 495.

[j] (Mo. 1880) The fact that a witness is the defendant may be shown in order to affect his credibility, and the court may so instruct the jury.—State v. Zorn, 71 Mo. 415.

[k] (Mo. 1882) As affecting the credibility of a witness in a criminal case, the jury may consider the fact that he is the defendant.—State v. Sanders, 76 Mo. 35.

[l] (Neb. 1878) The interest which a witness has in the result of a trial may always be shown as affecting the value of his testimony, and it is not error for the court, in referring to the testimony of the prisoner given in his own behalf, to tell the jury that they are "at liberty to consider the great interest which he has in the result."—St. Louis v. State, 8 Neb. 405, 1 N. W. 371.

[m] (Neb. 1891) When, in a criminal case, the defendant testifies in his own behalf, it is not error to charge that, in weighing his testimony, the jury may consider his interest in the result.—Davis v. State, 31 Neb. 247, 47 N. W. 854.

[n] (N. M. 1892) Where defendant was a witness in his own behalf, the court properly instructed the jury that they might take into consideration defendant's special interest in the case, in deciding what weight should be given to his testimony.—Faulkner v. Territory, 6 N. M. 464, 30 Pac. 905.

[o] (N. Y. 1885) A charge on a trial for homicide, stating that defendant, who had testified, "has, doubtless, every interest in this world to falsify, if falsifying would bring any immunity to him, and he is undoubtedly to be judged bearing that in mind, but he is not to be discredited for that reason," is not error.—People v. Kiernan, 3 N. Y. Cr. R. 247.

[p] (N. Y. 1885) A person in charge of a canal lock, who has suffered arrest for his careless conduct, is to be heard with suspicion, when, upon a repetition of such conduct, he endeavors to cast the blame on the party complaining.—Sipple v. State, 99 N. Y. 284, 1 N. E. 892, 3 N. E. 657.

§ 1183. Interest of accomplice or codefendant.

Credibility and effect of testimony of accomplices in criminal prosecutions, see "Criminal Law," vol. 14, cc. 1797–1799, § 1111.

Question of law or fact, see "Criminal Law," vol. 14, cc. 2443, 2444, § 1720.

[a] (N. D. 1895) As bearing on the credibility of an accomplice whose testimony shows that he committed the murder at the instigation of defendant, defendant may show that no prosecution against the accomplice has been instituted, though several months have elapsed since his confession of the crime.—State v. Kent, 4 N. D. 577, 62 N. W. 631, 27 L. R. A. 686.

[b] (Ohio, 1859) The prisoner has a right to impeach the testimony of an accomplice by showing that if he is convicted the witness expects not to be prosecuted; and it is not essential that the expectation should be well founded, if the witness really entertains it.—Allen v. State, 10 Ohio St. 287.

§ 1184. Interest in event of witness not party to record.

Cross-examination to show interest, see post, §§ 1192–1198.

[a] (U. S. 1853) Although the pilot is a witness deserving great consideration in respect to the course of his own vessel, he is not, from the necessity he is under to attend especially to his own peculiar duties, a witness whose testimony is reliable in respect to the position and course of approaching vessels, on a dark and cloudy night.—The Globe, Fed. Cas. No. 5,485.

[b] (U. S. 1890) In an action to recover duties paid on an alleged mistaken classification, where the witnesses for plaintiff, who testified as to the true classification of the articles in controversy, admit that they are themselves prosecuting precisely similar suits, the jury in weighing their testimony should consider the extent of their interest, pecuniary or otherwise, in the result of the action.—Sidenberg v. Robertson (C. C.) 41 Fed. 763.

[c] (Ala. 1893) In an action to recover money paid defendant on a check payable to plaintiff, the latter claimed that his indorsement was procured by defendant's fraud, while defendant claimed that it was indorsed to him to pay for services rendered plaintiff in effecting a settlement of a suit between plaintiff and a certain company, in pursuance of a contract, and a witness for defendant testified that he acted for the company in effecting a settlement which was made through defendant acting as attorney for plaintiff. He further testified that defendant did not represent the company, as claimed by plaintiff, and gave testimony tending to disprove plaintiff's charge that the defendant had received compensation from the stockholders for services rendered in the compromise, and gave also his opinion as an attorney as to the value of defendant's services. Held, that evidence that the witness owned 15 shares in the company, that he paid 25 per cent. on his subscription, and that he sold his stock before the compromise with plaintiff was effected, furnished no ground for discrediting or imputing bias to his testimony in favor of plaintiff.—Brown v. Prude, 97 Ala. 689, 11 South. 838.

[d] (Ill. 1888) In a liquor prosecution, the principal witness for the people is not shown to be biased or interested by the fact that he wrote to the W. C. T. U., telling them of the approaching session of the court, and that if they had any interest in this case they should attend to it; that he asked two or three persons what they knew of it; or by his answer to the question if his object was to make out a case for the people, viz.: "If the evidence—Yes, the same as any other person would; just that much interest as a citizen. I have lived 30 years in this county and propose to obey the law."—Kammann v. People, 26 Ill. App. 48.

[e] (Ill. 1892) In an action on a note alleged by defendant to be a forgery, the fact that witnesses hold similar notes, which are also claimed to be forgeries, cannot be shown as affecting their credibility, since it does not give them any direct interest in the result of the action.—Bevan v. Atlanta Nat. Bank, 142 Ill. 302, 31 N. E. 679, affirming (1891) 30 Ill. App. 577.

[f] (La. 1858) Although it is not a good objection to the competency of a witness that he is a creditor of the party for whom he is called to testify, yet the fact may be shown as affecting his credibility.—McClure v. King, 13 La. Ann. 141.

[g] (Mass. 1882) On trial of a libel for divorce, the mother of the libelee was a material witness in her favor. Held, that libelant had no ground of exception to the exclusion of evidence that libelee had been a witness for her mother in a divorce suit by her husband.—Pond v. Pond, 132 Mass. 219.

[h] (Miss. 1893) On an issue as to a boundary line, defendant relied on an agreement adopting a certain line as the boundary, which agreement, plaintiff claimed, was merely temporary. A witness occupying land adjoining defendant's on the other side testified for defendant that the boundary line so agreed on was to be permanent. Held, that it was competent for plaintiff to prove that, by virtue of such alleged agreement, witness' land would gain 14 chains, since such evidence tended to show that he had a direct interest in the result of the suit.—Archer v. Helm, 70 Miss. 874, 12 South. 702.

[i] (N. Y. 1883) It may be shown that a witness has an interest in the result of a suit, as, for instance, that defendant owes him money which he would be the less likely to get if plaintiff should obtain a judgment.—Meltzer v. Doll, 91 N. Y. 365.

[j] (N. Y. 1883) Notwithstanding the general rule that when a witness testifies positively to a fact, and his testimony is uncontradicted and unimpeached, it is to be credited, an exception exists where the interest of the witness is likely to affect his credibility, and especially where his testimony, if believed, would shield him from a charge of crime. In such a case his testimony should be submitted to the jury in like manner as if it had been contradicted.—Wohlfahrt v. Beckert, 92 N. Y. 490, 12 Abb. N. C. 478.

[k] (N. Y. 1889) A creditor of the assignors, who was placed in the third class of preferred creditors named in the assignment, is not an interested witness for plaintiff, in an action brought by an attaching creditor, not named in the assignment, to set such assignment aside.—Kennedy v. Wood, 52 Hun, 46, 4 N. Y. Supp. 758.

[l] (N. Y. 1889) The owners of property abutting on a street where an accident occurred testified on behalf of the defendant city. The evidence showed that the accident was caused by plaintiff's stepping from a part of the sidewalk which was several inches higher than the adjoining part down to the lower level, but it did not appear that either, or, if one of the owners, which one, had the right or lawful level in front of his property. Held, that the court properly refused to charge, for the purpose of indicating the interest the witnesses might be supposed to have in defeating the action, that "the defendant has a right of action over against the owner of the property in front of which the accident occurred for the reimbursement of any verdict rendered against it, and which it may be called upon to pay."—Hillesum v. City of New York, 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. (24 Jones & S.) 596, 4 N. Y. Supp. 806.

[m] (N. Y. 1890) In an action for insurance on a dredge, the fact that there was still due a witness a small amount on a bill for several thousand dollars for repairing the dredge showed no interest on his part which would discredit his testimony, where there was no evidence that the owner was not good for the balance, nor that the witness did not so regard him.—Plyer v. German-American Ins. Co., 121 N. Y. 689, 24 N. E. 929, reversing (1888) 48 Hun, 618, 1 N. Y. Supp. 395.

[n] (N. Y. 1896) Where defendant's witness testifies on cross-examination that plaintiff paid full value for the note in suit, in the usual course of business, and without notice that it had been diverted, the facts that the witness was a customer of plaintiff bank, and had sold to it the note in suit, do not make his credibility a question for the jury.—American Exch. Nat. Bank v. New York Belting & Packing Co., 148 N. Y. 698, 43 N. E. 168, affirming (1893) 74 Hun, 446, 26 N. Y. Supp. 822.

[o] (Tenn. 1872) Where there is a material discrepancy between the statements of witnesses, the fact that one has an interest in forestalling a prosecution against himself while the other is free from any apparent motive may be taken into consideration in weighing the testimony.—Maxwell v. State, 50 Tenn. (3 Heisk.) 420.

[p] (Va. 1874) On a bill by a surety against a creditor to be relieved on the ground that the creditor had authorized the sheriff to release the property levied on under the execution, the creditor answered and denied explicitly the allegations of the bill in this respect. Held, that the sheriff was a doubtful witness to sustain the bill, and though he testified that the creditor directed him not to sell, he not being sustained by strong corroborating circumstances, relief would be denied.—Shannon v. McMullin, 25 Grat. 211.

§ 1185. Police officers, detectives, and other persons employed to testify or procure evidence.

Cross-examination, see post, §§ 1196, 1197.

[a] (U. S. 1896) Witnesses hired by the manufacturer of a proprietary medicine to secure evidence against suspected infringers are not disinterested, and their testimony should be scrutinized with unusual caution.—Hostetter Co. v. Bower (C. C.) 74 Fed. 235.

[aa] (Ala. 1893) On the trial of a person charged with offering another money to induce him to commit perjury, it is error to exclude evidence offered by defendant that the witnesses against him were professional witnesses in gaming cases, and that they had been hired by third persons to work up and prosecute such cases for money.—Rivers v. State, 97 Ala. 72, 12 South. 434.

[b] (Ark. 1890) On an indictment for arson, evidence that a material witness for the state had said that he was working for a reward for discovering the criminal is admissible to show bias by reason of pecuniary interest.—Hollingsworth v. State, 53 Ark. 387, 14 S. W. 41.

[c] (Del. 1892) In a criminal prosecution the testimony of detectives and police officers should be cautiously scrutinized in connection with all the circumstances proven.—State v. Miller, 9 Houst. 564, 32 Atl. 137.

[d] (Ill. 1873) The testimony of a private detective hired by a husband to watch his wife, with a view of learning facts upon which to base a suit for a divorce, will be regarded with much suspicion, especially where it does not appear that his pay does not depend upon the successful effect of his evidence.—Blake v. Blake, 70 Ill. 618.

[e] (Ill. 1892) The fact that a witness is a detective, and was employed to aid in bringing criminals to justice, will not discredit his testimony.—Burns v. People, 45 Ill. App. 70.

[f] (Iowa, 1890) Where counsel for both parties enter into a stipulation as to what a distant witness would testify if examined, and agree that the statement shall be received in evidence as the testimony of such person, and have the same force and effect as if it were his deposition, the court has no right to discredit such evidence because uncorroborated, on the ground that the witness had been engaged for pay in looking up the evidence, and was not submitted to cross-examination.—Dickenson v. Bently, 80 Iowa, 482, 45 N. W. 903.

[g] (Iowa, 1890) The fact that a person is employed to visit places and purchase whisky in order to ascertain if saloons are illegally kept, is no ground for discrediting his testimony in a suit against the vendors for maintaining a liquor nuisance.—Dickenson v. Bently, 80 Iowa, 482, 45 N. W. 903.

[h] (Mich. 1895) The fact that the witnesses for the state on a prosecution for selling liquors unlawfully were hired to procure evidence of violation of the law may be considered by the jury in determining the credit to be given to their evidence.—People v. Whitney, 105 Mich. 622, 63 N. W. 765.

[i] (Mich. 1895) Defendant's arrest for violating the local option law having been caused by complainant, who purchased liquor from him with that object in view, it was unnecessary for the court to do more than inform the jury that such fact, if proved, was to be considered in determining the credit due to complainant's testimony.—People v. Bennett, 107 Mich. 430, 65 N. W. 280.

[j] (Neb. 1886) Where a detective, in the guise of a friend, obtained a confession of a crime from a suspected party, without inducement of any kind, except, at his request, he said that he had consulted an attorney for the prisoner, who said "he [the prisoner] had better tell the facts of the case, and that they would be likely to do him as much good as anything he could do; that there was no use of lying about it, and he had better tell the truth"—held, that the credibility of a witness who, by deceit, misrepresentation, and other disreputable means, has obtained an alleged confession from a prisoner, is for a jury, who should be specially instructed on that point.—Heldt v. State, 20 Neb. 492, 30 N. W. 626, 57 Am. Rep. 835.

[k] (N. C. 1887) In a trial for the larceny of goods from a store, a witness testified to a confession made to him by one of the defendants of his participation in the crime. It was shown that witness was himself a great thief, and that he had been promised immunity from punishment for his own crimes if he would tell all he knew about defendant. Held, that his testimony was properly allowed to go to the jury.—State v. Mitchener, 98 N. C. 689, 4 S. E. 26.

[l] (Tex. 1885) A conviction had on the testimony of a single witness who testified in consideration of being bailed out of jail should be set aside.—McGuire v. State, 19 Tex. App. 467.

§ 1186. Relationship to party.

As affecting competency of witness, see ante, §§ 119–123.

[a] (Ala. 1891) Where a person conveys to his wife land, in which he holds only an equitable interest, and is then called by the wife as a witness in ejectment, it is competent for the defendant to show the interest of the witness, and his relationship to the party in whose favor he is called.—Jernigan v. Flowers, 94 Ala. 508, 10 South. 437.

[b] (Cal. 1887) It is proper for the court, upon a trial for murder, to allude to the fact of the relationship of certain of defendant's witnesses to him, as affecting their credibility.—People v. Bush, 71 Cal. 602, 12 Pac. 781.

[c] (Del. 1892) In a criminal prosecution the testimony of the relatives of the accused should be cautiously scrutinized in connection with all the circumstances proven.—State v. Miller, 9 Houst. 564, 32 Atl. 137.

[d] (Ga. 1849) It is error in the court to discredit the testimony of relatives merely as such, relationship being a circumstance only from which the jury are at liberty to infer a bias, but are not obliged to do so.—Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 324, 50 Am. Dec. 329.

[e] (Ga. 1886) The relationship of witnesses to parties may be taken into consideration by the jury in estimating the credit to be given to them.—Simpson v. State, 78 Ga. 91.

[f] (Ill. 1865) Although a witness has not been impeached, the jury may disregard his testimony, if, from his relationship to the parties, his evident bias, or from any other cause, the conclusion is warranted that he is unworthy of credit.—Corgan v. Frew, 39 Ill. 31, 89 Am. Dec. 286.

[g] (Iowa, 1858) Where the wife is admitted as a witness for the husband, under Code, § 2391, providing that a husband and wife may, in all criminal prosecutions, be witnesses for each other, her credibility is to be tested by the same rules which are applicable to other witnesses.—State v. Guyer, 6 Iowa (6 Clarke) 263.

[h] (Iowa, 1859) The testimony of a wife, when called as a witness for her husband in a criminal case, is not to be distinguished from that of other witnesses; she is entitled to be regarded as others are, and to stand free and unembarrassed on her own character.—State v. Rankin, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 355.

[i] (Iowa, 1871) Under Rev. St. 1860, §§ 3978–3980, rendering classes competent as witnesses who were not so before, but providing that facts which had theretofore caused their exclusion might be proved to lessen their credibility, it was proper to instruct the jury, in an action for breach of a promise to marry, in which the plaintiff's father was a witness in her behalf, that they might consider the affection a father would have, and that any interest manifested by him should be considered as affecting his credibility, and for no other purpose.—Holloway v. Griffith, 32 Iowa, 409, 7 Am. Rep. 208.

[j] (La. 1839) A witness' credibility is not destroyed by the fact that he is clerk of one plaintiff and brother of the other.—Frost v. Bebout, 14 La. 104.

[k] (La.) Near relationship of witnesses to parties litigant affects their credibility.—(1852) Ward v. Valentine, 7 La. Ann. 183; (1854) Tardif v. Baudoin, 9 La. Ann. 127.

[l] (Mo. 1890) Under Rev. St. 1879, § 1918, providing that "no person shall be incompetent to testify as a witness in any criminal cause or prosecution by reason of being the * * * husband or wife of the accused, but any such facts may be shown for the purpose of affecting the credibility of such witness," an instruction to the jury that they may take into consideration the fact that a witness is the wife of the accused, in determining the weight to be given to her testimony, is proper.—State v. Parker, 39 Mo. App. 116.

[m] (Mo. 1895) It is proper to charge that, in considering the weight of evidence given by defendant and his wife, the jury may consider their interest in the case and the marital relation.—State v. Lingle, 128 Mo. 528, 31 S. W. 20.

[n] (N. H. 1860) The state of feeling, and the relationship of a witness toward a party, may properly be shown, to be weighed with his testimony.—Carr v. Moore, 41 N. H. 131.

[o] (N. Y. 1877) The rule that a witness not impeached or contradicted is to be believed, and the fact he swears to treated as established, does not apply where the sole witness for plaintiff is his son, and pecuniarily interested in the recovery toward which he testifies, particularly if his statement is improbable.—Kavanagh v. Wilson, 70 N. Y. 177.

[p] (N. Y. 1893) Plaintiff's wife is an interested witness where a decision adverse to plaintiff would tend to convict her of a fraud against defendant, and her testimony is subject to discredit, though not contradicted, and though her veracity may not have been impeached.—Coyle v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (Com. Pl.) 5 Misc. Rep. 586, 25 N. Y. Supp. 90.

[q] (N. Y. 1896) The trial justice is not required to believe the testimony of a brother-in-law of defendant, who aided defendant all he could in the trial, in preference to the testimony of plaintiff.—Delise v. Palladino (Sup.) 16 Misc. Rep. 74, 37 N. Y. Supp. 705.

[r] (N. C. 1860) There is no rule of law that the fact that a witness stands in the relation of mother to one of the parties naturally gives a bias to her statement so as to affect the accuracy of her recollection; but such relation is a matter for the consideration of the jury alone.—Wiseman v. Cornish, 53 N. C. 218.

[s] (N. C. 1888) The testimony of near relatives in behalf of a defendant charged with a crime is to be weighed with great caution.—State v. Byers, 100 N. C. 512, 6 S. E. 420.

[t] (Pa. 1850) The fact of the near relationship of a witness to one of the parties is to be weighed in a doubtful case; but where the witness swears positively, and is unimpeached, his credit ought not to be destroyed on that ground.—In re Gangwere's Estate, 14 Pa. (2 Harris) 417, 53 Am. Dec. 554.

§ 1187. Employment by or other contractual relation with party.

[a] (U. S. 1834) In a suit for seamen's wages, the proctor for the libelant, though not legally incompetent as a witness for his client, has a bias which is to be regarded in weighing the credit to be given to his testimony.—Granon v. Hartshorne, Fed. Cas. No. 5,689 [1 Blatchf. & H. 454].

[b] (U. S. 1893) On a question whether the cargoes of certain sealing schooners were transferred to a steamer within 12 miles of the shore, so as to violate the revenue laws, the testimony of the masters of the schooners that the transfer was made more than that distance should be received with caution, if not wholly rejected, where it is contradicted by other evidence, or rendered improbable by circumstances, since they stand much in the light of accomplices in the wrong charged.—United States v. The Coquitlam (D. C.) 57 Fed. 706.

[c, d] (Ala. 1894) It is within the discretion of the trial court to allow plaintiff to ask one of defendant's witnesses whether his father has not been in the employ of defendant's father.—Long v. Booe, 106 Ala. 570, 17 South. 716.

[e] (Ga. 1892) Where the evidence of an employé of one of the parties to an action conflicts with that of other witnesses, the jury may take in consideration the employment as a fact which may affect his credibility.—Central Railroad & Banking Co. v. Maltsby, 90 Ga. 680, 16 S. E. 963.

[f] (Ill. 1885) The jury may consider the fact that the relation of employer and employé existed between a witness and a corporation that is defendant in the action to see if, from his manner in testifying, such relation influenced his testimony, and determine what effect is to be given to his testimony.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Haskins, 115 Ill. 300, 2 N. E. 654.

[g] (Mich. 1880) There is no legal presumption against testimony given by an employé of a corporation, a party to the suit, and it is improper for the court to suggest that such evidence should be looked on with disfavor.—Marquette H. & O. R. Co. v. Kirkwood, 45 Mich. 51, 7 N. W. 209, 40 Am. Rep. 453.

[h] (Mich. 1891) The fact that a physician, who is employed to examine a person injured through the negligence of another, was employed for the express purpose of giving his testimony in a suit to be brought for such injury, may be considered as affecting his credibility.—Jones v. Village of Portland, 88 Mich. 598, 50 N. W. 731, 16 L. R. A. 437.

[i] (Mich. 1894) Evidence of the business relations between a party and his witness is admissible as affecting his credibility.—Totten v. Burhans, 103 Mich. 6, 61 N. W. 58.

[j] (N. Y. 1891) In an action for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff from the negligence of defendant's employés, it was not proper to instruct that defendant's employés were not disinterested witnesses, and their evidence should be subjected to as severe a criticism as plaintiff's, as it was for the jury to determine in considering all the probabilities of the case how much credit such witnesses were entitled to receive in their statements.—Uransky v. Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co., 59 Hun, 626, 13 N. Y. Supp. 670.

[k] (N. Y. 1892) The general manager of a corporation, who purchases goods for it in the course of his management of its affairs, is so far identified with it in interest that his testimony that the goods were not as warranted may be rejected as testimony of an interested witness, though wholly uncontradicted.—A. B.

Cleveland Co. v. A. C. Nellis Co. (Com. Pl.) 18 N. Y. Supp. 448.

[l] (N. Y. 1895) The fact that a witness, as agent for plaintiff, made the contract sued on, does not furnish any ground for discrediting his testimony.—Johnson v. Doll (Com. Pl.) 11 Misc. Rep. 345, 32 N. Y. Supp. 132.

[m] (N. Y. 1895) The fact that, of nine witnesses who testified for defendant railroad company that the bell was rung and whistle sounded on the train by which plaintiff's intestate was injured at a crossing, the greater part were employés of defendant, is not alone sufficient to discredit them, where the only testimony to the contrary was that of three witnesses who testified that they did not hear any signal.—Durkee v. President, etc., of Delaware & H. Canal Co., 88 Hun, 471, 34 N. Y. Supp. 978.

[n] (N. Y. 1895) In an action to recover commissions for procuring a purchaser of real estate at an agreed price, evidence that the purchaser, who testified for plaintiff, is in fact attorney for plaintiff, and interested in the result of the suit, is admissible.—Cohn v. Kahn (City Ct. N. Y.) 14 Misc. Rep. 255, 35 N. Y. Supp. 829.

[o] (Pa. 1881) In ejectment against a railroad company, the court properly refused to allow a witness to be asked whether he was not a witness in a number of cases against the railroad company, in order to show his bias or prejudice.—Pennsylvania & N. Y. Canal & R. Co. v. Roberts, 2 Walk. 482.

[p] (Pa. 1891) The court charged that the engineer and fireman of the train by which plaintiff was injured, who testified on the trial, had an interest in the case because of the question of their own responsibility which was involved, which weighed against their own credibility, and was a matter for the consideration of the jury in determining the value of their testimony. Held not to be error.—Ellis v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 138 Pa. 506, 21 Atl. 140, 27 Wkly. Notes Cas. 145, 21 Am. St. Rep. 914.

[q] (Tex. 1894) Though evidence is admissible to show that at the time a witness, who was the original attorney for plaintiff, testified on a former trial he was interested in the suit, it is not reversible error to strike out his testimony to the effect that he had been interested, when he did not state at what time he had such interest.—Trinity County Lumber Co. v. Denham (Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 553.

§ 1188. Partner of party.

[a] (La. 1858) The testimony of a partner who has transferred his interest to his copartner, notwithstanding a release by the plaintiffs, must always be received with grave suspicions.—McLaughlin v. Sauve, 13 La. Ann. 99.

[b] (N. Y. 1896) A partner of defendant is not a disinterested witness, so as to require the jury to believe his testimony, though uncontradicted and in no way discredited.—Newcombe v. Hyman (Sup.) 16 Misc. Rep. 25, 37 N. Y. Supp. 649.

§ 1189. Friendly or unfriendly relations with or feelings toward party.

[a] (U. S. 1880) Statements of a witness made before trial, of facts which, if true, would tend to show bias on his part in favor of defendant, are properly admissible in evidence as to his credibility.—United States v. Schindler (C. C.) 10 Fed. 547.

[b] (Ala. 1878) The enmity or unfriendliness of a witness to the person against whom he testified may be shown to enable the jury the better to determine in connection with other evidence, what weight should be accorded to the witness; but it is not permissible to prove the details of a quarrel or difficulty which gave rise to the enmity or unfriendliness.—Polk v. State, 62 Ala. 237.

[c] (Ala. 1878) Persons observant of, and familiar with, the intercourse between others, and conversant with the state of feeling, as shown by their conduct and conversation, may testify as to the fact whether or not enmity or ill feeling existed between them.—Polk v. State, 62 Ala. 237.

[d] (Ala. 1881) The fact of enmity, but not the circumstances of a particular quarrel, are admissible to show bias on the part of a witness.—Munden v. Bailey, 70 Ala. 63.

[e] (Ala. 1885) Defendant may show a previous difficulty between himself and a witness for the state, to affect his credibility, but the particulars of such difficulty are inadmissible.—Jordan v. State, 79 Ala. 9.

[f] (Ala. 1885) On indictment for assault, to affect the credibility of a witness, his feelings towards the parties to the difficulty may be shown, but not his feelings towards a third person, who did not take part in the difficulty.—Henry v. State, 79 Ala. 42.

[g] (Ark. 1879) A witness for the state may be shown to be prejudiced against the accused, but the facts and circumstances causing such prejudice cannot be stated in detail.—Butler v. State, 34 Ark. 480.

[h] (Cal. 1894) Insulting remarks by defendant, made concerning a witness, which were repeated to the witness, and statements by the witness showing prejudice against defendant, are admissible as affecting her credibility.—People v. Anderson, 105 Cal. 32, 38 Pac. 513.

[i] (Conn. 1830) Evidence may be received to show the bias under which a witness labors who has given his deposition ex parte in a case.—Daggett v. Tallman, 8 Conn. 168.

[j] (Conn. 1874) In order to impeach the credit of a witness, it may be shown that there has been a quarrel between him and the party against whom he testifies, although not relating to the subject-matter of the suit.—Beardsley v. Wildman, 41 Conn. 515.

[k] (Ga. 1877) Ill will in a witness does not, ipso facto, work an impeachment, nor does it necessarily weaken the force of his testimony.—Skipper v. State, 59 Ga. 63.

[l] (Ill. 1869) In an action for malicious prosecution, it appeared that the prosecution complained of was instituted by defendants, who were proprietors of a foundry wherein their operatives were employed contrary to the rules of the Molders' Union, and that certain members of the union conspired to entice away the said employés. The proprietors of the foundry brought suit against the alleged conspirators, and caused plaintiff to be arrested and imprisoned and held to bail as one of the conspirators. The action brought by said proprietors was subsequently dismissed without being brought to trial. Held, that it was competent to show on cross-examination of a witness who was introduced to exonerate plaintiff as one of the conspirators that witness had become a member of the union after he had left defendant's employment; though it appeared to technically pertain to the matter of the direct examination, it was competent as showing the influences under which the witness was placed by joining the union.—Collins v. Hayte, 50 Ill. 337, 99 Am. Dec. 521.

[m] (Ind. 1882) It is proper to show that a witness entertains malice or ill will toward the party against whom he testifies, though the witness be one of several who are jointly sued.—Colton v. Vandervolgen, 87 Ind. 361.

[n] (Ky. 1895) In an action by an employé for personal injuries, it is error to refuse to allow defendant to prove by one witness that another witness called by plaintiff had been discharged from defendant's employment.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Berry's Adm'x, 96 Ky. 604, 29 S. W. 449.

[o] (Ky. 1895) Where three persons were indicted for the crime, but as to one the indictment was dismissed, and he became a witness for the state, evidence of the influence which two detectives exercised over this witness was competent, as bearing upon the weight to be given to his testimony.—Breckenridge v. Commonwealth, 97 Ky. 267, 30 S. W. 634.

[p] (Me. 1887) Testimony of the libelee on cross-examination as to acts of alleged cruelty not set out in the libel or bill of particulars is admissible to show his feeling and disposition as bearing on his credibility.—Thompson v. Thompson, 79 Me. 286, 9 Atl. 888.

[q] (Md. 1877) While bias of a witness against a prisoner may be shown, the causes of such bias cannot be inquired into.—Chelton v. State, 45 Md. 564.

[r] (Md. 1877) A question asked by his counsel of one charged with larceny, as to whether the father of two persons named had made any threats against the family of defendant's father, is inadmissible where one of such persons has not been examined as a witness, and there is no evidence tending to show that the other, who was a witness for the prosecution, had any knowledge of such threats when he gave his testimony.—Chelton v. State, 45 Md. 564.

[s] (Miss. 1859) It is competent to prove facts showing the witness' feeling toward the parties, as that she told the prisoner some time before that if he did not kill the deceased she would not own him for her son.—Newcomb v. State, 37 Miss. 383.

[t] (N. H. 1853) The relation in which a witness stands to a party, whether of peculiar friendship or hostility, is material, and may always be shown, either by the testimony of the witness whose testimony is to be affected by it, or by other witnesses.—Drew v. Wood, 26 N. H. (6 Fost.) 363.

[u] (N. Y. 1859) If the jury believe that R. B. attempted to assassinate the prisoner before his arrest upon the charge of poisoning his wife, and that he entertained feelings of animosity and hatred toward him, and if the jury believe that S. and F. B. are also hostile toward the prisoner, and have quarreled with him, then they should consider these matters in weighing the degree of credit which is to be given to their testimony.—Stephens v. People, 4 Parker, Cr. R. 396.

[v] (N. Y. 1864) In an action by an administrator to recover a debt due his intestate, a witness in behalf of the defendant testified that she had had a claim against the estate which had been settled, but not to her satisfaction. The plaintiff then introduced evidence of the claim, and how it was settled. Held that, as the witness was evidently under an unfriendly bias toward the plaintiff, it was proper that all the facts connected with the claim and settlement should be laid before the jury, that they might judge of the extent and the cause of the bias. It affected the defendant in no other way than as showing the influences under which the witness testified.—Dubois v. Baker, 30 N. Y. 355.

[w] (N. Y. 1878) Evidence of a witness' unfriendly feeling toward a party must be restricted to the time of the trial.—Higham v. Gault, 15 Hun, 383.

[x] (N. Y. 1881) Evidence of threats made by a plaintiff to "get even with" the defendants are admissible in evidence: the plaintiff having testified in his own behalf.—Starr v. Cragin, 24 Hun, 177.

[y] (N. Y. 1893) Evidence that a witness for the defense was in intimate and affectionate relations with defendant's household is competent for the prosecution.—People v. Webster, 139 N. Y. 73, 34 N. E. 730, affirming (1893) 68 Hun, 11, 22 N. Y. Supp. 634.

[yy] (Tex. 1886) Where a woman testified that the person assaulted advanced with an axe in a threatening manner to within two or three steps of defendant before defendant drew his revolver and fired, evidence that the woman was separated from her husband and was living with defendant was competent to show her bias and motives.—Crist v. State, 21 Tex. App. 361, 17 S. W. 260.

[z] (Vt. 1862) It is always admissible, for the purpose of affecting the credibility of a witness, to prove his friendly relations to the party calling him, and hostility to the party against whom he testifies, notwithstanding that he may have been questioned upon those matters on the cross-examination.—Hutchinson v. Wheeler, 35 Vt. 330.

[zz] (W. Va. 1886) On an indictment for uttering a forged writing, the bias of witnesses in favor of the person whose name was forged is immaterial, and evidence that a witness is indebted to him is inadmissible, for the purpose of affecting the credit of the witness testifying.—State v. Henderson, 29 W. Va. 147, 1 S. E. 225.

§ 1190. Bias or prejudice of impeaching witness toward witness impeached as to character.

[a] (Iowa, 1891) Testimony impeaching the character of the accused cannot be stricken out because the cross-examination of the witnesses shows that they are interested in the prosecution.—State v. Farrell, 82 Iowa, 553, 48 N. W. 940.

[b] (Md. 1876) Where one party produced witnesses to impeach the other party as a witness, it was proper to prove that he had a personal difficulty with such witnesses about the building of some houses which resulted in a law suit.—Wyeth v. Walzl, 43 Md. 426.

[c] (Minn. 1891) Testimony that impeaching witnesses belonged to a village "faction" opposed to that to which the person impeached belonged, is too vague and remote.—Holston v. Boyle, 46 Minn. 432, 49 N. W. 208.

§ 1191. Release of interest.

[a] (U. S. 1864) Where a man transfers all his interest in property which is about to become the subject of suit, for the purpose of making himself a witness in such suit, while his testimony is to be carefully and perhaps suspiciously scrutinized, when contradicting the positive statements made by a defendant in equity responsively to the complainant's bill, such testimony is still to be judged of by the ordinary rules which govern in the law of evidence, and to be credited or discredited accordingly.—Tobey v. Leonard, 69 U. S. (2 Wall.) 423, 17 L. Ed. 842.

[b] (Ky. 1820) A release of interest by a party, not made until after his deposition has been taken, detracts greatly from the credibility of the evidence.—Steele's Heirs v. Payne's Heirs, 9 Ky. (2 A. K. Marsh.) 187.

[c] (N. Y. 1850) A party who assigns a claim, and becomes a witness to prove it, places himself in a position where his testimony will be looked at with more doubt than in other cases, and when contradicted in a material point, he cannot complain if credit is withheld from him.—Watkins v. Cousall, 1 E. D. Smith, 65.

[d] (S. C. 1817) If a witness, incompetent on the score of interest, releases his interest, it is for the jury to judge of the degree of credit to which he is entitled.—Kinloch v. Palmer, 1 Mill, Const. 216.

2. CROSS-EXAMINATION TO SHOW INTEREST OR BIAS, AND RE-EXAMINATION.

IN GENERAL, § 1192.
INQUIRY AS TO PARTICULAR ACTS OR FACTS TENDING TO SHOW INTEREST OR BIAS, § 1193.
— STATEMENTS OR DECLARATIONS, § 1194.
— EMPLOYMENT OF COUNSEL OR PAYMENT OF EXPENSE OF LITIGATION, § 1195.
— COMPENSATION OR REWARD FOR TESTIMONY, § 1196.
CROSS-EXAMINATION OF POLICE OFFICERS AND DETECTIVES, § 1197.
CONCLUSIVENESS OF ANSWERS ON CROSS-EXAMINATION, § 1198.
RE-EXAMINATION, § 1199.

§ 1192. In general.

[a] A party is entitled to cross-examine a witness for the purpose of showing interest or bias.

—(Ga. 1861) Floyd v. Wallace, 31 Ga. 688;
(Ind. 1885) Barnett v. Feary, 101 Ind. 95;
(Kan. 1872) Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Blackshire, 10 Kan. 477;
(Neb. 1894) Blenkiron v. State, 40 Neb. 11, 58 N. W. 587;
(N. Y. 1883) Miles v. Sackett, 30 Hun, 68;
(S. D. 1895) Hanson v. Minnehaha County, 7 S. D. 38, 63 N. W. 156;
(Tex. 1853) Wentworth v. Crawford, 11 Tex. 127;
(Wis. 1873) Suit v. Bonnell, 33 Wis. 180.

[b] It is proper, on cross-examination of a witness, to ask him questions tending to show the state of his feelings toward the parties.

—(Ala. 1858) McHugh v. State, 31 Ala. 317;
(Cal. 1885) People v. Lee Ah Chuck, 66 Cal. 662, 6 Pac. 859;
(Ill. 1860) Ray v. Bell, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 444;
(La. 1885) State v. Melton, 37 La. Ann. 77;
(Mo. 1880) State v. Miller, 71 Mo. 590;
(Or. 1885) State v. Mackey, 12 Or. 154, 6 Pac. 648.

[c] (Ala. 1853) The prisoner's witnesses may be questioned, on cross-examination, as to their relations with the prisoner, whether they were on terms of friendly intimacy, their means of knowing the facts to which they testify, and as to any liens or prejudices which might influence them.—Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44.

[d] (Ala. 1876) On a trial for arson, the prosecuting witness was asked, "What was the state of feeling between you and the accused at the time of the burning?" and the witness answered, "It was not good." Held, that the form of neither the question nor the answer was objectionable.—Hinds v. State, 55 Ala. 145.

[e] (Ark. 1852) It is not proper on cross-examination to ask a witness if he is not prejudiced against the defendant.—Cornelius v. State, 12 Ark. (7 Eng.) 782.

[ee] (Cal. 1867) When a witness is a material one on the part of the party introducing him, and has been intimately associated with him in the matters directly connected with questions of fact involved in the action, the opposite party has the right to test his credibility on cross-examination by any mode of examination which is calculated to illustrate his relation to the parties and the subject-matter of the action.—Harper v. Lamping, 33 Cal. 641.

[f] (Cal. 1885) Where a witness has testified to immaterial matters only, the party against whom he has testified cannot, on cross-examination, show prejudice or hostility of such witness.—Luhrs v. Kelly, 67 Cal. 289, 7 Pac. 696.

[ff] (Cal. 1886) A party is not injured by cross-examination of a witness to show that ill feeling at one time existed between them, if the witness, on the direct examination, has testified favorably to the party.—Hartman v. Rogers, 69 Cal. 643, 11 Pac. 581.

[g] (Cal. 1888) In a trial for murder, when the mother of deceased testifies, on her cross-examination: "I heard the Goldensons [the family of defendant] were of such a character that I did not wish my daughter to go to their house"—it is not error to disallow a question by defendant as to the nature of the character referred to. The testimony of the witness showed that she was prejudiced against defendant's family, and the reason therefor was immaterial.—People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 328, 19 Pac. 161.

[gg] (Cal. 1891) Where a tenant, in an action against his landlord, produces a written statement of account, made nearly a year before the trial, the exclusion of an inquiry, on cross-examination, as to what his feelings towards the landlord were at the time he made the statement, is not prejudicial; since it was material, only, what his feelings were at the time he testified.—Salle v. Mayer, 91 Cal. 165, 27 Pac. 513.

[h] (Cal. 1894) On a prosecution for murder, a witness for the state may, on cross-examination, be asked if deceased was not her lover, to show her spite against defendant.—People v. Worthington, 105 Cal. 166, 38 Pac. 689.

[hh] (Colo. 1890) The admission by the defendant while testifying as a witness of the existence of prejudice against the plaintiff does not preclude a cross-examination as to the character of such prejudice.—Stewart v. Kindel, 15 Colo. 539, 25 Pac. 990.

[i] (Conn. 1827) Where a party has excepted to a witness as interested in the event of the suit, and has made an unsuccessful attempt to prove such interest by the evidence of other witnesses, he cannot, on the cross-examination of the witness excepted to, make any inquiry of him to show interest, for the purpose of impeaching his credibility.—Chance v. Hine, 6 Conn. 231.

[ii] (Ga. 1850) A witness may be interrogated as to the state of his feelings toward a party, in order to show the bias under which he testifies; it is not admissible, however, to inquire into the cause of his hostility.—Bishop v. State, 9 Ga. 121.

[j] (Ill. 1885) Although there should be an extension and not an abridgment of the right to cross-examine a witness, where the evidence tends to show that there has been some difficulty between him and the accused, yet in the absence of a clear showing of abuse of discretion prejudicial to the accused, the exercise of the trial court's discretion in that regard will not be disturbed on appeal.—Birr v. People, 113 Ill. 645.

[jj] (Ind. 1859) It is always proper to ask a witness as to his relationship to the parties, and the state of his feelings toward them, with a view that the jury may judge of the impartiality of his testimony.—Bersch v. State, 13 Ind. 434, 74 Am. Dec. 263.

[k] (Ind. 1881) In a prosecution instituted by the owner of a dog against one who has maliciously killed the animal, it is competent for the state, on cross-examination, to ask the defendant's witness relative to his relations with the owner, for the purpose of showing prejudice or bias of the witness for or against him.—Kinsman v. State, 77 Ind. 132.

[kk] (Ind. 1889) In a prosecution under Rev. St. 1881, § 2087, providing for the punishment of any one allowing minors to play billiards, etc., on cross-examination of the minor as a witness, the question whether he was not the same person "who had been a witness in several liquor cases" is improper.—Kiley v. State, 120 Ind. 65, 22 N. E. 99.

[l] (Ind. 1890) The extent of cross-examination to show feeling and bias rests in the sound discretion of the trial court.—Hinchcliffe v. Koontz, 121 Ind. 422, 23 N. E. 271, 16 Am. St. Rep. 403.

[ll] (Ind. 1896) In a prosecution the state may, on cross-examination, bring out the relation between defendant and a female witness testifying in his behalf, as affecting bias in his favor on her part.—Smith v. State, 143 Ind. 685, 42 N. E. 913.

[m] (Kan. 1884) On cross-examination, an adverse witness may be questioned as to his intimacy with a person whom the party he is testifying against caused to be arrested, if followed by evidence tending to show a conspiracy between witness and such person to furnish evidence.—State v. Krum, 32 Kan. 372, 4 Pac. 621.

[mm] (Kan. 1885) A witness who admits ill will or prejudice against one of the parties to an action may nevertheless be cross-examined as to the extent and character of that prejudice.—State v. Collins, 33 Kan. 77, 5 Pac. 368.

[n] (La. 1859) In a cross-examination of a witness for the state, the question was asked the witness "if he was not anxious that the defendant should be convicted." Held, that the question was a proper one, and might be asked to show bias on the mind of the witness, and that it was competent for the jury to decide from his answer to what extent his credibility may have been affected by it.—State v. Adams, 14 La. Ann. 620.

[nn] (La. 1884) After a witness for the state has been asked whether he is not anxious to have the accused convicted, and has answered in the negative, the court may exclude further questions tending to intimidate the witness.—State v. Kane, 36 La. Ann. 153.

[o] (La. 1896) The state has the right, on cross-examination of defendant's witnesses, to cross-examine them in respect to their relations with the accused, in order to affect the weight and credibility of their evidence; and this though the examination may cover matters not touched on by the witnesses in their direct examination.—State v. Johnson, 48 La. Ann. 437, 19 South. 476, following State v. Willingham (1881) 33 La. Ann. 537; State v. Gregory, Id. 737.

[oo] (Mass. 1852) A witness who is called to discredit another witness, and defeat the effect of his testimony by showing that he had made statements at variance therewith, may be asked whether he has had a quarrel with such other witness.—Long v. Lamkin, 63 Mass. (9 Cush.) 361.

[p] (Mich. 1878) A witness, who on cross-examination to affect his credibility by showing that he is interested in certain property as a purchaser states that although he once agreed to purchase it the sale was never completed or carried out, should not be further questioned as to why he did not complete the sale in the absence of any showing that his answer will show interest or affect his credibility.—Sager v. Tupper, 38 Mich. 258.

[pp] (Mich. 1892) Where a defendant's case rests almost entirely upon the testimony of one witness, plaintiff may, on cross-examination of the witness, show the latter's ill feeling toward him.—Clink v. Gunn, 90 Mich. 135, 51 N. W. 193.

[q] (Mo. 1859) It is competent in a criminal case, as affecting the credibility of a witness, to inquire into the state of his mind in respect to the party against whom he is called; but this inquiry cannot be made concerning the witness' feelings in regard to the husband of such party.—State v. Montgomery, 28 Mo. 594.

[qq] (Mo. 1894) The extent to which the temper and disposition of a witness may be shown on cross-examination is largely within the discretion of the trial court.—Czezewzka v. Benton-Bellefontaine Ry. Co., 121 Mo. 201, 25 S. W. 911.

[r] (Neb. 1881) Any interest that a witness may have in the result of the trial of a criminal case in which he is testifying, whether pecuniary or other, may be called out on his cross-examination, as affecting his credibility.—Olive v. State, 11 Neb. 1, 7 N. W. 444.

[rr] (Neb. 1892) Where a witness testified that he had felt unfriendly toward defendant at times, but that he no longer had such feeling, questions seeking to elicit that he bore ill will towards defendant more than three years before the trial were not proper.—Consaul v. Sheldon, 35 Neb. 247, 52 N. W. 1104.

[s] (N. Y. 1816) Counsel have no right to put a question to a witness the answer to which might impeach his own motives in procuring the institution of the prosecution. This must be done by other testimony.—In re Butler's Case, 1 City H. Rec. 66.

[ss] (N. Y. 1874) A witness on cross-examination may properly be interrogated as to his interest in the result of the trial. Although interest does not now disqualify a witness, it may be shown on cross-examination with a view to test his credibility. It is also competent to inquire how the witness understands the case as regards his interest.—Vaughan v. Westover, 4 Thomp. & C. 316.

[t] (N. Y. 1887) It is always competent to bring out, on cross-examination, what relations exist between a party and his witness, for the purpose of showing bias or prejudice on the part of the witness, and it is error to refuse to allow a question, looking to that end, to be put; but where the evidence in chief is wholly immaterial upon all the material issues of the case, such refusal is harmless error.—Teets v. Village of Middletown, 106 N. Y. 651, 12 N. E. 347, affirming (1884) 20 Wkly. Dig. 347.

[tt] (N. Y. 1891) In a prosecution for manslaughter, where defendant stood by aiding and encouraging the assault which resulted in the death of the assaulted person, where one who belonged to defendant's party, and stood by during the assault, is called as a witness in his behalf, the prosecuting attorney may, for the purpose of ascertaining if he is an impartial and unprejudiced witness, ask if he wanted to see deceased get a thrashing.—People v. Keating, 61 Hun, 260, 16 N. Y. Supp. 748.

[u] (N. Y. 1892) Where a witness was asked a question on cross-examination, with a view of showing a hostile feeling on her part towards defendant, but such question embraced other matters not admissible, and assumed facts not in evidence, an objection was properly sustained.—Cornwell v. Cogwin, 63 Hun, 624, 17 N. Y. Supp. 299.

[uu] (N. Y. 1893) In an action by the contractor for a balance due on a building contract, where a witness for defendant testified that, by agreement between the architect and plaintiff, alterations were made in the specifications to reduce the cost of the work to plaintiff, it is proper to show by cross-examination that witness is unfriendly to the architect.—Garnsey v. Rhodes, 138 N. Y. 461, 34 N. E. 199.

[v] (N. Y. 1893) It is competent to ask a witness who testifies for defendant, and who was an eyewitness of the homicide, as to her intimacy with defendant's wife, as tending to affect her credibility.—People v. Webster, 68 Hun, 11, 22 N. Y. Supp. 634, judgment affirmed (1893) 139 N. Y. 73, 34 N. E. 730.

[vv] (N. C. 1860) In order to weaken the force of a witness' evidence on cross-examination, it was held competent to show his temper and feeling toward the cause independently of any prejudice or ill will toward the accused personally.—State v. Sam, 53 N. C. 150.

[w] (N. D. 1893) The state has the right, on cross-examination, to show the nature of the relations existing between a witness and the accused, so far as their relations are such as would create a bias on the part of the witness that might reasonably be supposed to affect his testimony, and this rule cannot be changed by the fact that these relations may be such as to prejudice the accused in the minds of the jury.—State v. McGahey, 3 N. D. 293, 55 N. W. 753.

[ww] (S. D. 1892) The latitude of inquiry in the cross-examination of an interested witness is submitted to the sound discretion of the trial court.—Holdridge v. Lee, 3 S. D. 134, 52 N. W. 265.

[www] (S. D. 1892) Upon cross-examination, it is always allowable to ask any witness as to his relation to the subject-matter of his testimony, or to the parties whose interests are to be affected by it.—Holdridge v. Lee, 3 S. D. 134, 52 N. W. 265.

[x] (Tex. 1854) A question put to a witness on cross-examination as to whether he did not desire that the party for whom he testified should recover is impertinent.—Thompson v. Thompson, 12 Tex. 327.

[xx] (Tex. 1880) A question in cross-examination of a prosecuting witness to show his hostility, "Don't you love the defendant?" held to be improper.—Blunt v. State, 9 Tex. App. 234.

[xxx] (Tex. 1881) In answer to a cross-interrogatory relative to his interest in the suit, a witness for the plaintiff replied that he had no more interest in the suit than he would have in any other which the plaintiff might be engaged in. Held, that fairly construed the answer established the negative of the question of interest.—Stillman v. Hurd, 10 Tex. 109.

[y] (Tex. 1886) The accused in a criminal prosecution has the right to prove by a state's witness the enmity which the witness entertains against him.—Lyle v. State, 21 Tex. App. 153, 17 S. W. 425.

[yy] (Vt. 1879) Only the general inquiry, without detail, whether a witness is friendly or otherwise to the party, is permitted.—State v. Glynn, 51 Vt. 577.

[z] (W. Va. 1879) A grand juror who is a witness on the trial of an indictment found by the grand jury of which he was a member cannot, with a view of showing his prejudice, be asked anything which occurred in the jury room.—State v. Baltimore & O. R. R. Co., 15 W. Va. 362, 36 Am. Rep. 803.

[zz] (Wis. 1865) Where the defense to an action on a note is that the plaintiff is not the owner, the payee, who has testified for the defendant that he (witness) had assigned the note to a third person while the plaintiff held it for him, may be cross-examined to show his continued interest in the note, and that the assignment was without consideration, for the purpose of affecting his credit as a witness.—Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Sholes, 20 Wis. 35.

§ 1193. Inquiry as to particular acts or facts tending to show interest or bias.

[a] (Ala. 1862) In an action to recover the value of certain goods shipped by a steamer, it was proper for the court to allow defendant on cross-examination of a witness for plaintiff to show that the witness was a warehouseman, and that he received the goods from the boat and the bill of lading, as bearing on the question whether he himself had not been negligent, from the consequence of which a recovery by the plaintiff would contribute to relieve him.—Winston v. Cox, 38 Ala. 268.

[aa] (Ala. 1882) A witness in an action for breach of contract, who is shown to be an employé of the plaintiff, may not be questioned as to the amount of his salary to determine his interest in the suit.—Mason v. Alabama Iron Co., 73 Ala. 270.

[b] (Ala. 1887) A witness in a criminal case was asked on cross-examination if he did not tell the officer that he did not know where defendant was. Held admissible, as tending to show bias of the witness.—Burger v. State, 83 Ala. 36, 3 South. 319.

[bb] (Ala. 1887) It is permissible, on cross-examination of a witness, to prove his bias or prejudice by showing that he is defendant in another action, involving another portion of the property conveyed by the same mortgage, in which the same defense is set up.—Drum v. Harrison, 83 Ala. 384, 3 South. 715.

[c] (Ala. 1893) A witness for the state, after testifying that he is not hostile to the accused, cannot be asked, in order to contradict him, whether he did not once, when required to reduce the force working under him, discharge defendant in preference to a colored man also in his employ.—Carpenter v. State, 98 Ala. 31, 13 South. 534.

[cc] (Ala. 1895) To show interest of witness against defendant he may be asked, in an action for removing the body of plaintiff's child from its burying place, if plaintiff has brought an action against him on account of the same thing, and if it has been finally determined.—Bessemer Land & Improvement Co. v. Jenkins, 111 Ala. 135, 18 South. 565, 56 Am. St. Rep. 26.

[d] (Cal. 1886) On a trial for murder, it is not error to refuse to admit a question put to a witness as to whether he knew of the defendant's arrest for arson, and at whose instigation such arrest was made, if no offer was made to prove that the arrest for arson was instigated or brought about by any witness for the prosecution, or any organization or society hostile to the defendant with which any witness for the prosecution was connected; as in the absence of evidence, or any offer thereof, connecting the witnesses of the prosecution with such arrest, the answer to the question could not have tended to destroy the credibility of any of them.—People v. Fong Ah Sing, 70 Cal. 8, 11 Pac. 323.

[dd] (Conn. 1828) A witness may be asked, on cross-examination, whether he has not had a controversy with the party against whom he testifies, and whether he has not threatened to be revenged upon him, for the purpose of discrediting his testimony.—Atwood v. Welton, 7 Conn. 66.

[e] (Fla. 1886) On trial for murder it is competent for defendant's counsel to ask a witness for the state whether he took part in an indignation meeting, and whether the meeting was hostile to defendant, for the purpose of showing the state of the witness' feelings towards defendant; but evidence as to the reasons for holding the meeting, or for witness' attending it, is inadmissible.—Selph v. State, 22 Fla. 537.

[ee] (Fla. 1890) In an action against a railroad company for killing plaintiff's mule, the engineer in charge of the engine had testified for the company, and on cross-examination was asked, "What would be the consequence if you should kill stock carelessly and negligently, and should report it to your company?" The question was objected to, on the ground that it was new matter, and was irrelevant and incompetent, but the court overruled the objection. Held, that the question was proper, as a means of furnishing the jury a test of the value of his evidence through his relation to the company, and his interest and inclination toward the parties.—Jacksonville, T. & K. W.

Ry. Co. v. Wellman, 26 Fla. 344, 7 South. 845.

[f] (Fla. 1891) It is competent to show as a fact feelings of hostility on the part of a witness, or the state of a witness' mind, in respect to the person against whom he testifies, and the jury may consider this hostility or bias in estimating his testimony; but an inquiry into the conduct and acts of parties producing hostility, not relating to the matters in issue, should not be permitted.—Eldridge v. State, 27 Fla. 162, 9 South. 448.

[ff] (Fla. 1894) In trespass to land, a question to plaintiff's witness, on cross-examination, if he had not testified in similar suits against defendant, to show bias, was properly excluded. —Jacksonville, T. & K. W. Ry. Co. v. Lockwood, 33 Fla. 573, 15 South. 327.

[g] (Ga. 1878) Where a witness for the defendant testified on cross-examination that he had unkind feelings toward the plaintiff, held, that he could not be asked the cause of those feelings.—Conyers v. Field, 61 Ga. 258.

[gg] (Ga. 1878) A witness for the defense, in a criminal trial, cannot be asked, on cross-examination, concerning the particulars of a difficulty between him and the prosecutor, when he has not denied ill feeling toward the latter. —Patman v. State, 61 Ga. 379.

[h] (Ill. 1860) On cross-examination of a witness for the purpose of showing the state of his feelings, it is proper to ask questions of him tending to show that on a previous trial the witness refused to give the name of a person within his knowledge, when directed to do so by the court.—Ray v. Bell, 24 Ill. 444.

[hh] (Ill. 1882) Where a witness for one party has stated enough to show the relation between him and the opposite party, it is harmless error to refuse to allow him, on cross-examination, to be asked if there had not been a feud or quarrel between his family and one of such opposite party's family.—Schmidt v. Sinnott, 103 Ill. 160.

[i] (Ind. 1891) Defendant's witness may be asked on cross-examination if he did not leave home in order to enable defendant to obtain a continuance, the question being competent as tending to show interest.—Sage v. State, 127 Ind. 15, 26 N. E. 667.

[ii] (Ind. 1892) As affecting his credibility, a witness may be cross-examined as to whether he is a volunteer witness.—Wabash R. Co. v. Ferris, 6 Ind. App. 30, 32 N. E. 112.

[j] (Iowa, 1876) In an action for seduction, a witness who had been himself a candidate for the woman's favor having testified that he went to her house, and saw her in the company of defendant in an equivocal position, it was competent to ask him what was the purpose of his visit to the house at the time about which he testified.—Dance v. McBride, 43 Iowa, 624.

[jj] (Iowa, 1887) On cross-examination, defendant's counsel asked a witness, in order to show prejudice against the defendant, whether he had not stated to one Sandford that he had whipped the defendant and his brother, and had applied certain opprobrious epithets to them, but could not get a fight out of them, to which the witness answered that no such conversation had taken place between him and Sandford; also that Sandford contradicted himself as to certain parts of the alleged statement. He was then asked: "How does he contradict himself?" Held, the question called for a mere expression of belief, and had no tendency to show hostility on the part of the witness, and was properly disallowed.—State v. Winter, 72 Iowa, 627, 34 N. W. 475.

[k] (Iowa, 1887) Upon the trial of defendant for forging a promissory note, the fact that a witness was one of defendant's bondsmen may be shown upon cross-examination, as affecting the weight and credibility of his testimony.— State v. Calkins, 73 Iowa, 128, 34 N. W. 777.

[kk] (Iowa, 1888) A witness testified that she had a claim against plaintiff for services during his illness consequent on the accident for which suit was brought. On cross-examination she was asked "whether she knew of any way of getting her pay, except through this suit." Held that, the witness having already admitted her interest, the exclusion of the question did not prejudice defendant.—Shannon v. Town of Tama City, 74 Iowa, 22, 36 N. W. 776.

[l] (Iowa, 1892) Cross-examination of an attorney who has taken the stand for a client, as to whether his compensation did not depend upon a recovery, is proper, as the witness, under the common law, would have been incompetent because of interest; Code 1873, § 3637, declaring that facts which have heretofore caused the exclusion of testimony may still be shown for the purpose of lessening its credibility.—Harrington v. City of Hamburg, 85 Iowa, 272, 52 N. W. 201.

[ll] (Ky. 1896) On cross-examination of a woman who was a witness for the defendant, it was admissible, as showing her interest and probable bias, to prove that she had been living with defendant, though not married to him. —Holly v. Commonwealth, 36 S. W. 532.

[m] (La. 1889) The accused has the right to show, on cross-examination of a witness for the state, the feeling of the witness towards him, and to ask him as to a particular act of hostile feeling shortly after the commission of the offense. If he refuses to answer, or answers evasively, the accused can prove the fact by any other competent witness.—State v. McFarlan, 41 La. Ann. 686, 6 South. 728.

[mm] (Md. 1855) On the cross-examination of a witness, he may be asked whether he is not now engaged in a bitter controversy with the plaintiff, and whether he does not entertain feelings of animosity and hostility toward him. —Blessing v. Hape, 8 Md. 31.

[mmm] (Md. 1887) In an action against county commissioners to recover damages for personal injuries caused by a defective highway, defendant, for the purpose of showing the bias of a witness who had testified as to the bad condition of the highway, asked him, on cross-examination, whether he was on "good terms" with the road supervisor in whose district the injuries alleged occurred, and whether there had not been a bitter controversy between him and the friends of the supervisor over the latter's appointment, and whether he did not entertain feelings of animosity towards the commissioners on account of such appointment. The question was excluded on the ground that the supervisor was not a party to the action. Held, that the question was proper to show animosity towards the commissioners, and as the commissioners could recover from the supervisor the amount recovered by plaintiff, the relation of the supervisor to the suit was such as made the whole question proper.— Somerset County Com'rs v. Minderlein, 67 Md. 566, 11 Atl. 57.

[n] (Mass. 1857) In an action against a husband for necessaries furnished to his wife while lawfully absent from his house, a son of the defendant, called as a witness by him, may be asked, on cross-examination, in order to impeach his testimony and show his interest, what was the consideration of a conveyance made to him by his father, and whether it was not fraudulent; and also if his father lived with him, and paid board to him.—Mayhew v. Thayer, 74 Mass. (8 Gray) 172.

[nn] (Mass. 1888) A witness having testified to certain facts tending to convict defendant of setting up and promoting a lottery, defendant's counsel asked him if one A. had not charged him with proposing, on a previous occasion, to swear falsely against defendant, but it did not appear that witness had acquiesced in the charge, or that any such had, in fact, been made. Held, that the question was properly excluded, though witness might have been asked about the fact with which he was supposed to have been charged, and A. might have been produced to contradict him if he could do so.—Commonwealth v. Sullivan, 146 Mass. 142, 15 N. E. 491.

[nnn] (Mass. 1891) On cross-examination of plaintiff in an action for damages from an artificial pond, a conveyance to her by a former owner of the right of action for damages prior to conveyance of title to plaintiff is incompetent to show bias.—Aldworth v. City of Lynn, 153 Mass. 53, 26 N. E. 229, 25 Am. St. Rep. 608, 10 L. R. A. 210.

[o] (Mich. 1860) It is competent for defendant on the trial of an indictment for causing a public nuisance in keeping up a milldam, to show by the cross-examination of witnesses for the prosecution that they have commenced civil suits for injury caused by the same dam, and then agreed together to suspend action in such suits, and get defendant indicted, and, in that way, procure the removal of the dam.—Crippen v. People, 8 Mich. 117.

[oo] (Mich. 1888) On cross-examination of a witness for the state, who admits having had trouble with defendant, it is not error to refuse the further inquiry whether he and defendant's mother were not also at variance about a business matter.—People v. Macard, 73 Mich. 15, 40 N. W. 784.

[ooo] (Mich. 1888) In trover for the value of certain horses seized under a void attachment and delivered to the debtor, but claimed by plaintiff as purchased from the latter, in order to ascertain plaintiff's bias or interest, and test his credibility, it is proper to inquire, on his cross-examination, as to whether he knew the attachment was issued when he bought the horses, and whether he had not aided the debtor in other suits with the attachment plaintiff by becoming his surety.—Mears v. Cornwall, 73 Mich. 78, 40 N. W. 931.

[p] (Minn. 1859) Upon cross-examination of a witness, actual bias or prejudice existing on his part against the party cross-examining, as threats, quarrels, etc., may be shown; but evidence showing that there might be grounds or reason for such prejudice is incompetent.—State v. Bilansky, 3 Minn. 246 (Gil. 169).

[pp] (Miss. 1894) For the purpose of showing bias, a witness for the state may be asked whether at a former term of court he was not prepared to mob defendant if he was then acquitted.—Gibson v. State, 16 South. 298.

[ppp] (Mo. 1888) In an action against a railroad company for injuries caused by its negligence, the conductor of the train charged with having caused the accident, in testifying for defendant, stated that it was his duty to, and that he did, give notice to plaintiff of the approach of the car. On cross-examination he was asked whether, if he failed to give the notice, he would be discharged. Held, that the question was proper for the purpose of affecting the credibility of the witness by showing his interest in testifying to the giving of notice, and thus exonerating himself.—Gessley v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 32 Mo. App. 413.

[q] (Mo. 1893) A witness for defendant may be asked on cross-examination if she did not offer the prosecuting witness money if he would go away and not testify against defendant.—State v. Hack, 118 Mo. 92, 23 S. W. 1089.

[qq] (N. J. 1874) A party offering himself as a witness may properly be asked whether he has made any agreement to share with any one what he may recover in the suit.—Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Dailey, 37 N. J. Law (8 Vroom) 526.

[qqq] (N. Y. 1849) A witness called to prove a plaintiff's demand may be examined as to a transfer by him to plaintiff of the business out of which the demand arose, to show that it was a sham and fraudulent, and that witness was interested in the demand, so that the jury might regard it in estimating the weight of his evidence.—Hoyt v. Lynch, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 328.

[r] (N. Y. 1855) A witness for the prosecution, in a trial for a riot, may be compelled to state, on cross-examination, whether he is a member of a secret society organized to repress a sect to which defendant belongs.—People v. Christie, 2 Abb. Prac. 256, 2 Parker, Cr. R. 579.

[rr] (N. Y. 1855) A witness may be cross-examined as to whether he belongs to a secret society—e. g., the order of United Americans—with a view to show that the principles and objects of such society are such that his testimony is liable to suspicion of unfairness.—People v. Christie, 2 Abb. Prac. 256.

[rrr] (N. Y. 1878) In an action for injuries caused by defendant's negligence, where one of plaintiff's attorneys is a witness and gives material testimony and testifies that his compensation depends in some degree on the result of the action, it is not error not to allow him to be asked "to what extent."—King v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 72 N. Y. 607.

[s] (N. Y. 1880) A cross-question to a witness for the accused, whether he (the witness) had been indicted for an assault and battery committed on that day, held to be competent to show bias.—Ryan v. People, 79 N. Y. 593, affirming (1879) 19 Hun, 188.

[ss] (N. Y. 1889) In an action against an indorser of a note, it was proper to show, on cross-examination of defendant, that the maker of the note had failed in business. The jury had a right to take into consideration the extent of the interest of the witness, and such fact would show that, in the event of defeat, the witness would have to pay the whole judgment without any prospect of reimbursement from the maker.—Cady v. Bradshaw, 116 N. Y. 188, 22 N. E. 371, 5 L. R. A. 557.

[sss] (N. Y. 1890) It is error to refuse to allow a question on cross-examination whether the plaintiff is the sole owner of a claim in suit, as that fact might affect his credibility.—Strawbridge v. Vandenburgh, 57 Hun, 589, 10 N. Y. Supp. 610.

[t] (N. Y. 1891) Where defendant in a proceeding to appoint a committee for an alleged lunatic sought by cross-examination of a witness to show that he had fraudulently procured admission to her house, against the will of those present, and in the absence of her physician, for the purpose of obtaining evidence of her state of mind, it was error to exclude such testimony, the defendant having a right to show by cross-examination of a witness conduct on his part tending to show unfriendliness and want of impartiality on his part to the defendant.—In re Mason, 60 Hun, 46, 14 N. Y. Supp. 434.

[tt] (N. Y. 1892) Where a witness, on being cross-examined as to his interest in a case, testifies that he has none, it is not error to refuse further examination as to whether, in the event of plaintiff's recovery, he does not expect repayment of advances made by him for funeral expenses of plaintiff's intestate.—Lustig v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co., 65 Hun, 547, 20 N. Y. Supp. 477.

[ttt] (N. Y. 1892) Evidence of a witness for defendant that he offered plaintiff money to settle was material, on the cross-examination of such witness, to show his relation to the controversy.—Cambeis v. Third Ave. R. Co. (Com. Pl.) 1 Misc. Rep. 158, 20 N. Y. Supp. 633.

[u] (N. Y. 1893) Where defendant's counsel, in a trial for murder, testifies as a witness, it is competent, as affecting his credibility, to show that he had made a wager on the result of the trial, and therefore was interested in such result.—People v. Parker, 137 N. Y. 535, 32 N. E. 1013.

[uu] (N. Y. 1895) In an action against a marshal for seizure of goods under execution against plaintiff's vendor, a witness who testified that he saw the execution debtor in possession of the goods as apparent owner after the alleged transfer may be asked, for the purpose of showing a pecuniary interest in the result of the action, whether he had indemnified the marshal, and if he knew that, if the marshal had to pay, he (witness) would be held responsible.—Goodman v. Myers (Com. Pl.) 11 Misc. Rep. 360, 32 N. Y. Supp. 239.

[uuu] (N. C. 1869) Where, in order to show the disposition of a witness toward the accused, he was asked whether the accused had not sworn against him for the same offense before the coroner's inquest, to which he replied that he did not hear the witness examined but had heard that the accused was a witness and swore against him, it was held to be competent.—State v. Harston, 63 N. C. 294.

[v] (N. C. 1890) A witness for the state testified, on cross-examination, that her feelings towards the defendants were not friendly, and was then asked if there was not a bitter feud between her family and that of defendants. Held, that the question was properly excluded.—State v. Berrier, 107 N. C. 856, 12 S. E. 251.

[vv] (N. C. 1896) Where a witness for the state admitted that he was a relative of, and friendly to, deceased, it is not reversible error to refuse to permit him to be asked, to show his bias against defendant, as to whether he had not been drunk with deceased many times.—State v. Mace, 118 N. C. 1244, 24 S. E. 798.

[vvv] (Or. 1889) In a criminal case the district attorney can cross-examine a witness for defendant as to anything that would show his interest in the result of the trial, and anything he did in aid of defendant about the trial, as affecting his credibility.—State v. Olds, 18 Or. 440, 22 Pac. 940.

[w] (Pa. 1881) A witness who testified on behalf of plaintiff whose land was taken by defendant company for railroad purposes will not be compelled to state whether he had not been a witness in a number of cases in which defendant company was interested in the matter of railroad damages.—Pennsylvania & N. Y. Canal & R. Co. v. Roberts, 2 Walk. 432.

[ww] (Pa. 1894) Defendant's witness may, for the purpose of affecting his credibility, be asked if he offered plaintiff's witness money to go away and not testify, though he may not be asked what defendant said or did in this connection.—Fitzpatrick v. Riley, 163 Pa. 65, 29 Atl. 783.

[www] (S. C. 1895) The state may ask a witness who has testified if she is the wife of defendant.—State v. Petsch, 43 S. C. 132, 20 S. E. 993.

[x] (Tex. 1878) On a trial for murder, upon the cross-examination of the prosecuting witness, the defendant, for the purpose of showing the animus of the witness, sought to elicit that the witness had reliable information of the whereabouts of defendant for several years before he had the defendant brought back upon requisition, which was not done until several witnesses upon whom the defendant relied for his defense were dead. Held, that this testimony was properly excluded as immaterial.—Carlson v. State, 5 Tex. App. 194.

[xx] (Tex. 1881) The rule allowing a cross-examination to develop anything that may affect the credit of a witness, applied on a trial of D. for theft, whereof the theory was that he had been assisted by W. Held, that W.'s wife, the principal witness, might be compelled to answer whether, after date of the alleged offense, she had not had a difficulty with both D. and W., and what was the cause and nature of the difficulty.—Daffin v. State, 11 Tex. App. 76.

[xxx] (Tex. 1884) The state may, as tending to show bias, elicit from witnesses on cross-examination the fact that they testified before the grand jury in the same case at the instance of defendant without being subpœnaed.—Ashlock v. State, 16 Tex. App. 13.

[y] (Vt. 1886) Although it is proper for a party to show the hostility of an opposing witness, he will not be allowed to go into the details of such hostility.—Stone v. Tupper, 58 Vt. 400, 5 Atl. 387.

[yy] (Va. 1882) A witness may be asked if he has any ill feeling toward the prisoner, but evidence of collateral facts—such as the pendency of a suit between them—is inadmissible.—Langhorne v. Commonwealth, 76 Va. 1012.

[yyy] (W. Va. 1881) An attorney testifying on behalf of his client may be questioned as to the amount of his fee to show his interest in the suit, and as affecting his credibility.—Moats v. Rymer, 18 W. Va. 642.

[z] (Wis. 1856) On the cross-examination of a witness, anything which shows his friendship or enmity to either of the parties to the suit, or that he is in a position to be tempted to swear falsely, is commonly a proper subject of inquiry.—Kellogg v. Nelson, 5 Wis. 125.

[zz] (Wis. 1856) On the cross-examination of a witness, the counsel may ask him if he (the witness) ever had made a wager that one of the parties would recover in the suit.—Kellogg v. Nelson, 5 Wis. 125.

[zzz] (Wis. 1881) The court permitted defendant city, in an action for personal injuries from a defective sidewalk, on cross-examination of plaintiff, to show that she had had some difficulty with the city about a sidewalk tax, but refused to allow further cross-examination as to the particulars of such difficulty. Held no abuse of discretion.—Luck v. City of Ripon, 52 Wis. 196, 8 N. W. 815.

§ 1194. —— Statements or declarations.

[a] (U. S. 1882) Where a witness is asked on cross-examination if he had not stated, in talking about the matter, that he wanted plaintiffs to recover because he would then get his pay, an objection because of the failure to specify time and place was properly sustained.—Standard Oil Co. v. Van Etten, 107 U. S. 325, 1 Sup. Ct. 178, 27 L. Ed. 319.

[b] (Ala. 1857) In an action on a written warranty of the soundness of a slave, the defendant introduced as a witness the auctioneer by whom the sale was made, who was asked, on cross-examination, if he had not been asked at the time of the sale whether this slave was sound; and he answered that the question was asked, and his reply was, "I believe she is sound; she is sound so far as I know." Held, that the evidence was admissible, on cross-examination, as tending to show that the witness, in making the sale, had somewhat connected himself with the question of the soundness of the slave.—Stoudenmeier v. Williamson, 29 Ala. 558.

[c] (Ala. 1866) A witness introduced by the plaintiff may be asked on cross-examination whether he has not declared an enmity to defendant.—Bullard v. Lambert, 40 Ala. 204.

[d] (Ala. 1877) Though a witness in a criminal case admits hostility to or bias against defendant, the latter has a right on cross-examination to inquire as to particular declarations of hostility by the witness, that the jury may determine its extent and malignity; and where, in such case, the proper predicate has been laid, it is error to refuse to permit defendant to ask a witness on cross-examination, if he had not stated that he would give a certain sum of money to have defendant killed.—Fincher v. State, 58 Ala. 215.

[e] (Ala. 1882) A witness for the state may be asked on cross-examination whether he had not said a short time before the trial that he would give $1,000 to send defendant to the penitentiary.—Yarbrough v. State, 71 Ala. 376.

[f] (Ark. 1852) A witness may be cross-examined as to any particular acts or expression in reference to the accused from which the jury may infer unfriendly feeling or prejudice.—Cornelius v. State, 12 Ark. (7 Eng.) 782.

[g] (Ark. 1854) The question to a witness for the prosecution, on cross-examination, "whether the witness had stated to A., B., or C. that he was coming to Washington to see the prisoner hung," should not be rejected as an improper one.—Bixby v. State, 15 Ark. 395.

[h] (Cal. 1884) To show prejudice, a witness may be asked whether he had not said that defendant ought to have been hung.—People v. Wasson, 65 Cal. 538, 4 Pac. 555.

[i] (Cal. 1887) On the trial of an indictment for murder, where the theory of the defense is that there had been a controversy between two societies called the "Bo Sin Sear Society" and the "Guy Sin Sear Society," deceased and a prosecuting witness belonging to the former, and the defendant to the latter; that the members of the former society were specially hostile to the defendant; that the witness and deceased, as representatives of the former society, had met defendant and others, as representatives of the latter society, to settle the controversy; and that at the meeting the witness and deceased threatened the life of defendant,—it is proper, on cross-examination of such witness, and for the purpose of showing his hostility, to ask questions tending to prove such state of facts and threats, although such evidence may tend to prove a fact material to the defense.—People v. Lee Chuck, 74 Cal. 30, 15 Pac. 322.

[j] (Conn. 1793) Evidence that a witness had said that he would swear to anything is admissible to lessen his credit.—Newhal v. Wadhams, 1 Root, 504.

[k] (Fla. 1891) In an action for libel in publishing certain defamatory statements respecting the plaintiff on the information of her husband, it was proper on cross-examination of such husband to show that a short time before leaving his wife he stated his purpose to abandon her, and gave certain reasons therefor, for the purpose of showing the animus of the witness toward his wife, against whom he had testified.—Eldridge v. State, 27 Fla. 162, 9 South. 448.

[l] (Ill. 1878) It is not error, on the cross-examination of a witness on a murder trial, to exclude questions as to conversations held before the day of the homicide concerning the subject-matter of the dispute which terminated in the killing, and tending to show that the witness had bad feelings toward the accused, such feelings, if they existed, being the subject of direct proof.—Davison v. People, 90 Ill. 221.

[m] (Ill. 1883) A witness who admits, on cross-examination, an unfriendly feeling for one against whom he testifies, may be asked if he has not made certain remarks, to which his attention is particularly called, which show a bitter and revengeful feeling toward such party.—Phenix v. Castner, 108 Ill. 207.

[n] (Ind. 1892) It is proper for defendant to ask a witness for plaintiff, on cross-examination, a question as to a certain declaration made by him after a former trial, showing his hostility to defendant.—Robertson v. McPherson, 4 Ind. App. 595, 31 N. E. 478.

[o] (Ind. 1893) It is proper to show that a witness for the prosecution had said to certain persons who spoke of going on defendant's bail bond that he would not have any sympathy for them if they lost the whole amount for which they became bound thereby.—Pettit v. State, 135 Ind. 393, 34 N. E. 1118.

[p] (Iowa, 1860) A witness may be cross-examined as to prior conversations with third persons, which tend to show ill will on his part toward the party against whom he is testifying, both for the purpose of, in this manner, affecting his credibility, and also of laying the foundation for the contradiction of his testimony.—Powell v. Martin, 10 Iowa, 568.

[q] (Kan. 1873) It is incompetent to ask a witness, on cross-examination, a question concerning a conversation of his with some other person, where the conversation would not tend to show any bias or prejudice on the part of the witness.—Da Lee v. Blackburn, 11 Kan. 190.

[r] (Mass. 1875) In an action against a town for personal injuries resulting from a defect in a highway, a witness introduced by defendant admitted on cross-examination that he had said that he would spend his last dollar to beat plaintiff. Held, that it was competent for the defendant to ask him his reasons for so saying.—Brooks v. Inhabitants of Acton, 117 Mass. 204.

[s] (Minn. 1869) A witness may be asked, upon cross-examination, if he has not expressed feelings of hostility towards the party against whom he was called, and the particulars of such hostility, for the purpose of ascertaining its extent and nature.—State v. Dee, 14 Minn. 35 (Gil. 27).

[t] (Mo. 1890) It is competent on cross-examination in a criminal trial to introduce a letter written by witness to defendant after the offense, tending to show his sympathy and partisanship with him, with a view of affecting the witness' credibility, especially when the letter itself contains no statement of fact prejudicial to defendant's case.—State v. Turlington, 102 Mo. 642, 15 S. W. 141.

[u] (Mont. 1890) Defendant's counsel, for the purpose of showing prejudice on the part of a state's witness, deceased's widow, against defendant, asked her if she had not said she would commit suicide if defendant was acquitted. Held properly excluded, as it was immaterial whether or not she made the statement, especially as she had just admitted that she had ill feeling towards defendant.—State v. Jackson, 9 Mont. 508, 24 Pac. 213.

[v] (N. H. 1881) A witness may, to show his feeling toward the party against whom he is testifying, be asked, on cross-examination, whether he had not threatened to have the party arrested.—Watson v. Twombly, 60 N. H. 491.

[w] (N. Y. 1892) In an action against a street railroad for injuries sustained in being struck by a car, where the driver of another car, who saw the accident, was called for the purpose of showing that plaintiff was guilty of negligence, it was proper, for the purpose of affecting his credibility, to inquire, on cross-examination, as to whether he had not stated that the railroad would blacklist him if he gave his testimony according to the facts.—Pyne v. Broadway & Seventh Ave. R. Co. (Com. Pl.) 19 N. Y. Supp. 217, judgment affirmed (1893) 138 N. Y. 627, 33 N. E. 1083.

[x] (S. C. 1891) On a trial for murder it is competent on cross-examination of a witness for the defense, for the purpose of showing bias of mind, to ask whether he did not say to a person named that the deceased could be better spared than any other man in the community.—State v. Merriman, 34 S. C. 16, 12 S. E. 619.

[y] (Tex. 1881) In cross-examining A., state's witness against B., held, that A. might properly be asked if he had not told B. that he had been his friend, but was then his enemy, and intended to have him prosecuted on the charge of theft involved in the pending trial.—Sager v. State, 11 Tex. App. 110.

[a] (U. S. 1896) Where witnesses for the prosecution have testified upon cross-examination by defendants that they, at their own expense, employed an attorney to assist in the prosecution, it is proper to exclude a further question asked of them, as to how much they paid such assistant.—Ball v. United States, 163 U. S. 662, 16 Sup. Ct. 1192, 41 L. Ed. 300.

[b] (Cal. 1864) Where the district attorney is assisted by other counsel in a criminal case, the defendant's counsel may ask the prosecuting witness whether he employed such counsel.—People v. Blackwell, 27 Cal. 65.

[c] (Cal. 1891) In an action for damages, and to restrain an alleged wrongful and excessive diversion of water from a stream, where the riparian rights had been conveyed to the M. Water Company, and an officer of the M. Valley Water Company testifies that the company is paying the expense of the litigation, the witness can be asked on cross-examination, "Why does the company pay the expense of this litigation?" as it is proper to show the witness' interest, though it does not appear that the last-named company is identical with or the successor of the other.—Gould v. Stafford, 91 Cal. 146, 27 Pac. 543.

[d] (Cal. 1893) A question to the prosecuting witness as to whether he employed the attorney who was assisting the district attorney in the prosecution was competent, as tending to show whether the witness was interested in the proceedings to the prejudice of defendant.—People v. Gillis, 97 Cal. 542, 32 Pac. 586.

[e] (Ga. 1892) Where, of three persons charged with the same offense, one is on trial, the state's counsel may, on cross-examination, ask a witness as to his friendly relations with the other two, and whether he has not lent money to another person, the father of one of these two and the grandfather of the other, to aid in the defense of the person who is on trial.—Futch v. State, 90 Ga. 472, 16 S. E. 102.

[f] (Ill. 1893) In an action under the dram shop act by a widow to recover for the death of her husband, the president of the Liquor Dealers' Association, a witness for defendant, was properly cross-examined as to his interest in the suit, and, where he testified that the association contributed to the defense, and would have to pay any judgment that might be recovered, the fact that he was mistaken, and that the association would not have to pay the judgment, does not affect the propriety of the cross-examination.—Marschall v. Laughran, 47 Ill. App. 29.

[g] (Ind. 1842) On the trial of an indictment for murder, the defendant was permitted to prove, by the son of the deceased, who had been sworn for the state, that he, the witness, and the widow of the deceased, who had also been examined for the state, had employed counsel to assist the prosecuting attorney in the cause, but was not permitted to prove that the fee to be given for such assistance was on condition of a conviction. Held, that there was no error in this part of the case.—Beauchamp v. State, 6 Blackf. 299.

[h] (Mich. 1880) Cross-examination of a witness as to his contribution to the expenses of the suit, or as to his interest in the subject-matter, is proper for the purpose of affecting his credibility.—Howard v. Patrick, 43 Mich. 121, 5 N. W. 84.

[i] (Mo. 1890) It is wrong not to allow a witness called as to the character of another to be cross-examined as to his having given money to aid in the prosecution; but, several others having testified that it was bad, and no effort being made to sustain it, the error does not require a reversal.—State v. Elkins, 101 Mo. 344, 14 S. W. 116.

[j] (Tex. 1894) In a murder case, where deceased's wife is a witness for defendant, the state may show by cross-examination that she has agreed to pay the fees of defendant's attorney, though she has admitted that she wanted to see defendant acquitted.—Magruder v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 214, 33 S. W. 233.

[k] (W. Va. 1880) A prosecuting witness may be asked, on cross-examination, if he has employed counsel to aid the prosecution.—State v. Conkle, 16 W. Va. 736.

§ 1196. —— Compensation or reward for testimony.

As affecting credibility, in general, see ante, § 1185.

[a] (U. S. 1877) The fact that an expert requires payment for his opinions as such should not discredit him before the jury, as he is not bound to come into court and testify for ordinary witness fees.—Harvey v. Evansville, Etc., Steam Packet Co., Fed. Cas. No. 6,179 [8 Biss. 99].

[b] (Cal. 1883) On a trial for burglary, a witness, charged with the same offense in a separate information, may be asked on cross-examination whether he expects leniency in his own case in consequence of his becoming a witness for the prosecution.—People v. Langtree, 64 Cal. 256, 30 Pac. 813.

[c] (Cal. 1895) To discredit a witness for the prosecution, it may be shown that criminal charges are pending against him, as tending to show a desire to seek favor at the hands of the prosecution, by aiding in the conviction of the defendant.—People v. Dillwood, 39 Pac. 438.

[d] (Iowa, 1886) Where a witness, brought from without the state to testify for the state in a liquor case, testifies that there was no arrangement to pay him more than his legal fees, he may not be questioned, for the purpose of impairing his credibility, concerning inducements held out to him by citizens.—State v. Reinhartz, 69 Iowa, 224, 28 N. W. 566.

[e] (Iowa, 1892) On a trial for arson, a witness testified that he was employed to bring the guilty parties to justice, and as to certain admissions made by defendants on false representations made by him. Witness was asked by defendants' counsel how much salary he was to receive for his services as detective; if he had not stated that his compensation depended on his success in convicting defendants; and also if he had not stated that he was to receive 40 acres of land and $400 if they were convicted. Held proper cross-examination to impeach the witness.—State v. Carroll, 85 Iowa, 1, 51 N. W. 1159.

[f] (Mass. 1839) On a trial of an indictment, the defendant has a right to ask a witness whether any person, on behalf of the government, has made to the witness any offer of reward, in relation to the testimony which he should give in a certain class of cases, comprehending the case on trial.—Commonwealth v. Sacket, 39 Mass. (22 Pick.) 394.

[g] (Mich. 1884) An expert witness may be cross-examined as to what compensation he receives for his attendance as such.—Alford v. Vincent, 53 Mich. 555, 19 N. W. 182.

[h] (N. H. 1866) The government in a criminal prosecution may ask a witness whether the defendant has made to the witness any offer of reward in relation to the testimony he should give in a certain class of cases, comprehending the case on trial.—State v. Staples, 47 N. H. 113, 90 Am. Dec. 565.

[i] (Ohio, 1883) One jointly indicted with defendant, who testifies for the state contrary to his former statements, may be shown by defendant, on cross-examination, to have been offered money to so testify, although by one having no authority.—Tullis v. State, 39 Ohio St. 200.

[j] (Tex. 1881) The state having introduced P., a confessed thief and accomplice of H. in the theft, held, that H. might prove by P. that he was indicted for the same offense, and, by agreement with the county attorney to dismiss the prosecution as to him, had turned state's witness.—Hinds v. State, 11 Tex. App. 238.

[k] (Vt. 1891) A question asked plaintiff's witness whether he did not come to the trial on a pass is properly excluded where no offer is made to connect plaintiff with the furnishing of the pass.—Hobart v. Young, 63 Vt. 300, 21 Atl. 612, 12 L. R. A. 693.

§ 1197. Cross-examination of police officers and detectives.

Credibility, in general, see ante, § 1185.

[a] (Mich. 1894) A witness testified that he was employed to detect violations of the local option law, and had made a number of complaints, and been a witness in a number of cases. Held, that it was error not to permit defendants to show on cross-examination that A., another witness for the people, was employed for the same purpose; that the meetings between A. and the witness at various places were not accidental; that both had testified in other cases; and that A. had received pay for taking witness to different places.—People v. Rice, 103 Mich. 350, 61 N. W. 540.

[b] (Minn. 1879) On a prosecution for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, the only testimony to the fact of the sale was that of a private detective. Held, that it was error to exclude the question on cross-examination whether the witness had received any money for acting as detective against the liquor sellers, and whether he expected to receive any.—State v. Tosney, 26 Minn. 262, 3 N. W. 345.

[c] (N. Y. 1891) In an action by a railroad conductor for wages due, defendant interposed as a defense that plaintiff had failed to account for fares collected, and introduced detectives as witnesses, one of whom stated on cross-examination that he did not buy a ticket because he got on for the purpose of paying a fare. Held, that it was proper to ask such witness on further cross-examination whether he did so for the purpose of reporting that he "had accomplished something."—Francis v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co., 59 Hun, 620, 12 N. Y. Supp. 939.

§ 1198. Conclusiveness of answers on cross-examination.

[a] (Ala. 1858) Where a witness for the prosecution denies on cross-examination any hostility to the plaintiff, such hostility may be established by proof of his previous acts and declarations.—McHugh v. State, 31 Ala. 317.

[b] (Ala. 1866) Where a witness introduced by the plaintiff denied on cross-examination that he has declared an enmity to the defendant, evidence of such declaration is admissible.—Bullard v. Lambert, 40 Ala. 204.

[c] (Ark. 1883) Where a material witness, who was asked on cross-examination if he had expressed to A. any hostility toward defendant, replied that he was on good terms with defendant, and they had always been friends, held, that exclusion of A.'s testimony offered by defendant to show that witness had told A. that he would swear defendant's life away, if necessary, was error.—Frazier v. State, 42 Ark. 70.

[d] (Cal. 1890) On cross-examination of defendant's witness, he was asked if he had not made statements to the effect that he was friendly to defendant, and would say nothing to hurt him; and on his denying this a witness was called who testified to such statements. Held, that if the testimony of defendant's witness was material and favorable to him, the impeaching testimony was properly admitted, and if the former testimony was immaterial defendant could not have been injured by the latter.—People v. Murray, 85 Cal. 350, 24 Pac. 666.

[e] (Conn. 1828) Where a witness is asked on cross-examination whether he has not had a controversy with the party against whom he testifies, and whether he has not threatened to be revenged on him, and the witness answers in the negative, he may be contradicted by other proof.—Atwood v. Welton, 7 Conn. 66.

[f] (Conn. 1874) Where a party asked a witness on cross-examination if there has not been a quarrel between him and the party against whom he testifies, he does not make the witness his own, so as to preclude him from contradicting him.—Beardsley v. Wildman, 41 Conn. 515.

[g] (Ill. 1883) Where a witness, who admits on cross-examination an unfriendly feeling for the party against whom he testifies, denies having made certain remarks to which his attention is particularly called, he may be contradicted by the persons to whom the remarks were made.—Phenix v. Castner, 108 Ill. 207.

[h] (Ill. 1892) The hostility of a witness to the party against whom he testifies may always be shown; and where, on cross-examination, he denies certain acts or words tending to show such hostility, he may be contradicted by other witnesses.—John Morris Co. v. Burgess, 44 Ill. App. 27.

[i] (Ind. 1878) Where, on cross-examination, a witness for the government denied having made a certain statement indicating hostility toward the defendant, it was held that he might be contradicted.—Scott v. State, 64 Ind. 400.

[j] (Ind. 1889) When, on cross-examination in a criminal prosecution, a witness has denied making any attempt to procure witnesses against accused, testimony may be introduced by accused to contradict his denial.—Skinner v. State, 120 Ind. 127, 22 N. E. 115.

[k] (Ind. 1892) Defendant, having cross-examined a witness for the plaintiff as to certain declarations made by him after a former trial showing hostility to defendant, may follow up such cross-examination by evidence of such declaration by a witness in whose presence it was made.—Robertson v. McPherson, 4 Ind. App. 595, 31 N. E. 478.

[l] (Ky. 1855) Where a witness for the prosecution on a trial for murder testified that he was not hostile to defendant, and denied having made certain statements showing that his feelings were hostile, evidence that he made such statements and of facts showing that his feelings were hostile to the defendant are admissible to impeach him.—Cornelius v. Commonwealth, 54 Ky. (15 B. Mon.) 539.

[m] (Mass. 1849) A witness having been asked whether he was not biased against the defendant, from the defendant's having testified against him in another suit to which the witness was a party, and whether he had not made use of threats of injury against him in that suit, and having denied any such bias or threats, it was held that evidence that the witness had offered to bribe the defendant not to testify in that suit was irrelevant and inadmissible.—Cooley v. Norton, 58 Mass. (4 Cush.) 93.

[n] (Mass. 1857) A witness testified on cross-examination that he had never expressed any hostile feelings toward the defendant. The defendant, for the purpose of contradicting him, offered evidence that the witness, in conversation with a third person about a note which had just been signed by the witness and then by the defendant, said that the defendant had never paid him for certain services, and that he was worth nothing himself, and had taken this course to get money out of the defendant. Held, that the exclusion of this evidence was no ground of exception.—Starks v. Sikes, 74 Mass. (8 Gray) 609, 69 Am. Dec. 270.

[o] (Mass. 1858) In an action of tort to recover damages for injuries, defendant testified in his own favor and was asked on cross-examination if he ever told one of the plaintiffs that if he prosecuted the suit the defendant would prove as bad a fellow as report said he was. Defendant testified that he never said so, and plaintiff was allowed to testify in contradiction that he did tell him so. Held, that the testimony introduced by plaintiff in reply was competent not for the mere purpose of contradiction, but to show the defendant's temper and disposition toward that plaintiff who had testified. — Brewer v. Crosby, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 29.

[oo] (Mass. 1886) Where a witness for the government, in a prosecution for illegal sale of liquor, denied that she had been forbidden by defendant to come to his house, and denied that she had any ill will toward him, evidence that she was at one time ordered out of his yard was incompetent.—Commonwealth v. Fitzpatrick, 140 Mass. 455, 5 N. E. 272.

[p] (Mich. 1871) Where a witness, on cross-examination, has denied having had conversations with various persons concerning her expectation of receiving some profit out of the trial, her interest is relevant, and it may be shown by other witnesses that she did make the statements attributed to her.—Geary v. People, 22 Mich. 220.

[pp] (Mich. 1871) When a witness, on cross-examination, denies having any interest in the result of the trial, it is competent to show that such statements are actually false.—Geary v. People, 22 Mich. 220.

[q] (Mich. 1892) Where, with a view of showing the bias or interest of a witness, he was asked on cross-examination whether he made a certain statement in relation to the case at a specified time, and denied making the statement, it was proper to prove on rebuttal that he did make the statement. — Swift Electric Light Co. v. Grant, 90 Mich. 469, 51 N. W. 539.

[qq] (Miss. 1859) Where a witness denies having made a statement in relation to the subject-matter of the issue, and about which he may be legally examined for the purpose of showing his bias or feeling, then, for the purpose of discrediting him, other testimony may be introduced to contradict his answer.—Newcomb v. State, 37 Miss. 383.

[r] (Miss. 1887) In an action against a railroad company for damages for delay in delivering certain cattle, where the train conductor, as witness on cross-examination, has denied that he said before the trial that he would tell the best story possible for his employers, in order to keep his job, it is not error to allow the making of such statement to be proved by another witness, the purpose being to show motive or bias. The rule that a witness cannot be contradicted as to immaterial matter elicited on cross-examination does not apply.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Haynes, 64 Miss. 604, 1 South. 765.

[rr] (N. H. 1852) The feelings and temper of a witness toward a party are proper subjects of inquiry, and if he denies any hostility, he may be contradicted by other witnesses.—Folsom v. Brawn, 25 N. H. (5 Fost.) 114; Martin v. Farnham, Id. 195.

[s] (N. H. 1859) The rule that answers to immaterial questions cannot be contradicted does not apply to questions respecting the state of feeling of the witness toward the party.—Combs v. Winchester, 39 N. H. 13, 75 Am. Dec. 203.

[ss] (N. Y. 1852) It is proper to ask a witness, on cross-examination, whether he had made certain remarks indicative of hostility to the opposite party; and if he denies making them, they may be proved.—Newton v. Harris, 6 N. Y. (2 Seld.) 345.

[t] (N. Y. 1888) In an action for personal injuries a witness for defendant was asked, on cross-examination, "Did you not say to J. that day after the accident that you had seen the accident, and that you were going to work a position out of it for yourself?" Also, "Did you not say that the defendants were going to appoint you a conductor?" Also, "Did you show a piece of paper to J., and say it was a check for $500, payable after the trial?" Also, "Didn't you say to him that he had better take you right to M. [plaintiff]; that you had seen the accident, and could be of some good to him?" Plaintiff then called J. and another to contradict the witness' answers to the questions. Held, that the admission of such latter evidence was reversible error, as raising a collateral issue, and as being incompetent to show the hostility of the witness. — McCallan v. Brooklyn City R. Co., 48 Hun, 340, 1 N. Y. Supp. 289.

[tt] (N. Y. 1892) On the trial of an action by one sister against another, administratrix of their deceased mother, to recover decedent's board, a third sister, witness for plaintiff, was asked if she had not advised plaintiff "to bring this suit, even if it was necessary to swallow up the whole estate in litigation," to which witness replied in the negative. Held, that the evidence sought to be elicited by such question went to the particular credit of the witness in that action, evincing hostility to defendant, and not to her general reputation for veracity, and therefore that defendant was not bound by her answer, and that the court erred in excluding evidence offered by defendant to contradict the witness.—Effray v. Masson, 28 Abb. N. C. 207, 18 N. Y. Supp. 353, reversing judgment (1891) 22 Civ. Proc. R. 59, 18 N. Y. Supp. 350.

[u] (N. C. 1842) A witness on the part of the state, on his cross-examination, was asked whether the prosecutor had not paid him for coming from another state to be a witness, and he answered that he had not. Held, that it was not competent for the defendant to introduce witnesses to prove his declaration that he had been so paid.—State v. Patterson, 24 N. C. 346, 38 Am. Dec. 699.

[uu] (N. C. 1886) The answer of a witness, who is also a party to the action, to a question put with a view to disparage him by showing his interest in or relation to the controversy, cannot be contradicted, it being not only collateral, but irrelevant.—Kramer v. Thomson-Houston Electric Light Co., 95 N. C. 277.

[v] (Pa. 1864) Where, on a trial for murder, a witness was asked on cross-examination whether he had not made certain threats against the murdered man, which he denied, evidence that he had made such threats was held to be admissible, as having a direct bearing to show the motives operating upon his mind when testifying.—Gaines v. Commonwealth, 50 Pa. (14 Wright) 319.

[vv] (Pa. 1886) In a criminal prosecution where a witness called for the defense is asked if she did not say the prosecution would fail because defendant had money, and she denies it, her answer is not conclusive, and evidence may be offered to show that she did say it.—Commonwealth v. Burk, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 12.

[vvv] (Pa. 1886) On the trial of a defendant charged with fornication and bastardy, and also with adultery, it was not error to permit the commonwealth to ask the female with whom the alleged offenses were committed if defendant's wife told her she would fail in the prosecution because defendant and his wife had money, and she had none, as defendant's wife, who was sworn as a witness for the defense, had been asked the same question, and she denied having said it, and the question, which was material, was asked her for the purpose of showing the bias of the witness, and her interest in the cause.—Commonwealth v. Burk, 3 Lanc. Law Rev. 138.

[w] (Tex. 1877) Where a witness for the state, who had had trouble with defendant, had testified on cross-examination that he bore no ill will toward defendant, evidence was not admissible that the witness was a man of revengeful and relentless disposition.—Gay v. State, 2 Tex. App. 127.

[ww] (Tex. 1886) The animus—the motive or the ill will—of a prosecuting witness is never a collateral or irrelevant question in a criminal case; and it is error to reject testimony tending to show such bias, on the ground that the defense, by asking such witness on cross-examination, "Are you not unfriendly to the defendant?" had made the witness its own witness, and was bound by his answer in the negative.—Rosborough v. State, 21 Tex. App. 672, 1 S. W. 459.

[x] (Tex. 1890) Where, on cross-examination, a witness for defendant denied that he had at a certain time and place said that he would be willing to swear that white was black and black was white in order to defeat plaintiff's claim, plaintiff was properly allowed to prove by other witnesses that he had made that statement.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Brown, 78 Tex. 397, 14 S. W. 1034.

[xx] (Tex. 1890) On indictment for murder, defendant asked a witness for the state whether he and deceased were not members of the same order, to which he replied that he was not. The nature of the order was not shown. Held, that the evidence was collateral, and it was not competent to impeach the witness in regard to it.—Surrell v. State, 29 Tex. App. 321, 15 S. W. 816.

[y] (Tex. 1895) Where a witness denied that he had held a conversation in which he admitted that he had been bribed to testify, it was proper to permit the party with whom such conversation was alleged to have been held to testify that it had in fact taken place as detailed.—Texas & P. Coal Co. v. Lawson, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 491, 31 S. W. 843.

[yy] (Vt. 1869) A party may contradict a witness who has testified that there has been no difficulty between them. But it is impracticable for the supreme court by any general rule to fix a precise limit which should govern the admission of such evidence, and necessarily it must be left to a considerable extent to the discretion of the nisi prius court.—Ellsworth v. Potter, 41 Vt. 685.

[z] (Va. 1874) Where a witness for the state in a criminal case has denied having used, in the presence of a person whose name is not known, certain language showing a prejudice against the prisoner, the latter is entitled to prove that the witness used such language, although he cannot give the name of the person to whom it was used.—Little v. Commonwealth, 25 Grat. 921.

[zz] (Va. 1882) Where a witness denies any ill feeling toward the prisoner, he may be contradicted, his attention being first drawn to his acts or statements which are to be used in contradicting him.—Langhorne v. Commonwealth, 76 Va. 1012.

§ 1199. Re-examination.

[a] (Ala. 1853) A witness for the state, who, on cross-examination, testifies that he has taken an active part in the prosecution, and that he cherishes unfriendly feelings toward the prisoner, may be asked, on re-examination, whether he feels so unfriendly toward the prisoner as to wish to see an innocent man convicted.—Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44.

[b] (Ky. 1892) Where, in an action against a railroad company, a witness was asked by defendant on cross-examination if he did not then have a controversy with the company, and was not hostile to it, and on re-examination the court refused to allow the witness to state whether or not he had recovered a judgment for $12,500, defendant is not entitled to have the swearing of the jury set aside.—Kentucky Cent. Ry. Co. v. Smith, 93 Ky. 449, 20 S. W. 392, 18 L. R. A. 63.

[c] (La. 1881) A state's witness, upon a criminal trial, having, upon cross-examination, admitted that his feelings toward the defendant were unfriendly, cannot, upon re-examination, be questioned as to the reasons for his unfriendly feelings.—State v. Gregory, 33 La. Ann. 787.

[d] (La. 1887) In a criminal prosecution it is not competent for the district attorney to question a state witness as to the cause of his unfriendly feelings against the accused, which he has admitted on his cross-examination by the defense without objection. The inquiry cannot be pressed further than the existence of the unfriendly feelings.—State v. Jackson, 39 La. Ann. 910, 3 South. 59, affirming Same v. Gregory (1881) 33 La. Ann. 787.

[e] (Mich. 1893) Where the principal witness for the people testified on cross-examination that he had some trouble with defendant after the larceny, and that he would like to get even with him, it was not error to permit the witness, on redirect examination, to explain the nature of such trouble.—People v. Hanifan, 98 Mich. 32, 56 N. W. 1048.

[f] (Miss. 1887) Where, in order to discredit a witness, in an action against a carrier to recover damages for delay in delivering cattle as agreed, he is asked, on cross-examination, if he had not sued defendant for damages arising out of the same delay, it is proper, on redirect examination, to ask him if his suit had not been settled.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Haynes, 64 Miss. 604, 1 South. 765.

§ 1200. Laying foundation for impeaching evidence.

[a] (Ala. 1843) Evidence is not admissible to prove declarations made by a witness of his interest in the matter in controversy, unless he has been examined as to the declarations, and had an opportunity to admit, deny, or explain such declarations.—Weaver v. Traylor, 5 Ala. 564.

[b] (Cal. 1860) The rule that, where a witness is sought to be impeached by proof of contradictory statements alleged to have been made by him, the precise matter of such contradictions and the time and place of the contradictory statements must be brought to the witness' knowledge on cross-examination, applies equally to declarations or acts of hostility or ill feeling on the part of the witness.—Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 173.

[c] (Cal. 1884) A question to a witness, "Did you not state, in the month of September, in the presence of A. B. and C. D., on the way between town here and the race track, that you would go into court and swear anything at all that would injure the Thomases?" held sufficiently definite to lay the foundation for an impeachment.—People v. Turner, 65 Cal. 540, 4 Pac. 553.

[d] (Ind. 1887) On the trial of an indictment for arson, the uncle of, and witness for, the accused, was asked on cross-examination if he had not, two years before, at his own mill, said that the mill afterwards burned would do no harm in competition with his, and in two years would sell for old iron, and if he had not said at another time that the owners of the burned mill would be glad to sell it for old iron inside of two years; the witness answering these questions in the negative. Held, that contradictory testimony of the parties with whom the conversations were claimed to have been held was admissible to show his hostility to the owners of the property burned.—Ford v. State, 112 Ind. 373, 14 N. E. 241.

[e] (Iowa, 1859) Evidence to impeach a witness is not admissible where no foundation for the impeachment has been laid in the examination of the witness.—Stewart v. Chadwick, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 463.

[f] (Ky. 1885) It was error to allow a witness to testify that he had heard a witness for defendant say that if defendant could find a man who would testify to certain things "money would be no object to him"; no foundation having been laid for such evidence.—L. & N. R. Co. v. Ritter's Adm'r, 7 Ky. Law Rep. 96.

[g] (La. 1880) Where the object of testimony offered is to discredit the witness by proof of an attempt to fabricate testimony, the foundation for such impeaching testimony must be first laid by an examination of the witness sought to be impeached with reference to such improper conduct.—State v. Angelo, 32 La. Ann. 407.

[h] (Me. 1845) The prosecuting attorney was permitted to introduce testimony that a witness who had testified in favor of accused had declared that in a former case, when called by the same party, he had testified falsely, and that he would testify just as accused told him to. The witness had not been first asked whether he made such declarations. Held, that the declarations were properly received, as the practice does not require a previous examination.—State v. Blake, 25 Me. (12 Shep.) 350.

[i] (Me. 1867) Where on the issue of an alleged pauper's "need of relief" in an action by one town against another for supplies furnished, the defendant has introduced a witness who testifies contrary to witnesses offered by the plaintiff, the latter, without first interrogating such witness as to the subject-matter, may prove that when speaking of the action she had declared "she would do all she could to help the defendant; she'd be damned if she wouldn't."—Inhabitants of New Portland v. Inhabitants of Kingfield, 55 Me. 172.

[j] (Miss. 1859) Before introducing proof of the statements of a witness as showing his feelings toward the parties, by the testimony of others, it is competent and proper to ask the witness on cross-examination whether she did not make the declaration which the party intends to prove.—Newcomb v. State, 37 Miss. 383.

[k] (N. Y. 1892) The hostility of a witness toward a party against whom he testifies may be shown by independent testimony, without first examining the witness himself as to his hostility.—People v. Brooks, 131 N. Y. 321, 30 N. E. 189, affirming (1891) 61 Hun, 619, 15 N. Y. Supp. 362.

[l] (N. C. 1848) It is improper to prove the bias, prejudice, or improper interest of a witness, where he was not examined on that point, so that he and the party offering him might have an opportunity of explanation.—Edwards v. Sullivan, 30 N. C. 302.

[m] (N. C. 1887) A witness offered to testify that the prosecuting witness had "declared that he would do anything or say anything to put the accused 'behind yonder poles,'" pointing to the penitentiary. This testimony was offered to show the animus of the prosecuting witness toward defendant. Held, that the prosecuting witness should have been cross-examined as to acts and declarations hostile to defendant, before evidence could be given with a view to impeach him.—State v. Dickerson, 98 N. C. 708, 3 S. E. 687.

[n] (Or. 1888) To impeach a witness by showing hostile declarations, a foundation must be laid, as in case of impeachment, by showing contradictory statements by him.—State v. Stewart, 11 Or. 52, 238, 4 Pac. 128.

[o] (Tex. 1878) Evidence that the prosecuting witness had threatened to poison the accused held to be properly excluded, no predicate therefor having been laid in the cross-examination of the prosecuting witness.—Booker v. State, 4 Tex. App. 564.

[p] (Vt. 1837) Evidence may be given of a violent quarrel existing between a party and a witness introduced against him, without inquiring of the witness as to the quarrel.—Pierce v. Gilson, 9 Vt. 216.

[q] (Vt. 1879) In a criminal prosecution a witness for the state was asked, on cross-examination, if she had ever told a certain man or his wife that she would get the accused into state's prison if she could, and answered in the negative. The wife was thereupon called by the accused and asked what she had heard the witness say about accused. Held, that it was not error to refuse to allow the question to be answered because the question to the state's witness did not properly lay the foundation for such inquiry, as it did not state the time, place, nor occasion.—State v. Glynn, 51 Vt. 577.

[r] (Wis. 1858) In an action for injuries it is competent to show a fraudulent agreement between the plaintiff and her medical attendant, who was a witness, that she should feign sickness, without first having examined the witness with reference to it.—Martin v. Barnes, 7 Wis. 239.

[s] (Wis. 1887) A witness was asked, on his direct examination, for the purpose of impeaching a former witness, the following question: "State whether, at the time, he [the former witness] told you, 'I am a friend of his [the accused], but I don't like the old man. I shall help James all I can.'" Held, that the question was properly excluded, because no sufficient foundation had been laid, by putting it as a whole to the witness sought to be impeached, or by putting the portion in italics to him at all.—Baker v. State, 69 Wis. 32, 33 N. W. 52.

§ 1201. Competency in general.

Competency of husband or wife, see ante, § 135.
Facts subject of inquiry on cross-examination, see ante, §§ 1193–1196.

[a] (Ala. 1876) In a trial for murder, the record of several pending civil suits against the defendants, brought by the widow and next of kin as the personal representatives of the deceased, is not admissible for the defense for the purpose of discrediting the plaintiffs as witnesses, since the plaintiffs having a right to institute such suits, their institution could not in any way affect their credibility as witnesses.—Hadley v. State, 55 Ala. 31.

[b] (Ala. 1889) A witness for the state having testified that he went with N., another witness for the state, after defendant had been released on bail, and swore out a warrant against defendant for another offense, it was competent for defendant to ask, on cross-examination, for the purpose of affecting N.'s credibility, if N. did not induce witness to make the affidavit charging defendant with such second offense.—Salm v. State, 89 Ala. 56, 8 South. 66.

[c] (Ala. 1893) Evidence that the employer of one of the state's witnesses is taking an active part in the prosecution is admissible.—Prince v. State, 100 Ala. 144, 14 South. 409, 46 Am. St. Rep. 28.

[d] (Ala. 1893) Evidence that the prosecutrix, who was absent at the last term of court, was sent into the country by her grandmother and sister, is inadmissible, on trial for rape, to show their interest, and the consequent bias of their testimony.—Jones v. State, 104 Ala. 30, 16 South. 135.

[e] (Cal. 1875) If married women testify as witnesses for the people in a criminal case, the defendant cannot, for the purpose of affecting their credibility, introduce testimony to prove a conspiracy on the part of their husbands to falsely prosecute him and obtain his property.—People v. Parton, 49 Cal. 632.

[f] (Ill. 1888) Upon a bill for divorce charging defendant with incest, the names of witnesses who appeared before the grand jury to procure an indictment against defendant are not competent evidence for the purpose of showing bias existing in the minds of the witnesses testifying upon the trial.—Clark v. Clark, 29 Ill. App. 257.

[g] (Iowa, 1885) In showing the bias of a witness, the party against whom he has testified is limited to a cross-examination of the witness.—State v. Townsend, 66 Iowa, 741, 24 N. W. 535.

[h] (Kan. 1866) On a prosecution for murder, where a state's witness who testifies that she was with defendant at the time of the homicide states that the prosecuting attorney agreed not to prosecute an indictment against her for the same offense if she told the whole truth, such indictment is admissible in evidence as tending to show bias and affecting her credibility.—Craft v. State, 3 Kan. 450.

[i] (La. 1885) In a prosecution for murder, evidence of the governor's proclamation offering a reward for the capture and conviction of the parties to the crime is not admissible for the purpose of showing a probable motive for perjury on the part of the state's witnesses, since their credibility must be attacked directly.—State v. Ford, 37 La. Ann. 448.

[j] (Mass. 1869) In an action on a contract, evidence that a witness of the defendant had improperly tried to obtain from the plaintiff his copy of the contract is admissible to show bias.—Swett v. Shumway, 102 Mass. 365, 3 Am. Rep. 471.

[k] (Mass. 1879) On the trial of an indictment for arson, it appeared that a government witness, who owned part of the property burned, had complained of defendant for forgery, that the complaint had been dismissed, and that defendant brought a pending suit against the witness for a malicious prosecution. The witness testified that defendant had threatened "to be even with him" and to "make it hot" for him. Defendant, to show bias, and to explain these words, offered in evidence the record of the suit for malicious prosecution, and of the complaint for forgery. Held, that the presiding judge, in the exercise of his discretion, had a right to exclude the evidence.—Commonwealth v. Allen, 128 Mass. 46, 35 Am. Rep. 356.

[l] (Mass. 1886) A defendant may introduce evidence to show that a witness is biased, by showing that she had preferred other charges against him, but he will not be allowed to show a particular charge in such other indictment is false, and known to be so by the witness.—Commonwealth v. Hobbs, 140 Mass. 443, 5 N. E. 158.

[m] (Mich. 1886) Evidence that a party to an action requested witness to try to prevent another person from becoming surety for his adversary is admissible to affect the former's credibility.—Denton v. Smith, 61 Mich. 431, 28 N. W. 160.

[n] (Minn. 1859) To show hostility to the prisoner in the witness, mere proof of facts likely to give rise to a hostile feeling is not admissible.—State v. Bilansky, 3 Minn. 246 (Gil. 169).

[o] (Minn. 1891) Evidence that plaintiff had brought an action against one of defendant's witnesses is not admissible to show ill feeling by the witness against plaintiff, in the absence of proof as to the effect that such act of plaintiff had on the mind of the witness, to be shown by the latter's acts or declarations.—Wischstadt v. Wischstadt, 47 Minn. 358, 50 N. W. 225.

[oo] (Miss. 1886) In criminal prosecution, it is not competent for defendant to prove, for the purpose of attacking the credibility of the state's witness, that he has testified as a witness for the state in many other cases at the same term of court.—Lea v. State, 64 Miss. 294, 1 South. 244.

[p] (Miss. 1889) Evidence that bribes and other inducements to testify against defendant were offered to his accomplices, who had testified at the trial, is not admissible to discredit them as witnesses, where it is not attempted to show that they accepted such inducements.—Cheatham v. State, 67 Miss. 335, 7 South. 204, 19 Am. St. Rep. 310.

[pp] (Mo. 1887) On a question as to the terms of a certain settlement, plaintiff's testimony was opposed by the testimony of defendant and two witnesses, who claimed to have been present at the time of the settlement. Plaintiff had attached certain land, which defendant, on the day after the settlement, had conveyed to his two witnesses. Held, that, for the purpose of affecting the credit of these witnesses, plaintiff might put the deed in evidence, show that the land which it purported to convey was the land attached by him, and that the deed was voluntary, and without consideration.—Waddingham v. Hulett, 92 Mo. 528, 5 S. W. 27.

[q] (Mo. 1891) The prosecutor on a trial for arson was the brother-in-law of the defendant. There had been evidence admitted showing a bitter animosity between the parties and their families, extending down to the time of the fire. The prosecutor was asked, for this purpose, if he had not, in a conversation with a certain person two years before, made a threat to break up his father-in-law's family, to which he replied that he had not. The person with whom the conversation was alleged to have taken place was then called, and testified that he had. The testimony of the latter was then excluded on motion of the state. The other evidence in the case was almost wholly circumstantial, and it was doubtful whether even the corpus delicti had been proved. Held, that the evidence was competent for the purpose of impeachment, and also to show the animus of the prosecution.—State v. Jones, 106 Mo. 302, 17 S. W. 366.

[qq] (Mo. 1896) An offer to prove a witness' malice and ill will toward defendant, by showing that she had defaced a picture of him, is inadmissible, as too remote and uncertain.—State v. Punshon, 133 Mo. 44, 34 S. W. 25.

[r] (N. H. 1851) A quarrel between the witness and the party against whom he testifies may be proved to discredit the witness. The court will not inquire which side was in the wrong, but the degree of violence in the quarrel is manifestly material to the point in question.—Titus v. Ash, 24 N. H. (4 Fost.) 319.

[rr] (N. Y. 1849) It is competent to show by a witness called to prove the plaintiff's demand, that a transfer of the establishment in which the demand arose, made by him to the plaintiff, was a sham and fraudulent sale, in order to test his credibility, by showing that he was really interested in the demand in controversy.—Hoyt v. Lynch, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 328.

[s] (N. Y. 1879) In an action against a railroad company for injuries, evidence that one of the plaintiff's witnesses had previously applied to the road master for a position on the road, and had been refused, was not admissible to establish the hostility of the witness to the defendant.—Gale v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 76 N. Y. 594.

[ss] (N. Y. 1879) Evidence to show that a witness who has testified against a party was hostile to him must be direct and pointed; not indirect and uncertain.—Gale v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 76 N. Y. 594.

[t] (N. Y. 1881) In an action for the price of hops plaintiff's evidence showed that after the oral contract of sale had been made defendant made a payment by check, and at that time the contract was restated. After defendant had been called as a witness for plaintiff to prove payment of the check, he, as a witness in his own behalf, contradicted plaintiff's evidence as to payment and restatement of the contract, and was asked on cross-examination if the price of hops went down after the time of the alleged payment. Held, that such evidence was competent as showing the interest of the witness, as the fact of such interest, where there is a contradiction in the evidence, is proper for the consideration of the jury.—Hunter v. Wetsell, 84 N. Y. 549, 38 Am. Rep. 544.

[tt] (N. Y. 1889) A question whether witness was told by another witness that he could get him $50 if he would "swear a single word" in the case is incompetent, as it was not proper for one witness to testify as to an offer which another witness said he could get for testimony.—Webber v. Hoag, 55 Hun, 605, 8 N. Y. Supp. 76.

[u] (N. Y. 1893) Where one of plaintiff's witnesses is a Knight of Labor, evidence as to whether plaintiff was a Knight of Labor is inadmissible to show a bias of such witness in plaintiff's favor.—Constable v. Lefever, 66 Hun, 628, 21 N. Y. Supp. 38.

[uu] (Pa. 1831) The fact that several persons contribute money to employ counsel to conduct a prosecution for creating a disturbance is not such a maintenance as would affect their credibility as witnesses, in the absence of other evidence of malice.—Commonwealth v. Dupuy, 4 Clark, 1, 6 Pa. Law J. 223.

[v] (Pa. 1869) The party against whom a witness has testified may show anything which may in the slightest degree affect his credit, by disclosing the fact that he was biased in giving his testimony.—Batdorff v. Farmers' Nat. Bank, 61 Pa. (11 P. F. Smith) 179.

[vv] (Tex. 1877) Where a witness for the state on cross-examination denied that he bore ill will to the accused, a witness for the accused could not testify that the state's witness was of a revengeful and relentless disposition.—Gay v. State, 2 Tex. App. 127.

[w] (Tex. 1885) The defense to show the animus of the principal witness for the prosecution offered to read an indictment charging him with a fraudulent connection with the same property that was the basis of the prosecution against accused, and in order to show that he was testifying under duress or coercion, it was proposed to show that he must so testify as to convict defendant or else establish his own guilt. Held, that the indictment and proof was admissible, as showing a motive and to impeach the credibility of the witness.—Watts v. State, 18 Tex. App. 381.

[ww] (Tex. 1894) An affidavit by defendant for a change of venue, in which a witness joined, is admissible to show his relationship to defendant, for the purpose of attacking his his credibility.—Trinity County Lumber Co. v. Denham (Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 558.

[x] (Tex. 1895) Where a witness, in an action for injuries alleged to have been caused by defective machinery in a mill, had testified that the owner of the mill, in a conversation with him after the accident, admitted the defective condition of the machinery, and the owner had denied such admission, it was error to exclude evidence that the witness had been interested in the suit, and the consideration for which he had sold such interest.—Trinity County Lumber Co. v. Denham, 88 Tex. 208, 30 S. W. 856.

[xx] (Tex. 1895) It is not error to exclude testimony offered to prove the raising of money to procure witnesses for the state, where the offered testimony does not show that any witness received the money.—Mixon v. State (Cr. App.) 31 S. W. 408.

[y] (Tex. 1895) Testimony that a witness for defendant advised a witness for plaintiff not to testify for him unless paid his fees, and that "if he would join over on the company's side they would pay him," is admissible to show the bias of the witness.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. McGlamory (Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 359.

[yy] (Utah, 1891) In an action by a person who is forcibly ejected from premises by one who claims title to the land, for an injunction, and for damages for destruction of her buildings by defendant, evidence is not admissible of trespasses committed by plaintiff after suit brought, for the purpose of showing plaintiff's animus, or as affecting her standing as a witness.—Marks v. Tompkins, 7 Utah, 421, 27 Pac. 6.

[z] (Vt. 1892) One accused of cattle stealing may show that a witness who testifies to having bought the cattle from defendant was himself accused of the same offense, as furnishing a motive to testify falsely.—State v. Burpee, 65 Vt. 1, 25 Atl. 964, 36 Am. St. Rep. 775, 19 L. R. A. 145.

[zz] (Va. 1833) Evidence of particular acts of hostility on the part of plaintiff's witnesses toward the defendant was held admissible, in an action of slander, to discredit their testimony.—Rixey v. Bayse, 4 Leigh, 330.

§ 1202. Evidence of declarations, statements, or admissions of witness.

[a] (Ala. 1848) In order to show that a witness entertains ill feelings toward the party against whom he is called, it is not competent to prove that he has used expressions indicating such feelings, without proving what the expressions were.—Hatchett v. Gibson, 13 Ala. 587.

[b] (Ala. 1882) On a trial for assault with intent to murder, letters written by the assaulted party and received by defendant a short time prior to the assault, showing hostility to defendant, are admissible as affecting the credibility of the assaulted party as a witness.—Burke v. State, 71 Ala. 377.

[c] (Ala. 1886) The prosecutor having admitted, on cross-examination, that he was not friendly to the defendant, and that he had employed counsel to aid in the prosecution, the defendant may ask another witness "if he had not heard the prosecutor say that he could not give the defendant justice."—Haralson v. State, 82 Ala. 47, 2 South. 765.

[d] (Ala. 1893) On a trial for hog theft, evidence that a witness said, about 18 months before the larceny was alleged to have happened, "that he would do anything for money," was incompetent for the purpose of impeachment.—Browder v. State, 102 Ala. 164, 14 South. 895.

[e] (Ark. 1889) The bias of one called to testify in a case not being a collateral matter, testimony as to statements made by him which tend to show such bias is competent.—Crumpton v. State, 52 Ark. 273, 12 S. W. 563.

[f] (Cal. 1893) In a prosecution for attempt to rape, a witness may testify as to statements made to him by the prosecuting witness that she was going to get some money out of defendant if she had to put up a job on him, as tending to show her prejudice and interest in the case, provided the proper foundation had been laid while she was on the stand.—People v. Gardner, 98 Cal. 127, 32 Pac. 880.

[g] (Conn. 1875) Where a witness after testifying states out of court that he had testified falsely and had been hired to do so, the statements may be proven in court to discredit his testimony.—McGinnis v. Grant, 42 Conn. 77.

[h] (Ind. 1881) It is competent, for the purpose of impeaching a witness, to prove that, at a time and place specified, he has made statements which show that his impartiality is affected by motives arising from friendship, affection, fear, or interest.—Johnson v. Wiley, 74 Ind. 233.

[i] (Ind. 1889) Evidence of statements made out of court by a witness, showing his hostility to one of the parties to the suit, is admissible for that purpose.—Staser v. Hogan, 120 Ind. 207, 21 N. E. 911.

[j] (Ind. 1891) The fact that letters offered in evidence were written after the notes in suit had been assigned is no objection to their admission for the purpose of showing the interest of some of the witnesses.—Litten v. Wright School Tp., 127 Ind. 81, 26 N. E. 567.

[k] (Iowa, 1880) The declarations of a witness, to the effect that he has an interest in the suit, cannot be shown in evidence to establish such interest in order to affect his credibility.—Erickson v. Bell, 53 Iowa, 627, 6 N. W. 19, 36 Am. Rep. 246.

[l] (La. 1830) Declarations made by a witness that he had received a sum of money for testifying to certain facts, in the absence of the party who offers him, are admissible to discredit his testimony.—Barkley v. Bills, 8 Mart. (N. S.) 496.

[m] (Me. 1890) A pauper's declarations made after 1880, with acts done in pursuance of such declarations, tending to show a disposition on his part to acquire a settlement in V., and avoid one in B., thereby implying that his settlement was not before that time in V., were admissible to show his bias and prejudice, when testifying as a witness in 1887, to his intention between 1860 and 1866 of making his permanent home in V.; it being admitted that no new settlement was ever acquired by him after 1866.—Inhabitants of Belmont v. Inhabitants of Vinalhaven, 82 Me. 524, 20 Atl. 89.

[n] (Md. 1877) On a prosecution for larceny, evidence of threats against defendant's brother made by one of the witnesses for the prosecution, not shown to have any connection with threats against the accused, is inadmissible.—Chelton v. State, 45 Md. 564.

[o] (Mass. 1857) Where a witness, being called by a party, testifies that he has never threatened revenge against the other party, he may be contradicted by other testimony, as such matter was not collateral, but the state of the witness' feelings toward such party affected directly the credit and weight to be given to his testimony.—Collins v. Stephenson, 74 Mass. (8 Gray) 438.

[p] (Mass. 1863) For the purpose of discrediting a witness, independent testimony is competent to prove that he has expressed an opinion, out of court, in favor of the party who called him, upon the merits and probable result of the case.—O'Neill v. City of Lowell, 88 Mass. (6 Allen) 110.

[q] (Mass. 1867) A material witness may be impeached by proving declarations made by him out of court showing personal bias or feeling adverse to the party against whom he has testified.—Day v. Stickney, 96 Mass. (14 Allen) 255.

[r] (Mass. 1891) Plaintiff's statement that he intended to make the case as dirty as possible for one of defendants is admissible to show bias, and to discredit his testimony.—Tasker v. Stanley, 153 Mass. 148, 26 N. E. 417, 10 L. R. A. 468; Same v. Tasker, Id.

[s] (N. Y. 1847) A defendant, on the trial of an indictment, may prove that a witness for the prosecution has said of a certain black ash swamp that it would be a good place to kill the defendant, though the remark was made before the time of the commission of the alleged offense, and the witness to whom the declaration was imputed, on his cross-examination, had denied having made it.—Starks v. People, 5 Denio, 106.

[t] (N. Y. 1875) Evidence to show that one of defendants' witnesses had, some seven years before the trial, said that if he ever got a chance he would give plaintiff hell, was properly received; the law has fixed no time beyond which ill feeling on the part of a witness toward a party cannot be proved.—Hotchkiss v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 5 Hun, 90.

[u] (N. Y. 1877) On the trial of an indictment for obtaining money under false pretenses, a witness for the prosecution testified that accused told him that he was worth a large sum of money and had taken care of his friends prior to his making an assignment, and that he tried to sell witness land so as to protect him. Accused, having been called in his own behalf, offered to testify that such witness had threatened to give such evidence unless accused would pay the amount due to him, but the evidence was excluded. Held, that it was error, as it was admissible to impeach the credit of the first witness.—Patterson v. People, 12 Hun, 137.

[v] (N. Y. 1880) A witness' admissions out of court are not competent to prove his interest in the litigation.—Misland v. Boynton, 79 N. Y. 630.

[w] (N. Y. 1892) In an action against a street railroad for injuries sustained in being struck by a car, a witness who was called by plaintiff in rebuttal was properly allowed to testify, for the purpose of impeaching the driver of another car, who had testified that plaintiff had been guilty of contributory negligence, that such driver had said if he was independent, by reason of having a house and lot, he could give his evidence without regard to being blacklisted by the company.—Pyne v. Broadway & Seventh Ave. R. Co. (Com. Pl.) 19 N. Y. Supp. 217, judgment affirmed (1893) 138 N. Y. 627, 33 N. E. 1083.

[x] (N. Y. 1893) Where a subscribing witness to a will, after having testified for proponents, states on cross-examination that a beneficiary under the will has not promised her money or reward in the case, it is error to exclude evidence of her admissions or declarations to the contrary.—In re Snelling's Will, 136 N. Y. 515, 32 N. E. 1006.

[y] (N. Y. 1893) Such declarations and admissions are not rendered any the less admissible by the fact that they were elicited from her by a woman who was procured by contestants to visit her for the purpose under an assumed name, but such fact goes merely to the credibility of the impeaching testimony.—In re Snelling's Will, 136 N. Y. 515, 32 N. E. 1006.

[yy] (Or. 1895) On a trial for murder, evidence that a witness stated at the coroner's inquest that she would color her testimony to help defendant is admissible, when a proper foundation has been laid.—State v. Brown, 28 Or. 147, 41 Pac. 1042.

[z] (Tex. 1886) In a murder trial, a state's witness who was shown to have been an active participant in the transaction which resulted in the killing of the deceased, having testified to material facts, the defendant proposed to prove that, about two hours before the homicide, the said witness declared that she directed the deceased to load a shotgun, and kill the defendant if he entered upon her premises, which proposed evidence was rejected by the trial court. Held error; and that the evidence was competent both to prove the animus of the witness, and, in view of the other evidence in the case, as also material upon the question of the defendant's guilt.—Tow v. State, 22 Tex. App. 175, 2 S. W. 582.

[zz] (Tex. 1888) Evidence that, on the night before the crime, the principal witness for the state had a quarrel with defendant, and said, "I will see you again, and shoot a hole in you a yellow dog can jump through," is admissible to show the hostility and bias of witness against defendant.—Bonnard v. State, 25 Tex. App. 173, 7 S. W. 862, 8 Am. St. Rep. 431.

§ 1203. Examination of impeaching witness.

Cross-examination to show interest or bias, see ante, §§ 1192–1199.

[a] (Mass. 1867) Where a witness denies declarations made by him out of court showing personal bias or feeling adverse to the party against whom he has testified, an inquiry put to a contradicting witness need not embody the exact statement, the making of which he denied, but may be in any form proper to elicit the facts.—Day v. Stickney, 96 Mass. (14 Allen) 255.

4. EVIDENCE TO SUSTAIN WITNESS OR REBUT EVIDENCE OF INTEREST OR BIAS.

IN GENERAL, § 1204.
REBUTTAL, § 1205.
GOOD CHARACTER OF WITNESS, § 1206.
EVIDENCE TO SHOW WANT OF INTEREST OR FREEDOM FROM BIAS, § 1207.

[a] (Mass. 1871) Where a party gives evidence of a quarrel between himself and the witness for the purpose of affecting the credit of the latter, it is within the discretion of the presiding judge how far to allow the other party to show the nature and particulars of the quarrel.—Commonwealth v. Jennings, 107 Mass. 488.

[b] (N. Y. 1848) Where the cross-examination of the principal witness for the people, in a criminal case, was conducted in a manner tending to impair her credibility, and to show that the prosecution was the result of a conspiracy in which she was concerned, it was held that it was competent to sustain the witness, by showing that another person, to whom the facts had become professionally known, wrote to the public authorities, and was the cause of the prosecution being instituted.—Lohman v. People, 1 N. Y. (1 Comst.) 379, 49 Am. Dec. 340.

§ 1205. Rebuttal.

[a] (Ala. 1891) In a criminal case, where it is brought out on cross-examination that a witness for the state has been indicted for the same offense with which defendant is charged, it is competent for the state to rebut the inference which might be drawn from the circumstance, by proof that the witness has not been induced by any promise to testify against defendant.—Mitchell v. State, 94 Ala. 68, 10 South. 518.

[b] (Cal. 1895) When it is sought to weaken the testimony of a witness for defendant by showing that he is interested in the result of the trial, defendant may show that such interest arose from the witness' belief in defendant's innocence.—People v. Johnson, 106 Cal. 289, 39 Pac. 622.

[c] (Mich. 1895) Where, from the acts of a witness in connection with the matters to which he testifies, there might be inferred the existence of motives unfavorable to the party for whom he testified, it is proper to allow the witness to give the reasons for such acts.—Burt v. Long, 106 Mich. 210, 64 N. W. 60.

[d] (Wash. 1880) The trial court, in the exercise of its discretion, may permit a witness to state the grounds of an admitted hostility to the party against whom he testifies, without permitting such party to contradict the statements made in this connection.—Bagley v. Carpenter, 2 Wash. T. 19, 3 Pac. 193.

§ 1206. Good character of witness.

[a] (Cal. 1874) If the accused introduces evidence to show that one of the witnesses for the prosecution was suborned, and has been paid for his testimony, the prosecution, in rebuttal, may introduce testimony to show the good character of the witness for truth and veracity.—People v. Ah Fat, 48 Cal. 61.

§ 1207. Evidence to show want of interest or freedom from bias.

[a] (Ga. 1890) In an action on a life insurance policy, it is competent for a brother of the assured to testify that he had assigned a policy, held by him on the life of the assured, to the latter's child, pursuant to certain directions of the assured, as such evidence tends to show that the witness had no interest in the result of the action.—Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 85 Ga. 751, 12 S. E. 18.

[b] (N. Y. 1848) Where the defendant examined his son-in-law as a witness in his behalf, and it was shown that he had made statements contradicting the facts sworn to by him on the trial, it was held that it was competent for the defendant to answer the imputation of bias on the part of the witness in his favor, to show that they were not on friendly terms.—Clapp v. Wilson, 5 Denio, 285.

[c] (N. C. 1859) Where the credit of a witness was impeached on the ground of partiality toward the accused, and to rebut the imputation it was proved that the prisoner and witness had lately had a fight, it was competent for the state to show that next morning, after the act charged, the two were seen together in a conversation that appeared to be friendly, and that without any preliminary inquiry of the witness as to the terms on which they stood toward each other.—State v. Oscar, 52 N. C. 305.

5. EFFECT OF IMPEACHMENT FOR INTEREST OR BIAS.

§ 1208. In general.

[a] (Ga. 1860) Under the act of 1857, authorizing parties to become witnesses and providing that their testimony shall be entitled to such weight as the jury may see fit to give it, the jury can take so much of the evidence of a party who is the only witness as supports the case of the opposite party, and disbelieve the balance.—Hardee v. Williams, 30 Ga. 921.

[b] (Ill. 1862) The feelings of a witness toward the parties may justify the jury in discrediting him, but if he is corroborated his testimony ought not to be rejected.—Hansell v. Erickson, 28 Ill. (18 Peck) 257.

[c] (Ky. 1891) Where one witness for the state was a former witness for defendant, the jury were the judges as to her credibility.—Brown v. Commonwealth, 17 S. W. 220.

[d] (Mass. 1861) Although it is proved that a witness in a criminal case is actuated by malice against the defendant, the court should not instruct the jury to disregard his testimony altogether; but, after giving proper cautions, leave it for them to say how much credit shall be given to it.—Commonwealth v. Putnam, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 301.

[e] (N. Y. 1823) A court and jury have no right entirely to disregard the testimony of a witness, on the ground that he is biased in favor of the party calling him.—Newton v. Pope, 1 Cow. 109.

[f] (N. Y. 1893) Though the jury are not bound to believe an interested witness, they are not prohibited from believing him.—Reid v. City of New York, 68 Hun, 110, 22 N. Y. Supp. 623, judgment affirmed (1893) 139 N. Y. 534, 34 N. E. 1102.

[g] (Ohio, 1859) Where the testimony of a party is opposed to that of a disinterested witness, the testimony of the latter will prevail.—Spang v. McGarry, 2 Ohio Dec. 116.

(D) INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS BY WITNESS.

1. IN GENERAL, §§ 1209-1213.
2. INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS OF ONE'S OWN WITNESS, §§ 1214-1219.
3. NATURE OF STATEMENTS OR TESTIMONY, AND EXTENT OF INCONSISTENCY, §§ 1220-1227.
4. CROSS-EXAMINATION AS TO INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS, §§ 1228-1232.
5. LAYING FOUNDATION FOR PROOF OF INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS, §§ 1233-1242.
6. ADMISSION OR DENIAL AS TO PREVIOUS STATEMENTS, §§ 1243-1245.
7. EVIDENCE OF INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS, §§ 1246-1257.
8. EVIDENCE TO SUSTAIN WITNESS OR REBUT EVIDENCE OF INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS, §§ 1258-1264.
9. EFFECT OF IMPEACHMENT BY INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS, §§ 1265, 1266.

Conduct inconsistent with testimony, see ante, § 1134.

New trial in criminal prosecution on ground of newly discovered evidence of contradictory statements of witnesses, see "Criminal Law," vol. 15, cc. 174–176, § 2332.

1. IN GENERAL.

INCONSISTENCY OF STATEMENTS AS GROUND OF IMPEACHMENT IN GENERAL, § 1209.
WITNESSES WHO MAY BE IMPEACHED BY INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS, § 1210.
—— ACCUSED IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTION, § 1211.
IMPEACHMENT OF DEPOSITIONS OR TESTIMONY OF ABSENT OR DECEASED WITNESS, § 1212.
STIPULATION AS TO TESTIMONY OF ABSENT WITNESS, § 1213.

§ 1209. Inconsistency of statements as ground of impeachment in general.

[a] To discredit a witness it is competent to show that he made contradictory statements at other times and places.

—(U. S. 1888) United States v. Hughes (D. C.) 34 Fed. 782;

(Ill. 1858) Rankin v. Crow, 19 Ill. (9 Peck) 626; (1876) Presley v. Powers, 82 Ill. 125;

(Mich. 1894) Jensen v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 102 Mich. 176, 60 N. W. 57;

(Miss. 1870) Head v. State, 44 Miss. 731;

(N. Y. 1863) Knight v. Forward, 63 Barb. 311; (1865) Chapman v. Brooks, 31 N. Y. 75;

(N. C. 1837) Murphy v. McNiel, 19 N. C. 244;

(Ohio, 1826) Lamb v. Stewart, 2 Ohio (2 Ham.) 230;

(Pa. 1822) Stahle v. Spohn, 8 Serg. & R. 317; (1890) Wilson v. Wilson, 137 Pa. 269, 20 Atl. 644;

(W. Va. 1873) Morgan v. Franklin Ins. Co., 6 W. Va. 496.

[b] The credibility of a witness may be impeached by proof of statements out of court contrary to his testimony.

—(Ala. 1895) Holley v. State, 105 Ala. 100, 17 South. 102;

(Ga. 1861) Floyd v. Wallace, 31 Ga. 688;

(Mo. 1888) Leahey v. Cass Ave. & F. G. Ry. Co., 97 Mo. 165, 10 S. W. 58, 10 Am. St. Rep. 300;

(N. H. 1858) Gerrish v. Pike, 36 N. H. 510.

[c] (U. S. 1859) Inconsistencies and incongruities in the testimony of witnesses whose general character for veracity has not been impeached should be reconciled, when it can be done without violence, especially when there is no extrinsic reason for suspecting error or fraud. And if the testimony cannot be reconciled, the presumption of reason as well as of law will impute the variance to an innocent misconception rather than to a willful and corrupt misrepresentation, especially when the witnesses are compelled to make their answers to an ingenious and artful examination through the medium of an interpreter.—Dietz v. Wade, Fed. Cas. No. 3,903.

[d] (U. S. 1892) Where testimony is conflicting, the jury should consider, in determining what weight to attach to the testimony of witnesses, the consistency of their testimony.—United States v. Ybanez (C. C.) 53 Fed. 536.

[e] (Ala. 1888) A defendant having testified that he was in Florida on the day an offense was charged to have been committed, the state was properly allowed to impeach his testimony by showing that he had made statements, by affidavits and otherwise, as to his whereabouts on that day, which were inconsistent with his testimony.—Cotton v. State, 87 Ala. 75, 6 South. 396.

[f] (Cal. 1852) Where a defendant offered to prove that a witness, sworn for the plaintiff, had made a statement different from the one he had made under oath at the trial, and the court below refused to admit the testimony, it was held that the decision was erroneous.—McDaniel v. Baca, 2 Cal. 326, 56 Am. Dec. 339.

[g] (Colo. 1892) Where there is evidence that a witness has made any statement, oral or written, out of court, concerning any substantial matter in controversy, materially different from what he has stated on the witness stand, such evidence tends to impeach either the recollection or the truthfulness of the witness, and the jury should, on proper request, be instructed to consider the same in determining what weight should be given to his testimony.—Rose v. Otis, 18 Colo. 59, 31 Pac. 493.

[h] (Ga. 1877) Where a debtor is a witness for a claimant of property alleged by a creditor to have been fraudulently conveyed, his declarations as to material matters made preceding the trial may be shown by the creditor to impeach him after laying a foundation therefor.—Oatis v. Brown, 59 Ga. 711.

[i, j] (Ill. 1867) The rule is that if the witness swore knowingly to any one statement in the affidavit, and testified differently about the same matter at the trial, to that extent his testimony was clearly impeached.—Von Glahn v. Von Glahn, 46 Ill. 134.

[k] (Ind. 1820) The statements of a witness, made out of court, contrary to what he swears at the trial, concerning facts relevant to the issue, may be proved, to impeach his credit.—Shields v. Cunningham, 1 Blackf. 86.

[l] (Ind. 1857) Testimony to impeach a witness upon a material point is admissible after the proper foundation, as to time, place, etc., is laid with that view.—Dillon v. Bell, 9 Ind. 320.

[m] (La. 1860) In an indictment for libel, where the party libeled is offered as a witness for the prosecution, it is competent to discredit his testimony by proof of contrary statements made out of court, his attention having been first called thereto.—State v. Butman, 15 La. Ann. 166.

[n] (Mass. 1893) In an action for personal injuries it is proper to show that plaintiff's physician had made statements inconsistent with his testimony, as it tended to show that he had treated plaintiff's injury as less serious than he represented it on the stand.—Liddle v. Old Lowell Nat. Bank, 158 Mass. 15, 32 N. E. 954.

[o] (Minn. 1889) When a proper foundation is laid, a witness may be impeached by showing that he has elsewhere made statements on some matter material to the issue, contradictory to those made on the witness stand.—State v. Barrett, 40 Minn. 65, 41 N. W. 459.

[p] (Miss. 1860) The proof of a witness having made statements which he denies may be taken into consideration as affecting his credit.—George v. State, 39 Miss. 570.

[q] (Mo. 1881) A son was tried for murdering his father. The state introduced evidence tending to show unfriendly relations between father and son. The father's widow testified that on the contrary their relations were friendly. Held, that the state might show, in rebuttal, that the widow, before her husband's death, in speaking of a difficulty between father and son, had said that if the son had had a pistol he would have shot his father, and that he was then prepared for him.—State v. Talbott, 73 Mo. 347.

[r] (N. Y. 1838) Declarations of witnesses invalidating their testimony as contained in depositions is inadmissible, if objected to.—Kimball v. Davis, 19 Wend. 437, affirmed (1840) Brown v. Kimball, 25 Wend. 259.

[s] (N. Y. 1858) The declarations of a witness can only be received to impeach him by contradicting testimony already given by him; but if they are admitted first, the error is cured, if the party who objected to the declarations calls him and examines him with relation thereto.—Tooker v. Gormer, 2 Hilt. 71.

[t] (N. Y. 1886) In a trial for larceny, where a witness was proved to have been an accomplice, evidence of previous statements made by her is admissible for the purpose of contradicting and impeaching her testimony.—People v. McCallam, 103 N. Y. 587, 9 N. E. 502, affirming (1885) 3 N. Y. Cr. R. 189.

[u] (N. Y. 1891) Contradictory statements made by defendant, and offered in evidence by plaintiff before defendant has presented himself as a witness, for the purpose of affecting defendant's credibility, are properly excluded.—Davis v. Evans (City Ct. Brook.) 14 N. Y. Supp. 636.

[v] (N. Y. 1893) Evidence as to declarations made by a witness as to the location of a boundary line is admissible to contradict his testimony at the trial, though such declarations may not be competent evidence of the true location.—Humes v. Proctor, 73 Hun, 265, 26 N. Y. Supp. 315.

[w] (Ohio, 1883) A witness' contradictory statements may justify the jury in not believing him, though he is not directly impeached.—French v. Millard, 2 Ohio St. 44.

[ww] (Pa. 1894) Declarations by state's witness, made immediately after the occurrence, entirely inconsistent with his testimony, are admissible to impeach him.—Commonwealth v. Werntz, 161 Pa. 591, 29 Atl. 272.

[x] (S. C. 1846) Where one party gave in evidence the declarations of a free negro, it was held that the other party might give in evidence his declarations at another time, to discredit his testimony.—Morgan v. Livingston, 2 Rich. Law, 578.

[xx] (S. C. 1846) Where a deed is proved by evidence of the signature of a subscribing witness who is beyond the state, it is competent for the opposite party to introduce evidence of statements by the same witness as to circumstances of its execution differing from those which he made when examined by commission.—Smith v. Asbell, 2 Strob. 141.

[y] (S. C. 1891) Where defendant, in an action for enticing a servant from his employer, offers the servant to prove there was no contract of employment, plaintiff, having laid the foundation on cross-examination, may prove in reply that the servant had admitted the contract to others, for the purpose of discrediting the testimony of the servant.—Duckett v. Pool, 34 S. C. 311, 13 S. E. 542.

[yy] (S. C. 1892) In an action on a life insurance policy, it is not error to permit plaintiff to introduce evidence of conversations with defendant's agent, who procured the assured's application, for the purpose of contradiction of such agent as a witness.—Stepp v. National Life & Maturity Ass'n, 37 S. C. 417, 16 S. E. 134.

[z] (Tex. 1884) A witness can be impeached on any material issue after laying the proper predicate by showing that he has made statements out of court contradictory of his statements in court.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Woodall, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 471.

[zz] (Wis. 1889) Evidence tending to show that a witness had made statements out of court as to material facts, different from his testimony, is admissible to impeach him.—A. C. Conn Co. v. Little Suamico Lumber & Mfg. Co., 74 Wis. 652, 43 N. W. 660.

§ 1210. Witnesses who may be impeached by inconsistent statements.

[a] (Colo. 1892) A defendant testifying as a witness in his own behalf is subject to cross-examination as to previous declarations contrary to his testimony as given, the same as any other witness; and this notwithstanding his supposed declarations might have been shown as a part of plaintiff's case in chief.—Cravens v. Bennett, 17 Colo. 419, 30 Pac. 61.

[b] (Ga. 1883) The prosecutor stands before the court and the jury as any other witness, to be impeached in the same way, and the statements of the prosecutor outside and not under oath are admissible for the purpose of impeachment by contradicting his sworn statements.—Womack v. State, 72 Ga. 215.

[c] (Minn. 1881) A witness who is called to contradict another witness by showing contradictory statements made out of court may himself be contradicted in the same manner.—State v. Lawlor, 28 Minn. 216, 9 N. W. 698.

[d] (Mo. 1877) An agent, appearing as a witness in a case involving transactions by him as agent, may be impeached by evidence of contradictory statements made by him relative to his agency.—Peck v. Ritchey, 66 Mo. 114.

[e] (N. Y. 1888) Admissions and declarations of a foreman relating to work of which he was in charge are admissible to contradict his statements made as a witness against his employer in an action concerning such work.—Tripp v. Kirmes (Com. Pl.) 2 N. Y. Supp. 19.

[f] (Ohio, 1877) A witness, called to impeach another by showing statements inconsistent with those testified to, may himself be contradicted after laying the proper foundation therefor by showing statements made by him out of court inconsistent with those testified to by him contradicting the witness sought to be impeached by his testimony.—Berry v. State, 31 Ohio St. 219.

§ 1211. —— Accused in criminal prosecution.

[a] (U. S. 1891) A defendant who testifies in his own behalf may be contradicted by showing that he testified differently before the grand jury as a witness against another, who was charged with the same offense.—United States v. Smith (C. C.) 47 Fed. 501.

[b] (Ala. 1892) An accused person, who testifies in his own behalf, is subject to impeachment, as other witnesses, by evidence of previous contradictory statements, on a proper predicate therefor.—Hicks v. State, 99 Ala. 169, 13 South. 375.

[c] (Cal. 1888) A defendant cannot be compelled upon cross-examination to testify to statements, made out of court, amounting to a confession of the crime, upon the theory of showing contradictory statements to impeach him, unless it is first shown that such confession was voluntary.—People v. Yeaton, 75 Cal. 415, 17 Pac. 544.

[d] (Ky. 1895) Where the theory of the commonwealth is that defendant was wounded while committing a crime, it may show in rebuttal that an explanation by defendant before the trial, as to how he received the wounds, contradicts his testimony.—Logan v. Commonwealth, 29 S. W. 632.

[e] (La. 1890) In a criminal prosecution, evidence to show what the accused, testifying in his own behalf, had stated on a previous trial on the same charge, in which the jury had failed to agree, is inadmissible to impeach him, if it appears that the defendant did not testify at all on the second trial, at which he was convicted.—State v. Brownson, 42 La. Ann. 186, 7 South. 328.

[f] (Md. 1889) Where defendant, on his examination as a witness, makes statements concerning the killing, the state may show, at the close of his case, a previous account thereof, given by him, for the purpose of contradicting and impeaching him.—Garlitz v. State, 71 Md. 293, 18 Atl. 39, 4 L. R. A. 601.

[g] (Mo. 1893) On a trial for murder, where a witness for the state testified that defendant stated in his presence that it was a man by the name of T. who traveled with him towards the place where deceased's body was found, it was proper to cross-examine defendant as to the statement, for the purpose of laying a foundation to contradict defendant under section 4218, which provides that, when defendant offers himself as a witness, he may be contradicted, as any other witness.—State v. Avery, 113 Mo. 475, 21 S. W. 193.

[h] (Mo. 1894) One on trial for murder, testifying on his own behalf, may be cross-examined as to a statement made a few days after the murder, to lay a foundation for impeachment.—State v. Kennade, 121 Mo. 405, 26 S. W. 347.

[i] (Mont. 1895) Where defendant, on a trial for murder, relies on self-defense for acquittal, it is competent to attack his credibility by proving statements by him out of court as to the self-defense contrary to those made by him as a witness on the trial.—State v. Cadotte, 17 Mont. 315, 42 Pac. 857.

[j] (Tex. 1892) When defendant has testified in his own behalf, a statement made by him while under arrest may be offered as impeachment.—Bell v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 276, 20 S. W. 549.

[k] (Tex. 1894) A confession by accused, though he was not cautioned, is admissible to impeach his credibility as a witness, though it did not result in a discovery of the fruits of the crime.—Rains v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 294, 26 S. W. 398.

[l] (Tex. 1896) A confession by defendant while in jail, made without his being cautioned, though inadmissible as evidence of his guilt, is admissible to impeach him as a witness.—Phillips v. State (Cr. App.) 34 S. W. 272.

[m] (Tex. 1896) Statements by defendant while in jail are admissible in evidence to discredit his testimony.—Thompson v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 511, 34 S. W. 629.

§ 1212. Impeachment of depositions or testimony of absent or deceased witness.

Foundation of impeachment of deposition or other written testimony, see post, § 1238.

[a] (U. S. 1889) On a fourth trial, where defendant introduces in evidence the deposition of a deceased witness, a deposition previously made by him in a suit between different parties, and containing statements inconsistent with the former, is not admissible to rebut it, where it has been used on three former trials during the witness' life, in each of which plaintiff cross-examined him, and did not refer to the previously made deposition.—Ayers v. Watson, 132 U. S. 394, 10 Sup. Ct. 116, 33 L. Ed. 378.

[b] (U. S. 1895) Where a material witness for the government in a murder case dies after the first trial, and on the second trial the government reads in evidence a transcribed copy of the reporter's stenographic notes of his testimony taken on the first trial, it is a valid objection to evidence offered by defendant to show that the deceased witness, after such first trial, stated that his testimony was given under duress, and was untrue, that the usual foundation for impeaching testimony has not been laid.—Mattox v. United States, 156 U. S. 237, 15 Sup. Ct. 337, 39 L. Ed. 409.

[c] (Ala. 1890) Where, in a criminal trial, evidence of an absent witness at a former trial is proved, it was proper to exclude testimony tending to show that the absent witness had made statements inconsistent with his testimony at the former trials.—Pruitt v. State, 92 Ala. 41, 9 South. 406.

[d] (Ark. 1881) Where the testimony of a witness (since dead), given before a committing magistrate, was read in evidence against defendant, the latter might impeach such evidence by proof that the witness had made previous contradictory statements, where the necessary foundation was laid for such impeachment at such preliminary examination.—Griffith v. State, 37 Ark. 324.

[e] (Ga. 1894) Evidence of a deceased witness, whose testimony was taken on a former trial, and reproduced through another witness, cannot be impeached by contradictory statements made by the deceased witness before he testified.—Sharp v. Hicks, 94 Ga. 624, 21 S. E. 208.

[f] (Ind. 1892) Where the deposition of a deceased witness is introduced in evidence by plaintiff, and no ground was laid, when the deposition was taken, for impeachment, a former deposition given by him, and used in another trial between plaintiff and other parties, cannot be used to impeach him, since the death of the witness since the last deposition was taken does not affect the rule requiring, as preliminary to his impeachment, that his attention be first called to the contradictory statements.—Eppert v. Hall, 133 Ind. 417, 31 N. E. 74.

[g] (Ky. 1883) Where evidence of what one since deceased testified to on a former trial is offered, it cannot be impeached by showing that the witness, after the former trial, stated that the testimony given was untrue.—Craft v. Commonwealth, 81 Ky. 250, 50 Am. Rep. 160.

[h] (Ky. 1884) The testimony of a witness on a former trial, who has since deceased, cannot be impeached by proof of contradictory statements made by him subsequent to the first trial.—Neal v. Commonwealth, 6 Ky. Law Rep. 868.

[i] (La. 1883) Evidence that a witness had made a contradictory statement is not admissible after his decease to discredit him, it being impossible to lay the foundation.—State v. Johnson, 35 La. Ann. 871.

[j] (N. Y. 1865) By agreement of parties to a trial, the testimony of a witness at a former trial, who had since died, was read in evidence. Subsequently the defendant offered to read a deposition of the deceased witness, which had been used at still another and former trial, for the purpose of contradicting the evidence as read and impeaching the witness. Held, that the deposition was inadmissible for that purpose, as the attention of the deceased witness had not been called to the subject.—Hubbard v. Briggs, 31 N. Y. 518.

[k] (Ohio, 1864) The testimony of a subscribing witness to a will, taken at the probate of the will, was read in evidence on the trial of an issue to determine the validity of the will, the witness having died before the trial. The contestants then offered in evidence declarations of the witness respecting the capacity of the alleged testator to make a will at the time the one in question purported to have been made, for the purpose of impeaching his testimony. Held, that before such evidence is admissible, the witness must be interrogated as to the same; and the fact that the opportunity for such examination has been cut off by the death of the witness does not form an exception to the general rule.—Runyan v. Price, 15 Ohio St. 1, 86 Am. Dec. 469.

[l] (Pa. 1890) The declaration of a deceased witness tending to impair his testimony in a deposition theretofore given by him may be put in evidence for the purpose of affecting the credibility of the deposition.—Patterson v. Dushane, 137 Pa. 23, 20 Atl. 538, 27 Wkly. Notes Cas. 41.

[m] (Tex. 1882) Where the written testimony at the examining trial of witnesses who had left the jurisdiction was admitted, pursuant to statute, in behalf of the state, it may not be impeached by the written testimony of the same witnesses at the examining trial of another person, implicated in the same crime, where no predicate had been laid therefor or opportunity offered the witnesses for explanation.—Ballinger v. State, 11 Tex. App. 323.

[n] (Tex. 1895) On a trial for murder, where testimony given by deceased at the examining trial, when defendant was charged with assault with intent to murder, had been received, evidence offered by defendant that deceased had at different times, after said examining trial, made statements contradictory thereof, was competent.—Hamblin v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 368, 30 S. W. 1075.

[o] (Vt. 1860) The defendant introduced in evidence minutes of the testimony of H. at a former trial of the same case, since which time H. had died. The plaintiff, for the purpose of impeaching such testimony, offered to show declarations of H. inconsistent with his story as recited in the minutes. Held, that such declarations were competent testimony, notwithstanding H. was not inquired of at the previous trial in regard to such declarations.—Norton v. Downer, 33 Vt. 26.

Right to impeach in general, see ante, § 1090.

[a] (Ark. 1893) Mansf. Dig. § 5108, as amended by Act Feb. 21, 1887 (Pamph. Acts, p. 19), which permits the opposing party to controvert the statements of what an absent witness would testify, contained in a motion for continuance, does not authorize the contradiction of such witness by proving that he has made different statements out of court, and thus impeach him, and discredit his testimony, unless an opportunity is first afforded him to explain such statement.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Sweet, 57 Ark. 287, 21 S. W. 587.

[b] (Iowa, 1867) If, in a criminal trial, in order to avoid a continuance asked for by defendant on account of the absence of a witness, the state admits that the witness, if present, would swear to the facts stated in his affidavit, such statement cannot be impeached by showing that the witness has made a different statement before a coroner's jury, when it does not appear that the statement was under oath, or, it seems, if the statement was under oath.—State v. Shannehan, 22 Iowa, 435.

[c] (Kan. 1892) When, on an application for a continuance to procure the testimony of an absent witness, the facts set up in the affidavit in support of the application are, by consent, read in evidence, in behalf of the party making the application, as the deposition of the absent witness, it is error for the court to permit alleged statements of the witness, made out of court, to be introduced to impeach his evidence in the deposition, his attention at no time having been called thereto, and he having had no opportunity to explain them.—State v. Bartley, 48 Kan. 421, 29 Pac. 701.

[d] (Mo. 1882) Under Rev. St. § 1886, providing that, in criminal cases, facts which it is admitted an absent witness would swear to, if present, "may be contradicted by other evidence," etc., statements made by the absent witness, contradictory to the facts which it is admitted he would testify to, are not admissible.—State v. Hickman, 75 Mo. 416.

[e] (Wash. 1894) Defendant's affidavit for continuance set out, and the state conceded, that an absent witness would swear that, since the alleged seduction, prosecutrix had told her that she had had intercourse with a number of men, all of whom she assumed to name, and of whom defendant was not one. Held, that the state could not, at the close of the case, without notice to the defense, call a witness to testify that said absent witness had recently told him that she had never talked with prosecutrix about the case.—State v. Carter, 8 Wash. 272, 36 Pac. 29.

2. INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS OF ONE'S OWN WITNESS.

IN GENERAL, § 1214.
PARTY CALLED AS WITNESS BY ADVERSARY, § 1215.
WITNESS WHOM PARTY IS COMPELLED TO CALL, § 1216.
CROSS-EXAMINATION AS TO MATTER NOT SUBJECT OF DIRECT EXAMINATION, § 1217.
WITNESS FOR BOTH PARTIES, § 1218
EXAMINATION, § 1219.

Foundation of impeachment, see post, § 1236.

§ 1214. In general.

[a] A party cannot introduce testimony to prove that his own witness had at different times made declarations at variance with his testimony.

—(Ind. 1873) Kirts v. Spaugh, Wils. 267;
(Me. 1847) Chamberlain v. Sands, 27 Me. (14 Shep.) 458;
(Mass. 1852) Commonwealth v. Starkweather, 64 Mass. (10 Cush.) 59;
(N. J. 1840) Brewer v. Porch, 17 N. J. Law (2 Har.) 377;
(N. Y. 1850) Thompson v. Blanchard, 4 N. Y. (4 Comst.) 303; (1895) Mason v. Corbin, 88 Hun, 540, 34 N. Y. Supp. 773; —(Vt. 1882) Cox v. Eayres, 55 Vt. 24, 45 Am. Rep. 583.

[b] A party cannot be allowed to prove by witnesses inconsistent statements previously made by a witness called by himself, which would not be admissible as independent evidence, and can have no effect but to impair his credit with the jury.

—(Mass. 1867) Adams v. Wheeler, 97 Mass. 67;
(Pa. 1867) Stearns v. Merchants' Bank, 53 Pa. (3 P. F. Smith) 490.

[c] (U. S. 1894) Where defendant is surprised by the statement of his own witness, who, however, is not hostile, in respect to a matter not in itself prejudicial, and thereupon defendant is permitted to cross-examine him, and show the fact to be otherwise, the court may, in its discretion, refuse to allow defendant to further show by a third person that the witness had made a contradictory statement to him.—Hickory v. United States, 151 U. S. 303, 14 Sup. Ct. 334, 38 L. Ed. 170.

[d] (U. S. 1813) A party cannot discredit his own witness by proving that on a former occasion he swore differently from what he has now sworn.—United States v. Jones, Fed. Cas. No. 15,494 [3 Wash. C. C. 209].

[e] (U. S. 1847) On the question whether plaintiff's witness can be cross-examined by plaintiff to discredit himself by confessing on oath that he had made a different and inconsistent statement of the matter, held, that plaintiff cannot, for the purpose of impeaching the general character of his witness for veracity, give in evidence facts which would not be admissible upon a direct examination in chief.—Harris v. Berry, Fed. Cas. No. 6,115 [1 Hayw. & H. 272].

[f] (U. S. 1847) There is no difference in principle between giving general evidence of particular facts, the effect of which is to destroy the general character of the witness for veracity, and which would not be admissible for any other purpose.—Harris v. Berry, Fed. Cas. No. 6,115 [1 Hayw. & H. 272].

[g] (U. S. 1893) On trial of an indictment charging a violation of Act March 3, 1875, c. 141, § 3, 18 Stat. 477 [U. S. Comp St. 1901, p. 1286], forbidding the importation of women for purposes of prostitution, three of the women alleged to have been imported for such purpose, being called on behalf of the government, testified that they were not prostitutes. Held, that affidavits of such persons, taken before the commissioner of immigration, and their testimony on an examination before the United States commissioner, wherein they swore they were prostitutes, imported for purposes of prostitution, were admissible in evidence, opportunity having been given them to explain their affidavits.—United States v. Pagliano (C. C.) 53 Fed. 1001.

[gg] (Cal. 1874) When a witness who is called by a party does not testify to what the party expected, but does not give testimony against him, the party calling the witness is not permitted to prove that the witness had made statements to others, which, if testified to on the trial, would have tended to make out his case.—People v. Jacobs, 49 Cal. 384.

[h] (Cal. 1886) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2049, the prosecution is allowed to impeach his own witness by proving statements inconsistent with testimony.—People v. De Witt, 68 Cal. 584, 10 Pac. 212.

[hh] (Cal. 1892) A witness who fails merely to testify as expected cannot be impeached by the party calling him by proving that he had elsewhere made the desired statements, but this can only be done when he has given damaging testimony.—People v. Mitchell, 94 Cal. 550, 29 Pac. 1106.

[i] (Cal. 1894) A party whose witness testifies contrary to the way he has been led to believe he would do cannot prove that the witness had made prior statements to the contrary.—In re Kennedy's Estate, 104 Cal. 429, 38 Pac. 93.

[ii] (Ga. 1891) In a criminal prosecution the state cannot impeach its own witness by evidence of previous declarations by him at variance with his testimony, unless it has been deceived or entrapped by the witness.—Dixon v. State, 86 Ga. 754, 13 S. E. 87.

[j] (Ill. 1891) Although the rule is generally that a party may not discredit his own witness, there is an exception where the witness does not testify as he did on the preparatory examination, and his testimony is unfavorable.—National Syrup Co. v. Carlson, 42 Ill. App. 178.

[jj] (Ind. 1870) Code, § 244, authorizing proof of contradictory statements of a person's own witness if denied by the witness, does not apply to criminal cases.—Howard v. State, 32 Ind. 478.

[k] (Ind. 1889) Under Rev. St. 1881, § 507, allowing the party producing a witness to contradict him by showing that he had made statements different from his testimony, the state may show that a witness, who was called by the state, and testified that defendant did not strike the fatal blow, had stated that he did strike it.—Conway v. State, 118 Ind. 482, 21 N. E. 285.

[kk] (Ind. 1890) Rev. St. § 507, permits a party to impeach or contradict his own witness only when the testimony is a surprise, and is prejudicial; and where, in a suit for charging plaintiff with unchaste conduct, a witness produced by the defense was asked by defendant's attorney, if he ever had sexual intercourse with plaintiff, and answered that he had not, it was proper to exclude evidence of his declarations to the contrary.—Miller v. Cook, 124 Ind. 101, 24 N. E. 577.

[l] (Ky. 1859) Where a witness does not state any fact prejudicial to the party calling him, but only fails to prove facts supposed to be beneficial to the party, it is not a case within the reason or policy of the rule which allows the witness to be contradicted by evidence that he had previously stated the same facts to others.—Champ v. Commonwealth, 59 Ky. (2 Metc.) 17, 74 Am. Dec. 388.

[ll] (Ky. 1859) Where a party introduces a witness to prove certain facts, but the witness deposes that they did not transpire, he cannot, by way of discrediting the witness, prove by others that the witness had, on another occasion, in their presence, stated the facts in question, in effect to show that his witness had stated out of court facts which he failed to prove in court.—Champ v. Commonwealth, 59 Ky. (2 Metc.) 17, 74 Am. Dec. 388.

[m] (Ky. 1859) The right of a party to contradict his own witness by showing that he has made statements different from his present testimony does not depend on the ability of the party to prove in addition that the testimony of the witness is untrue.—Champ v. Commonwealth, 59 Ky. (2 Metc.) 17, 74 Am. Dec. 388.

[mm] (Ky. 1876) The rule against contradicting one's own witness does not forbid proving that he has made statements to other persons, out of court, inconsistent with his testimony.—Blackburn v. Commonwealth, 75 Ky. (12 Bush) 181.

[n] (La. 1855) A party cannot discredit his own witness without giving him an opportunity to explain anything which he may have stated inconsistent with his testimony.—McDowell v. General Mut. Ins. Co., 10 La. Ann. 16.

[nn] (La. 1895) The fact that a witness for the state stated an important fact on cross-examination on a second trial which he failed to state as witness on the former trial could not be used to impeach his testimony directly by the state.—State v. Vickers, 47 La. Ann. 1574, 18 South. 639.

[o] (Mass. 1852) A party may impeach his own witness by showing that he has made statements different from his present testimony.—Gould v. Norfolk Lead Co., 63 Mass. (9 Cush.) 338, 57 Am. Dec. 50.

[oo] (Mass. 1877) Although a party is not taken by surprise at the testimony of a witness called by him, he is entitled, under St. 1869, c. 425, to impeach such witness' credibility by showing he has, at other times, made statements inconsistent with his testimony.—Brooks v. Weeks, 121 Mass. 433.

[p] (Mass. 1882) A party to a suit may contradict his own witness on matter material to the issue, by showing inconsistent statements made at other times, having first called the witness' attention to such contradictory statements.—Commonwealth v. Donahoe, 133 Mass. 407.

[pp] (Minn. 1893) A party who has called a witness in his own behalf, and is surprised by his adverse testimony, may, in the discretion of the court, be allowed to show, after proper preliminary proof, that he had previously made statements contrary to his testimony.—Selover v. Bryant, 54 Minn. 434, 56 N. W. 58, 40 Am. St. Rep. 349, 21 L. R. A. 418.

[q] (Miss. 1893) The fact that a witness called by the state on a murder trial testifies that he has no knowledge of the murder does not justify the state in attempting to discredit him by showing previous contradictory statements, as in cases where surprise is asserted, or the testimony is material and adverse to the party calling.—Chism v. State, 70 Miss. 742, 12 South. 852.

[qq] (Mo. 1896) One cannot, on the ground of surprise, discredit his own witness by proof of contradictory statements previously made by him, where he has not shown that his witness ever told him she would testify she made the statements he desired to prove she had made, or that she ever, in fact, made the statements.—State v. Burks, 132 Mo. 363, 34 S. W. 48.

[r] (N. H. 1848) A tenant offered a deposition and the demandant offered another deposition of the same witness for the purpose of contradicting him. The questions were whether he had had a conversation with certain persons and made certain remarks which were specified. It was contended that the demandant, having taken the deposition, thereby made the witness his own witness and could not put such questions to him. Held, that the testimony stood as if the witness had been cross-examined on the stand, as the purpose was to detract by the further examination and by his own answers from the weight to which his original deposition would otherwise have been entitled.—Flanders v. Davis, 19 N. H. 139.

[rr] (N. H. 1873) Where, in an action, plaintiff called the son of defendant as a witness to prove a material fact, and such witness was hostile to the plaintiff and friendly to the defendant, plaintiff could show that the son had previously stated the facts in a different manner.—Smith v. Lucas, 53 N. H. 568.

[s] (Ohio, 1889) Where a witness denies having made statements out of court contrary to his testimony, or his answer is ambiguous concerning them, it is not competent for the party calling him to prove them by other witnesses.—Hurley v. State, 46 Ohio St. 320, 21 N. E. 645, 4 L. R. A. 161.

[ss] (Pa. 1810) Where a witness testifies against a party for whom he is called, it may be shown that he is mistaken, or has testified differently before.—Delisle v. Priestman, 1 Browne, 176.

[t] (Pa. 1839) Defendant, having called plaintiff's son as a witness, was not entitled to contradict his testimony by introducing evidence of his testimony before arbitrators ostensibly to discredit him, but in truth to operate as independent evidence.—Smith v. Price, 8 Watts, 447.

[tt] (Pa. 1868) On trial of an indictment for seduction, a witness called for the commonwealth destroyed its case by swearing that the character of the prosecutrix for chastity was not good. Held, that it was competent for the commonwealth to prove by another that the first witness had declared he knew sufficient to convict the defendant.—Commonwealth v. Lamberton, 2 Brewst. 565.

[u] (Pa. 1869) In a criminal prosecution, where the state calls a witness who proves to be hostile, the prosecution may prove what he said on a former occasion, not as evidence of the facts sought to be proven, but to show that he has made conflicting statements, and thus affect his credibility.—Commonwealth v. Marrow, 3 Brewst. 402.

[uu] (Pa. 1869) Where a witness for the commonwealth unexpectedly testified favorably to defendant, evidence of his testimony on defendant's examination before the mayor is admissible to affect his credit with the jury, though not proof of the facts stated therein.—Commonwealth v. Marra, 8 Phila. 440.

[v] (R. I. 1885) A party cannot be permitted to impeach his own witness by proof by other witnesses of prior contradictory statements, unless the witness is one whom the law obliges him to call.—Hildreth v. Aldrich, 15 R. I. 163, 1 Atl. 249.

[vv] (S. C. 1851) The defendant examined a witness to prove a fact which he failed to do. Held, that he could not give in evidence a letter of the witness, either to prove the fact or discredit the witness.—Bank of Kentucky v. Shier, 4 Rich. Law, 233.

[w] (S. C. 1876) The state cannot impeach its own witness by proving that he has made declarations out of court conflicting with those made on the examination.—State v. Jackson, 7 S. C. (7 Rich.) 283, 24 Am. Rep. 476.

[ww] (Tex. 1890) Under Code Cr. Proc. art. 755, allowing any party, when facts stated by his own witness are injurious to his cause, to attack his testimony in any manner except by proving his bad character, the state, in a prosecution for murder, may, where a witness introduced by it testifies that he heard deceased make threats against defendant, prove by other witnesses that he made contradictory statements as to such threats.—Self v. State, 28 Tex. App. 398, 13 S. W. 602.

[x] (Tex. 1890) Where witnesses, introduced by the state, testify to facts injurious to the prosecution, their testimony may be impeached by showing that they had made statements in contradiction thereof.—Thompson v. State, 29 Tex. App. 208, 15 S. W. 206.

[xx] (Tex. 1891) Where witness in a criminal case, at prior hearings, made contradictory statements, it is not competent for defendant, having called such witness, to impeach him.—Scott v. State (Cr. App.) 20 S. W. 549.

[y] (Tex. 1891) On a trial for murder, where a witness testified that defendant, within a few minutes after the homicide, made a statement to him as to the manner of the killing, in which he claimed it to have been accidental, it was proper for the state to show that such witness stated to the district attorney on the morning of the trial that the statement made by defendant was on the day following the homicide, though the state had made such witness its own.—Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 21 S. W. 369.

[yy] (Tex. 1894) On a trial of a person for knowingly permitting his house to be used as a disorderly house, the state cannot impeach one of its own witnesses, who testified that he did not inform defendant of the character of the inmates, by showing that he had made contradictory statements out of court.—Erwin v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 519, 24 S. W. 904.

[z] (Vt. 1890) Where the court holds that a "witness' testimony" is adverse, "within the meaning of the statute relating to the impeachment of adverse witnesses," and permits the party offering such witness to show contrary statements made at other times, it is fair to presume that the court regarded the witness himself adverse, and not his testimony merely.—Hurlburt v. Hurlburt's Estate, 63 Vt. 667, 22 Atl. 850.

[zz] (Wis. 1892) In trover against officers for the seizure of plaintiff's property on execution against a third person, adverse evidence given by the execution debtor as a witness for defendants cannot be impeached by evidence on their part of prior statements made by him at variance therewith, and tending to show fraud in plaintiff's title, since a party cannot impeach his own witness.—Welcome v. Mitchell, 81 Wis. 566, 51 N. W. 1080, 29 Am. St. Rep. 913.

§ 1215. Party called as witness by adversary.

Right to impeach, in general, see ante, § 1097.

[a] (Ala. 1874) Where a party takes the deposition of his adversary as a witness and reads it in evidence on the trial, he may adduce other evidence of the facts to which such witness has testified, although it may contradict his testimony.—Warren v. Gabriel, 51 Ala. 235.

[b] (Cal. 1895) On an issue between a grantee and a creditor of the grantor as to whether the deed was given as security, where the creditor called the grantor, who testified that the sale was absolute, it was error to allow another witness for the creditor to testify that the grantor told him he conveyed the land as security.—Hyde v. Buckner, 108 Cal. 522, 41 Pac. 416.

[c] (Ind. 1891) In a suit to set aside conveyances by defendant to his son and daughter as fraudulent, it appeared that defendant had been prosecuted criminally for libel by the plaintiff. Defendant, testifying for plaintiff, being asked if he had not stated to a certain person about the time the conveyances were made that he knew a civil suit was to be brought, and for that reason he had not pleaded guilty, replied that he had had no such conversation. Held, that it was within the discretion of the court, under Rev. St. 1881, § 507, allowing the contradiction of a witness by the party introducing him on the ground of surprise, to admit evidence of the person impeaching defendant by showing that he had made the statements.—Miller v. Cook, 127 Ind. 339, 26 N. E. 1072.

[d] (Iowa, 1893) A party is not precluded from proving material statements made by the opposite party at other times by calling him as a witness, nor because such party is present in court.—Thomas v. McDaneld, 88 Iowa, 374, 55 N. W. 499.

[e] (Kan. 1896) The fact that a party to an action in which the bona fides of a transaction is in question uses his adversary as a witness does not preclude him from showing that the adversary had made statements contradictory of his testimony as original evidence of his admissions.—Griffis v. Whitson, 3 Kan. App. 437, 43 Pac. 813.

[f] (Mich. 1871) Where the plaintiff has called the defendant as a witness to prove his signature to the instrument sued on, and the defendant has testified that the signature resembles his handwriting, but that he could not swear it was his, and when asked if he remembered what he testified to at a former trial replied that he testified the same as on the present trial, it was competent for the plaintiff to prove by another witness what the defendant testified to on such former trial, over objection that it tended to contradict or impeach the defendant whom the plaintiff had made his own witness.—Gibbs v. Linabury, 22 Mich. 479, 7 Am. Rep. 675.

[g] (N. Y. 1856) Where a defendant calls the adverse party as a witness, and thereby represents him as worthy of credit, he is precluded from denying it by introducing evidence for the purpose of impeaching him by showing that he had made previous contradictory statements.—Pickard v. Collins, 23 Barb. 444.

[h] (N. Y. 1881) In an action against the former members of a firm which had been dissolved, one of the defendants, who had not appeared in the action, was called as a witness for plaintiff, and was subsequently called and examined as a witness for the defendant, who appeared and answered. Held, that it was not competent for plaintiff to prove, by way of impeachment, declarations of the witness, made after the dissolution of the firm, in conflict with his testimony as a witness for the defense.—Nichols v. White, 85 N. Y. 531.

[l] (N. Y. 1894) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 838, providing that the testimony of a party, taken at the instance of the adverse party orally or by deposition, may be rebutted by other evidence, plaintiff, after taking defendant's deposition, may show statements by defendant contradictory to the statements in the deposition.—Kelly v. Jay, 79 Hun, 535, 29 N. Y. Supp. 933.

[j] (Vt. 1891) Where, in an action against the owner and the tenant of a farm for labor performed thereon, plaintiff claims that he was hired by the tenant as agent for the owner, and the tenant, called by plaintiff as a witness, denies that he was agent, plaintiff cannot show that the tenant made former contrary statements, under Rev. Laws, § 1009, which provides that a party to a civil action may compel an adverse party to testify in his behalf, "in the same manner, and subject to the same rules, as other witnesses."—Good v. Knox, 64 Vt. 97, 23 Atl. 520.

§ 1216. Witness whom party is compelled to call.

Right to impeach in general, see ante, § 1095.

[a] (Pa. 1820) A party compelled to call the attesting witness to a bond as a witness may impeach his testimony that the bond was a printed blank when he and the obligors signed it by proof of declarations to the contrary.—Sigfried v. Levan, 6 Serg. & R. 308, 9 Am. Dec. 427.

[b] (Tenn. 1869) As under the law a proponent of a will is compelled to put a subscribing witness on the stand, he is entitled to impeach the witness, if he denies the execution, by showing contradictory statements.—Alexander v. Beadle, 47 Tenn. (7 Cold.) 126.

Conclusiveness of answers, see post, § 1244.
Right to impeach, in general, see ante, § 1098.

[a] (Me. 1851) Where a party calls the subscribing witness to prove the execution of an instrument, who is cross-examined, he is not precluded from proving by other persons that such witness had elsewhere made statements at variance from his testimony given on such cross-examination.—Shorey v. Hussey, 32 Me. 579.

[b] (N. Y. 1891) Where a party on cross-examination interrogates a witness as to matter concerning which the witness did not testify in chief, such party makes the testimony so elicited part of his own case, and cannot afterwards show that the witness had made statements in conflict therewith.—Hill v. Froehlick, 60 Hun, 580, 14 N. Y. Supp. 610.

[c] (Vt. 1867) The proponent of a contested will produced the three subscribing witnesses, and examined two, but declined to examine the third. On the order of the court, however, he examined the witness, but only as to the formality of the execution of the will. On cross-examination, the witness stated that the decedent was of unsound mind at the time of the execution of the will. Held, that he could be impeached by proving that his previous declarations were to the effect that the decedent was of sound mind at the time in question.—Thornton's Ex'rs v. Thornton's Heirs, 39 Vt. 122.

Right to impeach, in general, see ante, § 1100.

[a] (Colo. 1874) The party calling a witness cannot afterwards assail his general character for truth or the testimony drawn from the witness by him. But the rule does not extend to testimony drawn from the same witness by the opposite party, and where the government first called a witness and afterwards the same witness was called on another point by the prisoner, the government was permitted to ask whether, in relation to the matters drawn from him by the prisoner, he had not given a different account of the matter at another time and place.—Jones v. People, 2 Colo. 351.

[b] (N. H. 1870) Where a witness for plaintiff, on being subsequently recalled by defendant, gave testimony unfavorable to plaintiff, the plaintiff, on submitting evidence tending to show that he was surprised and that there was no collusion or bad faith on his part, was then entitled to prove that the witness had previously made oath before the plaintiff's counsel to statements contradictory to his testimony.—Hurlburt v. Bellows, 50 N. H. 105.

[c] (N. Y. 1874) A party cannot impeach his own witness, though subsequently called as a witness for the adverse party, by proof of contradictory statements out of court.—Coulter v. American Merchants' Union Exp. Co., 56 N. Y. 585.

[d] (Vt. 1853) In a suit against an officer for not collecting and returning an execution, one defense was that the town agent had agreed to control the execution. The agent was not offered by the plaintiffs to prove that he did not control the execution, but upon that point the agent was made a witness by the defendant. Held that, the defendant having made the agent his own witness upon this point, it would not be competent for him to offer testimony to prove that the agent had made declarations out of court inconsistent with his testimony upon this point.—Town of Barnard v. Henry, 25 Vt. 289.

[e] (Wis. 1892) A witness for the prosecution was afterwards made a witness for defendant, and interrogated in relation to a matter foreign to his testimony for the prosecution. His answer not being satisfactory, other testimony was offered to show that witness had made different statements out of court concerning the same matter, which was excluded. Held, the exclusion was proper.—Richards v. State, 82 Wis. 172, 51 N. W. 652.

§ 1219. Examination.

Refreshing memory by inquiry as to former statements, see ante, § 870.
—— testimony, see ante, §§ 885, 886.

[a] (Ala. 1853) A party may ask his own witness if he has not previously made statements inconsistent with what he has just stated on the trial.—Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44.

[b] (Ala. 1874) A party may ask his own witness whether on a former occasion he has not made statements inconsistent with his testimony on the trial.—Hemingway v. Garth, 51 Ala. 530.

[c] (Ala. 1886) A party, for the purpose of laying the foundation for impeachment of his own witness, cannot ask him if he has not made previous contradictory statements.—Gandy v. State, 81 Ala. 68, 1 South. 35.

[d] (Ala. 1888) A party may ask his witness if he has not made statements inconsistent with his testimony, provided the question is not for the sole purpose of impeachment.—White v. State, 87 Ala. 24, 5 South. 829.

[e] (Ala. 1891) On indictment for murder, a state's witness, who, in answer to a question by the state's attorney, answers that defendant did not threaten to commit the crime, may be asked if she did not, before the examination, make a different statement to the attorney.—Griffith v. State, 90 Ala. 583, 8 South. 812.

[f] (Colo. 1889) Where, in a murder trial, a witness for the state testifies that just before the homicide deceased had put his hand in his hip pocket, and that when deceased was found immediately after the shooting, he still had his hand in such pocket, the prosecuting attorney may ask if he so testified at the coroner's inquest, over objection that he should not be allowed to impeach or cross-examine his own witness.—Babcock v. People, 13 Colo. 515, 22 Pac. 817.

[g] (D. C. 1894) The extent to which a party, calling a witness who deceives or disappoints him, should have the right to examine him as to former contradictory statements, is largely in the trial judge's discretion, subject only to review for manifest error.—Weaver v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 22 Wash. Law Rep. 393.

[h] (D. C. 1894) Where a witness testifies contrary to expectation it is not error to refuse to allow him to be asked whether he did not testify differently on a former trial.—Weaver v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 3 App. D. C. 436.

[i] (Iowa, 1879) On indictment for murder, a witness for the state testified that on the morning of deceased's disappearance defendant (his father) told deceased that he must go to M. with him, to hear what he (deceased) had said to saloonkeepers there about defendant getting drink from them, and that at the time there was no difficulty between defendant and deceased. The state then asked the witness if defendant had not told deceased that he (deceased) had been to M. and forbidden saloon keepers to give defendant liquor, and that he (defendant) would see who was boss. Held, that the question was not objectionable as an attempt by the state to impeach its own witness.—State v. Feltes, 51 Iowa, 495, 1 N. W. 755.

[j] (Iowa, 1881) Plaintiff's attorney cannot cross-examine his own witness by asking if the witness did not relate the matter differently to him before the trial.—Darland v. Rosencrans, 56 Iowa, 122, 8 N. W. 776.

[k] (Iowa, 1886) Where a party is surprised by the testimony of his own witness, he may ask him if he did not previously make a different statement to a person named, at a specified time and place, in order to aid the witness to recollect the truth.—Humble v. Shoemaker, 70 Iowa, 223, 30 N. W. 492.

[l] (Iowa, 1888) A party may, on direct examination, to refresh the recollection of his witness, inquire if he has not at another time testified to facts inconsistent with his present testimony.—State v. Cummins, 76 Iowa, 133, 40 N. W. 124.

[m] (Kan. 1893) One is not conclusively bound by the statements which his own witness may make; and, if he has been deceived by an artful or hostile witness, he may examine such witness as to whether he had not previously made contrary statements, and may, in the discretion of the court, be permitted to show what such contrary statements were.—State v. Sortor, 52 Kan. 531, 34 Pac. 1036.

[n] (Mass. 1855) A witness who has testified in chief that he does not know certain facts, not bearing upon any question pertinent to the issue, cannot, although he shows a disposition to conceal what he knows, be asked by the party calling him whether he did not, on a former occasion, swear to his knowledge of those facts.—Commonwealth v. Welsh, 70 Mass. (4 Gray) 535.

[o] (Minn. 1890) Where, on an indictment for forgery, the state attempts to prove the crime by the person whose name was forged, and he appears to be hostile and unwilling to tell the truth, he may be asked whether he had not before stated facts to the prosecuting attorney which were contrary to his testimony at the trial.—State v. Tall, 43 Minn. 273, 45 N. W. 449.

[p] (Miss. 1881) A plaintiff who calls witnesses who testify that they were not present when he was injured cannot, to impeach their credibility, ask them if they have stated otherwise.—Moore v. Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co., 59 Miss. 243.

[q] (N. Y. 1847) It is not competent for a party to discredit a witness, called and examined by him, by asking him whether he had not made statements upon another occasion contradictory to the testimony which he had given.—People v. Safford, 5 Denio, 112.

[r] (N. Y. 1859) It is not competent for a party calling a witness to ask him whether he had not previously made a certain statement on oath before the coroner's inquest, the alleged statement being repeated in the question, and differing from the testimony of the witness on the trial.—People v. Sanchez, 18 How. Prac. 72; Sanchez v. People, 4 Parker, Cr. R. 535.

[rr] (N. Y. 1860) The prisoner called his wife as a witness. After she had answered certain questions he proposed to ask her if she had not testified directly the opposite before the coroner, but he was not allowed thus to discredit his own witness.—Sanchez v. People, 22 N. Y. 147.

[s] (N. Y. 1887) Where the testimony of a witness called by plaintiff took her by surprise, it was proper to allow her to probe the witness' recollection by questions as to former statements.—Wright v. Grant, 6 N. Y. St. Rep. 862.

[ss] (N. Y. 1889) In an action by a servant against his master for damages caused by a falling elevator, witness for defendant having testified that he "could not say how a piece of board was torn off," was asked by defendant's counsel, "Did you not testify on the last trial that the wagon [of the elevator] jumped against the gate, and cut off the gate?" Held, that it was within the discretion of the court to exclude the question as an attempt by defendant to impeach his own witness.—Kern v. De Castro & Donner Sugar Refining Co. (City Ct. Brook.) 5 N. Y. Supp. 548, judgment reversed (1890) 125 N. Y. 50, 25 N. E. 1071.

[t] (N. Y. 1889) Where a witness testifies as to a former statement, "I might have sworn to it," the party calling him cannot ask, "If you did so swear, was it true?" as the effect of such question is to discredit his own witness.—Morris v. Wells, 54 Hun, 634, 7 N. Y. Supp. 61.

[tt] (N. Y. 1891) Where a witness for the prosecution who testified before the grand jury manifests on the trial a disposition to favor the defendant, the prosecution may not call his attention to his testimony before the grand jury for the purpose of impeaching him.—People v. Sherman, 61 Hun, 623, 16 N. Y. Supp. 782, judgment affirmed (1892) 133 N. Y. 349, 31 N. E. 107.

[u] (N. Y. 1892) Where a witness for the prosecution, who, when before the grand jury, gave important evidence against defendant, testifies differently on the trial of the indictment found, and it is shown that since testifying before the grand jury he has talked with defendant in regard to his testimony, the prosecuting attorney may call his attention to his testimony before the grand jury, for the purpose of refreshing his memory, though not for the purpose of impeaching him.—People v. Sherman, 133 N. Y. 349, 31 N. E. 107, affirming (1891) 61 Hun, 623, 16 N. Y. Supp. 782.

[uu] (N. C. 1823) A witness cannot be asked if he has not, in conversation, stated the facts otherwise than as he now deposes.—State v. Simpson, 9 N. C. 580.

[v] (N. D. 1895) Where a witness disproved the case of the party who called him, to that party's surprise, he may be asked whether he did not make a statement to such party conflicting with his testimony, and which, if proved, would tend to prove such party's case.—George v. Triplett, 5 N. D. 50, 63 N. W. 891.

[vv] (Or. 1890) Civ. Code, § 883, which authorizes the party producing a witness to contradict him by other evidence, and to show that the witness has made at other times statements inconsistent with his present testimony, does not entitle the party producing the witness to inquire of him as to his having made statements at other times which are not connected with his present testimony, nor to inquire about his having made statements at other times regarding matters upon which he is examined, but concerning which he denies any knowledge, except for the purpose of refreshing the witness' recollection as to such matters.—Langford v. Jones, 18 Or. 307, 22 Pac. 1064.

[w] (Pa. 1862) Where a list of items was taken out by counsel from the testimony of a witness on the trial of the same case before arbitrators, and the witness, being called by defendant, stated that at the arbitration he gave a particular account of the items of loss, it was not error to refuse to permit the defendant to ask witness whether the list then shown to him as taken down at the arbitration was a correct statement, in order to discredit the witness.—Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Updegraff, 43 Pa. (7 Wright) 350.

[ww] (Pa. 1892) Where the evidence of a witness is a surprise to the party calling him, the trial judge, in the exercise of a sound discretion, may permit him to be cross-examined by such party to show that his previous statements and conduct were at variance with his testimony.—McNerney v. City of Reading, 150 Pa. 611, 25 Atl. 57, 30 Wkly. Notes Cas. 534.

[x] (R. I. 1885) Where a party who is disappointed in his witness asks him if he has not made contradictory statements, for the purpose of refreshing his recollection, and his recollection is not refreshed, the contradictory statements cannot be proved by other witnesses.—Hildreth v. Aldrich, 15 R. I. 163, 1 Atl. 249.

[xx] (Tex. 1881) A party may impeach his own witness in any manner except by proving his bad character; and if, upon a former trial, he has made statements contrary to those made on the pending trial, he may be interrogated concerning them.—White v. State, 10 Tex. App. 381.

[y] (Tex. 1893) In an action on an account against S. and others, alleged to be members of the firm of H. & Co., it is error to refuse to allow plaintiff to ask H., an admitted partner, who had testified denying that S. was a partner, whether a previous written statement made by him, naming S. as a partner, was true or false, even though the witness was called by plaintiff.—Newberger v. Heintze, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 259, 22 S. W. 867.

[yy] (Wis. 1891) When a witness for the state was asked if he had seen defendant on the day and near the place where the crime was committed, which he denied, it was within the discretion of the court to allow the state's attorney to ask if he had not so stated to others, and to put leading questions on the subject.—Schuster v. State, 80 Wis. 107, 49 N. W. 30.

[z] (Wyo. 1895) The fact that answers to questions addressed to a hostile witness as to previous statements made by him for the purpose of making him conform his testimony to his former statements, or to show grounds for calling him as a witness, tend to impeach his credibility as a witness, will not render such answers incompetent.—Arnold v. State, 5 Wyo. 439, 40 Pac. 967.

[zz] (Wyo. 1895) It is within the discretion of the court to allow the prosecution, on being surprised by adverse testimony from one of its witnesses, to proceed to examine such witness as to previous statements, to induce him to make his testimony consistent with them, and to show the reason the prosecution had for calling him.—Arnold v. State, 5 Wyo. 439, 40 Pac. 967.

3. NATURE OF STATEMENTS OR TESTIMONY, AND EXTENT OF INCONSISTENCY.

NATURE AND RELEVANCY OF STATEMENT, ADMISSION, OR DECLARATION IN GENERAL, § 1220.
— TIME OF MAKING STATEMENTS AND CIRCUMSTANCES CONNECTED THEREWITH, § 1221.
— STATEMENTS BY THIRD PERSONS IN PRESENCE OF WITNESS, § 1222.
TESTIMONY SUBJECT TO IMPEACHMENT IN GENERAL, § 1223.
IRRELEVANT, COLLATERAL, OR IMMATERIAL MATTERS, § 1224.
OPINIONS, § 1225.
NECESSITY, NATURE, AND EXTENT OF INCONSISTENCY, § 1226.
PROOF OF OMISSIONS IN FORMER TESTIMONY, § 1227.

§ 1220. Nature and relevancy of statement, admission, or declaration in general.

[a] (U. S. 1802) The declarations of a witness not under oath may be given in evidence to discredit his testimony.—Harper v. Reily, Fed. Cas. No. 6,091 [1 Cranch, C. C. 100].

[b] (Ill. 1872) The credibility of a witness may be affected by contradictory testimony without showing that his statements are intentionally false or material to the issue. Proof that he has, on former occasions, made statements at variance with his testimony on the trial, has a direct tendency to impeach his veracity or his memory.—Craig v. Rohrer, 63 Ill. 325.

[c] (Iowa, 1887) Defendant, who was unable to read English, set up as a defense in an action for the purchase price of a machine, that he signed the contract relying on the representations of plaintiff's agent as to its contents, and those representations were false and fraudulent. The testimony which made most strongly for plaintiff was that of the agent. Defendant offered to show that, when the agent had ridden about a mile from where the order was given, he was asked by a companion why he had not read the order to defendant, and that he replied: "B—, I got the old man fast. If he had known just everything in that order, I don't believe I could have got him to sign it." Held, that the evidence, though not a part of the res gestæ, was admissible in impeachment of the agent as a witness.—Esterly v. Eppelsheimer, 73 Iowa, 260, 34 N. W. 846.

[d] (Ky. 1889) Where an agent of a carrier charged with conversion of goods testified that he had delivered them, it was competent to give evidence of a conversation between the agent and the plaintiff, in which the former had admitted that he had failed to deliver the goods, by way of contradiction.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Lawson, 88 Ky. 496, 11 S. W. 511.

evidence is admissible for defendant that he had made declarations inconsistent with his testimony, though such declarations were made after the representations and sale of stock to plaintiff.—Masterton v. Boyce, 53 Hun, 630, 6 N. Y. Supp. 65.

[j] (N. Y. 1894) A statement made by a witness out of court, inconsistent with his testimony, is admissible to contradict him, though it may not be admissible as a declaration against the interest of the party who called the witness, because it was not made in the presence of such party.—Frankel v. Wolf (Com. Pl.) 7 Misc. Rep. 190, 27 N. Y. Supp. 328.

[k] (N. C. 1884) The confession or declaration of a witness made before the trial of another for a crime may be used to contradict the testimony given by such witness on the trial. If it was made under improper influences, this goes, not to its competency, but to its credibility.—State v. Mills, 91 N. C. 581.

[l] (Pa. 1894) For the purpose of impeaching a witness, acts and declarations of his, inconsistent with his testimony that land standing in his name was the property of his wife, are admissible, though they were not in the presence of his wife.—Miller v. Baker, 160 Pa. 172, 28 Atl. 648, 34 Wkly. Notes Cas. 249.

[m] (Pa. 1895) In an action against a firm for goods sold, where the only defendant who answered set up that the goods were sold to his partner, who contributed them to the firm, as her share of the assets, and her husband, who managed the firm's business, testified that the goods were sold to the firm, and not to his wife, it was error to exclude evidence that in a statement of the firm's assets made by the husband the goods were entered as a contribution by the wife to the firm's assets, and that the husband had represented that they were so contributed, as such evidence was admissible on the question of the husband's credibility, though the statements were made in plaintiff's absence.—Frack v. Gerber, 167 Pa. 316, 31 Atl. 640, 36 Wkly. Notes Cas. 230.

[n] (Tex.) In a proceeding to contest a conveyance as fraudulent, the purchaser having used the vendor as a witness to prove good faith, declarations of the witness subsequent to the conveyance were held admissible to contradict him.—(1860) Garahy v. Bayley, 25 Tex. Supp. 294; (1887) Weiss v. Oliver (Sup.) 7 S. W. 47.

[o] (Tex. 1881) That previous statements of a witness were made at a time when he was under arrest held no ground for a refusal to admit evidence of them for the purpose of impeaching his testimony.—Reyes v. State, 10 Tex. App. 1.

[p] (Tex. 1889) On a trial for murder, evidence of confessions made by a witness for defendant while she was under arrest, charged with complicity in the same crime, is admissible to impeach her, though the evidence is such as, by statute, would not be admissible on trial of the witness, who has been previously acquitted, and though as to defendant such confessions were hearsay.—Hawkins v. State, 27 Tex. App. 273, 11 S. W. 409.

[q] (Tex. 1894) Where a witness testifies on the examining trial, and is cross-examined, and soon becomes insane, his declarations made after giving such testimony are inadmissible on the trial to impeach that testimony then introduced.—Stewart v. State (Cr. App.) 26 S. W. 203.

[r] (Wis. 1888) Where a witness has been questioned in regard to statements contradictory of his testimony, evidence of the statements is admissible to impeach his credibility, though made after the occurrence which is the subject-matter of the suit.—Welch v. Abbott, 72 Wis. 512, 40 N. W. 223.

§ 1222. —— Statements by third persons in presence of witness.

[a] (Kan. 1887) The credit of a witness may be impeached by showing that the statements made in his presence by another, and which were assented to and adopted by him as his own, are contrary to what he has testified at the trial.—State v. McGaffin, 36 Kan. 315, 13 Pac. 560.

[b] (Kan. 1887) On a prosecution for murder, the exclusion of testimony showing that statements made in the presence of a witness, which were assented to and adopted by him as his own, are contrary to what he has testified at the trial, where the conviction rests largely upon the evidence given by the witness sought to be impeached, is material error, for which the judgment should be reversed.—State v. McGaffin, 36 Kan. 315, 13 Pac. 560.

[c] (N. H. 1890) In an action against a town to recover damages for injuries received from a defective highway, where plaintiff's husband testifies that he found a great many loose stones in the highway, defendant may show, by a witness who was present with the husband at the place of the accident soon after it happened, that she (the witness) said to him, "There are no stones in the road," and that he made no reply.—Judd v. Town of Claremont, 66 N. H. 418, 23 Atl. 427.

[d] (N. C. 1853) Where a solicitor for the state on the trial asserts on the authority of a witness, who is present, a matter material to the issue, and afterwards such witness testifies differently, the testimony may be received for the purpose of showing the inconsistency of the statements and thereby discrediting the witness.—State v. McQueen, 46 N. C. 177.

[e] (S. C. 1891) A witness for the prosecution testified, on cross-examination, that he had made about the same statements on a former trial, and was then asked why he had told certain persons that he had been made to swear lies on that trial, and answered that he had not told them any such thing. He was then asked if one of said persons did not say to him that he ought to be put in the penitentiary, and made to break rock the rest of his life. Held, that the question was properly excluded, since the answer sought was hearsay, and the issue was collateral.—State v. Wyse, 33 S. C. 582, 12 S. E. 556.

§ 1223. Testimony subject to impeachment in general.

[a] (Ala. 1845) Where a witness denied that in a certain transaction which was drawn in question, he acted as the plaintiff's agent, it was competent to prove, in order to impair the effect of his testimony, that he had made contradictory statements upon other occasions.—Strawbridge v. Spann, 8 Ala. 820.

[b] (Ala. 1888) On a trial for rape, where a witness has testified as to the complaints made to her by prosecutrix, defendant can impeach the witness by showing contradictory statements by her as to such complaints.—Allen v. State, 87 Ala. 107, 6 South. 370.

[c] (Ga. 1892) It was alleged that decedent was killed by defendant's freight agent, while transacting business with him, and that he was incompetent and dangerous because his mind was diseased. Held, that the testimony of a witness that he had never felt uneasy in the agent's presence, and that he was surprised to hear of the killing, was a sufficient foundation for evidence in rebuttal that, when he heard of the killing, he said he was not surprised, and that he was always afraid and uneasy about the agent.—Christian v. Columbus & R. Ry. Co., 90 Ga. 124, 15 S. E. 701; Columbus & R. Ry. Co. v. Christian, Id.

[d] (Ind. 1883) On a trial for selling intoxicating liquor to a minor, the character of the liquor is material, and defendant's testimony may be contradicted by evidence that he testified differently at a previous trial as to its character.—Nuzum v. State, 88 Ind. 599.

[e] (Mass. 1859) A party to a suit testified on cross-examination that "he did not know but that" the reputation for truth and veracity of one of his witnesses was good. Held, that this did not authorize the other party to put in evidence affidavits and depositions taken by this plaintiff in a former action against this witness, containing testimony that the reputation of the witness in this respect was bad.—Grant v. Lewis, 80 Mass. (14 Gray) 189.

[f] (Mass. 1863) In an action to recover the price of goods sold by an agent, in which one ground of defense is that the goods were sold with an express agreement, assented to by the principal, that the purchaser should only be responsible to the agent, with whom a settlement for them has been made, if the agent in his testimony has denied that such a settlement has been made, he may be contradicted by showing that in letters written by him he has made different statements.—Hamilton Woolen Co. v. Goodrich, 88 Mass. (6 Allen) 191.

[g] (Mass. 1875) In an action for libel in publishing a statement that plaintiff's husband had heard from intercepted letters that plaintiff had planned to elope with a certain man, in which defendant sets up the truth of the publication in defense, plaintiff's husband, who testifies on cross-examination that he never intercepted any such letters or letter, and never told any one that he had done so, may be contradicted or impeached by testimony of other witnesses that he had told them substantially that he had taken such a letter from the post office, and opened and read it, stating the contents thereof to the witness, as the question whether the husband had intercepted the letters was material.—Woodard v. Eastman, 118 Mass. 403.

[h] (Mass. 1876) Where all the testimony of a witness, having any bearing upon the case, is stricken out because given under a misapprehension of his privilege, the party calling him cannot, under St. 1869, c. 425, afterwards put in evidence his declarations or admissions to contradict him.—Mayo v. Mayo, 119 Mass. 290.

[i] (Minn. 1868) In a controversy involving the bona fides of a transfer of goods, the testimony of witnesses as to the amount and nature of the alleged consideration thereof is material to the issue, and may be impeached by contradictory statements made by the witnesses out of court on those points.—Hicks v. Stone, 13 Minn. 434 (Gil. 398).

[j] (Neb. 1895) In an action for breach of marriage promise, where defendant's witness, on cross-examination, denied having said that plaintiff admitted to witness that she had led an immoral life, it was proper to permit plaintiff's witness to testify that defendant's witness had told him that plaintiff made such confession, as the alleged confession was not a collateral issue in the case.—Stratton v. Dole, 45 Neb. 472, 63 N. W. 875.

[k] (N. H. 1890) In an action against a town to recover damages for injuries received from a defective highway, where a witness, who was the first to discover plaintiff after the accident, testifies when and how he found her, defendant may prove statements made by such witness a few days after the accident, which are inconsistent with his testimony.—Judd v. Town of Claremont, 66 N. H. 418, 23 Atl. 427.

[l] (N. Y. 1887) In an action for slander in charging defendant with having committed the crime of abortion, a witness for defendant having testified that plaintiff had committed abortion on her person, statements by her inconsistent with such testimony might be proven, the evidence given by her not being collateral, but on the main issue.—Calkins v. Colburn, 10 N. Y. St. Rep. 778.

[m] (Tex. 1893) On a trial for murder committed in an attempt to rob a train, where defendant has testified that the conspiracy to rob was formed in a certain part of the country, and not in the penitentiary, the state may impeach him by proving his declarations that it was formed while he and his co-conspirator were confined in the penitentiary.—May v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 74, 24 S. W. 910.

[n] (Tex. 1895) On a trial for assault, evidence that the prosecutor promised not to prosecute if paid a certain sum was admissible, the prosecutor having first denied making such offer.—Richards v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 277, 30 S. W. 229.

[o] (Tex. 1896) Where a witness for the state testifies that he suggested a certain thing which it is for the interest of the state to show was suggested by another, it may impeach him by showing that he stated to others that it was suggested by such other person.—Kirk v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 224, 32 S. W. 1045.

§ 1224. Irrelevant, collateral, or immaterial matters.

Scope of cross-examination for purpose of laying foundation for showing inconsistent statements, see post, § 1237.

[a] To impeach a witness by showing that he has made contradictory statements, the statements must be material to the issue.

—(Ala. 1882) Callan v. McDaniel, 72 Ala. 96; (1893) Burney v. Torrey, 100 Ala. 157, 14 South. 685, 46 Am. St. Rep. 33;

(Cal. 1881) People v. Furtado, 57 Cal. 345;

(Colo. 1894) Torris v. People, 19 Colo. 438, 36 Pac. 153; Denver Tramway Co. v. Owens, 20 Colo. 107, 36 Pac. 848;

(Ind. 1882) Zonker v. Cowan, 84 Ind. 395;

(Kan. 1894) State v. Ray, 54 Kan. 160, 37 Pac. 996;

(Mich. 1887) McDonald v. McDonald, 67 Mich. 122, 34 N. W. 276;

(Minn. 1868) Hicks v. Stone, 13 Minn. 434 (Gil. 398);

(Mo. 1896) State v. Taylor, 134 Mo. 109, 35 S. W. 92;

(Tex. 1876) Henderson v. State, 1 Tex. App. 432.

[b] (Ala. 1848) Where a witness testifies to facts showing payment of the demand in suit, and other certain demands not in suit, it is not competent to produce one of the claims not in suit, to which he referred as having been paid, upon which was a credit, for the purpose of discrediting the witness.—Hadjo v. Gooden, 13 Ala. 718.

[c] (Ala. 1885) Previous contradictory statements, whether made under oath or not, are inadmissible to impeach a witness, unless they relate to some matters material to the issue on trial.—Steinhardt v. Bell, 80 Ala. 208.

[d] (Ala. 1894) On a criminal trial, a witness for the state cannot be impeached by proving contradictory statements by him out of court as to immaterial matters.—Orr v. State, 107 Ala. 85, 18 South. 142.

[e] (Ga. 1892) Contradictory statements of a witness previously made by him, as to matters not relevant to his testimony and to the case, not being admissible to discredit him, a witness who testifies that he was not present at the homicide, and knew nothing about it until afterwards informed, cannot be discredited by proof of his declarations, made after such information was acquired, and tending to show that he had apprehended and given warning of such and such consequences if a certain witness was dealt with in a certain manner.—Futch v. State, 90 Ga. 472, 16 S. E. 102.

[f] (Ind. 1820) Where a witness has made statements contradictory to those told in court, and such contradictory statements relate to facts irrelevant and immaterial, the testimony ought not to be admitted to impeach the credit of the witness.—Shields v. Cunningham, 1 Blackf. 86.

[g] (Ind. 1895) The testimony of a witness can be impeached by proving statements made by him out of court, contradictory to his testimony on the stand, only when such testimony relates to a material matter in issue.—Blough v. Parry, 144 Ind. 463, 40 N. E. 70.

[h] (Ky. 1895) On a trial for murder, a witness having testified that he did not see the shooting, it was error to permit persons to testify that the witness told them out of court that he saw the shooting, and showed them the place where it was done.—Saylor v. Commonwealth, 33 S. W. 185.

[i] (Mass. 1861) A certified copy of a complaint from the record of proceedings in a police court is competent for the purpose of contradicting the testimony of the complainant at the trial before the jury in material matters; but it is not competent, if time does not enter into the nature of the offense charged, for the purpose of showing that the time of committing it, as therein alleged, was different from that now testified to by him.—Commonwealth v. Goddard, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 148.

[j] (Mass. 1877) Under St. 1869, c. 425, allowing the party who produces a witness to prove by other evidence not material for any other purpose that he has made at other times statements inconsistent with his present testimony, the testimony which it is proposed to contradict must have been material to the issue on trial.—Force v. Martin, 122 Mass. 5.

[k] (N. Y. 1862) Where a witness for the defense testifies that she is the wife of a person named, although this testimony is not material, the state may introduce evidence to show that on a former occasion she made an affidavit that she was the wife of a different person, in order to impeach her testimony.—Jefferds v. People, 5 Parker, Cr. R. 522.

[l] (N. Y. 1863) Proof of an admission by the secretary of an insurance company, made the morning after the loss, that the property destroyed was insured at the time of the fire, is not competent as a contradiction of the secretary's testimony, in which he swore there was no insurance at the time of the fire, where it appears that the testimony attempted to be contradicted was immaterial.—Trustees of First Baptist Church v. Brooklyn Fire Ins. Co., 28 N. Y. 153.

[m] (N. Y. 1882) Where a witness testifies that a note sued on has been paid, and, while admitting that subsequently, at plaintiff's request, he computed the interest on that and other notes, states that defendant was not present and denies having told others that he was present, their testimony that he did tell them so is not incompetent as impeaching evidence concerning a collateral matter.—Sitterly v. Gregg, 90 N. Y. 686.

[n] (Tex. 1894) Where a witness is recalled by the opposing side for the purpose of laying a predicate for his impeachment, either the question or answer may be excluded, if collateral or immaterial.—Turner v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 103, 25 S. W. 635.

§ 1225. Opinions.

[a] (Cal. 1891) It is proper to show that a witness, who gives his opinion as to the value of the land, formerly entertained a different opinion.—San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Neale, 88 Cal. 50, 25 Pac. 977, 11 L. R. A. 604.

[b] (Ind. 1851) An opinion expressed by a witness, inconsistent with a fact testified to by him, cannot be given in evidence to impeach his credibility.—Rucker v. Beaty, 3 Ind. 70.

[c] (Ind. 1885) Where a witness expresses an opinion on the witness stand, it is competent to prove that he expressed a different opinion out of court.—Cochran v. Amsden, 104 Ind. 282, 3 N. E. 934.

[d] (Iowa, 1875) On the trial of an indictment for burglary, a witness, who, upon direct examination, has testified only to the fact of discovering defendant in her house in the nighttime, cannot be asked, upon cross-examination, if she had not subsequently stated that she did not "think defendant intended to steal anything."—State v. Maxwell, 42 Iowa, 208.

[e] (Ky. 1889) It is competent to show that an expert who has testified that in his opinion defendant was insane at the time of the murder has made a contrary statement before the trial.—Montgomery v. Commonwealth, 88 Ky. 509, 11 S. W. 475.

[f] (La. 1892) On a trial for homicide, it is error, after a proper foundation has been laid, to exclude evidence offered to impeach a leading witness for the state, who was a brother of deceased, by proof of contradictory statements made by him to the effect that deceased was in fault in the quarrel in which he was killed.—State v. Lewis, 44 La. Ann. 958, 11 South. 572.

[g] (Mass. 1857) The opinion of a servant, as to whether or not his master was to blame in a case of collision, is incompetent, and evidence that the servant had given a different opinion at another time is therefore incompetent to contradict him.—Lane v. Bryant, 75 Mass. (9 Gray) 245, 69 Am. Dec. 282.

[h] (Mass. 1872) A witness having testified to circumstances tending to prove the guilt of the defendant, it is not competent for the defendant to show what opinion the witness may have expressed as to his innocence of the matters for which he is being tried.—Commonwealth v. Mooney, 110 Mass. 99.

[i] (Mass. 1886) Where the defendant was complained of for selling lager beer containing more than 3 per cent. of alcohol, under the statute, it was permissible to ask a hostile witness who drank some of the beer if he did not "think it was lager beer;" and where the witness testified that he could not say, evidence was admissible to show that he had previously testified that he thought it was lager beer, under Pub. St. c. 169, § 22.—Commonwealth v. Moinehan, 140 Mass. 463, 5 N. E. 259.

[j] (Mass. 1887) In an action to obtain possession of real estate taken and sold under special attachment as the property of a debtor, on the ground that a prior conveyance by him was in fraud of creditors, the debtor's son, an occupant of the premises, having testified on cross-examination that the tenant owned the house, and that he was occupying it by her permission, it is not competent for the demandant, for the purpose of contradicting him, to introduce evidence of his former declaration that his father's conveyance was intended to defraud him and his brothers, and to prevent their creditors from being paid; the testimony of the son as to the ownership of the house, being only the opinion of a stranger to the suit, and irrelevant.—Jordan v. McKinney, 144 Mass. 438, 11 N. E. 702.

[k] (Mo. 1880) On a trial for larceny, the prosecution, for the purpose of impeaching defendant's witness, may show that the witness had stated that the property alleged to have been stolen was brought to the defendant's house at night, and that witness believed that defendant had stolen it; it appearing that the proper foundation had been laid for such impeaching evidence.—State v. Hughes, 71 Mo. 633.

[l] (Mo. 1894) On a will contest, statements of a witness to the will, who has testified favorably as to the testatrix's mental capacity, to the effect that if all the facts were known the will could be broken, are inadmissible, since, to impeach a witness by contradictory statements made out of court, these must not only relate to the issue, but be statements of fact, and not opinions.—McFadin v. Catron, 120 Mo. 252, 25 S. W. 506.

[m] (N. H. 1862) A witness who testifies to circumstances tending to show that he was discharged as surety by the creditor cannot be contradicted by proof that on another occasion he had expressed the opinion that he was still liable.—City Bank v. Young, 43 N. H. 457.

[n] (N. H. 1863) The evidence of an expert may be contradicted by showing that at another time he had expressed a different opinion.—Sanderson v. Nashua, 44 N. H. 492.

[o] (N. Y. 1854) A witness cannot be contradicted by showing that he has given an opinion out of court, relative to the subject-matter of the suit, inconsistent with the conclusion, which the facts he testifies to will warrant; the rule allowing witnesses to be impeached in this way does not extend to such a case, but the statement must not only relate to the issue, but be a matter of fact, and not merely a former opinion, in order to impeach the witness.—Holmes v. Anderson, 18 Barb. 420.

[p] (N. Y. 1894) An adverse and hostile witness may be impeached by proving statements in contradiction of his testimony, after the requisite examination in regard thereto, and it is immaterial whether they are statements of facts or expressions of opinion.—Dudley v. Satterlee (City Ct. N. Y.) 8 Misc. Rep. 538, 28 N. Y. Supp. 741.

[q] (Tex. 1890) On indictment for murder, a witness for defendant on cross-examination was asked whether he did not know before the crime was committed that defendant was going to kill deceased, and, on his answering in the negative, the state proved by other witnesses that he had made a statement that he did know. Held, that the evidence sought to be introduced, being a mere opinion, was inadmissible against defendant, and the question was not competent to lay a foundation for impeachment of the witness.—Drake v. State, 29 Tex. App. 265, 15 S. W. 725.

[r] (Tex. 1892) On a trial for murder, C., a witness called by defendant, was asked on cross-examination if he did not tell P. on the night of the murder that defendant and his brother, finding deceased unarmed, "took the advantage" of him. To this question C., under objection by defendant, answered in the negative, whereupon the state called P., who testified that C. had so said. Held that, the question asked C. being incompetent by reason of its seeking an opinion of the witness, the calling of P. to impeach C. was reversible error.—Davis v. State (Cr. App.) 20 S. W. 923.

[s] (Tex. 1895) A witness cannot be impeached by a statement as to what he "reckoned" defendant did at the time of the homicide, as it is a statement merely of his opinion.—Phipps v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 608, 31 S. W. 657.

[t] (Va. 1851) A witness, called to prove the handwriting of a paper offered for probate, may be impeached by proof of what she has said about that paper at another time; but neither her capacity to judge of the handwriting, or her credit, is to be impeached by what she may have said about some other paper.—Nuckols' Adm'r v. Jones, 8 Grat. 267.

[a] (U. S. 1896) In an action by F. & S. and J. against T., on a contract by T. to exchange, for 5 per cent. bonds of a city, certain securities, held by him, which plaintiffs expected to exchange for 6 per cent. bonds of the city, held, that a letter from F. & S. to J., asserting that outside creditors could get only 5 per cent. bonds, that the writers were the only persons to receive 6's, and incorrectly stating their contract with the city, did not discredit the testimony of one member of the firm that they had a contract with the city, allowing them to exchange claims, which they had bought, for 6 per cent. bonds.—Tinsley v. Jemison, 74 Fed. 177, 20 C. C. A. 371, 38 U. S. App. 665.

[b] (U. S. 1816) A declaration of a witness relating to a different transaction, and not importing a contradiction of what the witness has sworn to, is improperly received, as the declarations of a witness cannot be given in evidence except in answer to evidence of other declarations of a witness, inconsistent with what he has before sworn to.—Wright v. Deklyne, Fed. Cas. No. 18,076 [Pet. C. C. 199].

[c] (Ala. 1888) Evidence that one of the defendants had sworn on his application for a continuance that there were a large number of witnesses in Florida whose names were unknown to him, and could not be ascertained in time to be stated in the application, was irrelevant for purposes of impeachment, defendant not having testified to anything inconsistent with such statement, and its admission was error.—Cotton v. State, 87 Ala. 75, 6 South. 396.

[d] (Ala. 1889) On a trial for burglary, it is proper to exclude testimony that the prosecuting witness had made statements out of court that he might have been mistaken in thinking that defendant was the burglar, and that the testimony of one of defendant's witnesses on a former trial had shaken him up considerably, where these declarations were not contradictory of his evidence on the trial.—Cooper v. State, 88 Ala. 107, 7 South. 47.

[e] (Ala. 1893) In an action for personal injuries, it is error to admit in evidence, for the purpose of impeaching one of defendant's witnesses, a coemployé of plaintiff, who saw the accident, a written statement made by him to defendant shortly after the accident, containing his opinions concerning it, and not contradictory of any fact testified to by him on the trial.—Helton v. Alabama Midland R. Co., 97 Ala. 275, 12 South. 276.

[f] (Ark. 1861) There is no error in refusing to permit a deposition to be read for the purpose of discrediting a subsequent deposition of the same deponent when the only difference is that one stated that certain property had been delivered to a wife, and the other stated that it had been delivered to the husband and wife.—McNeill v. Arnold, 22 Ark. 477.

[g] (Cal. 1887) The deposition of the prosecuting witness, taken at the preliminary hearing, is not admissible for the purpose of contradicting his testimony, when the deposition fails to show any material contradiction.—People v. Kalkman, 72 Cal. 212, 13 Pac. 500.

[h] (Cal. 1889) In an action for money loaned, where plaintiff testifies on cross-examination that she was married to A. B. at a certain time, evidence that she was at that time the wife of another man, and had testified in another case that she was married to that other before the time mentioned, is not inconsistent with her testimony, and is not admissible to impeach her.—Evans v. De Lay, 81 Cal. 103, 22 Pac. 408.

[i] (Ind. 1854) The testimony of a witness is not necessarily discredited by its disagreement, in slight particulars, with previous statements made by the same witness.—Shanks v. Hayes, 6 Ind. 59.

[j] (Ind. 1888) Prosecutrix having testified that defendant was sober when he shot her, defendant, for the purpose of impeachment, offered to show that soon after the shooting she said that it was not defendant, but a man crazy from liquor, who shot her. Held that, as defendant might have been crazy from liquor, and yet sober at the time of shooting, the offer was properly refused.—Wagner v. State, 116 Ind. 181, 18 N. E. 833.

[k] (Ind. 1889) Where a witness has testified on direct examination that, in his opinion, testator was of sound mind, evidence that he had stated that testator was childish, and going crazy, is admissible to impeach him.—Staser v. Hogan, 120 Ind. 207, 21 N. E. 911.

[l] (Ind. 1890) On a trial for rape on M., a sister of defendant testified that M. came from the place where the crime was alleged to have been perpetrated, in a cheerful manner, hand in hand with defendant. Held, that a subsequent statement by the witness that defendant had taken M. off, that she pitied M., and that she would be afraid to go with defendant herself, was not admissible to impeach her, as it did not contradict her testimony.—Huber v. State, 126 Ind. 185, 25 N. E. 904.

[m] (Ind. 1892) Since, under Rev. St. 1881, § 1992, denouncing seduction as illicit intercourse with any female of good repute for chastity under promise of marriage, a woman may be seduced although she has previously had repeated intercourse with the alleged seducer, an affidavit made by the woman before a justice, stating that she had been seduced on a certain day, does not necessarily tend to contradict her testimony in a bastardy case that the person named had had intercourse with her, and that a child was begotten, previous to that time, and is therefore not admissible for the purpose of impeachment.—Williams v. State, 3 Ind. App. 350, 29 N. E. 1079.

[n] (Iowa, 1890) Where, as affecting the question of damages, plaintiff had testified that her health had been good during 12 years before the accident, it was not error to admit evidence of various statements made by her, during a period reaching to four years earlier, as to the bad condition of her health.—McConnell v. City of Osage, 80 Iowa, 293, 45 N. W. 550, 8 L. R. A. 778.

[o] (Iowa, 1891) In an action for damages for the destruction of 51 trees by fire from an engine on defendant's railroad, evidence that plaintiff had brought another suit for the destruction of 35 trees is irrelevant for purposes of impeachment, where the witness testified that before suit brought plaintiff did not claim compensation for all the trees killed, and gave the reason therefor.—Leiber v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 84 Iowa, 97, 50 N. W. 547.

[oo] (Ky. 1882) The statement of a witness, "I did not see the pistol taken from Grubbs' person," held not to be contradicted by evidence that he said "he knew nothing about a pistol on Grubbs."—Loving v. Commonwealth, 80 Ky. 507.

[p] (Me. 1888) In a writ of entry to determine the location of a boundary line, where a witness for defendant testifies that witness' father, the plaintiff's predecessor in title, pointed out to witness the line claimed by defendant as the true line, evidence is inadmissible on plaintiff's behalf, for the purpose of contradicting witness, that witness afterwards pointed out another line, asserted by plaintiff to be the true one, as it does not tend to contradict the witness' testimony.—Royal v. Chandler, 81 Me. 118, 16 Atl. 410.

[pp] (Md. 1896) Testimony of a witness denying that he had said he did not know the "particulars" of a transaction is successfully impeached by showing that he had said he did not know the "details."—Baltimore City Pass. Ry. Co. v. Knee, 83 Md. 77, 34 Atl. 252.

[q] (Mass. 1888) Where the evidence of one of the signers and indorsers of the notes in suit shows that they were accommodation notes, and that plaintiff was to provide for their payment, a letter written by witness to plaintiff just before the maturity of the first note, relative to its payment and renewal in case of nonpayment, is admissible to impeach him, if it affords some presumption that the fact is otherwise than he testified, though it does not contradict him in terms.—Foster v. Worthing, 146 Mass. 607, 16 N. E. 572.

[qq] (Mass. 1890) Upon an issue as to the sanity of a testatrix at the time of the execution of her will, a witness testified that while testatrix was residing at his house, soon after the execution of the will, he never saw any change in her intelligence, coherence of speech, or memory, and gave accounts of several conversations and acts showing a sound mind. To impeach his testimony evidence was offered that since testatrix's death the witness had declared that he had never seen her, after the death of her husband, which took place before the will was executed, when she was fit to make a will. Held, that such declaration was not necessarily inconsistent with his former testimony, as for all that appeared the witness may have always considered testatrix unfit to make a will, and therefore it could not be said on appeal that the court erred in excluding the impeaching evidence.—Williams v. Spencer, 150 Mass. 346, 23 N. E. 105, 15 Am. St. Rep. 206, 5 L. R. A. 790.

[r] (Mass. 1895) On a prosecution for conspiracy to procure money to be paid to aldermen for their votes for granting licenses, where a witness states that he has not paid money for this purpose, evidence by a second witness that the first had said that it had cost him $100 to get his license, and that one of the aldermen might have got it, is competent as affecting the credibility of the first witness.—Commonwealth v. Smith, 163 Mass. 411, 40 N. E. 189.

[rr] (Mass. 1895) Where a police officer, who made the arrest on a prosecution for illegally selling liquors, testified as to defendant's ownership of the premises, he cannot be contradicted by showing that he gave the information to the clerk upon which the notice, under Pub. St. c. 100, § 34, was issued; that it was directed to defendant's husband, and described the liquor as having been seized on the premises of defendant's husband; and that it was served by said officer, and a copy thereof attested by him.—Commonwealth v. Acton, 165 Mass. 11, 42 N. E. 329.

[s] (Mass. 1896) A witness having testified that he acquired knowledge of a certain thing in a certain manner, previous statements made by him, that he acquired the knowledge in another manner, were admissible to discredit him.—Cogswell v. Newburyport Institution for Savings, 165 Mass. 524, 43 N. E. 296.

[ss] (Mich. 1895) Evidence that the conductor of a street car, at the time of a collision, stated that the accident would not have occurred had his own motorman had charge, was admissible to impeach his testimony that the motorman who controlled the car at the time of the accident exercised proper care to prevent the injury.—McClellan v. Ft. Wayne & B. I. Ry. Co., 105 Mich. 101, 62 N. W. 1025.

[t] (Minn. 1877) The admissibility of former statements of a witness, inconsistent with his testimony, offered for the purpose of impeachment, does not depend on the degree of their variance from such testimony. They are competent if they differ in any material particular from the evidence given, and their effect on the credit of the witness is for the jury to determine.—Tinklepaugh v. Rounds, 24 Minn. 298.

[tt] (Mo. 1890) Where plaintiff alleges that the injuries sued for were sustained through his being induced to jump from defendant's train by pretended threats of the conductor and others, and the conductor testifies that the passenger did not jump off, and that no threats were made in his presence, he may be contradicted, on sufficient foundation being laid, by proof of his statements after the occurrence that parties were "codding" the passenger with "bugaboo stories," and that he was frightened and jumped off.—Spohn v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 101 Mo. 417, 14 S. W. 880.

[u] (N. H. 1844) The written statement of a witness, offered to contradict his testimony on the stand, and capable of two constructions, one of which is thus contradictory, should be allowed to go to the jury, to receive from them such weight as they may deem proper.—Town of Concord v. Concord Bank, 16 N. H. 26.

[uu] (N. H. 1852) That the account of a transaction given by a witness out of court is substantially inconsistent with that given upon the stand is all that is required to render it admissible on the ground of contradiction.—Martin v. Farnham, 25 N. H. (5 Fost.) 195.

[v] (N. H. 1858) To render the statement made by a witness out of court admissible for the purpose of contradicting his testimony, it must conflict with some fact stated in it, or with its general drift. It is not sufficient that it consists merely in a comment upon the subject which indicates a general want of veracity.—Hall v. Young, 37 N. H. 134.

[vv] (N. Y. 1869) A person charged in an action for divorce with having committed adultery with defendant denied the charge, but admitted that perhaps he was in love with her. A letter which he had written to defendant, but which never reached her, was then offered in evidence to "contradict" his testimony. His attention was not called to any particular part of it, claimed to be in conflict with his testimony. Held that, where the letter contained only expressions of passionate love, it was not error to reject it.—Hobby v. Hobby, 64 Barb. 277.

[w] (N. Y. 1895) Where a complaining witness withdrew a charge of assault and made affidavit in the withdrawal that she made the charge through fear, and afterwards testified that she withdrew the charge through fear, it was error to hold, as a matter of law, that the affidavits were not contradictory, and their effect on the credibility of the witness should have been left to the jury without the statement of the court that there was no contradiction in them.—Wendt v. Craig, 147 N. Y. 697, 41 N. E. 516, reversing (1892) 63 Hun, 627, 17 N. Y. Supp. 748.

[ww] (N. C. 1888) Where a witness has testified that he and a person since deceased were at a certain place on a day when a fence was burned, evidence that decedent, on the night of that day, inquired how much of the fence was burned, is not admissible for the purpose of showing that he was not at the place that day; being hearsay, and not inconsistent with what the former witness testified.—Patterson v. Wilson, 101 N. C. 594, 8 S. E. 341.

[x] (Pa. 1862) Where a witness, produced by the plaintiff to prove the genuineness of a note, by deposition has testified as to the room and place at which the defendant signed the note, without expressly stating that she saw it signed, rebutting evidence is admissible on the part of the defendant to the effect that on a former hearing in the case the witness had not testified that she saw him sign the note; for if there was an essential contradiction in her testimony, the defendant was entitled to it; if there was none, the plaintiff was not injured.—Travis v. Brown, 43 Pa. (7 Wright) 9, 82 Am. Dec. 540.

[xx] (S. C. 1848) After the plaintiff had closed his testimony in reply, the defendant was not permitted to examine a new witness, by way of rejoinder, as to what the plaintiff's witness had said on a former trial of the same cause; it not appearing that the testimony proposed to be offered would in any manner rebut, or in any degree explain, vary, or contradict, what the witness had said on the present trial.—Lott's Ex'rs v. Macon, 2 Strob. 178.

[y] (S. C. 1848) It is not sufficient to invalidate the evidence of a witness, on the trial of a capital case, that it varied slightly, as to a point of time, from her affidavit before the magistrate, she being an ignorant person, and her attention not being called to the importance of exactness; nor that she omitted, in her affidavit, to state a fact testified to by her at the trial, there being no contradiction, in the affidavit, of such fact.—State v. McElmurray, 3 Strob. 83.

[yy] (Tex. 1859) Proof of a different but not inconsistent statement, made by the witness, is not admissible to impeach him.—Hall v. Simmons, 24 Tex. 227.

[z] (Tex. 1888) In a trial for murder, defendant's wife testified that deceased made indecent proposals to her a short time before the homicide; that she never told any one about it except her husband and a third person; and that she did not tell one C., when asked about it, because she had decided not to say anything more about it. Held error to admit, for the purpose of impeachment, testimony of C., that shortly after the homicide she asked the witness if deceased made improper proposals to her, to which witness replied that he did not.—Williams v. State, 24 Tex. App. 637, 7 S. W. 333.

[zz] (Tex. 1895) In an action for services as attorney, on an alleged oral contract, where plaintiff testified that such contract was made with defendant on January 3, 1890, for plaintiff's services during the year 1890, defendant may show that plaintiff, in his depositions taken at defendant's instance, swore that he made an oral contract with defendant on January 3, 1890, whereby he agreed with it for a year's service, beginning January 8, 1890, and ending January 8, 1891.—Jarvis-Conklin Mortgage Trust Co. v. Harrell (Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 447.

§ 1227. Proof of omissions in former testimony.

[a] (Ala. 1885) Where a witness testifies to material facts, which he omitted to state when examined on the preliminary examination, he may be impeached by proof of the omission.—Brown v. State, 79 Ala. 61.

[b] (Kan. 1881) Where, upon a second trial, a witness testifies that his testimony was the same upon each trial, held, that it may be shown that upon a material point he gave no testimony at the first trial.—Johnston v. Clements, 25 Kan. 376.

[c] (Mass. 1855) A witness may not be impeached by evidence of his having omitted on a former examination facts presently stated by him.—Commonwealth v. Hawkins, 69 Mass. (3 Gray) 463.

[d] (Mass. 1890) Where defendant testified and endeavored to explain suspicious appearances proved by the prosecution, it is competent to show, as affecting his credibility, that at a previous trial, the day after the occurrence, he testified in his own defense, and gave no such explanation.—Commonwealth v. Harrington, 152 Mass. 488, 25 N. E. 835.

[e] (Mich. 1883) The fact that a witness who testified on a second trial upon a certain point did not testify as to the same on the former trial may be commented on to the jury, but is not matter of impeachment, as failure to ask questions on that subject may or may not be a suspicious circumstance, according to circumstances.—In re Dickerson's Estate, 50 Mich. 37, 14 N. W. 691.

[f] (N. Y. 1890) While it is a suspicious circumstance for a witness to recollect on a second trial a crucial fact which he did not mention on the former trial, yet it is not such conclusive evidence of his dishonesty as to call for a reversal, as his demeanor upon the stand may have been such as to have entirely overcome the suspicion that his testimony was an afterthought.—Cowan v. Third Ave. Ry. Co., 56 Hun, 644, 9 N. Y. Supp. 610, judgment affirmed (1892) 132 N. Y. 598, 30 N. E. 1152.

[g] (N. Y. 1890) The fact that a witness on the second trial of a cause supplies crucial testimony which he did not mention when he testified on the former trial, will not justify a refusal to submit such testimony to the jury.—Bickford v. Menier, 56 Hun, 644, 9 N. Y. Supp. 775.

[h] (N. Y. 1895) On the second trial of an action defendant was absent, and his testimony given on the first trial was read by stipulation. Plaintiff, in testifying as to a conversation with defendant which he had assumed to state fully on the first trial, added matter which he had not before stated. His only excuse for omitting such matter on the first trial was that he was not interrogated as to it. Plaintiff was an intelligent man, and fully comprehended the questions involved on the litigation and the effect of the evidence. Held, that the new matter testified to by him was not worthy of credit.—Anderson v. Dickinson, 88 Hun, 614, 34 N. Y. Supp. 510.

[i] (Pa. 1845) Evidence of the omission of a witness to state facts in a previous trial between other parties is not admissible to discredit him, unless it be shown to be pertinent to the issue in such trial.—McAteer v. McMullen, 2 Pa. (2 Barr) 32.

[j] (Tex. 1892) The fact that a witness for defendant testifies to facts on the trial which he did not testify to at the preliminary examination is no ground for impeachment, where he was not interrogated as to such facts on the examination.—Hyden v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 401, 20 S. W. 764.

[k] (Vt. 1862) To discredit a witness, evidence that he has testified to material facts, which he omitted to state upon a former trial, is clearly admissible.—Briggs v. Taylor, 35 Vt. 57.

4. CROSS-EXAMINATION AS TO INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS.

IN GENERAL, § 1228.
PARTICULAR MATTERS OF INQUIRY, § 1229.
FORMER TESTIMONY, § 1230.
MOTIVE FOR CHANGING TESTIMONY, § 1231.
EFFECT OF REFUSAL TO ANSWER ON CROSS-EXAMINATION, § 1232.

As to statements and declarations showing interest or bias, see ante, § 1194.

Examination of one's own witness, see ante, § 1219.

Laying foundation for proof of inconsistent statements, see post, §§ 1233-1242.

§ 1228. In general.

[a] A witness could be asked on cross-examination whether he had not made statements conflicting with his testimony.

—(Ind. 1885) Hyland v. Milner, 99 Ind. 308;

(Kan. 1895) State v. Zimmerman, 3 Kan. App. 172, 42 Pac. 828;

(N. Y. 1888) Plyer v. German-American Ins. Co., 48 Hun, 618, 1 N. Y. Supp. 395.

[b] (Ala. 1840) Where a witness when cross-examined for the purpose of contradicting him, touching his own declarations at a particular time and place, states "that he cannot answer the question without giving the declarations of the defendant made at the same time," the declarations will be properly excluded.—McGehee v. Mahone, 37 Ala. 258.

[c] (Ala. 1861) When a witness in answer to a question as to what he said at a certain time, put for the purpose of discrediting him, replies that he cannot answer without giving statements made by the party who is interrogating him, it is not error to exclude such statements if there is no further showing as to their admissibility.—McGehee v. Mahone, 37 Ala. 258.

[d] (Cal. 1866) It is not irrelevant to inquire of a witness on cross-examination whether he has not given a different account of the matter on a former occasion for the purpose of impeaching his testimony by contradicting him. And an error committed in not allowing such a question to be put is not cured by the fact that the witness is corroborated by other witnesses.—People v. Robles, 29 Cal. 421.

[e] (Ind. 1874) Where a witness, upon examination in chief, had testified that he had never done a certain act, it was error to refuse, on cross-examination, to allow the witness to answer the question whether at a certain time and place he did not state to a person named that he had done said act.—Pruitt v. Brockman, 46 Ind. 56.

[f] (La. 1889) A question, on cross-examination, touching certain statements said to have been made by the witness, the object of which is to impeach the testimony of the witness, cannot be put unless a foundation for it has been laid and the witness put on his guard.—State v. Johnson, 41 La. Ann. 574, 7 South. 670.

[g] (Miss. 1836) Where a witness has testified to a particular fact, he may be asked, on cross-examination, if he has not, on a former occasion, stated that he knew nothing of the controversy between the parties.—Goode v. Lincum, 2 Miss. (1 How.) 281.

[h] (Neb. 1895) Statements made by a witness out of court in conflict with his testimony may be shown on cross-examination.—Fremont Butter & Egg Co. v. Peters, 45 Neb. 356, 63 N. W. 791.

[i] (N. Y. 1887) On a trial for perjury, a witness who has testified that defendant's testimony, which is alleged to be perjured, was entirely false, is properly asked whether he did not state, at a certain time, out of court, that he had formerly made, or might have made, statements inconsistent with his testimony, and consistent with defendant's alleged false testimony, as the question bears on the credibility of the witness; and under Code Cr. Proc. § 527, authorizing the appellate court to grant a new trial, if satisfied that justice requires it, whether or not exceptions were taken, a new trial will be granted for disallowance of such question.—People v. Thornton, 46 Hun, 643.

[j] (N. Y. 1891) The exclusion of a question to a witness, whether or not he was a witness on a former trial of the case, does not take away the right to contradict the witness by his testimony on such former trial, and is not an error sufficiently serious to require reversal of the judgment.—Chase v. Senn (Com. Pl.) 13 N. Y. Supp. 266.

[k, l] (Tex. 1880) On cross-examination of an accomplice, a question as to whether he did not, while in custody for the same theft, make a certain statement contradictory to his testimony, was erroneously excluded on a general objection by the state.—Turney v. State, 9 Tex. App. 192.

[m] (Tex. 1896) Where defendant has elicited unfavorable testimony on a material fact in the cross-examination of a state's witness, further questions which might be admissible for the purpose of laying a predicate for impeaching the witness are inadmissible as original evidence to show that on other occasions the witness had made statements to other persons contrary to those made on the trial.—Ray v. State (Cr. App.) 36 S. W. 446.

§ 1229. Particular matters of inquiry.

Cross-examination of defendant as to confessions, see ante, § 1211.

—— of impeaching witness as to character, see ante, § 1159 [o].

Scope of cross-examination for the purpose of laying foundation for proof of inconsistent statements, see post, § 1237.

[a] (Ala. 1893) In an action for wrongful attachment, where there is evidence that there was a conspiracy between plaintiff and another to defraud creditors by false transfers or sales shortly before the attachment, such other person having been offered by plaintiff as a witness, and having testified that the goods obtained had been bought at the full market price, it is proper to ask him on cross-examination, with a view to impeachment, whether he had not told another that he had been buying goods of plaintiff for much less than their market price.—Little v. Lichkoff, 98 Ala. 321, 12 South. 429.

[b] (Cal. 1861) In a trial for murder, a participator in the crime furnished the only direct evidence. He gave a full account of the affair, but in his account conveyed the idea that he was a reluctant and unwilling abettor, exonerating himself from any criminality beyond going with defendant for the purpose of chastising deceased. On cross-examination, defendant's counsel asked witness if he did not, a few days before the murder, state that he intended to kill the deceased. The theory of the defense was that the witness himself did the murder. Held, that this question was admissible, as tending to contradict, inferentially, witness' statements and prove them false.—People v. Williams, 18 Cal. 187.

[c] (Cal. 1886) In a murder case, if a witness for defendant testifies to facts from which the jury might infer that deceased, on the day of the homicide, left his house for the purpose of bringing about an encounter with defendant, the state may cross-examine him as to any former statements made by him relative to the matter inconsistent with his direct testimony, and to any matter connected with it tending to show the mental condition of deceased towards defendant.—People v. French, 69 Cal. 169, 10 Pac. 378.

[d] (Cal. 1891) Where the probate of a will is sought to be revoked on the ground of mental incapacity of the testatrix, and a witness testifies that he was the attending physician of the testatrix during the winter before the will was executed; that during the time he attended her she was in litigation with her sons over property she had conveyed to them; that witness acted as her agent during the litigation; and that he saw no evidence of failing mind or memory—the witness may be asked, on cross-examination, whether he had not asked one Mrs. S. to testify, in the controversy between mother and son, that the testatrix was not of sound mind; if he had not said to Mrs. S. at that time that the testatrix was not in her right mind; and if he had not intended to testify in that case that the testatrix was not in her right mind.—Wixom v. Goodcell, 90 Cal. 622, 27 Pac. 419.

[e] (Ga. 1875) A. bought land of B., giving a note for the purchase money; possession of the land was to be given immediately. The tenant in possession refused to go out, and A. only got possession of part of the land until the year thereafter. In a suit on the notes by B., A. sought to recover the damages for the nondelivery of possession. B. put up the tenant to show that he had retained possession under an agreement with A.'s agent. On cross-examination, A.'s counsel asked the witness if he had set this up in the proceedings taken against him by B. to turn him out, and the court ruled that the "proceedings" must be produced and refused to permit the question to be asked. Held, that this was error. The question and answer were necessary as a foundation to introduce the "proceedings," as they were inadmissible to contradict the witness until the witness had an opportunity to explain.—Biggers v. King, 54 Ga. 369.

[f] (Ga. 1887) In order to lay the foundation for impeachment, the state questioned a codefendant, who was a witness for the defendant, and had testified in his behalf, relative to former statements which were in direct conflict with the testimony he gave at the trial. Held, that for this purpose the evidence was properly admitted.—Whitaker v. State, 79 Ga. 87, 3 S. E. 403.

[g] (Ind. 1857) In a trial for murder, a brother of the deceased, who had taken part in the disturbance, and who upon the stand had testified that he had not used any deadly weapon during the melée, but simply held a bowie knife in his hand, and had seen no one use a hatchet, was asked, with a view to his impeachment, "Whether he did or did not, in Dr. B.'s office, in this town, on the evening of the 5th, in the presence and hearing of the doctor and one Miles, say that one of the persons engaged in the fight with your brother the deceased would not fight again, as you had sunk the poll of the hatchet in his head?" Held, that the rejection of the question by the court below was error.—Gibson v. State, 9 Ind. 264.

[h] (Ind. 1878) A witness, who has testified on a will contest with respect to the sanity of the testatrix, or the manner of procuring the will to be executed, may be asked on cross-examination for the purpose of laying a ground for impeaching the witness whether he had not previously made certain inconsistent statements.—Coffman v. Reeves, 62 Ind. 334.

[i] (Ind. 1884) In an action for slander, wherein the only issue was the truth of the allegations, questions on cross-examination as to whether witness had not made certain statements in reference to plaintiff's conduct in the matter charged, asked for the purpose of impeaching the witness, held proper, not being as to collateral matters.—Seller v. Jenkins, 97 Ind. 430.

[j] (Iowa, 1882) In an action for breach of a covenant of general warranty, arising out of an easement in a stairway on the premises, the former owner, a witness for defendant, swore that the addition of the easement did not affect its value. Held, that it was competent cross-examination to ask him if he had not said that he would never again construct a building with a stairway common to another person.—McGowen v. Myers, 60 Iowa, 256, 14 N. W. 788.

[k] (Iowa, 1892) In an action by a brakeman for personal injuries caused by being run over while between cars adjusting a coupling link, where plaintiff testified on direct examination that the engineer obeyed his signal, and he thought the cars had stopped when he went between them, it is error to refuse to allow him to be asked on cross-examination if he did not swear in his petition, and if it was not true, that the engineer did not stop.—Hall v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 84 Iowa, 311, 51 N. W. 150.

[l] (Iowa, 1893) In an action for breach of promise of marriage, where a brother of plaintiff testified on direct examination that, while defendant was courting his sister, no one else was going with her, it was error not to permit the witness, on cross-examination, to answer whether he told defendant that witness' sister had made a "mash" on another man.—Robinson v. Craver, 88 Iowa, 381, 55 N. W. 492.

[m] (Iowa, 1896) Where defendant had testified as to quarrels and fights with deceased and his friends before the homicide, but had denied making certain threats against deceased, as brought out by the state's evidence, it was proper cross-examination to ask him if he had not, in a conversation with a third person, made threats against deceased.—State v. Helm, 97 Iowa, 378, 66 N. W. 751.

[n] (Kan. 1892) Where, in an action by a head brakeman against a railway company for injuries occasioned by a switch stand and the target thereof being too close to the railroad track plaintiff testifies that he had no actual knowledge how close the switch target was to the track prior to his injuries, the exclusion of a question, upon cross-examination, whether after the injury he did not state that he had "repeatedly called the attention of parties to that target," is error.—Southern Kansas Ry. Co. v. Michaels, 49 Kan. 388, 30 Pac. 408.

[o] (Kan. 1895) Defendant was prosecuted for assault on the ground that his sons committed the offense in his presence, with his consent. Held, that a witness for the defense, who testified solely as to the details of a trip taken by himself and defendant on the day of the assault to another town, could not, on cross-examination, be asked whether he had not told a certain party that his brother had told witness that he, the speaker, and defendant, witnessed the assault.—State v. Zimmerman, 3 Kan. App. 172, 42 Pac. 828.

[oo] (Me. 1878) A party to an action, called as a witness by an adverse party to testify as to the relationship between such witness and another party to the suit, testified that he did not know whether such party was his cousin or not. Held, that it was competent to ask him whether he had ever stated to any one else that the party was his cousin.—Call v. Pike, 68 Me. 217.

[p] (Md. 1896) On a trial for selling beer to a minor, on cross-examination the prosecuting witness was asked whether he had not, at the time of purchasing the beer, represented himself to be over 21 years of age. Held, that the testimony sought to be elicited was admissible for the purpose of impeaching the credibility of the witness.—Peterson v. State, 83 Md. 194, 34 Atl. 834.

[pp] (Mass. 1843) Where the question in issue is whether A. is member of a certain firm, and a witness testifies that A. is not a member, the witness may be asked, on cross-examination, if he has not told B. that A. was a member.—Hathaway v. Crocker, 48 Mass. (7 Metc.) 262.

[q] (Mich. 1886) In an action for services, where the defendant has testified that the services were not worth more than the board of the servant, his admissions to the contrary may be shown on cross-examination.—Appeal of Dalton, 59 Mich. 352, 26 N. W. 539.

[qq] (Mich. 1891) Plaintiff, in an action for personal injuries caused by a defective highway, was asked, on cross-examination, if he had not told a certain person that the accident was occasioned by his horses taking fright, and replied that he had not, but that what he did tell him was that he claimed damages from the township. He was then asked what claim he made to the person named. Held, that the latter question was proper, as tending to bring out whether he had ever made any different claim, or given any different history of the accident.—Langworthy v. Township of Green, 88 Mich. 207, 50 N. W. 130.

[r] (Minn. 1891) In an action for injuries from a fire, alleged to have been set by a locomotive, a witness having testified that he saw the fire which caused the injury start from another source, it was proper, for the purpose of impeachment, to ask him if he had not stated at a certain time and place that it started from the locomotive.—Hoye v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 46 Minn. 269, 48 N. W. 1117.

[rr] (Mo. 1888) Where defendant, testifying in his own behalf, gives a detailed account of his feelings on the day of the homicide, designed to show absence of malice, it is proper, on cross-examination, to ask "Did you state to F., on the day of the homicide, that you had the same right to kill a man who was trying to steal your land as you would have if he was trying to steal your horse?"—as a foundation for proof of a state of mind different from that testified to by him.—State v. West, 95 Mo. 139, 8 S. W. 354.

[s] (Mo. 1891) In an action against the operator of a railroad by a servant, for injuries sustained by reason of an unlocked switch while attempting to couple cars, where defendant's superintendent, on being examined as a witness for defendant, has testified that he never gave plaintiff an order to couple cars, he may, on cross-examination, for the purpose of laying a foundation to impeach his testimony, be asked whether he did not, after the accident, state to plaintiff that he gave the order.—Hamilton v. Rich Hill Coal Min. Co., 108 Mo. 364, 18 S. W. 977.

[ss] (Mo. 1895) On the trial of defendant for shooting at with intent to kill K., the police officer who arrested him and defendant's witness, it appeared that, about an hour before the arrest, an assault with intent to rob had been committed on F. by two persons suiting the description of defendant and witness, which was not known to K. when he made the arrest, and that one of them, answering to the description of witness, had shot at a police officer who at the time of the assault had attempted to arrest them. For the purpose of showing that K. was justified in arresting them, witness was asked, on cross-examination (he not having objected to it as tending to criminate him), whether he was not one of the parties who assaulted F., and whether he did not then shoot at the officer attempting to arrest them. Held, that such question having been answered in the negative, the evidence thereby elicited was proper for the purpose of laying a foundation to impeach witness.—State v. Foley, 130 Mo. 482, 32 S. W. 973.

[t] (N. J. 1830) In an action by a father to recover damages for the seduction of his daughter, if the plaintiff offers the daughter as a witness, she may be asked, on cross-examination, whether she has said that another person was the father of the child, for the purpose of discrediting her by calling other witnesses to contradict her, if she answers in the negative, and from her own mouth, if she answers in the affirmative.—Fries v. Brugler, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 79, 21 Am. Dec. 52.

[tt] (N. Y. 1880) In an action by A. to recover dower as the widow of C., where her marriage to C. was disputed, and her sister B. testified that A. was married October 12, 1870, to C., at Carthage, by D., a Catholic priest, since deceased, it was proper to ask B., on cross-examination, whether, after October 12, 1870, she had not told one M. that she had advised A. to come away from C.'s house and not work there any longer, and that she would make A. do so.—Clark v. St. James' Church Soc., 21 Hun, 95.

[ttt] (N. Y. 1880) In an action by A. to recover dower as the widow of C., where her marriage to C. was disputed, it was proper, on cross-examination of a witness, who testified that C. admitted that he was married to A., to ask him if he had not afterwards stated that he did not believe that A. was married to C.—Clark v. St. James' Church Soc., 21 Hun, 95.

[u] (N. Y. 1880) On the trial of an indictment for obtaining goods by false representations, a witness for the prosecution was asked on cross-examination as to a conversation with M. On redirect examination he testified to statements made to him by M. to the effect that the prisoner and his partner had done a great wrong. M. was thereafter called as witness for the prisoner, and gave material testimony of statements made by the prosecutor contradicting his testimony and tending to show the prisoner's innocence, and he also positively contradicated the testimony of the other witnesses. On his cross-examination he was asked if he had not stated to anybody that the prisoner and his partner had been guilty of a great wrong; also if he had not said that they had acted as thieves. Held, that the allowance of these questions was not improper, the object being to draw from the witness an admission that he had made some such declaration, and the latitude allowable on a cross-examination was not exceeded in allowing the subject to be approached in the manner in which it was.—Mayer v. People, 80 N. Y. 364.

[uu] (N. Y. 1888) Where a married woman has testified that a mortgage upon her land was delivered without her consent, to secure a loan to her husband, it is competent to ask her, on cross-examination, if she had not admitted to the mortgagee that she consented to the delivery.—Durfee v. Knowles, 50 Hun, 601, 2 N. Y. Supp. 466.

[uuu] (N. Y. 1894) In an action against a corporation, declarations of its president, though not admissible as evidence in chief against the corporation, are admissible on cross-examination to impeach the president as a witness.—Patterson Gas Governor Co. v. Lichtenstein Bros. Co. (Com. Pl.) 9 Misc. Rep. 126, 29 N. Y. Supp. 279.

[v] (N. Y. 1896) On an issue of plaintiff's good faith in purchasing goods from his brother, who was an insolvent at the time of the alleged sale, said insolvent, having testified for plaintiff as to the bona fides of the transaction, should have been permitted on cross-examination to state whether he had, in effect, said to certain persons, in the absence of plaintiff, that the transfer to plaintiff was colorable merely, as such testimony would have been admissible to affect the credibility of the witness, though he had previously denied having made such statements when his brother was present.—Beuerlien v. O'Leary, 149 N. Y. 33, 43 N. E. 417, reversing (1894) 77 Hun, 607, 28 N. Y. Supp. 1133.

[vv] (N. C. 1890) On foreclosure by an assignee of a mortgage, the mortgagee may be cross-examined as to his statements and representations made before the assignment, that the mortgage debt had been paid, in order to discredit his evidence at the trial that the mortgage debt was unpaid when the assignment was made.—Blake v. Broughton, 107 N. C. 220, 12 S. E. 127.

[w] (Pa. 1889) Where a witness, who had negotiated a compromise between plaintiff and defendant, testifies on direct examination that the compromise related to a judgment as a whole, including usury, it is improper to ask him, on cross-examination, if he had not previously said that the usury was not so included.—Kearney v. First Nat. Bank, 129 Pa. 577, 18 Atl. 598.

[ww] (Pa. 1890) Defendant, charged with adultery with one C., having denied on direct examination that he committed adultery with her on the date laid, or at any other time, may be asked on cross-examination why he had pleaded guilty of adultery with her on a former occasion, as the question is not to show a conviction, but to contradict the witness.—Commonwealth v. Mosier, 135 Pa. 221, 19 Atl. 943, 26 Wkly. Notes Cas. 182.

[x] (Tex. 1874) In a prosecution for an aggravated assault and battery, where prosecutor had testified that he went into defendant's field with no expectation of a difficulty and with no ill feeling toward defendant, he may, on cross-examination, be asked if he did not, before going there, make specific statements inconsistent with his testimony.—McFarlin v. State, 41 Tex. 23.

[xx] (Vt. 1869) In an action for injuries sustained by plaintiff, it is proper to ask the attending physician of the plaintiff on cross-examination, and as affecting his credit, whether he did not on one occasion tell the plaintiff that if he could get $100 he had better settle; the physician having testified on the direct examination to an injury calling for much greater damages.—Watts v. Town of Waterbury, 42 Vt. 201.

[y] (Vt. 1891) A witness having testified that on a certain day he drank nothing but beer, and that on his return from a trip a bottle of alcohol which he had with him was in the same condition as when he had started out, it was permissible to ask him on cross-examination if he had not, two days later, offered alcohol to another, and said that it was what was left from his trip.—Stillwell v. Farwell, 64 Vt. 286, 24 Atl. 243.

[yy] (W. Va. 1873) It is proper, in laying a foundation for impeaching the credit of a witness, to inquire of him on cross-examination whether he has not on a former occasion given a different account, or made a different statement, of a matter of fact, to which he has testified on trial.—Morgan v. Franklin Ins. Co., 6 W. Va. 496.

[z] (Wis. 1865) In replevin by a vendee against one holding under an execution against the vendor subsequent to the sale, declarations of the vendor made after possession was transferred to plaintiff are admissible on cross-examination to contradict his direct testimony of the sale.—Selsby v. Redlon, 19 Wis. 17.

[zz] (Wis. 1888) Where in an action for burning property there is evidence that the origin of the fire was from a clearing in a southeasterly direction, as well as from an engine on defendant's track in an easterly course, and near the point where the fire first began, it is error to refuse to allow plaintiff's witness, who had testified that the wind was east or north of east the whole day, to be asked, on cross-examination, if he had not stated that, had the wind not changed from the southeast, most of the town would have burned.—Stacy v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. Ry. Co., 72 Wis. 331, 39 N. W. 532.

Foundation for impeachment, see post, §§ 1239, 1240.

[a] (U. S. 1892) In an action to recover duties paid under protest the inquiry was whether the goods were dutiable under Schedule K of the act of March 3, 1883, as "knit goods, made on knitting frames," as assessed by the collector, or under Schedule N, as "bonnets, hats, and hoods for men, women, and children," etc., as claimed by the importers. One of the latter testified that the goods were "Scotch bonnets," known and sold in this country as such. On cross-examination he testified that he had before had a suit against the government, under the old tariff, and was then asked if the claim then was that these goods were caps made on frames. Held, that this question could not be excluded on the ground that the record of the prior suit was the best evidence of the claim, but that it was competent for the purpose of impeaching the witness' credibility.—Toplitz v. Hedden, 146 U. S. 252, 13 Sup. Ct. 70, 36 L. Ed. 961.

[b] (Ala. 1887) When the testimony of a witness, on the preliminary examination, was reduced to writing, and subscribed by him, and the deposition is in court on the trial, he cannot be cross-examined as to the statements then made by him, without allowing him to hear or read the deposition.—Gunter v. State, 83 Ala. 96, 3 South. 600.

[c] (Cal. 1885) It is not error to allow defendant in a criminal case to cross-examine a witness for the prosecution for the purpose of showing that he made statements in his examination in the police court different from those made on the trial.—People v. Lee Ah Chuck, 66 Cal. 662, 6 Pac. 859.

[d] (D. C. 1893) After a police officer has answered in the negative a question asked him on a murder trial for the purpose of showing that a confession was not voluntary, as to whether he hit the accused, and put him in a dungeon on the night of his arrest, it is discretionary with the trial court whether to permit the officer to answer a further question as to whether he did not testify in the police court that defendant was put in a dungeon.—Hardy v. United States, 3 App. D. C. 35.

[e] (Ga. 1852) It is not competent, with a view to impeach a witness, to ask him as to what he had sworn on a former occasion, if his testimony on that occasion is of itself inadmissible in evidence.—Mitchum v. State, 11 Ga. 615.

[f] (Ga. 1884) There was no error in allowing the solicitor general, in order to impeach a witness who had been on trial for the same offense, to ask him whether he had not on a former trial made a statement inconsistent with what he swore before the jury on the trial at bar.—Wilkerson v. State, 73 Ga. 799.

[g] (Ill. 1884) Witness, having stated that defendant called deceased "a son of a bitch," was asked on cross-examination, for purposes of impeachment, if he had in his former examinations made "any such statement as that." Held, that the question was not too broad, and need not have been limited to the exact words, as great latitude must be allowed in cross-examination.—Ritzman v. People, 110 Ill. 362.

[h] (Iowa, 1889) It is not error to cross-examine a witness on a second trial as to matters testified to by her on a former trial for the purpose of impeachment.—Wacha v. Brown, 78 Iowa, 432, 43 N. W. 269.

[i] (Iowa, 1890) A witness for defendant in a murder case, who had also been charged with the murder, and while under such charge had testified freely and voluntarily before the coroner, knowing that she was not compelled to answer, may be cross-examined as to the statements then made; the object of the cross-examination being to lay a foundation for impeachment.—State v. Peffers, 80 Iowa, 580, 46 N. W. 662.

[j] (Kan. 1886) On trial of defendant for the murder of his sister, where defendant produces a witness who, with a view of showing the conscious innocence of defendant, testifies what his conduct and appearance were soon after the death of his sister, it is proper to inquire on cross-examination if the witness had not stated at the preliminary examination that the conduct of the defendant impressed him at once as being guilty of the murder.—State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 1, 12 Pac. 318.

[k] (Kan. 1888) A question on cross-examination as to whether witness had not given a different account of the affair on a former trial may well be ruled out as immaterial, since that evidence could be introduced to impeach him, without first calling his attention to it.—Hughes v. Ward, 38 Kan. 452, 16 Pac. 810.

[l] (Kan. 1889) At the trial of a criminal action wherein the defendant was charged with having committed rape five times upon the witness between the 1st day of April, 1888, and the 1st day of August, of the same year, and her testimony tended to show that the offenses were committed in the months of February, March, and April, 1887, it was proper to ask on cross-examination if she did not swear before the grand jury that the special offense about which she was then testifying was perpetrated on the 13th day of April, 1888.—State v. Spidle, 42 Kan. 441, 22 Pac. 620.

[m] (Mich. 1864) On cross-examination, it is proper to call the attention of a witness to his testimony on a former trial, and ask him whether he did not then testify differently.—Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 459.

[n] (Mich. 1868) If a party desires to cross-examine a witness as to former statements by him deposed to, he must first read the witness' entire deposition in evidence, otherwise it may be read at any time.—Lightfoot v. People, 16 Mich. 507.

[o] (Mich. 1887) A witness may be questioned as to testimony given by him on a former trial, for the purpose of impeaching him.—Battishill v. Humphreys, 64 Mich. 514, 38 N. W. 581.

[p] (Mich. 1887) It is not error to show, on cross-examination, that, in a former action, where the same questions were involved as in the present case, the witness gave different testimony from his main examination.—Graham v. Myers, 67 Mich. 277, 34 N. W. 710.

[q] (Mich. 1890) Where a witness has denied that he was ever arrested or convicted on a criminal charge, or that he had testified in a former action that he had been, it is within the discretion of the court to exclude further questioning on the subject of what he did testify in that action.—Helwig v. Laschowski, 82 Mich. 619, 46 N. W. 1033, 10 L. R. A. 378.

[r] (Mich. 1895) Evidence of statements made by the state's witness on defendant's preliminary examination, for the purpose of impeachment, should be introduced after defendant's counsel has taken the case, and not upon the cross-examination of such witness.—People v. Oblaser, 104 Mich. 579, 62 N. W. 732.

[s] (Mo. 1891) On a trial for larceny of a cow, a witness for the state, having testified that defendant on a certain day sold him a hide, and that the next day a person came and claimed it, was asked if he had not seen the said person take an ear from his pocket, and fit it to the hide, which he denied. The state's attorney showed the witness a paper, which he stated was his testimony before the grand jury, and, reading therefrom, asked the witness if he had not there testified that he saw the said person fit the ear to the hide, which he also denied. The court ruled that such cross-examination was improper. The state's attorney then said that he had asked the question from the witness' testimony before the grand jury, and that at the proper time he would read his whole statement in evidence. Held that, although the methods pursued were improper, especially after the witness had repudiated the paper, and the court had passed upon the admissibility of the evidence, yet, inasmuch as the trial judge had found nothing to justify him in setting aside the verdict, and the hide and ear were fitted together in the presence of the jury, and other witnesses testified that they had been so fitted when first obtained, no prejudice could result to the defendant.—State v. Crow, 107 Mo. 341, 17 S. W. 745.

[t] (Neb. 1891) The mother of plaintiff in a bastardy proceeding testified that the last time defendant called on plaintiff was on either the first or second Sunday in May; and that she remembered this because they then talked about planting corn. On her cross-examination she was asked whether she had not, at the preliminary hearing before a justice, testified that she could not tell why she could not remember definitely whether it was either the first or second Sunday in May. Held, that the rejection of this question was proper, as its answer one way or the other would not have contradicted her testimony on a material point at the trial.—Daly v. Melendy, 32 Neb. 852, 49 N. W. 926.

[u] (N. H. 1877) It was not error not to permit counsel to ask witness on cross-examination what his testimony was at a former trial of the action, where the testimony was reduced to writing and in counsel's possession.—State v. Cone, 58 N. H. 151.

[v] (N. Y. 1832) A witness is not bound to answer as to how he testified on a former trial, relative to the matters in question, if he objects to the inquiry.—Mitchell v. Hinman, 8 Wend. 667.

[vv] (N. Y. 1868) It is competent on cross-examination to ask a witness what he has testified to on previous occasions as to the same matters on which he has given evidence on the present trial; and, in case he is unable to state how he testified on previous occasions, to ask hypothetically, if he testified in a given way, whether it was true.—McCabe v. Brayton, 38 N. Y. 196.

[w] (N. Y. 1879) On cross-examination it is competent to show that the witness testified differently on a material matter before the grand jury from the evidence given by him.—New York Guaranty & Indemnity Co. v. Gleason, 78 N. Y. 503.

[ww] (N. Y. 1885) The mode and extent of the cross-examination of a witness as to his testimony on a former trial must necessarily be in the discretion of the judge.—Rehberg v. City of New York, 99 N. Y. 652, 2 N. E. 11.

[x] (N. Y. 1888) Where a judgment debtor had been examined in proceedings supplemental to execution, and his testimony reduced to writing, and on the trial of a second action he was interrogated by the plaintiff's counsel concerning statements made by him in the course of that examination, he was entitled to see and read the statement before his answer should be taken.—Vail v. Craig, 13 N. Y. St. Rep. 448.

[xx] (N. Y. 1891) On the trial of an action on appeal from a justice's court a witness may be asked on cross-examination whether he will swear that he did not, before the justice, testify contrary to his testimony in chief, without first producing and reading the minutes of the justice's court, and asking if he swore so and so from the minutes.—Oderkirk v. Fargo, 61 Hun, 418, 16 N. Y. Supp. 220.

[y] (Pa. 1888) To impeach the veracity of a witness, it is proper to ask him whether he had not testified in a particular way on a former occasion.—Zebley v. Storey, 117 Pa. 478, 12 Atl. 569.

[yy] (S. C. 1891) A witness for the defense, who was originally included in the indictment with defendant, but as to whom it has been nolled, may be required, on cross-examination, to state what he said when examined before the coroner, if he was not under arrest at that time.—State v. Merriman, 34 S. C. 16, 12 S. E. 619.

[z] (Tex. 1893) In an action on a note given for the subscription list of a newspaper, where defendants pleaded failure of consideration, the court properly refused to require plaintiff on cross-examination to give a yes or no answer to a question whether he had not testified on the trial of the same action in the justice court that the subscription list was worth "dollar for dollar," when he did answer that his recollection was that he testified that the subscription list was "good."—Carpenter v. Dowe (Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 1002.

[zz] (Wis. 1894) Where a railroad servant says on cross-examination that he understood certain signals, he may be asked if he has not testified otherwise on a former trial, and it may be shown that, while he has present knowledge of the signals, he had not then.—Waterman v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 82 Wis. 613, 52 N. W. 247, 1136.

Re-examination and explanation of inconsistent statements, see post, § 1261.

[a] (Cal. 1895) Where the testimony of a witness for the prosecution is materially different on the trial from what it was on preliminary examination, the extent to which defendant is to be allowed on cross-examination to go into the present surroundings of the witness, in order to show the motives inducing him to change his testimony, is within the discretion of the court.—People v. Dillwood, 39 Pac. 438.

[b] (N. H. 1870) A witness, upon saying that a different statement, made by him at a former trial of the case, was "a slip of the tongue," may be cross-examined as to circumstances attending the statement, and bearing upon his veracity, and not upon his memory.—Ordway v. Haynes, 50 N. H. 159.

[c] (N. C. 1868) Where, on a trial for arson, an accomplice, after he had given an account of the transaction, was asked by the attorney for the prosecution if he had denied his statement to be true on some other occasion, and he answered that he had, and he was then asked why he had denied it, which was objected to, it was held that the question was admissible.—State v. Pulley, 63 N. C. 8.

[d] (Tex. 1892) On the second trial of an action against a railroad company for injuries received at a crossing, plaintiff testified that his statement as to the distance the engine was from him when he first saw it was different from his statement at the former trial; and that he had read the opinion of the supreme court, reversing the case, and holding him guilty of contributory negligence on the ground that he had time to get off the track after seeing the engine. Held, that it was proper to ask plaintiff on cross-examination if he did not make such different statement because he had seen the ground on which the case was reversed, as such question would tend to show plaintiff's motive in changing his testimony.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Porfert, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 716, 20 S. W. 870.

§ 1232. Effect of refusal to answer on cross-examination.

[a] (Iowa, 1887) Thirty-four questions were propounded to a witness on cross-examination, as to her testimony in a former trial, which she refused to answer. The court refused to strike out her testimony, but instructed the jury that her demeanor on the stand should be considered. Held, it was not error, as her former contradictory testimony could have been proven, or the court asked to compel her to testify.—State v. Archer, 73 Iowa, 320, 35 N. W. 241.

5. LAYING FOUNDATION FOR PROOF OF INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS.

NECESSITY OF LAYING FOUNDATION, § 1233.
—— PARTY AS WITNESS, §§ 1234, 1235.
—— IMPEACHMENT OF ONE'S OWN WITNESS, § 1236.
SCOPE OF CROSS-EXAMINATION FOR PURPOSE OF LAYING FOUNDATION, § 1237.
FOUNDATION FOR IMPEACHMENT OF DEPOSITION, AFFIDAVIT, OR OTHER WRITTEN TESTIMONY, § 1238.
FOUNDATION FOR IMPEACHMENT BY WRITTEN STATEMENTS, § 1239.
—— DEPOSITIONS OR MINUTES OF TESTIMONY AT FORMER TRIAL OR HEARING, § 1240.
CERTAINTY AND DEFINITENESS OF INQUIRY, § 1241.
—— TIME, PLACE, CIRCUMSTANCES, AND PERSON TO WHOM STATEMENTS WERE MADE, § 1242.

Notice of impeaching absent witness, see ante, § 1213 [e].

Recalling witness for purpose of impeachment, see ante, § 1109.

§ 1233. Necessity of laying foundation.

[a] A witness cannot be impeached by proving a statement different from the one sworn to, unless he has been examined as to his having made such statement.

[c] (U. S. 1838) What a witness testified at a former trial may be given in evidence to discredit him by showing a contradiction between that and his present testimony, without having first asked the witness whether he did not testify to that effect.—United States v. White, Fed. Cas. No. 16,679 [5 Cranch, C. C. 457].

[cc] (Ala. 1841) Where a government's witness is asked, on cross-examination, if he has not made certain statements to two persons (naming them) and others, which he denies, the two persons named may be called to contradict him, but no other person; and whether the state witness shall be recalled, at the request of the defendant, to ask him relative to his statements to others, for the purpose of contradicting him, is within the discretion of the court.—State v. Marler, 2 Ala. 43, 36 Am. Dec. 398.

[d] (Ala. 1875) In an action involving the issue of a sale of cattle to defendant, who testifies in his own behalf that the sale was to a third person, and not to him, his declarations on particular occasion to the effect that he had the cattle are admissible in rebuttal; and the court cannot require plaintiff, having the right to rejoin, to first call defendant back, and ask him if he made such declarations, before introducing them in rebuttal.—Kimmey v. Calloway, 52 Ala. 222.

[dd] (Ala. 1893) A witness having testified that he saw defendant commit an offense, no sufficient predicate was laid for testimony that such witness had said that he did not see the act done, where the witness was not asked if he had made the statement, did not deny making it, and had no opportunity to admit, deny, or explain it.—Gilyard v. State, 98 Ala. 59, 13 South. 391.

[e] (Ark. 1855) On a criminal trial, the following question, without a foundation laid for it, to contradict the witness, is incompetent: "Whether the witness had not testified before the examining court in this case, that he regarded the defendant's threats as of no importance or consequence."—Atkins v. State, 16 Ark. 568.

[ee] (Ark. 1894) A predicate must be laid on which to impeach the testimony of one witness by that of another.—Jones v. State, 58 Ark. 390, 24 S. W. 1073.

[f] (Ark. 1896) It was not error to refuse to permit a grand juror to state what decedent's wife said before the grand jury as to the position of defendant at the time of the homicide, where said wife was not asked, when she testified, as to whether she had ever made such statement.—Carpenter v. State, 62 Ark. 286, 36 S. W. 900.

[ff] (Cal. 1887) Where no attempt is made to contradict a witness, he may be questioned as to previous statements inconsistent with his testimony, although no foundation has been laid for his impeachment, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 2052.—People v. Levy, 71 Cal. 618, 12 Pac. 791.

[g] (Cal. 1895) A witness for the state testified that she identified defendants at the coroner's office. The defense afterwards proposed to show by another witness that the witness first pointed out another person as the guilty party. Held, that it was not the proper method of impeachment, as the state's witness should have been first examined with reference to that point.—People v. Chin Hane, 108 Cal. 597, 41 Pac. 697.

[gg] (Cal. 1895) Where the defense in an action for cutting wood was that plaintiff agreed to pile it for measurement, but failed to do so, and defendant's foreman testified that the wood was not in condition to be measured, it was error to permit a witness called in rebuttal to testify that he had a conversation with said foreman after the suit had commenced, and that said foreman told the witness that the wood could be easily measured, as, if said testimony was intended to impeach said foreman's testimony, it was improper, because no foundation had been laid.—Mutter v. I. X. L. Lime Co., 42 Pac. 1068.

[h] (Conn. 1853) The English rule, that a witness cannot be impeached by proof that he has made statements contradictory to what he has sworn upon the trial, unless he has been inquired of, on cross-examination, as to such alleged contradictions, has never been adopted in Connecticut by any legislative enactment or judicial decision.—Hedge v. Clapp, 22 Conn. 262, 58 Am. Dec. 424.

[hh] (Conn. 1876) It is within the discretion of the court to receive evidence of declarations made by a witness contradictory to the material facts testified to by him, without the witness having been first asked on cross-examination whether he has made such contradictory statements.—Tomlinson v. Town of Derby, 43 Conn. 562.

[i] (Ga. 1888) On the trial of a man for a single act of adultery with one of his witnesses, letters written by him before the act, and a conversation, also before the act, had with his wife and his witness when he was not present, all tending to show that he, his wife, and his witness had, several months before the alleged act, combined to "blackmail" another person, were not admissible in behalf of the state to impeach the witness or illustrate her relations to or with the accused, she not having been interrogated as to these matters when under examination, so as to lay the foundation for contradicting her.—Gardner v. State, 81 Ga. 144, 7 S. E. 144.

[ii] (Ill. 1860) It is proper to ask a witness about his previous statements before impeaching him by proving them.—Cook v. Hunt, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 535.

[j] (Ill. 1882) Where property seized under execution was replevied by a third claimant, and the defendant in execution testified that the property belonged to the claimant, testimony of other witnesses that on several occasions defendant in execution had stated that he was the owner was not admissible as impeaching testimony, without a foundation for its introduction having been laid.—Redmon v. Holley, 10 Ill. App. (10 Bradw.) 202.

[jj] (Ill. 1886) It is improper to attempt to show that a witness testified differently at a former hearing, or before the grand jury, until a proper foundation has been laid therefor.—Hoge v. People, 117 Ill. 35, 6 N. E. 796.

[k] (Ill. 1888) It is needless to lay a foundation to admit a conversation of the opposite party, pertinent to the issue, by asking him first if he made the statement.—Brown v. Calumet River Ry. Co., 125 Ill. 600, 18 N. E. 283.

[kk] (Ill. 1890) In an action for goods sold and delivered, where the defense was a breach of warranty as to quality, the husband of defendant, who was her agent in the conduct of her business, testified that he informed plaintiff of the defect of quality. Held, that evidence that he on different occasions offered to settle the bill for the goods, and made no claim as to the quality, was admissible to impeach his evidence after his attention was called to such offers; but the irregularity in failing to call his attention thereto preliminary to its admission is cured by his testifying in rebuttal as to the conversations.—Reid v. Foster, 37 Ill. App. 76.

[l] (Ind. 1893) Where it is sought to impeach a witness who is not a party to the action, by proof of contradictory statements made out of court, and the examination of the witness for the purpose of laying the foundation of impeachment is limited to a certain time, it is not competent for the impeaching party to prove contradictory statements made at any other time.—Jackson v. Swope, 134 Ind. 111, 33 N. E. 909.

[ll] (Iowa, 1859) On a prosecution under Code, § 2584, for enticing a female under 15 years of age from her uncle, who had legal charge of her, without his consent, for purpose of prostitution, what the prosecuting witness said before the alleged abduction, with reference to the treatment which she had received at her uncle's and about her intention to leave his house, was properly excluded as impeaching evidence, where defendant failed to lay a basis for impeaching her by asking her the necessary questions while on the stand.—State v. Ruhl, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 447.

[m] (Iowa, 1872) In an action for an assault and battery, defendant on his examination as a witness testified that he had no feelings of enmity against the plaintiff at the time of the assault. A witness was then permitted to give evidence of declarations of defendant tending to contradict plaintiff and to show his feelings of enmity and ill will. Held, that the evidence was not inadmissible on the ground that defendant had no opportunity given him to explain the declarations of which the witness testified.—Lucas v. Flinn, 35 Iowa, 9.

[mm] (Iowa, 1887) Where it is intended to impeach a witness by showing that he said certain things in a conversation, his attention should be called, on the cross-examination, to the conversation, giving time and place, before introducing the impeaching testimony; but where, after such testimony has been put in, the witness is called in rebuttal, and given an opportunity to deny the testimony, the error is harmless.—Esterly v. Eppelsheimer, 78 Iowa, 260, 34 N. W. 846.

[n] (Kan. 1888) Before a witness can be impeached by proof of contradictory statements made in his evidence on a former trial, such contradictions must be called to his attention, and it is error to introduce them without having laid any foundation.—State v. Cleary, 40 Kan. 287, 19 Pac. 776.

[nn] (La. 1896) The rule that statements of the witness out of court, contradictory of his testimony, cannot be proved unless he is first afforded the opportunity of denial, admission, or explanation, is enforced, where the imputed contradictions are offered to impeach the credit of the witness.—State v. Goodbier, 48 La. Ann. 770, 19 South. 755.

[nnn] (La. 1896) The rule that statements of a witness out of court, contradictory to his testimony, cannot be proved unless he is first afforded the opportunity of denial, will be enforced, though the imputed contradictions are offered to show the malice of the witness to the accused.—State v. Goodbier, 48 La. Ann. 770, 19 South. 755.

[o] (Me. 1845) A witness' declarations that he has sworn falsely in a former case may be received without any previous inquiry of him whether he had made such statements, as the practice does not require a previous examination.—State v. Blake, 25 Me. (12 Shep.) 350.

[oo] (Mass. 1855) A witness may be impeached by evidence of his previous contradictory statements, without first calling his attention to such statements.—Commonwealth v. Hawkins, 69 Mass. (3 Gray) 463.

[p] (Mich. 1842) Before the credit of a witness can be impeached by proof of inconsistency in his declarations, a foundation must be laid by questioning him on cross-examination as to his former statements, that he may have an opportunity for explanation.—Sawyer v. Sawyer, Walk. Ch. 48.

[pp] (Mich. 1842) The practice, in chancery, in this regard, is the same as at law.—Sawyer v. Sawyer, Walk. Ch. 48.

[q] (Mich. 1894) Where a witness denied that he had made certain statements to one K., the contradictory testimony of K. in rebuttal was hearsay, and inadmissible in the absence of a foundation for impeachment.—Skelton v. Fenton Electric Light & Power Co., 100 Mich. 87, 58 N. W. 609.

[qq] (Minn. 1861) Testimony as to what a witness testified in another and former trial between different parties is inadmissible, without first calling his attention to such testimony, that he may have an opportunity to explain.—Castner v. Gunther, 6 Minn. 119 (Gil. 63).

[r] (Miss. 1878) Where, on a trial for murder, two witnesses had testified that they had selected the accused from several persons and identified him as the one they saw kill the deceased, held, that it was error to reject evidence offered by him to show what were the words and acts on such occasion, and that there was in fact no such identification, although he had not thereon examined the two witnesses so testifying for the state.—Mixon v. State, 55 Miss. 525.

[rr] (Mo. 1851) Before the credit of a witness can be impeached by proof of anything which he has said in relation to the cause, a foundation must be first laid for such proof, by first asking him whether he has said that which is intended to be proved.—Clementine v. State, 14 Mo. 112.

[s] (Mo. 1888) Evidence as to what a witness testified on a former trial is not admissible to impeach him until he has been particularly inquired of as to such statements.—State v. Parker, 96 Mo. 382, 9 S. W. 728.

[ss] (N. Y. 1850) Error in allowing witness to be impeached by evidence of contradictory statements without first calling his attention to the time and occasion of making the supposed statements was not cured by afterwards recalling him and giving him an opportunity to explain his testimony.—Sprague v. Cadwell, 12 Barb. 516.

[t] (N. Y. 1854) Where no foundation had been laid for impeaching a witness by showing contradictory statements made by him as to any material fact, and he had not been interrogated respecting a particular conversation, evidence of his declarations made in the course of that conversation, offered without any statement to show the relevancy of the proposed proof, was rightly excluded.—Valton v. National Loan Fund Life Assur. Soc., 22 Barb. 9.

[tt] (N. Y. 1872) Where it is attempted to impeach a witness by showing that he has made other statements inconsistent with his evidence upon a material fact, it is requisite that the party offering the impeaching evidence should first call the attention of the witness to the circumstances under which the statement was made, that he may have an opportunity to explain the apparent inconsistency between his evidence and his former statements.—Gaffney v. People, 50 N. Y. 416, affirming People v. Gaffney (1872) 1 Sheld. 304.

[u] (N. Y. 1888) In an action for injuries to a dog, alleged to have been inflicted by defendant, it is improper to admit evidence that a material witness for plaintiff had himself threatened to shoot the dog, and that plaintiff had paid him to make an affidavit in the case, without laying a foundation for contradiction. Code Civ. Proc. § 3063, providing that on appeals from justices objections merely technical and not affecting the merits shall be disregarded, does not abrogate the fundamental rules of evidence.—Sanford v. Shafer, 50 Hun, 600, 2 N. Y. Supp. 357.

[uu] (N. Y. 1889) An objection to the testimony of a witness as to a statement made to him by another witness, because the latter was not asked if he had made such a statement, is properly overruled where the questions asked both witnesses were directed to the same subject-matter.—Voltz v. Wilson, 54 Hun, 635, 7 N. Y. Supp. 176.

[v] (N. Y. 1890) Defendants introduced a witness who testified that during the trial he went to the property described in the complaint and asked to be admitted, so as to make observations, but the proprietor, who had been introduced by plaintiff as a witness, refused to admit him. The defendants then asked such witness to state the reasons the proprietor gave. Held, that such question was properly excluded, the proprietor not having been examined in reference to such statements.—Hamilton v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 58 N. Y. Super. Ct. (26 Jones & S.) 17, 9 N. Y. Supp. 313.

[vv] (N. C. 1879) Testimony relating directly to the subject of litigation may be met by evidence of inconsistent facts, or contradictory statements previously made by the witness, without first calling his attention to such facts or statements.—Jones v. Jones, 80 N. C. 246.

[w] (Or. 1882) The provisions of the Code concerning the contradicting of witnesses by proof of inconsistent declarations made elsewhere, and of the foundation necessary in such cases, are but declaratory of the common-law rules governing the subject.—Sheppard v. Yocum, 10 Or. 402.

[ww] (Pa. 1839) Whether evidence shall be given of contradictory statements made by a witness examined on the trial without first interrogating the witness proposed to be contradicted is a matter for the discretion of the court trying the case, and their decision will not be reviewed on appeal.—Sharp v. Emmet, 5 Whart. 288, 34 Am. Dec. 554.

[x] (Pa. 1846) The admission of evidence of the declarations of a witness for the purpose of discrediting him, without a previous examination of the witness to the same matter, is in the discretion of the court trying the cause.—Kay v. Fredrigal, 3 Pa. (3 Barr) 221.

[xx] (Pa. 1872) Permitting a witness to be contradicted in matters as to which his attention had not been called in his examination is within the discretion of the court trying the case.—Walden v. Finch, 70 Pa. (20 P. F. Smith) 460.

[xxx] (Pa. 1881) Whether to allow the deposition of a witness to be contradicted, by evidence of contradictory statements made by him, without calling his attention thereto, is within the court's discretion, and is not reviewable.—Smith v. Winger, 3 Walk. 138.

[xxxx] (Pa. 1894) It cannot be objected that a proper foundation was not laid for the introduction of acts and declarations inconsistent with witness' testimony, where a proposed cross-examination of him as to acts and declarations inconsistent with his testimony was not allowed.—Miller v. Baker, 160 Pa. 172, 28 Atl. 648, 34 Wkly. Notes Cas. 249.

[y] (Tex. 1880) The right to discredit a witness by proving statements by him contradictory of his testimony extends no further than the predicate laid for that purpose.—Shields v. State, 8 Tex. App. 427.

[yy] (Tex. 1889) On the examination of an executor as to the circumstances attending the execution of a will, it was not proper to ask him on cross-examination whether certain witnesses had not told him that they kept the contestant out of the room while the will was executed, no foundation for the inquiry for the purpose of impeaching such witnesses having been laid.—Robinson v. Stuart, 73 Tex. 267, 11 S. W. 275.

[yyy] (Tex. 1895) The admission of evidence of contradictory statements of a witness without laying a proper foundation when she was on the stand is not error where she afterwards denies the testimony.—Hartsfield v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 777.

[z] (Vt. 1847) It is an established rule of practice that testimony as to the previous declarations of a witness produced upon the stand, offered for the purpose of impeaching him, cannot be received, unless an opportunity be first afforded to the witness, whose testimony it is proposed to impeach, to explain or qualify the imputed declarations; and in this respect this court have fully sanctioned the English rule, which proceeds so far as to admit of no exception even in cases where, when the cross-examination was closed, the party wishing to impeach had no knowledge of the variant declarations or inconsistent conduct of the witness, and the witness has departed from court, and cannot be recalled.—Downer v. Dana, 19 Vt. 338.

[zz] (Wash. 1896) A proper foundation must be laid for the introduction of statements made by a third person in the absence of plaintiff, which are offered for purpose of impeachment.—Allen v. Swerdfiger, 14 Wash. 461, 44 Pac. 894.

[zzz] (Wyo. 1896) Where a consignor testified that the goods were delivered by him to a carrier as the property of a pledgee, and for transportation to him, evidence of statements made by the consignor, to which his attention had not been called while he was on the stand, that he was owner of the goods after they were packed and delivered to the carrier, was inadmissible to impeach him.—Toms v. Whitmore, 6 Wyo. 220, 44 Pac. 56.

§§ 1234, 1235. —— Party as witness.

[a] (Ark. 1877) Where a party to a suit becomes a witness, it is not necessary to lay the usual foundation for proving previous admissions, contradictory to the party's testimony.—Collins v. Mack, 31 Ark. 684.

[b] (Colo. 1892) In order to introduce testimony that a witness, not a party, has made statements contradictory of his testimony, it is first necessary to examine the witness in regard to such statements; but when the witness is also a party, such statements are competent as substantive evidence as well as impeaching testimony, and a prior examination is not necessary, where, according to the regular order of trial, such party is afforded full opportunity of testifying in regard to such statements.—Rose v. Otis, 18 Colo. 59, 31 Pac. 493.

[c] (Iowa, 1894) In order that a witness, whether a party or not, may be impeached by showing inconsistent statements by him out of court, a foundation must be laid, by directing his attention to the time, place, and person involved in the supposed contradiction.—Browning v. Gosnell, 91 Iowa, 448, 59 N. W. 340.

[d] (Neb. 1891) The admissions or statements of a party to a suit against his interest, upon a material matter, may be proved without laying the foundation required in case of impeaching a disinterested witness.—Bartlett v. Cheesebrough, 32 Neb. 339, 49 N. W. 360.

[e] (N. Y. 1889) Evidence of contradictory statements by a party to an action is admissible, though he has not been previously interrogated as to whether he has made such statements.—Kennedy v. Wood, 52 Hun, 46, 4 N. Y. Supp. 758.

[f] (N. Y. 1893) Evidence of a party to an action on a former trial, so far as it relates to the questions at issue, is admissible to prove admissions made by her, and it is not essential that her attention be first called to what she testified to on the former trial.—Fisher v. Monroe (Com. Pl.) 2 Misc. Rep. 326, 21 N. Y. Supp. 995.

[g] (N. Y. 1894) A party's contradictory statements out of court relevant to the issues, being original evidence as an admission, may be proved without previous interrogation of the witness.—Boyd v. Boyd (Com. Pl.) 9 Misc. Rep. 161, 29 N. Y. Supp. 7.

[h] (Pa. 1876) Where a party is a witness in his own behalf, his admissions out of court, though contradicting his evidence, may be proved without first calling his attention to them, as in the case of other witnesses.—Kreiter v. Bomberger, 82 Pa. 59, 22 Am. Rep. 750.

[i] (Va. 1880) When the credibility of a witness is to be impeached by anything he has said or done in relation to the cause, he must first be asked, on cross-examination, whether he has said or done that which is intended to be proved; and this applies equally where plaintiff is the witness sought to be impeached.—Davis v. Franke, 33 Grat. 413.

[j] (Wis. 1888) Defendant contending that the lumber for which a lien was sought to be enforced was not sold to him, but to his contractor, evidence of an admission that he was bound to pay plaintiff's claim is competent, without foundation.—Wisconsin Planing-Mill Co. v. Schuda, 72 Wis. 277, 39 N. W. 558.

[k] (Wis. 1891) The admissions of a party against his own interest may be shown without any foundation being laid, and the fact that the testimony of the party taken in the justice's court is read in evidence on the trial in the circuit court on appeal under a stipulation does not take the case out of the rule.—Hunter v. Gibbs, 79 Wis. 70, 48 N. W. 257.

§ 1236. —— Impeachment of one's own witness.

[a] (Ind. 1892) Though by the provisions of Rev. St. 1881, § 507, a party may impeach his own witness by proof of contradictory statements, he must lay the foundation therefor by calling the attention of the witness to the time and place of the statements.—Diffenderfer v. Scott, 5 Ind. App. 243, 32 N. E. 87.

[aa] (Mass. 1885) In an action to establish a will, one S. was called by defendants, and testified that in a conversation with B., the testator's wife, who was alleged to have procured the execution of the will by undue influence, B. said that she and her husband were satisfied with the will. The witness was then asked, "Did not Mrs. B. say something to you in effect like this: that she had torn up, or insisted upon tearing up or destroying, a will that was not satisfactory to her?" to which witness replied, "No, sir; nothing of the kind." Defendants then called a witness, and offered to show that S. had made statements inconsistent with the testimony given on the stand, and which was excluded. Held, that the impeaching testimony offered was not admissible, under Pub. St. c. 169, § 22, which provides that "the party producing a witness * * * may contradict him by other evidence, and may also prove that he has made, at other times, statements inconsistent with his present testimony; but, before such last mentioned proof can be given, the circumstances of the supposed statement sufficient to designate the particular occasion must be mentioned to the witness, and he must be asked whether or not he has made such statements, and, if so, allowed to explain them,"—since it had no tendency to establish the truth of the alleged statement.—Batchelder v. Batchelder, 139 Mass. 1, 29 N. E. 61.

[b] (Miss. 1886) One may not discredit his own witness by proof of previous contradictory statements, unless fraud or artifice is shown, and the necessary foundation laid by directing the attention of the witness to the circumstances.—Dunlap v. Richardson, 63 Miss. 447.

[c] (Pa. 1874) Where a party is called as a witness by his adversary, as on cross-examination, his testimony may be contradicted by proof of inconsistent declarations made out of court, without giving him an opportunity to explain them, as his declarations, he being a party, are evidence in themselves.—Brubaker's Adm'r v. Taylor, 76 Pa. (26 P. F. Smith) 83.

§ 1237. Scope of cross-examination for purpose of laying foundation.

Denial by witness and right to contradict, see post, § 1244.

[a] A witness cannot be questioned on cross-examination about a matter irrelevant to the issue for the purpose of laying a ground to impeach him by contradicting his statements.
—(Ala. 1872) Marx v. Bell, 48 Ala. 497; (1879) Washington v. State, 63 Ala. 189;
(Miss. 1882) Tucker v. Donald, 60 Miss. 460, 45 Am. Rep. 416;
(Or. 1861) Goodall v. State, 1 Or. 333, 80 Am. Dec. 396.

[b] (U. S. 1806) If a witness, in a deposition, on his cross-examination, states as facts circumstances not pertinent to the cause, which he has said or sworn in another cause in which the circumstances were pertinent, the statement cannot be read to discredit him.—Lamalere v. Caze, Fed. Cas. No. 8,002 [1 Wash. C. C. 413].

[c] (Ala. 1889) At a trial for burglary a brother of defendant testified in his behalf to facts tending to show that one B. was the burglar. On cross-examination the witness was asked if he did not say to B. "while in jail about the time of the preliminary trial: 'Why, did you give us away? If you had not turned state's evidence, me and pa would have been out of jail now, and could have got as may G—— d—— witnesses as we wanted to have proved you and Jim [defendant] out.'" Held, that the question was admissible to impeach the veracity of the witness.—England v. State, 89 Ala. 76, 8 South. 146.

[d] (Ark. 1866) A witness who has testified before the examining court, in a criminal case, may on the trial be asked if he did not in his testimony before the examining court make certain statements, when such question is put for the purpose of laying a foundation on which to contradict the witness.—Milan v. State, 24 Ark. 346.

[e] (Cal. 1893) On a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, defendant's wife was asked if she did not tell one B. that defendant had intended to do the shooting some weeks earlier, and that defendant had made her pursue a certain course of action, which statement she denied having made. Held that, as such evidence did not bear directly on the shooting, the witness could not be impeached by a question asked of B. as to what she had told B. about the shooting.—People v. Nonella, 99 Cal. 333, 33 Pac. 1097.

[f] (Ga. 1866) A witness cannot be discredited by evidence contradicting his answer to a cross-interrogatory, unless the cross-interrogatory was put in accordance with the rule as to laying the foundation for impeaching a witness by statements made out of court.—Wilkinson v. Davis, 34 Ga. 549.

[g] (Ill. 1882) Where, in an action against a master for the negligence of his servant in driving a team, the servant testified merely to the facts concerning the collision, and was then improperly cross-examined as to certain statements and admissions made by him at the time, evidence of inconsistent statements was not competent.—Teal v. Meravey, 12 Ill. App. (12 Bradw.) 32.

[h] (Ill. 1884) In bastardy proceedings the testimony of the prosecutrix cannot be impeached by asking questions on wholly collateral matters and showing that her answers in regard thereto were contrary to her statements made out of court.—Moore v. People, 108 Ill. 484, affirming (1883) 13 Ill. App. (13 Bradw.) 248.

[i] (Iowa, 1856) A witness may be questioned, on cross-examination, as to certain statements made by him, with a view to contradicting him.—Ross v. Hayne, 3 G. Greene, 211.

[j] (La. 1893) Where, in a criminal trial, the state places a particular witness for the first time on the stand, by permission of the court, after the parties have closed their case, to rebut the testimony of a witness for defendant, the court may refuse to allow him to be asked questions as to irrelevant matters not bearing on the issue in order to lay a foundation for impeachment.—State v. Spencer, 45 La. Ann. 1, 12 South. 135.

[k] (Mass. 1868) The contradiction of a witness by proof of a declaration made by him inconsistent with a statement drawn out on his cross-examination is competent, if upon a material question.—Foot v. Hunkins, 98 Mass. 523.

[l] (Mich. 1887) In a suit by the holder of a claim against an estate, the question being put in issue by claimant as to the ownership of money in the hands of claimant and her husband, the opposing counsel might cross-examine the husband fully as to where he obtained the money, and contradict and impeach his testimony by conflicting statements made by him out of court.—Stackable v. Stackpole's Estate, 65 Mich. 515, 32 N. W. 808.

[m] (Mich. 1891) In an action for assault and battery, for the purpose of impeachment defendant may be asked "if he had not stated that he meant to have killed plaintiff, and would if he had it to do over again."—Kent v. Cole, 84 Mich. 579, 48 N. W. 168.

[n] (Mich. 1893) It is not proper, in a civil action, for the purpose of discrediting a witness, to cross-examine her as to her testimony on a criminal trial, and then impeach by showing that her statements at different times have been contradictory.—Cole v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 95 Mich. 77, 54 N. W. 638.

[o] (Miss. 1896) Where a witness is questioned on cross-examination as to irrelevant and collateral matters not brought out on direct examination, the cross-examining party is bound by the witness' answer, and cannot prove unsworn statements made out of court to contradict him.—Williams v. State, 73 Miss. 820, 19 South. 826.

[p] (Mo. 1886) Where, in a criminal case, the defendant offers to prove by another witness that a witness who had been examined by the state had said that he and another witness would leave, and not be witnesses against defendant, for $100, the defendant is entitled, in cross-examination, to ask such state witness whether he made the statement alleged.—State v. Downs, 91 Mo. 19, 3 S. W. 219.

[q] (Mo. 1887) In a suit to redeem certain land which plaintiff claimed to have been conveyed by deed absolute, which was intended as a mortgage and which had been subsequently conveyed to a third person, the plaintiff was asked if he had not stated to a certain witness that he had sold the property and that he had no interest in it, to which he replied that he had never had any such conversation with such witness. Held, that testimony by such witness that he did have such conversation, and that plaintiff had told him that he had conveyed the property, was admissible for the purpose of impeaching the plaintiff, though it was objected to on the ground that it was irrelevant.—Schradski v. Albright, 93 Mo. 42, 5 S. W. 807.

[r] (Neb. 1887) A witness cannot be cross-examined as to one independent collateral matter in no way connected with the subject of the action, in order to show contradictory statements made by him, for the purpose of impeaching his credibility.—Curran v. Percival, 21 Neb. 434, 32 N. W. 218.

[s] (Neb. 1893) To justify the proving of contradictory statements of a witness, for the purpose of impeaching him, the answer of the witness on cross-examination must be material, so that the cross-examining party would be allowed to give it in evidence.—Carter v. State, 36 Neb. 481, 54 N. W. 853.

[t] (N. H. 1859) A witness, who had not been asked whether a bolt in a carriage had a nut upon it, which would have been a question material to the issue, was asked on cross-examination if he had not said he knew the bolt had no nut on it, with a view to contradict him if he denied it. Held, that the question was immaterial, and irrelevant, and therefore inadmissible.—Combs v. Winchester, 39 N. H. 13, 75 Am. Dec. 203.

[u] (N. Y. 1854) A witness cannot be cross-examined as to statements made by him at some previous time in regard to one point at issue in the case, where he had not testified at all in chief on such subject, and his answers could not properly affect his credibility.—Bearss v. Copley, 10 N. Y. (6 Seld.) 93.

[v] (N. Y. 1864) A party cross-examining a witness cannot draw out collateral statements from him, and for the purpose of discrediting him show that on some other occasion he stated differently.—Carpenter v. Ward, 30 N. Y. 243.

[w] (N. Y. 1874) On the trial of an action for an alleged breach by T. of a contract to support plaintiff during life, a witness called by defendant testified to conversations between the parties and admissions by plaintiff in substance that no such contract had been made. Upon cross-examination said witness was asked if he had not since said that plaintiff should have $1,000 out of T.'s estate? This the witness denied. Plaintiff thereupon, for the purpose of discrediting said witness, offered and was allowed to prove, under objection, that he had so said. Held no error, as it was equivalent to a declaration that the contract was made.—Schell v. Plumb, 55 N. Y. 592, affirming (1873) 46 How. Prac. 11.

[ww] (N. Y. 1877) Where a witness for defendant is asked on cross-examination as to whether he had not made to a third person certain statements which tended to show that he meant to conciliate the defendant by appearing as a witness and by his testimony, and he denied making them, such third person may be called to prove that he did not make such statements, as it is evidence as to the motive of the witness in testifying, and not evidence on a collateral issue.—O'Hagan v. Dillon, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. (10 Jones & S.) 456.

[x] (N. Y. 1880) Where the state, on cross-examination of accused's witness, brought out matters which were not testified to in chief, the witness is thereby made a witness for the state in respect to such matters, and the state will not be permitted thereafter to discredit her testimony in regard to it by showing contradictory statements made to other persons not under oath.—People v. Cox, 21 Hun, 47, affirmed (1880) 83 N. Y. 610.

[xx] (N. Y. 1889) In an action for forcibly removing plaintiff from defendant's car, the conductor was asked, on cross-examination by plaintiff, whether he testified before the police commissioner that he told plaintiff that he could not ride inside the car because it was against the rules, unless he paid additional fare for a package which he was carrying, to which he answered affirmatively. Held, that evidence that he did not so testify was irrelevant and inadmissible to impeach his credibility, as it related to a matter collateral to the issue.—Morris v. Atlantic Ave. R. Co., 116 N. Y. 552, 22 N. E. 1097.

[y] (N. Y. 1891) An affidavit made by a witness was offered in evidence for the purpose of impeaching the testimony of such witness. It appeared that the witness, on his direct examination, testified to nothing at variance with matters stated in the affidavit, but the statements alleged to be inconsistent therewith were elicited on cross-examination by the party offering the affidavit. The testimony given on cross-examination did not tend to contradict, discredit, vary, explain, or qualify the testimony given in chief. Held, that the affidavit was properly excluded.—Surdam v. Ingraham, 59 Hun, 620, 12 N. Y. Supp. 798.

[yy] (N. Y. 1892) On the question whether or not the signing of the name of one partner by the other to an assignment of firm property was authorized by the non-signing partner, a witness having testified that such partner had denied authorizing the use of his name, and that want of authority was admitted by the other partner, who was present, the court erred in refusing to allow the witness, on cross-examination, to say whether or not his legal advice had been asked, at the time specified by the partners, as to whether a second assignment by them was not illegal because of the existence of the first, and whether he had not answered affirmatively; the object of such answers being to impeach the testimony in chief of the witness.—National Bank of Troy v. Scriven, 63 Hun, 375, 18 N. Y. Supp. 277.

[z] (N. Y. 1892) In an action against a railroad for the death of a person struck by one of its trains, cross-examination of the engineer as to whether his train was late is proper as a test of credibility, to show whether his testimony would be the same as before the coroner.—Lustig v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co., 65 Hun, 547, 20 N. Y. Supp. 477.

[zz] (N. Y. 1894) A witness called by plaintiff having denied the criminal conversation with plaintiff alleged in defendant's counterclaim for divorce, defendant could lay a foundation for impeachment by asking him if he did not admit to a certain person that he had illicit relations with plaintiff.—Woodrick v. Woodrick, 141 N. Y. 457, 36 N. E. 395.

[zzz] (Tenn. 1850) Where lumber sold as the property of a third person is claimed by plaintiff, who introduces such third person on his behalf to testify as to whether he acted as owner or as agent of the plaintiff, defendant may ask such third person if he had not made certain statements as to the lumber to certain persons, for the purpose of laying the foundation to show such statements by such other persons.—Jones v. Jennings, 29 Tenn. (10 Humph.) 428.

§ 1238. Foundation for impeachment of deposition, affidavit, or other written testimony.

[a] (U. S. 1839) The rule that a witness cannot be impeached by proving that at other times he made contradictory statements unless he shall first be interrogated as to such statements does not apply where an ex parte deposition is read of the taking of which no notice was given.—McKinney v. Nell, Fed. Cas. No. 8,865 [1 McLean, 540].

[b, c] (Ala. 1860) A witness testifying by deposition cannot be contradicted by evidence of his statements in a deposition taken in another suit, without the foundation therefor be first laid by inquiring of the witness whether or not he has made such statements; but depositions taken in the same suit are in effect one deposition, and as to them the rule is otherwise.—Hughes v. Wilkinson, 35 Ala. 453.

[d] (Colo. 1888) Where defendant took two depositions of a witness, and at the trial read the second, the plaintiff, for the purpose of showing that the witness made contradictory statements therein, may read the former deposition, without laying the ordinary foundation by interrogating him as to whether he had made such statements, giving time and place, etc.—Thompson v. Gregor, 11 Colo. 531, 19 Pac. 461.

[e] (Colo. 1895) A witness cannot be impeached by showing that he has made statements inconsistent with his testimony, unless he be given an opportunity to explain or deny the statements claimed to be contradictory; and it is immaterial that his testimony was taken by deposition, and that some of the alleged statements were made after his examination, when it was too late to lay the foundation for their introduction, while others, though made before he gave his deposition, were not known to counsel till afterwards.—Ryan v. People, 21 Colo. 119, 40 Pac. 775.

[f] (Ga. 1849) Where a party wishes to discredit a witness examined on a commission, where there is nothing in the interrogatory to apprise him beforehand what the witness will say, by proving the making of contradictory statements, his only course is to take a new commission for the examination of the witness as to the matter proposed to be contradicted, and then, having laid the foundation, he may contradict such witness by proof of his having made contradictory statements.—Johnson v. Kinsey, 7 Ga. 428.

[g] (Ga. 1853) The answers to cross-interrogatories which had not been read may be read by the adverse party, for the purpose of laying the foundation of impeaching the same witness, whose testimony, taken under another commission, had been read to the jury, the court allowing the other party to read the direct interrogatories.—Thomasson v. Driskell, 13 Ga. 253.

[h] (Ind. 1846) A deposition cannot be impeached by proving that a statement inconsistent with it had, before it was taken, been made by the deponent, unless the deposition shows that the deponent had been asked, on his examination, whether he had made such a statement.—Legg v. Leyman, 8 Blackf. 148.

[i] (Iowa, 1862) Two depositions of a witness were taken at different times; in the second he stated that his deposition had been taken before in the case before A. B., a notary public, that he was then sworn in the usual manner, and that his testimony was correctly written out by that officer. Beyond this the witness' attention was not called to the testimony which he had previously given, nor was any further opportunity given him to confirm or explain it. At the trial, the second deposition only having been introduced, it was held that the opposite party could not claim to read the first deposition, for the sake of impeaching the witness, by showing a disagreement between the two.—Samuels v. Griffith, 13 Iowa, 103.

[j] (Kan. 1878) Where the deposition of a witness had been read in evidence, and the opposing party produced another and a conflicting deposition of the same witness in another action between the same parties, it was not error for the court on its own motion to exclude it, as the witness sought to be impeached and the party to be affected thereby were entitled to any explanation which the witness could give for the statements imputed to him, and the attention of the witness must be first called on cross-examination to such prior contradictory statements.—Greer v. Higgins, 20 Kan. 420.

[k] (La. 1858) Where a seasonable though fruitless effort had been made to examine a witness, whose testimony had been taken under commission, in relation to contradictory statements alleged to have been made by him, proof of such contradictory statements was properly received.—Fletcher v. Henley, 13 La. Ann. 191.

[l] (Md. 1863) The rule that a witness cannot be impeached by proving that he had on other occasions made statements at variance with his testimony, unless a proper foundation has been previously laid by interrogating the witness on the subject of the alleged variance, governs when the testimony of the witness is taken under a commission as well as when he is examined on the stand.—Matthews v. Dare, 20 Md. 248.

[m] (Miss. 1885) A witness cannot be impeached by proof of contradictory statements made by him unless a foundation is laid, even though his testimony is in the form of an affidavit for a continuance.—Fulton v. Hughes, 63 Miss. 61.

[n] (Mo. 1865) A party cannot impeach the credibility of a person whose deposition is introduced in evidence by showing that he has made contradictory written statements since the taking of the deposition, unless he takes a second deposition, and examines him as to such statements.—Gregory v. Cheatham, 36 Mo. 155.

[o] (N. Y. 1854) Evidence will not be received to prove the declarations of a witness inconsistent with his testimony in a deposition taken de bene esse and read without objection, where no opportunity of explanation has been given.—Stacy v. Graham, 10 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Duer) 444, affirmed (1856) 14 N. Y. (4 Kern.) 492.

[p] (N. Y. 1856) Testimony de bene esse cannot be impeached, in the absence of the witness, by evidence of contrary statements made by him subsequent to his written testimony. Opportunity for interrogating a witness regarding such statements must be given before it is admissible. — Stacy v. Graham, 14 N. Y. (4 Kern.) 492.

[q] (N. Y. 1892) The deposition of a witness cannot be impeached at the trial by evidence of contradictory statements made by him elsewhere, to which his attention was not called at the time the deposition was taken.—Fitch v. Kennard (City Ct. N. Y.) 19 N. Y. Supp. 468, judgment reversed (Com. Pl. 1892) 2 Misc. Rep. 95, 20 N. Y. Supp. 845.

[r] (N. C. 1845) Where a deposition has been read, the opposite party may prove that the deponent, after the deposition was taken, made statements different from those contained in the deposition, it being impossible, from the nature of the case, to first ask the witness if he had made such statements.—Roberts v. Collins, 28 N. C. 223.

[s] (N. C. 1856) The rule that before a witness can be impeached by proof of contradictory statements he must be inquired of concerning them applies to depositions, unless the inconsistent statements were made after the depositions were taken.—Hooper v. Moore, 48 N. C. 428.

[t] (R. I. 1851) If a deposition be taken, under the statute, in the absence of the adverse party, he may put in proof contradictory statements made by the witness, without previously interrogating him thereto. — Hazard v. New York, B. & P. R. Co., 2 R. I. 62.

[u] (Tenn. 1848) When the deposition of a witness is taken, evidence of his having made contradictory statements is not admissible to impeach his testimony, unless an opportunity to explain had been first offered him.—Story v. Saunders, 27 Tenn. (8 Humph.) 663.

[v] (Tenn. 1858) The credit of a witness whose deposition has been taken cannot be impeached as showing that at a trial had before the deposition was taken his testimony conflicted with that of the deposition, unless the deposition shows that the attention of the witness was called to such prior conflicting statements.—Bounds v. Schwab, 37 Tenn. (5 Sneed) 591.

[w] (Tex. 1893) A report of an accident, not discovered until the trial, cannot be used to impeach the evidence contained in a deposition by the person making the report, no foundation for such use being laid in the interrogatories filed.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Briggs, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 515, 23 S. W. 503.

[x] (Vt. 1847) The rule that testimony as to the previous declarations of a witness, adduced on the stand, offered for the purpose of impeaching him, cannot be received unless an opportunity be first afforded to the witness, whose testimony it is proposed to impeach, to explain the imputed declaration, is not applicable to depositions, but the party may, in such case, without previous inquiry, prove any inconsistent declarations of the witness.—Downer v. Dana, 19 Vt. 338.

[y] (Vt. 1859) It is admissible, for the purpose of impeaching the testimony of a deponent, to introduce evidence of statements made by him conflicting with those contained in his deposition. And it is not necessary that the deponent should be inquired of in relation to such conflicting statements. — Robinson v. Hutchinson, 31 Vt. 443.

[z] (Va. 1855) A witness who has testified in a case cannot be impeached by the proof of contradictory or inconsistent statements, alleged to have been made by him on other occasions, before the foundation for the introduction of such impeaching testimony is first laid by an examination of the witness touching the fact of his having made such statements. And the rule applies to depositions as well as to oral testimony.—Unis v. Charlton's Adm'r, 12 Grat. 484.

§ 1239. Foundation for impeachment by written statements.

[a] In order to entitle letters to be read in evidence for the purpose of contradicting a witness, the witness' attention must first be called to the letters, in order to give him an opportunity to explain the inconsistency.

—(Ala. 1891) Cooper v. State, 90 Ala. 641, 8 South. 821;

(Cal. 1875) Leonard v. Kingsley, 50 Cal. 628;

(Ill. 1891) Perishable Freight Transp. Co. v. O'Neill, 41 Ill. App. 423; (1895) Seckel v. York Nat. Bank, 57 Ill. App. 579;

(Iowa, 1861) Morrison v. Myers, 11 Iowa, 538; (1889) Richmond v. Sundberg, 77 Iowa, 255, 42 N. W. 184;

(Tex. 1895) Burleson v. Collins (Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 898.

[b] (U. S. 1884) The contradictory declarations of a witness, whether oral or in writing, made at another time, cannot be used for the purpose of impeachment until the witness has been examined upon the subject, and his attention particularly directed to the circumstances in such a way as to give him full opportunity for explanation. — The Charles Morgan v. Kouns, 115 U. S. 69, 5 Sup. Ct. 1172, 29 L. Ed. 316.

[c] (Ala. 1883) Where a witness is sought to be impeached by evidence of a former written statement signed by him, the entire statement should be read to him, and not detached portions.—Wills v. State, 74 Ala. 21.

[d] (Cal. 1887) To impeach a witness under Code Civ. Proc. § 2052, on the ground that his previous statements conflict with his present testimony, such previous statements must be shown to the witness, if in writing, before any question can be put concerning them.—People v. Ching Hing Chang, 74 Cal. 389, 16 Pac. 201.

[e] (Ga. 1853) In cross-examining a witness as to the contents of a letter, or other paper, written by him, with a view to impeach his testimony, the letter or paper must be first shown to him, before counsel will be permitted to represent, in his interrogatory, the contents of the writing.—Stamper v. Griffin, 12 Ga. 450.

[f] (Ill. 1873) Showing to a witness on cross-examination a written statement made by him materially differing from his testimony, and according him an opportunity of explaining the discrepancy, lays a proper foundation for reading the paper in evidence for the purpose of impeaching his testimony.—Northern Line Packet Co. v. Binninger, 70 Ill. 571.

[g, h] (Ill. 1889) When a witness has made written statements material to the issue, on a prior occasion, differing from his evidence on the trial, the other party must call his attention to such previous statements, and give him an opportunity to explain them, in order to impeach him by the introduction of such writings.—Boeker v. Hess, 34 Ill. App. 332.

[i] (Iowa, 1868) To lay a foundation for impeaching a witness by allegations made by him in a certain petition, the correct practice would be to show him the petition and then ask him if he had sworn to it, not merely to ask him outright to state what he thought he made oath to concerning a certain matter in his petition.—Callanan v. Shaw, 24 Iowa, 441.

[j] (Iowa, 1879) In order to impeach a witness by a paper written by him, the paper must be first shown to him, and he must be asked if he wrote it.—Peck v. Parchen, 52 Iowa, 46, 2 N. W. 597.

[k] (Mo. 1883) Where a witness is sought to be impeached by a letter he admits to have written, it may be offered in evidence without examining him as to its contents.—State v. Stein, 79 Mo. 330.

[l, m] (N. M. 1892) Where it is sought to contradict a witness by offering in evidence two letters written by him, a proper foundation must be laid to warrant their admission; Comp. Laws 1884, § 2084, providing that, where it is intended to contradict a witness by writings, "his attention must, before such contradictory proof can be given, be called to those parts of the writing which are to be used for the purpose of so contradicting him."—Kirchner v. Laughlin, 6 N. M. 300, 28 Pac. 505.

[n] (N. Y. 1872) Where a party proposes to impeach a witness by proving inconsistent written statements, it is sufficient to show the witness or read to him the paper, and if its genuineness is admitted, the party can introduce it.—Romertze v. East River Nat. Bank, 49 N. Y. 577, reversing (1869) 32 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sweeny) 82.

[o] (N. Y. 1872) It is sufficient for a party proposing to impeach a witness by proving inconsistent written statements to show him or read to him the paper, and, if its genuineness is admitted, to introduce it, when he has a right to put in evidence.—Romertze v. East River Nat. Bank, 49 N. Y. 577, reversing (1869) 32 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sweeny) 82.

[p] (N. Y. 1891) The rule that, before a witness can be impeached by showing that he made statements on material points in conflict with his evidence, his attention must be directed to the time and place those statements were made, does not apply where the inconsistent statements are written; but in such case it is sufficient to show or read the paper to the witness.—Doud v. Donnelly, 59 Hun, 615, 12 N. Y. Supp. 396.

[q] (N. Y. 1892) In an action to determine which of two persons at an observatory had the right of property in a star catalogue compiled by them, a witness for defendant stated on cross-examination that he had had some correspondence with plaintiff, and that he was under the impression the catalogue belonged to plaintiff. Afterwards plaintiff, being on the stand, offered the correspondence for the purpose of showing said witness' understanding as to whose the catalogue was, and testing also his credibility or the accuracy of his memory. The genuineness of the correspondence was not denied. Held admissible, although witness' attention may not have been called thereto when upon the stand.—Root v. Borst, 65 Hun, 622, 20 N. Y. Supp. 189, judgment reversed (1894) 142 N. Y. 62, 36 N. E. 814.

[r] (N. Y. 1893) In an action against a street-car company by a passenger, for personal injuries sustained in being thrown from the front platform of defendant's car and run over, an entry, in a police blotter, of the report of an officer who assisted plaintiff at the accident, is not admissible to contradict the officer, where it does not appear that his attention has been called to the statements therein.—Weymouth v. Broadway & S. A. R. Co. (Super. N. Y.) 2 Misc. Rep. 506, 22 N. Y. Supp. 1047, judgment affirmed (1894) 142 N. Y. 681, 37 N. E. 825.

[s] (Or. 1896) Where it is sought to impeach a witness by statements in a confession involuntarily made, which was reduced to writing, and signed by the witness, the writing itself must be shown to the witness when the foundation is being made for the admission of statements contained therein.—State v. Steeves, 29 Or. 85, 43 Pac. 947.

[t] (Tex. 1888) On trial of an issue as to the existence of a deed alleged to have been made to a married woman, the inventory of the grantor's estate, filed and sworn to by the grantee and her husband, as administrators of the grantor, is not admissible to impeach the husband's testimony, where he has not been examined on the subject.—Clapp v. Engledow, 72 Tex. 252, 10 S. W. 462.

[u] (Vt. 1862) A witness was asked on cross-examination whether he had not in a certain letter stated a date differently from what he now testified it to be. Held, that the inquiry was proper, being collateral, and for the mere purpose of affecting the credit of the witness, and that the questioning party was not bound to produce the letter.—Town of Randolph v. Town of Woodstock, 35 Vt. 291.

[v] (W. Va. 1885) Where a written statement, made by a witness before he gives his evidence, which tends to contradict his evidence in any material point, is offered in evidence, it must first be shown to the witness to give him an opportunity to make any statement he may choose in reference to its execution.—State v. Kinney, 26 W. Va. 141.

§ 1240. —— Depositions or minutes of testimony at former trial or hearing.

[a] (U. S. 1848) Depositions to contradict a witness will not be received unless the question as to the fact was distinctly put to the witness.—Chapin v. Siger, Fed. Cas. No. 2,600 [4 McLean, 378].

[aa] (Ala. 1847) The rule that a witness cannot be contradicted by proof of previous counter declarations, either written or verbal, without first asking him if he has made such declarations, applies to testimony taken by deposition.—Howell v. Reynolds, 12 Ala. 128.

[b] (Ala. 1863) A witness who has been orally examined cannot be impeached by proof of contradictory statements made by him in a deposition previously taken in the same case, unless a foundation is first laid by inquiring of the witness as to such previous statements.—Bradford v. Barclay, 39 Ala. 33.

[c] (Ala. 1886) When it is sought to impeach the credibility of a witness by proving that he has on other occasions made contradictory oral statements, he may be asked, on cross-examination, if he did not make such statements; but, when his former statements were reduced to writing and subscribed by him, as when testifying on the preliminary examination of the defendant before a committing magistrate, and the deposition or writing is produced in court, it must be read to him, or he must be allowed to read and examine it, before he can be interrogated as to his former statements.—Floyd v. State, 82 Ala. 16, 2 South. 683.

[d] (Ala. 1894) A witness recalled for the purpose of laying a foundation for impeaching testimony may state whether he gave certain testimony upon the preliminary trial, though the evidence at such trial was reduced to writing.—Sanders v. State, 105 Ala. 4, 16 South. 935.

[e] (Cal. 1889) Where a witness is interrogated with regard to statements made by him at a former trial, he has the right, if such statements were reduced to writing, to have the writing presented to him, and read.—People v. Lee Chuck, 78 Cal. 317, 20 Pac. 719.

[f] (Cal. 1891) A tenant, in an action against his landlord for money expended and work done, testified on cross-examination that at the time of the landlord's entry he did not "claim to be in possession under a lease, because there was no lease." Thereupon, for the purpose of contradicting him by showing a former admission that his possession was that of a tenant, the landlord offered a transcript in a former action between them, wherein the tenant had recovered damages for the said entry. The witness was not asked what he had admitted or alleged in the former action; nor was his attention called to the transcript. Held, that it was not proper at that time for the purpose proposed.—Salle v. Mayer, 91 Cal. 165, 27 Pac. 513.

[g] (Cal. 1893) One jointly indicted with defendant for burglary, and who had pleaded guilty, as a witness for the state testified that defendant had nothing to do with the robbery. Held that, for the purpose of laying a foundation for showing that he had made contradictory statements, the state was properly allowed to ask him if, when he pleaded guilty, he did not in the presence of the court, its officers, and others, state that defendant was one of the parties to the robbery, there being no purpose to impeach him by his written testimony, so that it should have been first read to him.—People v. Kruger, 100 Cal. 523, 35 Pac. 88.

[h] (Fla. 1893) A witness in a criminal case cannot be impeached by the production of inconsistent testimony given by him before a committing magistrate, which was reduced to writing and signed by him, unless such testimony be first shown to the witness, and his attention called to the inconsistencies.—Simmons v. State, 32 Fla. 387, 13 South. 896.

[i] (Ga.) The rule requiring a party to lay the foundation for impeaching a witness by first inquiring of the witness whether or not he has made the statements does not apply where the evidence to impeach the witness is his sworn depositions previously taken in the same cause.—(1849) Williams v. Chapman, 7 Ga. 467; (1853) Bryan v. Walton, 14 Ga. 185; (1860) Molyneaux v. Collier, 30 Ga. 731.

[j] (Ga. 1878) A brief of the evidence on a former trial, agreed upon by the parties as correct, will not be admitted, in a subsequent trial, to impeach witnesses who testified at both trials, until the witnesses have been asked whether they did not swear to certain facts at the former trial, and have denied that they did so swear.—Taylor v. Morgan, 61 Ga. 46.

[k] (Ga. 1890) A witness whose testimony, taken by interrogatories, is before the jury in a second trial cannot be impeached by reading extracts from a brief of his evidence given in at a former trial, without first calling his attention to the brief, and affording him an opportunity to explain.—Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Smith, 85 Ga. 530, 11 S. E. 859.

[l] (Ill. 1888) The affidavit of a subscribing witness to a will, made prior to and contradicting his evidence, as subscribing witness, as to the mental condition of the testator, being admissible only to impeach him, is not admissible without first calling his attention to it, and to the parts contradicting his testimony at the time of his examination.—In re Noble, 124 Ill. 266, 15 N. E. 850.

[ll] (Ill. 1890) A deposition of a witness taken in another proceeding is admissible in impeachment of his testimony where his attention is first directed to such deposition on his cross-examination.—Consolidated Ice Mach. Co. v. Keifer, 134 Ill. 481, 25 N. E. 799, 23 Am. St. Rep. 688, 10 L. R. A. 696.

[m] (Ill. 1891) Where a witness is in court, his testimony taken on a former trial will not be read in evidence, except to impeach him, and then only such part as his attention is called to specifically, and which he is allowed to explain.—Campbell v. Campbell, 138 Ill. 612, 28 N. E. 1080.

[n] (Ind. 1882) In order to contradict the statements of a witness, a bill of exceptions, purporting to contain his testimony of a former trial, filed for the purpose of a former appeal, is inadmissible; the attention of the witness not having been called to any statement contained in such bill.—Starret v. Burkhalter, 86 Ind. 439.

[o] (Iowa, 1865) Minutes of evidence taken before the grand jury are inadmissible as independent evidence, and cannot be used to show conflict in the testimony of the witness without giving the latter an opportunity to deny their correctness or state to the trial jury what he did previously testify. Where it is claimed that there is a conflict of this kind, the witness' attention must be drawn to his former testimony, and the foundation for his impeachment laid in the usual way.—State v. Ostrander, 18 Iowa, 435.

[p] (Iowa, 1871) The rule that, when it is sought to impeach a witness by proof of statements made by him contrary to what he has testified to on the trial, his attention must be first drawn to the time, place, and person involved in the supposed contradiction, applies to an impeachment by means of a former deposition of a witness. In such case, if it is claimed that there is a discrepancy between the statements in a former deposition and the testimony of the witnesses on the trial, such discrepancy must be first brought to the attention of the witness, so that he may have an opportunity to explain, before the deposition is admissible to contradict him.—State v. Collins, 32 Iowa, 36.

[pp] (Iowa, 1882) The deposition of a witness was shown to him before reading it in evidence to impeach his testimony, and after it was so read he was examined and re-examined upon the same subject-matter. Held, that no advantage was taken that could prejudice defendant.—Johnson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 58 Iowa, 348, 12 N. W. 329.

[q] (Iowa, 1886) Evidence taken before a grand jury cannot be received for the purpose of impeaching a witness unless the proper foundation has been laid for its introduction.—State v. Leeper, 70 Iowa, 748, 30 N. W. 501.

[qq] (Kan. 1875) It is error for the court to allow one party to attempt to impeach the testimony of a witness of the other party by reading to the jury a portion of a deposition formerly taken of the witness, without having first called the attention of the witness to any portion of the deposition, and without having first given the witness any opportunity to explain.—Howe Mach. Co. v. Clark, 15 Kan. 492.

[r] (La. 1889) A witness cannot be impeached by proving that he had, at the preliminary hearing, made statements different from his testimony on the trial, unless the statements ascribed to him, which had been reduced to writing, are produced, and his attention called to them.—State v. Callegari, 41 La. Ann. 578, 7 South. 130.

[rr] (Md. 1876) It is not necessary to render the answers of the witness to interrogatories admissible to contradict his testimony at the trial that he should have been shown his answers and been permitted to read them before asking him concerning them, it being sufficient to prove that he was the witness who was sworn and examined by the commissioner, and whose answers the commission and return purported to give.—Ecker v. McAllister, 45 Md. 290.

[s] (Mich. 1864) It is not improper, on calling the attention of a witness to his testimony on a former trial, to read counsel's minutes of the former testimony.—Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 459.

[ss] (Mich. 1868) A deposition previously made by a witness may be read in evidence to contradict his testimony, though it had not been previously called to his attention during the trial.—Lightfoot v. People, 16 Mich. 507.

[t] (Mich. 1882) In inquiring into the testimony of a witness on a former trial with a view to his impeachment, it is not necessary to read the testimony from the stenographer's minutes, and then ask him if he swore as there stated. The stenographer's minutes, not being written out and signed by him, are not evidence against the witness, and are not therefore to be assumed as correct in his favor.—People v. Becker, 48 Mich. 43, 11 N. W. 779.

[tt] (Mich. 1884) Detached portions of the stenographer's notes of the testimony of a witness on a former trial should not be read for the purpose of impeaching the witness without first calling his notice thereto.—Seligman v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 53 Mich. 285, 18 N. W. 818.

[u] (Mich. 1884) A deposition taken before a committing magistrate is receivable as original evidence on the trial of the accused for the alleged crime to discredit the witness who made it, without cross-examining him concerning it.—People v. Butler, 55 Mich. 408, 21 N. W. 385.

[uu] (Minn. 1890) Where it is sought to impeach the statements of a witness by proof of his admissions contained in a deposition or other writing signed by him, the proper foundation should be laid therefor as in other cases, by first directing his attention to the particular matters in question, and giving him an opportunity to explain.—Hammond v. Dike, 42 Minn. 273, 44 N. W. 61, 18 Am. St. Rep. 503.

[v] (Miss. 1876) To receive in evidence, as impeaching the testimony of a party as a witness, a memorandum, made by some stranger, of the testimony given by such witness on a former trial, without first questioning the witness as to his former testimony, is error.—Scarborough v. Smith, 52 Miss. 517.

[vv] (Miss. 1879) In laying the foundation to contradict a state's witness on a murder trial by his written testimony in a former investigation, such testimony must be presented to him, and it is improper to ask him if he so testified without permitting him to inspect the written testimony.—Cavanah v. State, 56 Miss. 299.

[w] (Mo. 1889) Where the accused becomes a witness, it is not necessary, in order to make his written statement before a coroner admissible against him, to call his attention particularly to it.—State v. Young, 99 Mo. 666, 12 S. W. 879.

[ww] (Mont. 1895) On a trial for murder it is not error to exclude evidence taken before the coroner, offered by defendant to impeach the state's witnesses, when such evidence was not identified in any way, nor presented to the witnesses sought to be impeached, to enable them to identify it, nor was it shown that, if admitted, it would have contradicted any witness in any material matter.—State v. Pugh, 16 Mont. 343, 40 Pac. 861.

[x] (Mont. 1896) In a criminal case, in order to impeach a witness by statements in her testimony at the coroner's inquest, which was taken down in writing, and signed by the witness, it is necessary, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 3380, that the writing be shown the witness when interrogated as to whether she made such statements.—State v. O'Brien, 18 Mont. 1, 43 Pac. 1091, 44 Pac. 399.

[xx] (N. M. 1888) In order to impeach witnesses by the introduction of their written testimony given at a former trial, a foundation must first be laid by showing them such written testimony, or reading it to them at the time of their interrogation.—United States v. Fuller, 5 N. M. 80, 20 Pac. 175.

[y] (N. Y. 1848) A party to a suit may give in evidence, to impeach the credit of a witness of his adversary, a written or sworn statement of such witness, made on another occasion, contradicting his testimony then given, without calling the attention of the witness to it otherwise than by giving it in evidence on the trial.—Clapp v. Wilson, 5 Denio, 285.

[yy] (N. Y. 1859) If it is designed to discredit a witness by showing that the deposition made by him before the coroner was different from that given on the trial, the contradictory parts of the deposition must be read to him in order to give him an opportunity for explanation.—Stephens v. People, 19 N. Y. 549.

[yyy] (N. Y.) Where it is proposed to contradict a witness by showing that he testified differently at a coroner's inquest, as shown by his examination signed by him, his attention need not be first called to anything in the paper which he admits having signed.—(1860) People v. McCraney, 6 Parker, Cr. R. 49; (1887) Same v. Taylor, 43 Hun, 419.

[z] (N. Y. 1875) Where, on the cross-examination of one of defendant's witnesses, his attention was called to an affidavit, and he stated that he had made it, and that he remembered all that was in it, held, that the plaintiff was entitled to read the affidavit, to show that it contained statements contradictory of those made by the witness upon the trial.—Honstine v. O'Donnell, 5 Hun, 472.

[zz] (Ohio, 1888) The deposition of a witness not a party to the suit cannot be used to impeach him where no reference to the testimony embodied in such deposition was made in his examination in chief.—Aldrich v. Marcellus, 2 O. C. D. 287.

§ 1241. Certainty and definiteness of inquiry.

[a] (Ala. 1848) On the trial of an issue between the plaintiff in a garnishee process and a claimant of the fund, the wife of the defendant in the garnishment, who was a witness, was asked if she did not, at a certain time and place stated, promise to pay the debts due to several persons named out of the money due from the garnishee, with a view to contradict her if she answered in the negative. Held, that the question was competent for that purpose.—Moore v. Jones, 13 Ala. 296.

[b] (Ala.) Where the object is to impeach a witness by showing that he has made declarations inconsistent with his testimony, it is not necessary, in laying the predicate, that the language used by the witness should be stated.

but the substance of what he is supposed to have said is all that is required.—(1850) Nelson v. Iverson, 17 Ala. 216; (1851) Armstrong v. Huffstutler, 19 Ala. 51.

[c] (Cal. 1884) On a trial for murder, a witness was asked if she had not, at a certain time, told a third person that defendant had told her that he was going to kill deceased, and, on her denial, the third person was called. Held, that there was no sufficient foundation for impeachment.—People v. Bush, 65 Cal. 129, 3 Pac. 590.

[d] (Ill. 1891) Asking a witness whether he did not make certain statements at a particular place to certain persons shortly after the previous trial of the cause is not sufficient foundation for the introduction of evidence that he made such statements shortly before such trial.—Quincy Horse Ry. & C. Co. v. Gnuse, 137 Ill. 264, 27 N. E. 190.

[e] (Md. 1868) Where a witness is asked for the purpose of laying a foundation to contradict her whether she ever had a certain conversation with another witness, without calling her attention to attendant circumstances or repeating the words which it is intended to prove that she said, the question is improper.—Higgins v. Carlton, 28 Md. 115, 92 Am. Dec. 666.

[f] (Mass. 1891) In an action for personal injuries caused by the bite of a dog alleged to have been owned or kept by defendant, where a witness for defendant testifies on cross-examination that he had not stated to one C. that the dog was down in defendant's cellar, a question asked of C. as a witness as to what conversation he had had with the former witness, for the purpose of contradicting the latter, is not prejudicial to defendant, on the ground that it does not call C.'s attention directly to the contradicting conversation, where his answer relates solely to that.—Parkenson v. Bemis, 153 Mass. 280, 26 N. E. 854.

[g] (Mo. 1870) All that is necessary to lay a foundation for impeaching a witness, by showing that he has, at some other time, said something inconsistent with his present evidence, is to ask him as to the time, place, and person involved in the supposed contradiction. The rule is simply for the protection of the witness, to give him an opportunity to recollect the facts and correct the statements when immediately brought to his mind. And it is immaterial whether the alleged contradictory statement was made before or after the institution of the suit.—Spaunhorst v. Link, 46 Mo. 197.

[h] (Mo. 1876) Where it is proposed to impeach a witness by showing former statements inconsistent with his testimony on a matter relevant to the issue, his attention must be called to the particulars accompanying the alleged former statement.—State v. Morgan, 1 Mo. App. 22.

[i] (Mo. 1894) In an action for injuries received in jumping from a train, where plaintiff alleged that he did so in consequence of threats made by the conductor and others, the conductor testified that plaintiff did not jump, and that neither he nor any one else on the train, to his knowledge, had frightened plaintiff off. He was then asked if he did not at the time of the last trial, at J., tell W., of that place, that they told plaintiff stories, and scared him, and did not think he would jump, which he denied categorically. Held sufficient foundation for W.'s testimony in impeachment.—Spohn v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 122 Mo. 1, 26 S. W. 663.

[j] (N. Y. 1849) A sufficient foundation is laid for contradiction of the answers of a witness given on cross-examination, if the attention of the witness has been directed to the time, place, and circumstances attending an alleged statement made by him, and the name of the person to whom he may have made it need not be mentioned, if it was not necessary to enable him to know to what remark his attention was directed.—People v. Austin, 2 Edm. Sel. Cas. 54.

[k] (N. Y. 1875) To lay a foundation for the impeachment of a witness, it is not necessary to put to the witness the precise question which it is intended to put to the witness by whom he is to be impeached.—Hotchkiss v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 5 Hun, 90.

[l] (Tex. 1895) In laying the foundation for the impeachment of a witness by showing contradictory statements, it is not necessary to use the exact words alleged to have been stated.—Donahoo v. Scott (Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 385.

§ 1242. —— Time, place, circumstances, and person to whom statements were made.

Foundation for statements as to interest, see ante, § 1200 [b, q].

[a] Testimony of a witness cannot be impeached by showing contradictory statements made out of court unless the witness has been previously questioned as to the time and place of such statements and the persons to whom they were made.

[bb] A witness cannot be impeached by proof of contradictory statements unless a foundation has been laid by asking him whether he made such statements, giving particulars of time, place, and circumstances, in order that he may have the opportunity of denying, admitting, or explaining.

[c] Where the testimony of a witness not a party to the action is sought to be impeached by inconsistent statements out of court, it is necessary that the witness' attention should be called to the time, place, and person to whom the alleged statements were made, and to the specific statements.
—(S. D. 1896) State v. Hughes, 8 S. D. 338, 66 N. W. 1076;

[cc] (Ala. 1840) Where a witness, on cross-examination, is asked whether he has not made other statements than those sworn to, he may inquire as to the particular time or statement to which the cross-examination relates; and if the information is not given, he ought not to be compelled to answer.—Lewis v. Post, 1 Ala. 65.

[d] (Ala. 1853) In laying the predicate to impeach a witness, his attention having been directed to a conversation had by him 20 years before, "in the spring of the year," person and place being specified, evidence of a contradictory statement made by him in February of that year, in a conversation otherwise corresponding with that laid, is admissible; the rule only requires that his attention should be directed with reasonable certainty to the time, place, and person involved in the supposed contradiction.—Nelson v. Iverson, 24 Ala. 9, 60 Am. Dec. 442.

[dd] (Ala. 1893) On a criminal trial, a conversation with one of defendant's witnesses, in the absence of defendant, is admissible only to impeach such witness, and the attention of witness must first be called to the time, place, and circumstances of the conversation, and he must be asked whether he made the statements claimed.—Hester v. State, 103 Ala. 83, 15 South. 857.

[e] (Cal. 1872) Before the credibility of a witness can be assailed by proof of something he may have said elsewhere contradictory of the testimony as given, the witness must first be inquired of concerning it, and the time, place, and person involved in the supposed contradiction must be called to his attention. A qualification of this rule is, that the matter involved in the supposed contradiction must not itself be merely collateral in its character, but must be relative to the issue being tried.—People v. Devine, 44 Cal. 452.

[ee] (Cal. 1893) It is error to admit evidence to impeach the testimony of a witness as to his statements made out of court, when the proper foundation has not been laid by calling the attention of such witness to the time and place at which it is claimed such statements were made, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 2052.—Birch v. Hale, 99 Cal. 299, 33 Pac. 1088.

[f] (Fla. 1887) Under the statute it is error to permit a party to prove that his witness has made previous statements, inconsistent with his testimony, unless, during his examination, the circumstances and the occasion of his former statements were brought to his attention.—Montgomery v. Knox, 23 Fla. 595, 3 South. 211.

[ff] (Ill. 1880) A witness cannot be impeached by showing that he has at other times made contradictory statements, unless his attention has been directed to the alleged contradictory statement, particularly specifying the circumstances under which it was made.—Bock v. Weigant, 5 Ill. App. (5 Bradw.) 643.

[g] (Ill. 1883) As a basis for the introduction of impeaching testimony, it is not necessary that the time of the antecedent conversation be fixed with absolute precision. If the witness' attention has been directed to dates and attendant circumstances with a reasonable degree of certainty, so as to afford him an opportunity to refresh his recollection, it is sufficient.—Mayer v. Appel, 13 Ill. App. (13 Bradw.) 87.

[gg] (Ill. 1890) A witness cannot be impeached by evidence of statements made by him out of court, unless his attention has been called on cross-examination to the time and place of the alleged statement.—Aneals v. People, 134 Ill. 401, 25 N. E. 1022.

[h] (Ind. 1860) To ask a witness whether during a certain month she made specified statements to certain persons is not definite enough to raise a foundation for proving those statements in order to contradict and impeach the witness.—Joy v. State, 14 Ind. 139.

[hh] (Ind. 1864) In laying a foundation for the impeachment of a witness, by proving that in a conversation he has made statements inconsistent with his evidence, the exact time of such conversation need not be fixed, if the attention of witness is called to it.—Bennett v. O'Byrne, 23 Ind. 604.

[i] (Ind. 1882) A witness was asked concerning a conversation had "in June last, in Hazleton, Ind." It appearing that he clearly understood the particular conversation referred to, held, that the specification was sufficiently definite to afford a foundation for contradicting and impeaching him.—Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Montgomery, 85 Ind. 494.

[ii] (Iowa, 1876) A question asked for the purpose of laying the foundation for impeaching a witness must be so framed as to direct his attention to the particular time or circumstance to which it relates.—State v. McLaughlin, 44 Iowa, 82.

[j] (Iowa, 1880) A question asked for the purpose of impeachment is properly excluded, where no time is named to which it is applicable.—Osborn v. Ratliff, 53 Iowa, 748, 5 N. W. 746.

[jj] (Kan. 1873) It is incompetent to ask a witness on cross-examination a question concerning a conversation of his with some other person, where no time or place is suggested to the witness as to when or where the supposed conversation occurred, as it was not competent as laying foundation for an impeachment.—Da Lee v. Blackburn, 11 Kan. 190.

[k] (Kan. 1882) To lay a foundation for impeaching the testimony of a witness by proof of contradictory statements, if time, place, and person are made reasonably definite in calling the attention of the witness thereto, it is sufficient.—Kelsey v. Layne, 28 Kan. 218, 42 Am. Rep. 158.

[kk] (Ky. 1889) On a trial for murder, one witness testified to a threat by deceased to kill defendant on sight which had been communicated to defendant. Held, that it was improper to permit a witness to testify to statements made the day after the killing by the witness who had communicated to defendant the threats by deceased, that he had never heard the deceased make any threats, without laying the proper foundation by calling witness' attention to the time, place, and matter of the statements.—Robinson v. Commonwealth, 11 S. W. 81.

[l] (La. 1881) When an attempt is made to discredit a witness by showing that he made a contradictory statement upon a previous occasion, it is not necessary that the exact time of the alleged contradictory statement should be designated; it is enough that sufficient reference is made to the circumstances that attended the statement, and to the statement itself, to place the witness fully on his guard.—School Board of Union Parish v. Trimble, 33 La. Ann. 1073; State v. Hampton, Id. 1252.

[ll] (Md. 1896) A question whether prosecuting witness had, previous to the day he bought the beer, repeatedly and generally stated that he was 21 years of age, was properly excluded, for the reason that it did not specify the time, the place, and the person to whom the alleged statements were made.—Peterson v. State, 83 Md. 194, 34 Atl. 834.

[m] (Mass. 1876) A party cannot contradict his own witness by evidence of statements inconsistent with his testimony without first calling the attention of the witness to the circumstances and occasion of the supposed statements.—Newell v. Homer, 120 Mass. 277.

[mm] (Mass. 1883) Merely asking a witness, whom it is sought to contradict, on re-examination, whether he has made a certain statement to a particular person, with no attempt to designate the time or place, and no suggestion of any reason for not specifying them, or of circumstances which rendered them unnecessary, is not mentioning "the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion," within Pub. St. c. 169, § 22.—Commonwealth v. Thyng, 134 Mass. 191.

[n] (Mass. 1895) A question asking a witness whether he had a conversation at a certain place with a certain person a day or two before a certain event, and stating the substance of the conversation, complies with Pub. St. c. 169, § 22, providing that, when questions are asked for the purpose of contradicting a witness, "the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion," must be given.—Commonwealth v. Smith, 163 Mass. 411, 40 N. E. 189.

[nn] (Mass. 1895) A witness may be impeached by evidence of statements contradictory to his testimony, though his attention has not been previously called to the circumstances attending such statements.—Carville v. Inhabitants of Westford, 163 Mass. 544, 40 N. E. 893.

[o] (Mich. 1881) Impeaching questions as to a conversation with a particular person, at a place named, cannot be asked, unless the time and substance of the alleged conversation are also pointed out.—Johnston v. Disbrow, 47 Mich. 59, 10 N. W. 79.

[oo] (Mich. 1893) S., a witness for plaintiff, was asked if he did not say to D. "that K.'s (plaintiff's) system was not half learned," and on his denial D. was called, and asked if S. had made such a statement to him. Held, that the question asked D. was properly excluded, since neither time, place, nor circumstance was included in the question asked S., and it does not appear that he identified the occasion.—Koehler v. Buhl, 94 Mich. 496, 54 N. W. 157.

[p] (Mich. 1895) In an action by an infant for personal injuries from stepping into a hole in a sidewalk, a witness for the defense, who testified that he saw the accident, and that there was no hole where it occurred, on being asked whether, at a designated time, he met a certain person at a certain place, and, replying that he knew no such person, was again asked if he met any person at that time and place, and there stated to him that he saw the infant fall into a hole in the sidewalk, replied that he never did. Held, that the attention of the witness was sufficiently directed to the time, place, and person to render admissible in rebuttal evidence of the conversation had at the designated time and place with the person named.—Strudgeon v. Village of Sand Beach, 107 Mich. 496, 65 N. W. 616.

[pp] (Minn. 1868) To lay the foundation for showing that a witness has made a contradictory statement out of court, his attention should be called to the time, place, and persons involved in the supposed contradiction, with such reasonable certainty as to recall it to his mind, so that he may have an opportunity to correct his statement on the stand, or explain what he has said elsewhere. The precise date need not be indicated.—State v. Hoyt, 13 Minn. 132 (Gil. 125).

[q] (Miss. 1892) Where the attention of witnesses is not distinctly called to the time and place of a conversation in which statements were made by them out of court, the persons present at the time, and the matter as to which it is proposed to call impeaching witnesses, it is error to admit evidence of such conversation for the purpose of impeachment.—Bonelli v. Bowen, 70 Miss. 142, 11 South. 791.

[qq] (Mo. 1873) A witness cannot be impeached on the ground that he made contradictory statements, unless his attention is first called to the time, place, and circumstances and persons to whom the alleged statements were made.—State v. Foye, 58 Mo. 336.

[r] (Mo. 1891) Defendant, desiring to impeach witness C. by witness W., called C.'s attention to certain statements made by him to W., and to the time and place of making them, but designated W. as "Henry" when his name was "Harry." Held that, as C. understood who was meant, the foundation for the impeachment was properly laid.—Mahaney v. St. Louis & H. Ry. Co., 108 Mo. 191, 18 S. W. 895.

[rr] (Mo. 1893) A witness was asked whether in December or thereabouts he did not make a certain statement to a person named. After his denial said person was asked if he remembered a conversation "at any time" with witness relative to the matter, and he replied that witness made such statement in the fall, according to his recollection. Held, that no proper foundation was laid for the impeaching evidence.—Spohn v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 116 Mo. 617, 22 S. W. 690.

[s] (Mo. 1894) In laying the foundation for impeaching a witness by proof of a prior contradictory statement, his attention must be called to the place at which it is claimed such statement was made.—State v. Baldwin, 56 Mo. App. 423.

[ss] (Neb. 1891) Where evidence showing contradictory statements of a witness is introduced without first calling his attention to the time, place, and person involved in the supposed contradiction, and no objection is made to such evidence, the jury may consider it, and, if sufficient, base their verdict thereon.—Cool v. Roche, 20 Neb. 550, 31 N. W. 367.

[t] (N. Y. 1848) Where it is sought to discredit a witness by showing that he has on another occasion made statements contradictory to his testimony, he must first have an opportunity to explain such contradictory statements, and for this purpose must be referred to the time and place at which he made them.—Palmer v. Haight, 2 Barb. 210.

[tt] (N. Y. 1848) In the examination of a witness to lay a foundation for impeaching him, it is sufficient if his attention is called to the time, place, and circumstances of a conversation; it is not necessary to state the name of the person with whom the conversation was held.—People v. Austin, 1 Parker, Cr. R. 154.

[u] (N. Y. 1859) It is not sufficient to inquire of a witness whether he has made specific statements, contradictory to the testimony which he has given, without mentioning time, place, or other circumstance, in order to lay the foundation for giving in evidence such contradictory statements.—Pendleton v. Empire Stone Dressing Co., 19 N. Y. 13.

[uu] (N. Y. 1866) To lay a foundation for impeaching a witness by proving by another person that he had made a threat to swear falsely (considered as an inconsistent statement purely), his attention must not only be called to the name of the person, but to the occasion of the alleged conversation.—Lee v. Chadsey, 3 Abb. Dec. 43.

[v] (N. Y. 1866) To impeach a witness by proving by another person that he made a threat to swear falsely without the foundation laid by calling his attention to the name of the person and the occasion of the alleged conversation, evidence of the threat is not admissible as proving the witness unworthy of credit, unless the threat is shown to have related to the particular case on trial.—Lee v. Chadsey, 3 Abb. Dec. 43.

[vv] (N. Y. 1887) In order to impeach a witness by contradictory statements his attention must first have been called to the time and occasion of the alleged statement.—Laserowitsch v. Reiman, 6 N. Y. St. Rep. 246.

[w] (Or. 1879) The provision of Code, p. 274, § 831, that before a witness can be impeached by inconsistent statements made by him at other times the same must be related to him, with the circumstances of time, place, and persons present, held not to be complied with by a question merely referring to a time including three certain days, and a place no more definite than "streets of the city of Portland."—State v. McDonald, 8 Or. 113.

[ww] (S. C. 1881) Where it is proposed to contradict a witness by evidence of contrary statements made out of court, his attention must be called to the place where, and to the person to whom, such contrary statements are alleged to have been made.—State v. White, 15 S. C. 381.

[x] (S. C. 1895) Where defendant in a criminal case testifies in his own behalf, and denies having made certain admissions or declarations, he may be contradicted without his attention having been called to the time, place, and person involved in the proposed contradiction.—State v. Freeman, 43 S. C. 105, 20 S. E. 974.

[xx] (Tenn. 1851) For the purpose of laying the foundation for his impeachment, a question asked a witness on cross-examination, "whether he had ever stated to any one, at any time, that he purchased the negro for defendant," is too vague and indefinite.—Cheek v. Wheatly, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 556.

[y] (Tex. 1884) In order to impeach a witness the predicate as to time, place, and circumstances is not necessary to prove the exact hour or even day; but the time may be definitely fixed by other circumstances with sufficient certainty to put the witness fully on notice as to the particular transaction or conversation in which the statements were made.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Woodall, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 471.

[yy] (Tex. 1890) Where the flagman stationed at a railroad crossing where an accident occurred, testified on cross-examination that he saw one D. there on the evening in question, and that it was untrue that plaintiff, in the presence of D. and after he was hurt, asked him (the flagman) why he told him to cross, and that he did not flag plaintiff across, a sufficient predicate of time, place, and person has been laid to impeach such evidence by the testimony of D.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Dyer, 76 Tex. 156, 13 S. W. 377.

[z] (Wash. 1893) As a foundation for impeachment, witness was asked if he made certain statements to V. at a specified place "last July," which he denied. Held, that the time was sufficiently definite to render admissible V.'s testimony as to the statements.—State v. Walters, 7 Wash. 246, 34 Pac. 938, 1098.

[zz] (Wis. 1893) A witness cannot be impeached by a question whether he had not "once before" testified differently.—Cohn v. Heimbauch, 86 Wis. 176, 56 N. W. 638.

6. ADMISSION OR DENIAL AS TO PREVIOUS STATEMENTS.

IN GENERAL, § 1243.
DENIAL AND RIGHT TO CONTRADICT, § 1244.
DENIAL OF RECOLLECTION, § 1245.

§ 1243. In general.

[a] (Kan. 1886) Where, with a view of impeaching a witness, he is asked if he did not make a certain statement on a previous examination, and he replies that "it amounts to about the same thing," he thereby practically admits the making of the statement, and his answer is insufficient as a foundation for impeachment.—State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 1, 12 Pac. 318.

[b] (La. 1896) If the witness admits the contradictory statements, the accused can offer no proof of the contradictions thus admitted, although such proof is proposed to be given to show the falsity of the explanations of the witness why he made the statements contradictory of his testimony.—State v. Goodbier, 48 La. Ann. 770, 19 South. 755.

[c] (N. Y. 1892) The original complaint in an action on a promissory note alleged that the note was duly protested. An amended complaint alleged that protest was omitted at defendant's request. On the trial, plaintiff testified in substantiation of the allegation of the amended complaint, and, when defendant asked him why he had said nothing in the original complaint about the note not having been protested, he replied that he did not know. Defendant then offered the original complaint in evidence, and it was excluded on the ground that the contradictory statement was admitted. Held, that plaintiff's answer did not contain the admission, because he was not interrogated as to a statement he had made, but as to one he had omitted to make.—Meyer v. Campbell (Com. Pl.) 1 Misc. Rep. 283, 20 N. Y. Supp. 705.

[d] (Pa. 1867) Letters written by a witness to the plaintiff cannot be received in evidence to contradict the witness, where he admits what he has written so far as read to him by plaintiff's counsel.—Bigler v. Flickinger, 55 Pa. (5 P. F. Smith) 279.

[e] (Tex. 1887) Where a witness, when asked if he had made contradictory statements on his examination before the coroner's jury, admits that he had done so, and explains the reason therefor, the record of his examination before the coroner's jury is not admissible for the purpose of impeaching him.—Rodrigues v. State, 23 Tex. App. 503, 5 S. W. 255.

[f] (Tex. 1889) Defendant, being on the stand in his own behalf, was asked about certain material statements made by him on his preliminary examination. He qualifiedly denied that he made them. Held, that this was sufficient to authorize the admission in evidence of the record of his written testimony as given on said preliminary examination.—Huffman v. State, 28 Tex. App. 174, 12 S. W. 588.

§ 1244. Denial and right to contradict.

[a] If a witness on cross-examination deny having made a statement as to any matter not relevant to the issue, he cannot be contradicted in reference to it.

[aa] Where a witness is asked, on cross-examination, if he has not made certain statements to a certain person at variance with his direct testimony, in a material point, and he replies in the negative, such person may afterwards testify that the witness did make such statements.

[b] (U. S. 1890) Evidence that a railroad company's night watchman had admitted on the night of the accident that the rear section of the train was going at about 15 miles an hour when it crossed the highway, is admissible to impeach his credibility, where, on his cross-examination, he has denied making such admission.—Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Converse, 139 U. S. 469, 11 Sup. Ct. 569, 35 L. Ed. 213.

[bb] (Ala. 1859) Where plaintiff seeks to establish the correctness of his account by his own oath, as he may do in certain cases, under Code, § 2313, and is cross-examined concerning his testimony on the former trial relative to the cross-demand set up as a defense, defendant has no right to impeach him by contradicting his testimony as to such former statements.—Flash v. Ferri, 34 Ala. 186.

[c] (Ala. 1893) Where an attesting witness who testified as to the mental capacity of testator asserted that he had not, two days before the execution of the will, said that testator had become imbecile, evidence that he had said so was competent to impeach him.—Burney v. Torrey, 100 Ala. 157, 14 South. 685, 46 Am. St. Rep. 33.

[cc] (Ark. 1894) On cross-examination, plaintiff asked defendant's witness whether, on the morning and at the place of the wreck to a train, he told one A. that he had, before the accident, called the attention of the road master to the dangerous position of the fallen rock, which caused it, to which the witness replied, "No." A. was then recalled, and asked whether the witness had not so stated to him, and replied that he had. Held, that the questions and answers were admissible to show that the witness had made a different statement, though such statement was no part of the res gestæ.—Little Rock & Ft. S. Ry. Co. v. Voss, 18 S. W. 172.

[d] (Cal. 1885) Where plaintiff's witness denies, on cross-examination, that he offered to procure testimony for defendant if paid therefor, defendant may impeach him.—Lewis v. Steiger, 68 Cal. 200, 8 Pac. 884.

[dd] (Cal. 1894) In an action to determine the right to the water of a stream, plaintiff's witness was asked on cross-examination if he had not stated that plaintiff's right was inferior to defendant's. The witness denied having so stated, nor had he, on his direct examination, testified as to defendant's right. Held, that it could not be proven, to impeach him, that he had so stated, as such declaration, not being evidence against plaintiff, was not relevant to the issues.—Faulkner v. Rondoni, 104 Cal. 140, 37 Pac. 883.

[e] (Cal. 1894) Where a witness, on cross-examination by the state, denies having stated out of court that defendant had done certain things, evidence to contradict him is inadmissible, as his statements are not evidence against defendant.—People v. Worthington, 105 Cal. 166, 38 Pac. 689.

[ee] (Ill. 1855) Where a proper foundation has been laid for it, a witness may be inquired of as to the statements of another witness in order to impeach such witness by showing a contradiction to his previous answer.—Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Fay, 16 Ill. (6 Peck) 558, 63 Am. Dec. 323.

[f] (Ill. 1884) In an action against a railroad company to recover for the loss of a hotel to which fire was communicated from a depot which was set on fire by sparks escaping from an engine, the testimony of a witness tended to show that the depot was not set on fire by the engine, nor the hotel by the burning depot. On cross-examination he denied having made, prior to the trial, a statement that "the engine set fire to the depot, and the depot set fire to the hotel." Held, that it was competent to impeach the witness' testimony by proving that he made such statement.—Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Pennell, 110 Ill. 435.

[ff] (Ill. 1898) On the trial of a saloon keeper for selling liquor to a minor, where the minor testifies that he purchased liquor of defendant, and, on cross-examination, swears that he did not tell a third person that he could not obtain liquor of defendant, the testimony of such person is admissible to impeach him.—Dick v. People, 47 Ill. App. 223.

[g] (Ind. 1871) Where a witness for the defense who had testified to certain facts in chief was asked on cross-examination whether he had made a similar statement to another person, his answer was conclusive on plaintiff.—Stout v. Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co., Wils. 80.

[gg] (Ind. 1891) Where, in an action on account, a witness testifies that defendant had admitted the debt, and denies on cross-examination that plaintiff had offered her money to so testify, and denies that she had previously stated that she would not swear to the admission, it is competent to show her former statements that she would not so swear, and that plaintiff had offered her money to do so, for the purposes of impeachment, since the object of the cross-examination was not to prove bribery, but to affect her credibility.—Hess v. Redding, 2 Ind. App. 199, 28 N. E. 234.

[h] (Iowa, 1896) A witness jointly indicted with defendant for rape having testified that prosecutrix virtually seduced him and defendant, and having denied on cross-examination that shortly before the alleged rape he asked a certain person if he could not inform witness and defendant where they could obtain sexual intercourse, it was proper to permit said person, in rebuttal, to testify that said witness did ask him that question.—State v. Philpot, 97 Iowa, 365, 66 N. W. 730.

[hh] (Iowa, 1896) In an action on a life insurance policy defendant claimed that insured committed suicide, and therefore the policy was avoided, whereas plaintiff claimed she was murdered by her husband. There was no dispute but that insured died from poison. Held that for the purpose of discrediting the testimony of the husband, which tended to show suicide, it was error to admit evidence contradicting denial on his part on cross-examination of statements showing that he was desirous of suppressing the post-mortem examination of insured.—Laird v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 98 Iowa, 495, 67 N. W. 385.

[i] (Iowa, 1896) It was also error to admit evidence contradicting a denial on his part on cross-examination of having stated to his wife that if she did not stop complaining of his daughter by a former wife she would "run against a stump."—Laird v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, 98 Iowa, 495, 67 N. W. 385.

[ii] (Me. 1890) In an action for injuries to plaintiff occasioned by an alleged defective sidewalk, the defense was that plaintiff was guilty of negligence in wearing high-heeled shoes. Plaintiff's husband denied that he had ever spoken to plaintiff about the heels on her shoes, or that he ever had stated that he had so spoken to her. Thereupon defendant introduced a witness who testified that just after the accident he heard the husband say that he told his wife about wearing such high-heeled shoes. Held, that the testimony of such latter witness, being as to a statement made out of court, was inadmissible to contradict the denial of the husband and thereby impeach his credibility.—Woodroffe v. Jones, 83 Me. 21, 21 Atl. 177.

[j] (Md. 1892) Where, in an action for personal injuries, it appeared that there had been two trials, on both of which the physician who attended plaintiff after the accident was a witness for plaintiff, it was proper to ask such witness on cross-examination in the second trial if he had not said, in urging the settlement of another accident case, in which he was a medical witness, that on the first trial of this case he "had been instrumental in getting a big verdict for the plaintiff;" and on his denial that he had made such statement evidence was admissible to contradict him.—Wise v. Ackerman, 76 Md. 375, 25 Atl. 424.

[jj] (Mass. 1857) In an action for an injury occasioned by digging a water course in a highway under the direction of the surveyors of highways, one of the surveyors, being called as a witness for the defendant, denied, on cross-examination, that he ever stated that this work was done as he had directed. Held, that the plaintiff might introduce evidence to contradict him on this point.—Benjamin v. Wheeler, 74 Mass. (8 Gray) 409.

[k] (Mass. 1863) In an action for a trespass, in driving a wagon against a horse of the plaintiff and breaking his legs, if the defendant on cross-examination has denied that he had said to a third person that he had a right to one-half of the road, and to break the legs of the plaintiff's horse if he stood in the way, evidence is competent to show, by way of contradiction, that he has so said.—Emerson v. Stevens, 88 Mass. (6 Allen) 112.

[kk] (Mass. 1863) In determining whether or not a sale of property was made to defraud the sole creditor of the vendor, the amount of such creditor's claim is material; and after he has testified to the amount of it, and denied on cross-examination that he ever fixed it at a less sum, evidence is admissible, for the purpose of contradicting him, to show that he has fixed it at a less sum.—Couillard v. Duncan, 88 Mass. (6 Allen) 440.

[l] (Mass. 1864) If, in an action against municipal officers for illegally seizing the plaintiff as a soldier, and taking him to camp, one of the defendants has denied, on cross-examination, that he said, after the seizure of the plaintiff, "We have got him, and I hope they will send him to Fort Warren," the plaintiff may introduce evidence to contradict him.—Tyler v. Pomeroy, 90 Mass. (8 Allen) 480.

[ll] (Mass. 1867) Upon the issue whether A., who had purchased the interest of his insolvent partner, B., in the partnership property, had reason to believe B. insolvent, a witness testified that he was a creditor of B. to a large amount. B. testified that he was largely indebted to the witness, but on cross-examination denied that he had told a third person that his indebtedness to such witness was much less than the amount stated by him in his direct testimony, or that he had requested such person to write to the witness a threatening letter complaining of the witness' conduct in presenting so large a claim. Held, that evidence contradicting B. was competent for the purpose of discrediting him.—Carruth v. Bayley, 96 Mass. (14 Allen) 532.

[m] (Mass. 1896) That the court permitted the opposing counsel to question a witness, when called in rebuttal, as to an alleged statement by him, contradictory of his testimony in the examination in chief, does not require that the court, on denial by the witness that he made such statement, allow the counsel to show that the alleged statement was made.—Howes v. Colburn, 165 Mass. 385, 43 N. E. 125.

[mm] (Mich. 1863) The defendant introduced evidence tending to show the commission of adultery by the complainant with one D. in a certain month. D. was then introduced for the complainant and interrogated only as to these facts. On cross-examination he was asked whether he had not the previous year stated that he had had illicit intercourse with the complainant. Defendant undertook to impeach him by witnesses, who alleged that he made such statements at that time. Held, that this was erroneous.—Dunn v. Dunn, 11 Mich. 284.

[n] (Mich. 1881) In a prosecution for bastardy, the prosecuting witness could not be asked whether she made certain statements admitting illicit intercourse with another than the defendant, with a view of introducing contradictory evidence, as the matter was collateral, and while the prosecutrix might be cross-examined thereon, she could not be contradicted.—Hamilton v. People, 46 Mich. 186, 9 N. W. 247.

[nn] (Mich. 1888) In an action on a note taken by an agent of plaintiff, a farm machine company, where the agent testifies in chief that he saw defendant sign it, and knew nothing of the consideration of a former note in place of which it was given, he may properly be asked by defendant, on cross-examination, if he has not made contrary statements, and defendant is not bound by his denial.—Johnston Harvester Co. v. Miller, 72 Mich. 265, 40 N. W. 429, 16 Am. St. Rep. 536.

[nnn] (Mich. 1891) In an action for the price of lumber to be used in defendant's house, alleged to have been furnished S. on the credit of defendant, on cross-examination S. was asked if he did not say to one Shoemaker that he would make the building "a dear house for" defendant. He denied making the statement, and evidence was then admitted that he did say so to Shoemaker. Held, that the evidence was properly admitted, as bearing on the credit of his evidence.—Tolbert v. Burke, 89 Mich. 132, 50 N. W. 803.

[o] (Minn. 1885) At the trial of an action for the recovery of personal property taken on execution against plaintiff's husband, the husband gave testimony tending to show that the property was plaintiff's and not his. Held that, on his cross-examination, it was competent to show conduct and statements by him inconsistent with his testimony, and, on his denying it, to contradict him.—Ladd v. Newell, 34 Minn. 107, 24 N. W. 366.

[oo] (Minn. 1895) On an issue in replevin whether defendant sold the property to plaintiff, plaintiff's husband testified that he purchased the property for his wife. On cross-examination he was asked whether he had not stated that he did not purchase the property, and answered in the negative. Held, that the evidence was material, and it was error to refuse to permit witness to be impeached by proving that he did make that statement.—Swift v. Withers, 63 Minn. 17, 65 N. W. 85.

[ooo] (Miss. 1896) Where a witness for defendant was asked on cross-examination if, on the morning of the homicide, witness did not say to one E., in the presence of J.: "I sent you word not to let your husband come down here. They made up a plot to kill him three weeks ago,"—it was erroneous to permit the state to contradict the answer by the testimony of J.—Williams v. State, 73 Miss. 820, 19 South. 826.

[p] (Mo. 1839) After a witness has been asked, on cross-examination, if he made certain statements on a former occasion, and he denies them, it may be proved by other witnesses that he made such statements.—Garrett v. State, 6 Mo. 1.

[pp] (Mo. 1892) Plaintiff was injured by falling at night into an opening in the sidewalk along defendant's hotel. On the trial for damages, a police sergeant, to whom plaintiff's stepson had gone on the morning after the accident to inquire for him, testified that the stepson said that he had seen plaintiff's friend whom he was with the night before, who told him that plaintiff was drunk, and insisted on going alone. The stepson did not testify at all in regard to the proceedings or condition of plaintiff on the night of the accident, except when, on cross-examination, defendant's counsel asked him if his stepfather had not been on a spree the night before the accident, and if he did not tell the sergeant he had, to both of which questions he answered, "No." Held, that the testimony of the police sergeant was inadmissible to impeach the evidence of the stepson.—Goltz v. Griswold, 113 Mo. 144, 20 S. W. 1044.

[ppp] (Neb. 1884) Defendant, upon trial under an indictment for having, on November 19th, stolen certain money, and committed an assault with intent to steal, testified in his own behalf, and upon cross-examination was interrogated as to certain statements he had made in August, indicating an intention to commit a similar crime on a day in that month. Held, that evidence by the state to rebut his testimony on that point was improper, because, the cross-examination being upon a collateral subject, the state was bound by the evidence so brought out.—George v. State, 16 Neb. 318, 20 N. W. 311.

[q] (Neb. 1889) Though a vendor's declarations after the sale are incompetent to impeach his vendee's title, yet where, on cross-examination, the vendor has denied offering the property sold to some one else, he may be impeached by other witnesses as to that fact.—Williams v. Eikenberry, 25 Neb. 721, 41 N. W. 770, 13 Am. St. Rep. 517.

[qq] (N. H. 1879) Where a witness denies making a statement material to the issues, evidence that he did so is admissible to discredit him.—Martin v. Sowle, 59 N. H. 31.

[qqq] (N. Y. 1868) On the trial of an indictment for larceny, the complainant having testified, on cross-examination, that he had not said that if the prisoner would restore the money he would not testify against him, it is not competent to prove that he did say so. Such a case is not within the rule that the feelings and temper of the witness in a particular transaction may be shown; but is a fact collateral to the issue, and evidence cannot be given to contradict the statement.—Nation v. People, 6 Parker, Cr. R. 258.

[r] (N. Y. 1871) Where a witness denied in his cross-examination that he had told a third person and others that he had a conversation with such third person and other persons named in regard to certain bills, the foundation was sufficiently laid for his impeachment by asking such third person whether witness made certain statements to him, as the evidence was merely a cross-examination to lay the foundation for impeaching testimony, and he could not be regarded as a witness for plaintiff in any sense, and it was proper to contradict him.—Gilbert v. Sage, 5 Lans. 287.

[rr] (N. Y. 1874) In an action for the price of milk alleged to have been sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant, the latter alleged that it had been sold to a third person for whom defendant acted merely as agent. Such person testified however that he credited the milk on a contract between himself and defendant, and that he did not purchase it from plaintiff, or authorize defendant to purchase it on his account. On cross-examination he stated that as a witness in a prior suit brought by other parties against defendant he had testified that he had credited defendant for the milk. Thereafter defendant was asked whether in such suit such third person had credited him with plaintiff's milk. Held, that defendant was not concluded by the denial of the witness, as the evidence offered was of statements made elsewhere inconsistent with his testimony on a material point, and that, hence, defendant should have been allowed to answer the last question.—Smith v. Hart, 58 N. Y. 644.

[rrr] (N. Y. 1875) In a trial for murder by assault, the defense was that the assault was not serious, and that deceased cut her head in falling. On cross-examination, a witness for defendant was asked whether she did not meet M. the morning after the homicide and tell her that defendant had raised a great disturbance, and she replied in the negative. Held, that the state might put M. on the stand and question her as to whether she saw said witness on the morning after the homicide.—Shufflin v. People, 6 Thomp. & C. 215, 4 Hun, 16, affirmed (1875) 62 N. Y. 229, 20 Am. Rep. 483.

[s] (N. Y. 1878) In an action to recover for the conversion of a piano which plaintiff claimed had been given her by defendant, a witness for the plaintiff testified relative to a conversation with defendant in the presence of A., defendant's son, in which defendant said that he had bought the piano for plaintiff and had given it to her as a present. A., being called as a witness, denied that such statements were made in the conversation referred to. On cross-examination he was asked if he had not told G. at a specified time and place that his father claimed to have given the piano to plaintiff. He denied having made such statement. Held, that it was competent to prove by G. that A. had in fact made such statement to him.—Sparrowhawk v. Sparrowhawk, 73 N. Y. 591.

[ss] (N. Y. 1880) On trial of C. for administering poison to T. with intent to kill, there was evidence that, on a dark evening, a woman, whose voice resembled C.'s, delivered to T. a letter containing packages of what purported to be medicine and to come from T.'s husband. C.'s mother testified that C. was at home that evening, and, on cross-examination, that she had not told B. that C. had written a letter on the morning of that day. Held, that the state could not be allowed to introduce testimony of B. contradicting the statement so elicited.—People v. Cox, 21 Hun, 47.

[sss] (N. Y. 1881) On cross-examination of an accomplice who testified as a witness for the prosecution in the trial of one indicted for the theft of W.'s horse, he was asked whether he did not tell another person that on the night of the alleged theft he had stopped on his way to W.'s at the barn of another person to steal a horse, but on account of the bad looks of the horse did not take him. He denied so stopping or having made such statement. Held, that the defendant was entitled to prove such statement by the person to whom it was made.—Stape v. People, 85 N. Y. 390.

[t] (N. Y. 1884) A witness, whose attention, on cross-examination, has been called to a statement made by him out of court, on a matter material to the issue at variance with his testimony, may be contradicted by showing by another witness that the statement denied, and at variance with the testimony, was made.—Woodward v. Republic Fire Ins. Co., 32 Hun, 365.

[ttt] (N. Y. 1887) A witness for defendant testified that she lived near his house and that on the night in question a friend had left her at her gate at 12:30 a. m. and went toward defendant's house. Such witness on cross-examination stated that she talked with officers and did not tell either of them that she saw defendant going to his house, go into the yard, or down the street about 1 o'clock and return in half an hour and run into an alley, and that she got into her own house about 2 o'clock. Held, that the defense having sought only to prove by such witness the hour at which her friend left her, her cross-examination as to what she had stated of the subsequent movements of defendant was new matter, as to which the prosecution made her their own witness, and it was not competent for them to contradict her.—People v. Holfelder, 5 N. Y. St. Rep. 488.

[ttt] (N. Y. 1887) On a murder trial, defendant's wife, testifying in her husband's behalf, stated, in substance, that, on the night before the murder, defendant came home early and went to bed sick. On cross-examination she denied having made statements, in certain conversations with the district attorney before the trial, to the effect that defendant was well on said night. Held, that it was not error to permit witnesses for the state present at the interviews to testify, for the purpose of contradicting and discrediting her testimony in this particular, that she did make the statement claimed by the district attorney.—People v. Schuyler, 106 N. Y. 298, 12 N. E. 783.

[u] (N. Y. 1888) In an action to recover possession of goods alleged to have been obtained by defendant by fraud, evidence was given by plaintiff to show that the defendant made false representations as to his solvency, which defendant denied, and also denied on cross-examination having made statements to certain persons named from whom he had purchased goods. Held, that evidence by plaintiff to prove that defendant had made these statements, offered for the purpose of contradicting defendant, was properly excluded, such evidence being relevant testimony applicable to one of the issues which the plaintiff was compelled to establish by affirmative evidence, and which he was bound to introduce before resting.—Auckersmit v. Bluxome, 15 N. Y. St. Rep. 312.

[uu] (N. Y. 1893) Where defendant, on cross-examination, stated that in an interview with P. he characterized plaintiff's claim as a "blackmailing claim," allowing P., as a witness for plaintiff, to contradict this, was not prejudicial error.—Chesebrough v. Conover, 140 N. Y. 382, 35 N. E. 633, affirming (1893) 66 Hun, 634, 21 N. Y. Supp. 566, 568.

[uuu] (N. C. 1890) When plaintiff, in answer to a question, has denied that he has admitted to a certain person that he claimed only a part of the land in controversy, evidence that he made the admission to that person is competent.—Ellis v. Harris, 106 N. C. 395, 11 S. E. 248.

[v] (N. C. 1891) On a trial for slandering an "innocent woman," the husband of the prosecutrix denied, on cross-examination, that he said he had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix before he married her. Held that, the answer of the husband involving merely collateral matters, he could not be contradicted by evidence that he had said that he would rather pay $2.50 and marry the woman (the prosecutrix) than have a bastard sworn to him.—State v. Morris, 109 N. C. 820, 13 S. E. 877.

[vv] (N. C. 1894) Plaintiff's witness having testified that defendant's intestate had received money from plaintiff's intestate, it was not competent to ask him, on cross-examination, if he had not stated to another that it had been repaid, and, on his denial, to prove that he had made such statement.—Lamb v. Ward, 114 N. C. 255, 19 S. E. 230.

[vvv] (Ohio, 1878) Where a witness gives testimony which takes the party calling him by surprise, his answer, on being cross-examined as to contrary declarations made out of court, cannot be contradicted.—State v. Carlyle, 1 Cleve. Law Rep. 338, 4 Ohio Dec. 835.

[w] (Ohio, 1884) On the trial of A. for arson, evidence was offered to show that B. induced him to commit the arson to secure insurance money. B., being called by A., denied the conspiracy, and gave other evidence in A.'s favor. On B.'s cross-examination, to which A. excepted, B. denied that he had stated that "A. was costing him too much, because A. had burned B.'s storehouse." Held, that the state might call witnesses to show that B. had so stated, and though the matter elicited on cross-examination was not all competent, the objection being general, judgment would not be reversed.—Kent v. State, 42 Ohio St. 426.

[ww] (Or. 1895) Where, in replevin for goods seized in attachment, the attachment defendant testifies that his sale to plaintiff was bona fide, and is asked on cross-examination whether he did not state to a person, in defendant's absence, that the sale was only made to avert a blackmailing suit, and that the goods were still his, to which he answers "No," the person named may be asked, for purposes of impeachment, whether the witness made the statement.—Josephi v. Furnish, 27 Or. 260, 41 Pac. 424.

[www] (Tenn. 1850) Where lumber sold as the property of a third person is claimed by plaintiff, who introduces such third person to testify as to whether he acted as owner or as agent of the plaintiff, defendant may ask such third person if he had not made certain statements about the property to certain persons, and if he deny such statements he may prove by certain other persons that he did make them.—Jones v. Jennings, 29 Tenn. (10 Humph.) 428.

[x] (Tex. 1884) Where a witness denies having made certain statements inconsistent with his testimony, it may be shown that his denial is untrue.—Walker v. State, 17 Tex. App. 16.

[xx] (Tex. 1885) Defendant, on a criminal trial, asked a state's witness if he did not, at a certain time and place, and in the presence of certain persons, propose to defendant to "know nothing" about the case if called on to testify. The witness answered in the negative. Held, that defendant could show, by those present at that tme and place, that the witness did make the proposition.—Hill v. State, 18 Tex. App. 665.

[xxx] (Tex. 1886) On a trial for murder, where defendant's witness, on being cross-examined by the state as to statements made by him to parties with regard to declarations by the deceased of his intentions with regard to defendant, and of his having informed defendant of the same, denies that he made such statement, the state may introduce such parties to impeach his testimony on cross-examination. —Johnson v. State, 22 Tex. App. 206, 2 S. W. 609.

[y] (Tex. 1889) In an action for money alleged to have been loaned, the issue being as to whether it was so loaned, and that defendant incurred the obligation while under duress caused by plaintiff, evidence to contradict irrelevant statements made by plaintiff on cross-examination as to whether he had stated out of court that no person knew prior to the alleged duress that he had the money with him except himself and wife, is inadmissible to impeach him.—Dimmitt v. Robbins, 74 Tex. 441, 12 S. W. 94.

[yy] (Tex. 1894) On the cross-examination of one of defendant's witnesses, he was asked, without reference to anything in his direct examination, if defendant had not confessed the crime to him, which the witness denied. Held, that the state could not show that the witness had stated that defendant confessed to him, as the state, by attempting to prove the confession, had made the witness her own.—Shackelford v. State (Cr. App.) 27 S. W. 8.

[yyy] (Utah, 1892) The evidence of plaintiff's son in an action to determine the right to a share of certain "ditch" waters, that his father used water on his land during a certain year, and his denial on cross-examination of an alleged statement by him to a third person that the wheat raised that year was dry wheat, cannot be contradicted by evidence of a third person, and it was not error to refuse to allow a similar contradiction of his denial on cross-examination of an alleged statement by him that the plaintiff had an interest in the "ditch" at one time, but had not kept up the assessments, such statement being immaterial.—Rogers v. Cook, 8 Utah, 123, 30 Pac. 234.

[z] (Vt. 1888) Plaintiff sued for rent under an oral lease, and offered evidence that he was a tenant of the demised land, and sublet it to defendant. The latter denied contracting with plaintiff, and alleged that the latter had surrendered to his landlord, who had let to one M., or that by novation M. became tenant in lieu of plaintiff, and had sublet to defendant. A., the agent of the owner, testified, as plaintiff's witness, that he leased the land to plaintiff, and received the rent from him. On cross-examination, over objection, he was asked whether he had not stated to various persons that he received the rent from plaintiff under protest, and whether he had not made other statements concerning the receipt and disposition of the rent, plaintiff not having been present at these conversations. Held, that defendant was bound by A.'s answers, as well because the matters were immaterial as for the reason that as to such matters he had made A. his witness.—Alger v. Castle, 61 Vt. 53, 17 Atl. 727.

[zz] (Wis. 1879) Defendant, as a witness in his own behalf, having denied making certain admissions to which one of plaintiff's witnesses had testified, and having been cross-examined by plaintiff on the subject, it was competent for plaintiff thereafter to introduce evidence to contradict the statements made by defendant upon such cross-examination.—Wisconsin River Lumber Co. v. Walker, 48 Wis. 614, 4 N. W. 803.

[zzz] (Wis. 1891) A father of one indicted for assault with intent to kill, being called as a witness by the defense, was asked on cross-examination if he had not stated that if a certain witness swore his son was at his house on the day of the crime he would take her up, which he admitted; and also if he had not asked a witness to conceal defendant, should he be found, which he denied. Held, that the cross-examination was not upon collateral and irrelevant matters, and it was proper for the state to call witnesses to contradict him.—Schuster v. State, 80 Wis. 107, 49 N. W. 30.

§ 1245. Denial of recollection.

[a] If the witness neither denies nor admits having made any contradictory statements, but says he does not recollect having done so, his testimony may be impeached by proof of such statements.

—(Ill. 1860) Ray v. Bell, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 444; (Mich. 1852) Smith v. People, 2 Mich. 415; (N. H. 1860) Nute v. Nute, 41 N. H. 60; (Tex. 1879) Johnson v. Brown, 51 Tex. 65; (1891) Fuller v. State, 30 Tex. App. 559, 17 S. W. 1108; (1892) Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 20 S. W. 554.

[b] (U. S. 1848) A witness cannot be discredited by proving that he made a certain remark, which in his examination he does not deny, but cannot recollect.—Giltner v. Gorham, Fed. Cas. No. 5,453 [4 McLean, 402].

[c] (Ala. 1877) A witness may be impeached in a criminal case, by proof of contradictory statements made by him on an application by the prisoner for bail, although, when cross-examined as to such statements, he says he does not remember whether he said so or not.—Payne v. State, 60 Ala. 80.

[d] (Ark. 1889) Mansf. Dig. §§ 2902, 2903, provide that a witness may be impeached by the party against whom he is produced by showing that he has made statements different from his testimony, but, in order to so impeach him, he must be asked if he has made the statement assumed, and the examination must indicate the time when and the person to whom it was made. Held, that proof of such contradictory statements may be made as well where he testifies that he does not remember them as where he denies them.—Billings v. State, 52 Ark. 303, 12 S. W. 574.

[e] (Colo. 1874) If a witness has no recollection of a statement imputed to him as having been made out of court concerning the matters in issue upon the trial, the fact that he made such statement may nevertheless be proved.—Jones v. People, 2 Colo. 351.

[f] (Ga. 1846) Where a witness was asked if he had not made statements contradicting his testimony (naming them, and the time and place of making them, and the person to whom) out of court, and he answered that he did not remember to have told such person, but thinks he never had any conversation with him on the subject, it was held that a witness might be introduced to prove such statements.—Sealy v. State, 1 Ga. (1 Kelly) 213, 44 Am. Dec. 641.

[g] (Ind. 1854) Where a witness, being asked whether he did not, on a certain occasion, make certain statements, replied that he did not recollect that he did, evidence to prove that the witness made the statements alleged is not admissible; there being nothing to contradict, except his want of recollection.—Wiggins v. Holman, 5 Ind. 502.

[h] (Ind. 1856) A party calling a witness asked him whether a certain fact existed, and if he had not told B. it did. Witness answered he did not remember. Held, that evidence offered by the same party from B. that the former witness did tell him so was inadmissible.—McVey v. Blair, 7 Ind. 590.

[i] (Ind. 1861) If the witness neither admits nor denies, but simply states that he has no recollection of, having made the statements, the impeaching testimony is inadmissible.—Mendenhall v. Banks, 16 Ind. 284.

[j] (Ind. 1894) Under Rev. St. 1894, § 515 (Rev. St. 1881, § 507), providing that a party may contradict his own witness "by other evidence, and by showing that he has made statements different from his present testimony," where a person, who is a witness for both parties, is asked, on cross-examination, after being called by defendant, if he had not made statements at a previous time different from those made as a witness, and he answers, "Not that I know of," plaintiff may prove such previous statements.—Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. Stein, 140 Ind. 61, 39 N. E. 246.

[k] (Kan. 1868) The guard of four prisoners accused of a larceny, three of whom escaped, having testified for the one on trial that he did not try to escape with the others, and having answered on cross-examination that he did not recollect saying to W. that the reason of the defendant's not trying to escape was illness, etc., it was held competent for W. to testify that the guard did so assert.—Lewis v. State, 4 Kan. 296.

[l] (Ky. 1892) The engineer in charge of an engine which struck plaintiff's intestate testified in behalf of plaintiff that he first saw deceased on the track when the train was at a point 462 feet from him, and that he did not recollect whether or not he had testified at the coroner's inquest that he saw deceased sitting on the track when the train was 1,287 feet distant from him. Held, that it was error to exclude evidence offered by plaintiff to show that the engineer had so testified at the coroner's inquest.—Wren's Adm'r v. Louisville, St. L. & T. Ry. Co., 20 S. W. 215.

[m] (La. 1895) A witness who testified that he did not remember whether he made certain statements to certain persons may be impeached by proof that he did make them.—State v. Johnson, 47 La. Ann. 1225, 17 South. 789.

[n] (Mass. 1860) Evidence that a witness had stated that he had testified in court for the defendant, but thought, if the case was tried again, he should testify for the plaintiff, is admissible to impeach his credit, after he has said, on cross-examination, that he has no recollection of making such statements.—Chapman v. Coffin, 80 Mass. (14 Gray) 454.

[o] (Mich. 1882) A witness in a criminal case cannot be impeached by showing that out of court he had expressed suspicions as to defendant which on cross-examination he says he does not remember expressing.—People v. Stackhouse, 49 Mich. 76, 13 N. W. 364.

[p] (N. Y. 1857) The complainant in an indictment for larceny was asked on his cross-examination by the defendant if he had not said to one A. that he did not think defendant meant to do any wrong. He answered that he did not recollect it. A. was afterwards called as a witness by the defense, who proposed to ask him if complainant had not said this to him. The government objected generally to this evidence. Held, that it was admissible.—People v. Jackson, 3 Parker, Cr. R. 590.

[q] (N. Y. 1891) A witness may be asked if he did not make a statement to a certain person conflicting with his testimony given on the trial, and if he denies it, or states that he does not remember it, proof may be given that he did make such a statement.—Palmeri v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 60 Hun, 579, 14 N. Y. Supp. 468, judgment affirmed (1892) 133 N. Y. 261, 30 N. E. 1001, 28 Am. St. Rep. 632, 16 L. R. A. 136.

[r] (Pa. 1867) A witness swore that he did not remember making a statement which was material to the issue. Held, it was competent to contradict him by proof of other statements; otherwise, a witness might turn aside the means of contradicting him by alleging a want of memory.—Gregg Tp. v. Jamison, 55 Pa. (5 P. F. Smith) 468.

[s] (S. C. 1895) Where a witness for the state, in answer to a question as to whether before the trial he did not make a certain statement which was at variance with his testimony, answers, "I do not remember whether I used those words or not," and the words referred to were relevant to the issue, the defense may show that the witness did use the words.—State v. Sullivan, 43 S. C. 205, 21 S. E. 4.

[t] (S. C. 1896) Defendants' brother, who had testified to an alibi on behalf of defendants, was asked whether he had not previously used certain threatening language to the justice who issued the warrant for his brothers' arrest, and replied that he did not remember of having done so, stating that he was intoxicated at that time. Said justice thereupon testified that defendants' brother did use said language, and, though he had been drinking, knew what he was doing at the time. Held, that the testimony of the justice was admissible.—State v. Kelley, 46 S. C. 55, 24 S. E. 60.

[u] (Tenn. 1858) An important declaration of the prosecutor, in a trial for grand larceny, was offered by the defense. The prosecutor, on being recalled, testified that he did not remember making such a declaration. "He might, and he might not, have done so." The court below having ruled that the declaration was inadmissible, because not denied by the prosecutor, this court reversed the judgment on error.—Janeway v. State, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 130.

[v] (Tenn. 1874) Where a witness has been asked as to contradictory statements, which he neither admits nor denies, evidence of such statements is admissible, because the imparted statement, when proved, may be such as to amount to a direct contradiction of the witness. and may convince the jury that the witness did not speak the truth in saying he did not remember making the statement.—Reagan v. Mabry, 67 Tenn. (8 Baxt.) 168.

[w] (Tex. 1880) On the taking of a deposition, deponent replied to a question concerning certain conversations that, if they had taken place, he did not know or recollect. Held, that he could not be impeached, on the trial, by proving that such conversations had taken place.—Johnson v. Richardson, 52 Tex. 481.

[x] (Tex. 1889) If, for the purpose of laying the predicate to contradict a witness, the prosecution, fixing time, place, and circumstances, asks the witness if he did not make statements contradictory of his evidence on the stand, and the witness answers that he "does not remember," the prosecution may introduce evidence to prove that he did make such contradictory statements.—Levy v. State, 28 Tex. App. 203, 12 S. W. 596, 19 Am. St. Rep. 826.

[y] (Tex. 1892) Where defendant testified that he did not remember making statements in the presence of a person named, it was proper to show by such person that defendant made the statements that he was interrogated about.—Edwards v. Osman, 84 Tex. 656, 19 S. W. 868.

[yy] (Vt. 1858) Upon the question whether an agreement to refund the price of certain land had been made, the defendant called his attorney as a witness to rebut testimony introduced by the plaintiff to the effect that such an agreement had been made in the attorney's presence and by his advice. The attorney testified that he knew of no such agreement or any advice to that effect. The plaintiff inquired of him upon cross-examination if he did not on a certain occasion remark to the plaintiff that the defendant must refund the money, to which the witness replied that he did not recollect any such conversation. Held, that it was competent for the plaintiff to prove that the attorney did make such a remark.—Holbrook v. Holbrook, 30 Vt. 432.

[z] (W. Va. 1869) A reply by a witness to the question whether he had a conversation in a certain year with a certain person as to executing a certain deed, that he did not remember any such conversation, is not a sufficient ground for the admission of testimony to impeach his credit.—Robinson v. Pitzer, 3 W. Va. 335.

[zz] (Wis.) An engineer having testified that he did not remember having said, some time after the accident, that he was obliged to run faster than six miles an hour in order to do the work, evidence that he did so state is admissible to impeach his testimony.—(1889) Heddles v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 74 Wis. 239, 42 N. W. 237; (1890) Id., 77 Wis. 228, 46 N. W. 115, 20 Am. St. Rep. 106.

§ 1246. Notice of intention or articles of impeachment as prerequisite to admission of evidence.

[a] (Del. 1851) Contrary statements cannot be proved to impeach a witness, without notice.—Lord v. Horsey, 5 Har. 317.

[b] (Ga. 1886) In a prosecution for keeping open a tippling house on Sunday, defendant may be contradicted by proving statements formerly made by him without first notifying him of the time and place of the utterance of the former statements, in order to make them admissible.—Klug v. State, 77 Ga. 734.

[c] (Mich. 1842) Where a foundation has been laid by questioning a witness on cross-examination as to his former statements, a party may proceed without exhibiting articles of impeachment.—Sawyer v. Sawyer, Walk. Ch. 48.

§ 1247. Competency of evidence in general.

[a] On a prosecution for rape, the declarations of the husband of the woman on whom the offense is alleged to have been committed are not admissible to discredit her as a witness.
—(N. C. 1846) State v. Jefferson, 28 N. C. 305; (Ohio, 1858) McCombs v. State, 8 Ohio St. 643.

[b] (U. S. 1887) The admissibility of testimony for the purpose of impeaching a witness by showing his failure to make statements consistent with his testimony is in the discretion of the trial judge, subject to the power of the court to grant a new trial, if it should appear, on a review of the testimony, that there was no ground for the inference that the witness whose credibility was in issue would have made the statements in question to the impeaching witnesses, if they had been true.—Becker v. Haynes (C. C.) 29 Fed. 441.

[c] (Ala. 1860) A party against whom a deposition is read cannot introduce evidence of the unsworn declarations of the witness in such deposition as to the manner in which his testimony was taken, his condition at the time, and his knowledge of the facts proved.—Mims v. Sturdevant, 36 Ala. 636.

[d] (Ala. 1880) Where the evidence in a case consists wholly of affidavits, inconsistent declarations, made out of court by the makers of the affidavits, may be proved by counter affidavits.—Dabney v. Mitchell, 66 Ala. 495.

[e] (Ala. 1888) On a trial for burglary, one W., who had been convicted for the same crime, was called as a witness for the state. He testified that before the alleged burglary was committed he had stolen the key of the storehouse, and given it to defendant. On cross-examination he denied that he had testified on the preliminary trial that he did not give the key to defendant. Defendant then called the committing magistrate, who testified that W did, on the trial before him, deny that he gave the key to defendant. On cross-examination he was asked if W. told him, just before the preliminary trial, that he did give the key to defendant, to which he replied that W. had so stated. Held, that proof of the declarations made by W. out of court was inadmissible to impeach his testimony on the trial of defendant.—McKelton v. State, 86 Ala. 504, 6 South. 301.

[f] (Ga. 1890) A witness for the state having denied making a certain statement to A., the defense cannot show that A. repeated the statement, but has since become frightened, and denies any knowledge of it.—Woolfolk v. State, 85 Ga. 69, 11 S. E. 814.

[g] (Ga. 1894) Where a witness testified that he was induced by the father of defendant, in a murder case, to testify falsely at the inquest, and the father contradicted him, a conversation held between the witnesses after the inquest was admissible to impeach the father.—Evans v. State, 95 Ga. 468, 22 S. E. 298.

[h] (Ill. 1895) The fact that the owner of real estate testified as to its value did not render it proper to ask of a real estate broker, with whom the property had been placed by the owner for sale, what had been the asking price of the property, on the ground that the answer might discredit the owner's testimony.—City of Danville v. Mabin, 57 Ill. App. 23.

[i] (Ill. 1895) Declarations of a debtor, made after an alleged fraudulent conveyance, while not competent to impeach the title of his grantee, are competent to impeach his own credibility, where he has testified that the conveyance was not fraudulent.—Phillips v. Kesterson, 154 Ill. 572, 39 N. E. 599.

[j] (Ind. 1881) While it is necessary, in laying the foundation for impeaching a witness by proof of contradictory statements, that the time, place, and persons present shall be given, it is not necessary that the impeaching witness, when called, shall be able to swear to the exact date. It is enough if it appear that he is about to speak in reference to the same declaration or conversation to which the attention of the principal witness had been called.—Lawler v. McPheeters, 73 Ind. 577.

[k] (Ky. 1896) Where a witness denied making a statement attributed to him, and the testimony as to such statement was afterwards excluded as incompetent, it was error to allow another witness to thereupon testify that such statement was made in his presence.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Webb, 99 Ky. 332, 35 S. W. 1117.

[l] (Md. 1874) Where a witness denies on cross-examination that he had a conversation with the person named, the deposition of the person as to the alleged conversation is admissible to impeach the witness, though he was not examined at the execution of the commission, as there was a sufficient foundation laid for the introduction of the impeaching testimony.—Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. Andrews, 39 Md. 329, 17 Am. Rep. 568.

[m] (Md. 1896) Plaintiffs' witness had given evidence tending to show that the goods were worth $6,000 to $7,000, thereby corroborating one of plaintiffs. On cross-examination he testified that he supposed he had a conversation with one R.; that he did not say to R. that he had told one of plaintiffs that his books were wrong, and he had no such stock as he claimed to have. Held, that it was error not to permit defendant to ask R. as a witness if plaintiffs' witness said to him at a particular place and time that plaintiffs' books were wrong, that he had no such stock as he claimed, and that his charges were erroneous, or something to that effect.—Caledonian Ins. Co. of Scotland v. Traub, 83 Md. 524, 35 Atl. 13.

[n] (Mass. 1827) A witness having testified that he made a certain statement in conversation with A., evidence was admitted, for the purpose of impeaching his credit in point of recollection, of his having made a different statement to B. when A. was not present.—Rice v. New England Marine Ins. Co., 21 Mass. (4 Pick.) 439.

[o] (Minn. 1889) Where statements of a witness on a matter material to the issue are contradictory to those made on the witness stand, and such statements are confessions, the court should first pass on their admissibility as if the impeachment of the witness was not involved.—State v. Barrett, 40 Minn. 65, 41 N. W. 459.

[p] (Miss. 1886) Where a witness for defendant on a criminal trial testified that defendant was in her house at the time of the shooting, and on cross-examination was asked if she had not, on the morning after the shooting, said to one W. that, after defendant came into the house, one G. said to him, "I told you that this gun would get you into trouble," but the witness denied having made the statement, it was error to admit evidence in rebuttal, of what other parties had said about the shooting, and the reply of the witness thereto, as no foundation had been laid for the introduction of impeaching testimony, and the evidence was hearsay.—Clark v. State, 9 South. 820.

[q] (Mo. 1888) Statements of plaintiff purporting to be contained in her deposition partly taken, and then abandoned, are inadmissible to impeach her testimony, where she denies making such statements, and there is no other proof that she did.—Owens v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 95 Mo. 169, 8 S. W. 350, 6 Am. St. Rep. 39.

[r] (N. Y. 1881) In an action for the negligent death of plaintiff's intestate by falling through an open draw on defendant's bridge, a boy in defendant's employ stated that he did not see a woman fall from the bridge. On cross-examination he testified that he did not say, in the presence of people at the draw, that he saw the woman fall from the end of the bridge. Plaintiff's witness testified that he saw a boy among those gathered on the bridge after the draw was closed, but could not identify such boy. Held, that it was not error to exclude evidence by plaintiff that the boy said he saw a woman fall off the bridge, as it was questionable whether the boy whose declarations it was proposed to prove was the same as defendant's witness.—Hart v. Hudson River Bridge Co., 84 N. Y. 56.

[s] (N. Y. 1892) In an action against an elevated railroad to recover damages for injuries to property, plaintiff was called as a witness on his own behalf. Defendant then called a former tenant of plaintiff, who testified that he had never complained to plaintiff about the dust and cinders of the road. Plaintiff was then recalled, and related conversations of the tenant complaining of the serious injury to his stock of goods from dust and cinders. Held, that such conversations were not hearsay, but original evidence for the purpose of impeaching the tenant.—Barrett v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 63 Hun, 630, 18 N. Y. Supp. 71.

[t] (N. Y. 1895) Where a witness testifies that a certain event occurred on a certain road "between the sluiceway and the hill," evidence that he stated soon after the occurrence that it took place between the sluiceway and the top of the hill is admissible, as tending to show that immediately after the occurrence the witness was less certain about the precise position than when he was on the witness stand.—People v. Brockett, 85 Hun, 138, 32 N. Y. Supp. 511.

[u] (N. C. 1888) Where a witness testified that when a levy was made on his goods he denied ownership of them, the declaration of the deputy who made the levy, to another deputy, made on returning from making the levy, to the effect that the witness had claimed his exemption, was not admissible, as it was hearsay.—Simon v. Manning, 99 N. C. 327, 6 S. E. 101.

[v] (Tex. 1895) In an action on a life insurance policy, which contained a warranty that insured was born in 1848, a sister of the insured testified by deposition that he was born in 1845. To impeach this deposition, a witness detailed a conversation had with her after the deposition was taken, from which the jury might infer that she had recanted the statement made in the deposition, and then stated that he had taken out a commission for her which had never been returned. Held, that the evidence was inadmissible, and ground for reversal.—Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Baker, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 515, 31 S. W. 1072.

[w] (Vt. 1858) It is competent, for the purpose of impeaching the testimony of a witness, to prove the declarations of the party introducing him, and in whose favor he testified, that the witness had made a statement contradictory to that made by him upon the stand.—Allen v. Harrison, 30 Vt. 219, 73 Am. Dec. 302.

[x] (Va. 1847) Where the previous statements of a witness on oath have been introduced for the purpose of impeaching his credibility, it is not competent for the party who has introduced such statements to introduce further testimony to prove that the statements were not true.—Charlton v. Unis, 4 Grat. 58.

[y] (Wis. 1894) Where a confession has been improperly admitted, and excluded, and defendant offers himself as a witness, it is error to permit him to be asked whether he made such confession, and, on his denial, to allow evidence that he did make such confession, and the particulars thereof, for the purpose of contradicting the witness.—Shephard v. State, 88 Wis. 185, 59 N. W. 449.

§ 1248. Oral statements and examination of impeaching witnesses.

Cross-examination to show animus of witness testifying to contradictory statement, see ante, § 1192 [oo].

[a] (U. S. 1896) Where a witness denies having made certain statements, leading questions may be propounded to a witness called in rebuttal to contradict him.—Union Pac. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 161 U. S. 451, 16 Sup. Ct. 618, 40 L. Ed. 766.

[b] (Ala. 1884) In impeaching a witness by proof of former contradictory statements, the impeaching witness may be asked either whether the particular words claimed were used, or to state what words were used.—Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Moog, 78 Ala. 284, 56 Am. Rep. 31.

[c] (Cal. 1882) Where a witness has been asked, on cross-examination, for the purpose of laying a foundation for contradicting him, if he has not used particular expressions, and he has denied having used them, the witness called to contradict him may be asked if he did not use them.—People v. Lee Ah Yute, 60 Cal. 95.

[d] (Cal. 1893) In examining an impeaching witness, he should be asked the direct question whether the witness sought to be impeached made the alleged contradictory statement at the time and place mentioned.—People v. Nonella, 99 Cal. 333, 33 Pac. 1097.

[e] (Conn. 1869) A foreigner, ignorant of the English language, had testified through an interpreter as to certain facts, and on cross-examination had denied stating the facts differently. The opposing party then offered a witness to testify that some time before the trial the foreigner had, through an interpreter, stated some of the facts differently to him. Held, that the interpreter used on that occasion must be called as to what the foreigner said, and that the witness, who heard it only through the interpreter, could not testify to it.—State v. Noyes, 36 Conn. 80, 4 Am. Rep. 37.

[f] (Fla. 1893) It is not error to refuse to permit a party calling an impeaching witness to lead him by reciting in a question the statement which he proposes to prove was made by the witness sought to be impeached.—Wood v. State, 31 Fla. 221, 12 South. 539.

[g] (Ind. 1893) Where a party desires to impeach the testimony of a witness by showing that he has made out of court statements contrary to his testimony at the trial, the question put to the impeaching witness as to such statements should be identical as to time, place, and substance with the foundation question put to the witness sought to be impeached, and so framed as to admit of an affirmative or negative answer.—Pence v. Waugh, 135 Ind. 143, 34 N. E. 860.

[h] (Me. 1845) Where a witness consents to answer whether he has not testified falsely in a former case, and states that he did not, his declarations to the contrary may be received to discredit him.—State v. Blake, 25 Me. (12 Shep.) 350.

[i] (Md. 1896) On a trial for selling beer to a minor, where a witness was asked, for the purpose of impeaching statements of prosecuting witness as to his age, whether, at the time the beer was sold, he heard any conversation between the prosecuting witness and defendant, such testimony was properly excluded, not being confined to the conversation concerning the age of the purchaser.—Peterson v. State, 83 Md. 194, 34 Atl. 834.

[j] (Mass. 1832) A witness may be discredited by evidence that he has made a different statement on a former occasion, though the precise language then used by him cannot be shown.—Gould v. Norfolk Lead Co., 63 Mass. (9 Cush.) 338, 57 Am. Dec. 50.

[k] (Mich. 1896) Where the proper foundation is laid for impeaching testimony, and the testimony is confined to contradicting the witness sought to be impeached on a point covered by his testimony, the form of the question, if not leading, is not prejudicial.—Miller v. Jurczyk, 109 Mich. 637, 67 N. W. 898.

[l] (Miss. 1893) Leading questions cannot be asked by counsel of his own witness, introduced to impeach an opposing witness by showing that he had made other and contradictory statements to what he had testified.—Rucker v. State, 71 Miss. 680, 14 South. 534.

[m] (Mo. 1878) On a trial for stealing hogs a witness for the state was asked if he had met a third person at a certain place, and if, in a conversation, he did not state that he did not recognize the hogs found as belonging to him, but that he thought his son would. The witness admitted the conversation, but denied that he had said he did not recognize the hogs. Held, that it was proper, for the purpose of contradicting the witness, to ask such third person if, in the conversation testified to by such witness, the latter had stated that he could not recognize the hogs, but that his boy could.—State v. Purdin, 68 Mo. 99.

[n] (N. Y. 1855) Where, upon a question at the trial of a cause as to the seaworthiness of a steamer, a witness had sworn to her seaworthiness, and had denied having ever declared or had the idea "that $500 expended on those water jackets would have saved her," it is competent to repeat the declaration substantially to a subsequent witness, and ask him if the first witness had not said it to him.—Patchin v. Astor Mut. Ins. Co., 13 N. Y. (3 Kern.) 268.

[o] (N. Y. 1871) The usual practice, in showing inconsistent statements made by a witness out of court, is to ask the precise question put to the witness whose credibility is attacked; but the method may, in the discretion of the court, be varied, for the purpose of eliciting the real truth.—Sloan v. New York Cent. R. Co., 45 N. Y. 125.

[p] (N. Y. 1895) A witness for plaintiff, on cross-examination, denied that she had made a certain statement to one S. contradictory to her testimony. Afterwards S. was called by defendant, and, after stating the time and place of a certain conversation between such witness and herself, plaintiff not being present, she was asked to state "what that conversation was." Held, that the testimony was properly excluded, in that it called for the whole conversation, and not merely for so much as was necessary to prove the contradictory statement.—Hertz v. Minzesheimer (Com. Pl.) 12 Misc. Rep. 58, 33 N. Y. Supp. 48, affirming judgment Same v. Minzesheimer (City Ct. N. Y. 1895) 10 Misc. Rep. 779, 30 N. Y. Supp. 805.

[q] (N. C. 1892) Where defendant, as a witness, denies that he made a statement to a third person, the latter may repeat it in contradiction.—State v. Crane, 110 N. C. 530, 15 S. E. 231.

[r] (Ohio, 1865) D. was brought forward as a witness, on the part of the defense in a trial for murder, to explain the possession of certain money by the prisoner, supposed to have been taken from the deceased. On cross-examination, the witness denied ever stating that the prisoner was a "worthless fellow." In rebuttal, a witness was asked what she had heard D. say "about the prisoner being an idle or trifling fellow." Held, that the question was material, and admissible to determine the credibility of the witness.—Mimms v. State, 16 Ohio St. 221.

[s] (Pa. 1878) Where a witness is called to contradict a former witness, who has stated that certain expressions were used, the proper practice is to ask whether such expressions were used, without putting the question in a general form by inquiring what was said.—Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Bair, 87 Pa. 124.

[t] (Tex. 1895) The testimony of an impeaching witness is properly limited to the matter of the weight and credibility to be given to the testimony of the witness, whose testimony she was introduced to impeach by testifying to statements made out of court.—Spiars v. Dallas Cotton Mills (Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 777.

[u] (W. Va. 1873) It is proper, to lay the foundation for impeaching the credit of a witness, to first inquire of him on cross-examination whether he has not on some former occasion given a different account or made a different statement of a matter of fact to which he has testified on the trial. After a denial on cross-examination of a witness that he has made such inconsistent or contradictory statements, though it is admissible upon a principle of convenience or absolute necessity to put a question to the impeaching witness in the same words which had been put to the former witness, yet it would be more satisfactory if the answer should be obtained without a direct suggestion.—Morgan v. Franklin Ins. Co., 6 W. Va. 496.

[v] (Wis. 1886) When it is sought to impeach a witness by proving that he made contradictory statements as to the transaction involved, the impeaching witness may be asked, in the form of a leading question, if such witness did not make to him the statements claimed to have been made.—Hinton v. Cream City R. Co., 65 Wis. 323, 27 N. W. 147.

§ 1249. Written statements or instruments.

[a] (U. S. 1890) In an action against a railroad company for personal injuries to an employé, it is competent, for the purposes of impeachment, to use at the trial and introduce in evidence papers signed by witnesses, and containing a synopsis of statements obtained from them by the company's claim agent shortly after the occurrence, and while they were still in the company's employ.—Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Artery, 137 U. S. 507, 11 Sup. Ct. 129, 34 L. Ed. 747.

[b] (U. S. 1894) Rev. St. § 860 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 661], which provides that "no pleading of a party, nor any discovery or evidence obtained from a party or witness by means of a judicial proceeding," shall be given in evidence, or in any manner used against him, does not apply to an application, under section 878, by one indicted, to have witnesses summoned and paid by the United States, and statements therein are competent to contradict his testimony.—Tucker v. United States, 151 U. S. 164, 14 Sup. Ct. 299, 38 L. Ed. 112.

[c] (U. S. 1806) A shipmaster's protest may be read to discredit what he says on his examination in the cause.—Lamalere v. Caze, Fed. Cas. No. 8,002 [1 Wash. C. C. 413].

[d] (U. S. 1829) A book published by a deponent, respecting the date, etc., of certain surveys, many years before his deposition was taken in regard to such surveys, may be read in evidence with a view to qualify his deposition.—Harmer v. Morris, Fed. Cas. No. 6,076 [1 McLean, 44], affirmed Morris v. Harmer (1883) 32 U. S. (7 Pet.) 554, 8 L. Ed. 781.

[e] (Ala. 1894) In an action of detinue, where defendant set up payment of the mortgage debt, and plaintiff alleged that a sum claimed to have been paid thereon was given to him to pay a mortgage due one L., and on the trial defendant first testified that he never made a mortgage to L., but, on the mortgage being shown him, testified that it was given for a debt due W. & L. and that he supposed the mortgage was made to them, it was proper to exclude the mortgage as impeaching testimony.—Winter v. Judkins, 106 Ala. 259, 17 South. 627.

[f] (Ala. 1895) When, in a prosecution for homicide, defendant claims that his codefendant and himself went to deceased's house at night in regard to a mortgage owned by the codefendant, a receipt given by the codefendant in full of the mortgage is admissible in evidence to show that such claim was false.—Evans v. State, 109 Ala. 11, 19 South. 535.

[g] (Ark. 1891) In an action for killing stock on a railroad track it is competent for defendant to discredit the testimony of plaintiff as to the value of the animal by introducing his assessment list, recently signed and verified by him, showing that the animal was of much less value than testified by him.—Fordyce v. Hardin, 54 Ark. 554, 16 S. W. 576.

[h] (Cal. 1892) In an action against a street railway for personal injuries, an employé of defendant, a witness for plaintiff, testified on cross-examination that he had obtained written statements from other employés as to the manner in which the injuries occurred, but that he did not know where these statements were. The witness identified a bundle of papers in the hands of defendant's counsel as the reports referred to, which plaintiff's counsel was permitted to examine. Subsequently another employé, who admitted that he made a written report to defendant in relation to this accident, was called by defendant, and testified to a material circumstance at variance with and contradictory to his report. Held, that plaintiff's counsel was entitled on demand to receive this report, which was lying on the table of defendant's counsel, and to introduce it in evidence for the purpose of impeaching such witness.—Freel v. Market St. Cable Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 40, 31 Pac. 730.

[i] (Conn. 1811) A writing subscribed by a witness drawn up by one who is a justice of the peace and an attorney, purporting to be a complaint to grand jurors, charging the defendant with an attempt to commit a rape upon her, is not admissible for the purpose of impeaching her testimony in a public prosecution for another offense, but relating to the same transaction.—Fowler v. State, 5 Day, 81.

[j] (Ind. 1884) A witness may be impeached by a mortgage and affidavit executed by him, containing statements inconsistent with his testimony, and relating to the same transaction.—Camp v. Smith, 98 Ind. 409.

[k] (La. 1819) A witness' written statements may be offered to discredit him.—Lynch v. Postlethwaite, 7 Mart. (O. S.) 209.

[l] (Me. 1830) Where a witness testified to certain facts which were contrary to his own admissions in a written contract made by him with the adverse party, it was held that such party might read this contract in evidence to impeach his testimony without first calling the subscribing witness thereto; the witness on the stand, who signed the contract, testifying that the signature was his own.—Drew v. Wadleigh, 7 Me. (7 Greenl.) 94.

[m] (Me. 1839) A paper admitted by a witness to be true, although not then under oath, is admissible in evidence for the purpose of contradicting his testimony.—Robinson v. Heard, 15 Me. (3 Shep.) 296.

[n] (Mass. 1860) A witness, who had testified that he never knew of the existence of a certain water course, answered on cross-examination that he did sign a petition to have this water course reopened, but did not read its contents, and was told at the time by the person presenting it that it was a petition for a new drain. Held that, the person who presented it having testified that he explained the contents to him, the petition was admissible in evidence to contradict the witness.—Hastings v. Livermore, 81 Mass. (15 Gray) 10.

[o] (Mass. 1871) Written statements of a witness in conflict with her testimony are admissible to contradict it, irrespective of their weight.—Hook v. George, 108 Mass. 324.

[p] (Mass. 1875) On an issue whether a loan made by a person deceased, and for which a note since lost was given, was to defendant or a third person, who testifies that the loan was made to him, a memorandum, signed by the deceased, reciting the receipt of the note from the defendant, on which a certain sum is stated to be due to the defendant on the happening of a certain event, and on which the third person afterwards wrote a receipt for the part of the sum named therein, is admissible as a whole, as affecting the credibility of such third person.—Mair v. Bassett, 117 Mass. 356.

[q] (Mass. 1884) To contradict the testimony of plaintiff's witness, a physician, as to the extent of plaintiff's injuries, the action being brought on account thereof, a statement signed by the physician, and by a physician employed by defendant to make an examination of plaintiff before the trial, is admissible.—Smith v. Metropolitan R. Co., 137 Mass. 61.

[r] (Mass. 1889) A member of the board of selectmen having testified to the value of the land taken, the record of the board, signed by such member, with the others, awarding damages at a different sum, offered for the purpose of contradicting him, is properly excluded; the signatures of the selectmen being the method of authenticating their proceedings, and the award of the board not being evidence of the opinions of the individual members, and evidence of the opinions expressed in the course of the deliberations of the board, acting in a quasi judicial capacity, being inadmissible to show the part taken by the witness.—Phillips v. Inhabitants of Marblehead, 148 Mass. 326, 19 N. E. 547.

[rr] (Mo. 1881) A witness is not estopped to give evidence in direct conflict with what he had written at a previous time on the same matter. What he wrote is proper evidence against him, and what he testifies to is proper evidence for him; both to be weighed by the jury.—Rheinhart v. Grant, 24 Mo. App. 154.

[s] (Mo. 1894) Prior written statements of a witness as to the matter about which he testifies are admissible for the purpose of showing that he had related the matter differently on a former occasion, and thus impeaching him.—Cooke v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co., 57 Mo. App. 471.

[ss] (N. J. 1849) Where a document is offered to contradict a witness, it must be first identified as the one referred to by him.—West v. State, 22 N. J. Law (2 Zab.) 212.

[t] (N. Y. 1862) The testimony of a witness as to a matter of fact is not affected by proof that he was a public officer required by law to make a record of the facts in question, and that such record, as originally made by him, did not include a statement contained in his oral testimony. Hence, proof of the alteration of the record by subsequent insertion of such statement is inadmissible to contradict his oral testimony.—Mallory v. Perkins, 22 N. Y. Super. Ct. (9 Bosw.) 572.

[tt] (N. Y. 1872) A written statement by a witness relevant to the issues, differing from the facts testified to by him, is admissible for the purpose of affecting his credibility.—People v. Gaffney, 1 Sheld. 304, affirmed Gaffney v. People (1872) 50 N. Y. 416.

[u] (N. Y. 1881) After plaintiff received the injuries for which he sued, he was taken to a stationhouse with witness, where a record was made of the accident. Held that, in the absence of evidence that witness furnished the information from which the record was made, the record was not admissible to contradict him.—Hoffman v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 87 N. Y. 25, 41 Am. Rep. 337.

[uu] (N. Y. 1888) Statements made by witnesses in writing different from those made on trial, and shown the witnesses, who acknowledge having made them, may be read in evidence.—Plyer v. German-American Ins. Co., 48 Hun, 618, 1 N. Y. Supp. 395, judgment reversed (1890) 121 N. Y. 689, 24 N. E. 929.

[v] (Pa. 1893) Where, on appeal from the report of viewers as to damages and benefits for a street improvement, one of the viewers testifies as a witness as to the effect of the improvement on appellant's property, the report signed by him, showing an entirely different estimate, is admissible to contradict him, and affect the weight of his opinion with the jury.—Dawson v. City of Pittsburgh, 159 Pa. 317, 28 Atl. 171, 34 Wkly. Notes Cas. 69.

[vv] (Pa. 1896) In an action for recovery of the property taken by defendant on execution on a claim against a partnership, for which the execution debtor, as one of the partners, had given a judgment note, and where the proof as to the validity of defendant's claim rested on the testimony of the debtor himself, it was competent, for the purpose of impeaching the debtor's credibility, and the bona fides of the alleged debt, for the plaintiff to show, by the partnership books, that the amount due defendant was in fact much less than the judgment note.—Hartley v. Weideman, 175 Pa. 309, 34 Atl. 625, 38 Wkly. Notes Cas. 192.

[w] (Pa. 1896) In an action for death at a crossing, where one who was riding with decedent at the time of the accident testified as to the manner in which it occurred, it was proper to contradict his testimony by a statement in writing, signed by him, though the body of the instrument was written by another.—Hughes v. Delaware & H. Canal Co., 176 Pa. 254, 35 Atl. 190, 38 Wkly. Notes Cas. 393.

[ww] (S. C. 1851) In an action on a policy of insurance on a vessel, one of the crew, who had signed a protest, was examined by the plaintiff as a witness. Held, that the plaintiff might give in evidence his declarations in the protest, to contradict his testimony.—Cudworth v. South Carolina Ins. Co., 4 Rich. Law, 416, 55 Am. Dec. 692.

[x] (Tex. 1885) Where an agent of a railroad company drew up a statement on the next day, giving the amount of plaintiff's goods destroyed by fire while in the company's possession, and defendant company introduced the agent's deposition as to the same facts, the statement was admissible to contradict the deposition, where the witness' attention had been called to the disagreement.—East Line & R. R. Ry. Co. v. Hall, 64 Tex. 615.

[xx] (Tex. 1889) A husband, some time prior to conveying land to his wife, furnished a creditor with a statement of its value, which he stated was a fair estimate, and less than he would sell it for, but which was largely in excess of the consideration expressed in his deed to his wife. In an action involving the validity of that deed, he testified that the statement was understood to show the prospective, and not the cash, value of the property. Held, that the statement was admissible, as tending to impeach his testimony that the actual value was much less than that shown in the statement.—Torrey v. Cameron, 73 Tex. 583, 11 S. W. 840.

[y] (Tex. 1891) A written statement, purporting to contain a witness' recollection of the facts in controversy, is admissible to impeach his testimony, where such statement, though not signed, is admitted by him on cross-examination to have been written at his request.—Cross v. McKinley, 81 Tex. 332, 16 S. W. 1023.

[yy] (Tex. 1893) In an action for the price of lumber, where plaintiff claimed that defendant agreed to buy such lumber as a contractor constructing a house for him might select, while defendant claimed that he agreed to become responsible for a certain amount, only, of lumber, the bill for which he approved, it was error to exclude the written contract between defendant and the contractor, offered by the former, and showing that the contractor agreed to furnish all the material and build the house at a stipulated price, the contractor having testified to a different contract.—Bernheim v. Lyon, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 716, 25 S. W. 57.

[z] (W. Va. 1885) In a prosecution for murder, one who had been jointly indicted with defendant testified to defendant's guilt. To impeach such witness defendant offered in evidence a written statement, purporting to be signed by the witness, to the effect that he would never have done what he did, if he had not been persuaded to it by the prosecution, and reciting that it was hard "to stand that which a man is not guilty of; you will come out all right in that yet; you need not be afraid about it; I would tell you all if I had a chance to." The witness testified that he wrote such document at the dictation of the defendant, and that it was directed to a third person; but such testimony of the witness was combated by the testimony of the third person and of defendant. Held, that the court erred in excluding such writing.—State v. Kinney, 26 W. Va. 141.

[zz] (W. Va. 1885) Any written statement, made by a witness before he gives his evidence before the jury, which tends to contradict his evidence in any material point, is competent.—State v. Kinney, 26 W. Va. 141.

[a] (Ala. 1840) Where a witness, on cross-examination, admits that he wrote a letter containing different statements from that which he gave in evidence, and, with the letter before him, states its contents to the jury, the adverse party is entitled to read the letter to the jury.—Lewis v. Post, 1 Ala. 65.

[b] (Ala. 1888) Where the scrivener who drew a paper has testified that he intended to write a will, though the evidence, if properly objected to, would have been rejected for incompetency, it is proper to permit the contestant to give in evidence a letter in which the witness stated that the alleged testator died intestate, for the purpose of impeaching him.—Sharp v. Hall, 86 Ala. 110, 5 South. 497, 11 Am. St. Rep. 28.

[c] (Ill. 1890) In an action for a wrongful discharge from employment, where the defense is neglect of duty, to which defendant's secretary testifies, a letter of recommendation given by him to plaintiff is admissible as impeaching testimony.—Western Manufacturers' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Boughton, 37 Ill. App. 183, affirmed (1891) 136 Ill. 317, 26 N. E. 591.

[d] (Ind. 1893) In an action for legal services, though, under the general denial, letters between the parties are not admissible to show that after performance of the services they agreed on an amount which should be paid plaintiff therefor, his letters are proper subjects to cross-examine him on as tending to show the value put on his services by himself.—Stringer v. Breen, 7 Ind. App. 557, 34 N. E. 1015.

[e] (Kan. 1888) Plaintiff sued for the purchase price of a lot in a new town, conveyed by him to one of defendants. The defense was that it was conveyed in consideration of improvements made thereon. Defendants produced as a witness the agent of plaintiff in the disposal of the lots, who testified that he had had correspondence with plaintiff concerning this matter; and that he first heard that the lot was sold for a money consideration in 1885, though he knew it was conveyed in 1882. Two letters, with memoranda attached, dated in 1882, were identified by witness, in cross-examination, as his handwriting, directed to plaintiff, in which was a list of lots sold, to whom, and for what price, which contained this lot, and showed that it was sold to one of defendants for $75, and not paid for. Held, that they were competent to impeach witness.—Anthony v. Jones, 39 Kan. 529, 18 Pac. 519.

[f] (La. 1895) A letter alleged to have been written by a witness is not admissible as impeaching, unless it is shown, either by positive proof, or by proof of handwriting, that witness wrote the letter, the fact that it bears the postmark of the office at which he receives his mail not being sufficient evidence of that fact.—State v. Tolliver, 47 La. Ann. 1099, 17 South. 502.

[g] (Md. 1887) The letters of a witness were permitted to be read in evidence, to impeach his credit as to what he had sworn upon his examination contradictory to the contents of the letter, but not to prove any other fact.—De Sobry v. De Laistre, 2 Har. & J. 191.

[h] (Mass. 1842) In the trial of an action by a mortgagee against a town clerk for not recording a mortgage of personal property, so that the property was attached and sold on execution by the mortgagor's other creditors, the plaintiff introduced the deposition of the mortgagor, taken under a commission, in which he deposed that he delivered the mortgage to the defendant to be recorded, and paid him his fees, etc. The defendant had filed a cross-interrogatory, asking the deponent when he was first informed that the mortgage was not recorded, what measures or steps he took in relation to the same, whether he made any communication to the mortgagee respecting the mortgage not being recorded, and what directions he received from the mortgagee in consequence of such communication. A part of the deponent's answer was that he informed the mortgagee that the property was lost through the carelessness of the defendant, and that there was no way to recover it from the attaching officer, as the mortgage was lost, and there was no copy of it; that he also told the mortgagee that he (the deponent) considered the defendant holden for the payment of it, or bound to make it good; that the mortgagee replied that he did not wish to go to law; and that nothing more was then said or done about it. Held, that the defendant was rightly permitted to give in evidence, for the purpose of discrediting the deponent, a letter written by him, a short time before the mortgaged property was sold on execution to one of the creditors who had attached it, saying that he should be in no haste to pay the debt, and would pay no cost, and threatening the creditor with trouble if he should dare to sell the property on execution.—Perkins v. Adams, 46 Mass. (5 Metc.) 44.

[i] (Mass. 1866) If, in an action brought by the assignees of an insolvent debtor to recover property conveyed, as they allege, by the debtor, in order to defraud his creditors, the debtor testifies that the conveyance was not made with such fraudulent intent, letters containing statements tending to contradict his testimony, written by his clerk and signed with the debtor's name, may properly be read to the jury, under the instruction of the court that they are admissible for the purpose of contradicting the testimony of the debtor, if the jury find on the evidence that they were written under his authority.—Marsh v. Hammond, 93 Mass. (11 Allen) 483.

[j] (Mass. 1867) In an action involving the issue whether A., who had purchased the interest of his insolvent partner B. in the property of the firm, had reason to believe B. insolvent, a witness testified that he was a creditor of B.'s, and, upon meeting A. a short time before his purchase, told him the amount of his claim upon B., and that A. asked him to extend the time of payment of the claim, taking the joint notes of A. and B. therefor. Held that, to discredit this testimony, a letter written by the witness to A. and B. shortly after this interview, which did not refer to the claim, or the proposed extension of payment, but indicated an expectation that A. and B. were to continue in business on a considerable scale, and showed that the witness was continuing dealings with them, was admissible in evidence.—Carruth v. Bayley, 96 Mass. (14 Allen) 532.

[k] (Mass. 1883) Where, on the trial of a man for adultery, he calls as a witness in his behalf the woman with whom he is charged with having committed the crime, and she denies it, she may be contradicted by showing that a certain letter, admitting the crime, was written by her.—Commonwealth v. Nefus, 135 Mass. 533.

[l] (Mass. 1886) In an action to recover the value of goods sold to one whom the plaintiffs alleged the defendant represented to be his agent, which the defendant denied, it is competent, for the purpose of contradicting the testimony of the defendant, to introduce letters signed by defendant, and mailed by his orders subsequent to the alleged representations, although not addressed to the plaintiffs, in which the defendant made substantially the same statements as the plaintiffs at the trial testified had been made to them regarding his relations with the alleged agent.—Hosmer v. Groat, 143 Mass. 16, 8 N. E. 431.

[m] (Mass. 1889) In an action by a married woman, for writing a defamatory letter to her husband concerning her conduct before marriage, a letter written by defendant before plaintiff's marriage, suggesting improper intimacy with defendant, and calling plaintiff his wife, is admissible to contradict defendant's testimony that he had used no such language, and made no such suggestions.—Beals v. Thompson, 149 Mass. 405, 21 N. E. 959.

[n] (Mich. 1887) A letter may be admitted on the cross-examination of the writer, for the purpose of impeaching his veracity, when, in his direct examination, he has denied having given any such advice as the letter contained.—Krolik v. Graham, 64 Mich. 226, 31 N. W. 307.

[o] (N. H. 1882) A letter written by a witness, which contradicts his testimony, is competent evidence to affect his credit.—Tabor v. Judd, 62 N. H. 288.

[p] (N. Y. 1891) At the trial of an indictment for arson, the motive attempted to be shown was the discharge of defendant's father from employment by the proprietors of the building. The father, testifying for the defense, denied, on cross-examination, that he had been so discharged, or had made complaint thereof, or had made certain charges against his successor. Held, that a letter written by him, contradicting his testimony in these particulars, was admissible to impeach him.—People v. Cassidy, 60 Hun, 579, 14 N. Y. Supp. 349, judgment affirmed (1892) 133 N. Y. 612, 30 N. E. 1003.

[q] (N. Y. 1894) Letters written by a wife to a husband, and given by him to his mistress, and produced by her on his trial for perjury, were properly received in evidence, as bearing on the wife's credibility, where they contradicted her testimony in certain respects.—People v. Hayes, 140 N. Y. 484, 35 N. E. 951, 37 Am. St. Rep. 572, 23 L. R. A. 830, affirming (1893) 70 Hun, 111, 24 N. Y. Supp. 194.

[r] (R. I. 1890) In an action on a promissory note, where a member of the firm of payees testifies that the firm assigned the note to plaintiff shortly after receiving it, and before its maturity, a letter written by the witness after its maturity to the maker, inclosing a renewal note, and excusing failure to make a demand on the old note when it became due, is admissible, on his cross-examination, as affecting his credibility.—Barrett v. Dodge, 16 R. I. 740, 19 Atl. 530, 27 Am. St. Rep. 777.

[s] (Tex. 1893) In an action involving the title to a lot of jewelry, one R., a son of plaintiff, testified that the property was, and always had been, plaintiff's. On cross-examination he was asked if he did not write a letter to defendant claiming to own the property, and stating that he would put it into their partnership business as a portion of his capital. This he denied, but, on being shown the letter, admitted that he wrote it. Defendants offered the letter in evidence. Held, that it was admissible for the purpose of contradicting and discrediting the witness.—Dooley v. Miller, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 132, 21 S. W. 157.

§ 1251. —— Pleadings, motions, and affidavits.

[a] (Ark. 1885) A witness may be impeached by introducing his pleading under oath in another cause.—Texas & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Donnelly, 46 Ark. 87.

[b] (Cal. 1893) In a prosecution for seduction, on the cross-examination of defendant it was proper to read in evidence an affidavit made by him in support of a motion for a new trial in a civil action formerly brought against him by prosecutrix, when such affidavit tends to contradict his testimony on his examination in chief.—People v. Samonset, 97 Cal. 448, 32 Pac. 520.

[c] (Cal. 1894) A complaint not verified or signed by plaintiff, and whose contents are not shown to have been known by him, is not admissible against him, in another action, to contradict his testimony.—Solari v. Snow, 101 Cal. 387, 35 Pac. 1004.

[d] (Colo. 1894) An affidavit by defendant to procure compulsory process for witnesses, which states where he was at the time of the crime, may be introduced against him, and the statement as to his whereabouts contradicted.—Torris v. People, 19 Colo. 438, 36 Pac. 153.

[e] (Colo. 1896) A claim made by one as plaintiff in an action dismissed by him before final judgment is admissible in a subsequent action against him by one not a party to the former action, in which he sets up as a defense a claim inconsistent with that made in the former action, as impeaching evidence, subject to his right to explain the inconsistency.—Fisher v. Denver Nat. Bank, 22 Colo. 373, 45 Pac. 440.

[f] (Fla. 1895) An affidavit for a continuance made by defendant on trial of a former criminal action against him is admissible to contradict his testimony.—Leslie v. State, 35 Fla. 171, 17 South. 555.

[g] (Ga. 1880) On a second trial, answers of a deceased witness at the first were introduced. Held, that an affidavit used on the motion for the new trial, weakening the force of her testimony, was inadmissible to contradict or explain her answers.—Bessman v. Girardey, 66 Ga. 18.

[h] (Ill. 1867) An affidavit of a witness was introduced to impeach his testimony. Held, that it was error to instruct the jury that, if the witness did not understand the whole import of the fact contained in the affidavit, they should give it no effect.—Von Glahn v. Von Glahn, 46 Ill. 134.

[i] (Mass. 1887) The certified copy of a complaint made by a witness who admits, on cross-examination, that he signed and swore to such a complaint, and identifies the copy as a true one, is admissible for the purpose of contradicting the witness' other testimony.—Commonwealth v. Snee, 145 Mass. 351, 14 N. E. 157.

[j] (Mo. 1896) A witness may be impeached by an affidavit previously made by her containing statements contradictory to evidence given on the stand.—Sullivan v. Jefferson Ave. Ry. Co., 133 Mo. 1, 34 S. W. 566, 32 L. R. A. 167.

[k] (N. Y. 1864) The affidavits on which a new trial was ordered, though served on the attorney of the adverse party and not contradicted, are not admissible on the trial to impeach testimony given there by such adverse party.—Wehrkamp v. Willet, 4 Abb. Dec. 548.

[l] (N. Y. 1887) In a trial for grand larceny, the prosecuting witness was cross-examined in regard to the allegations in a complaint made by him in a civil suit against the defendant. The state offered the whole complaint in evidence, to which the defense objected. The court ruled that it might be put in evidence for the purpose of showing what the witness testified to, but not in any other point. Held, that within the limit indicated, the complaint was properly admitted in evidence.—People v. Dimick, 107 N. Y. 13, 14 N. E. 178, affirming (1886) 41 Hun, 616.

[m] (N. C. 1891) In an action of waste, defendant was allowed to testify that he used the land as a prudent man would his own; that, at the time of committing the alleged waste, he in fact believed that he had a fee-simple title, and further, on cross-examination, that he had not admitted in a verified answer in another action that when he bought the land he knew his grantor had paid for it with property in which his wife had a life interest, and the present plaintiffs a remainder. Held, that the latter statement could be contradicted by putting in evidence such answer.—Floyd v. Thomas, 108 N. C. 93, 12 S. E. 740.

[n] (Tex. 1885) A deposing witness' testimony cannot be contradicted by his ex parte affidavit, made three years before, under circumstances not disclosed.—Marx v. Heidenheimer, 63 Tex. 304.

[o] (Tex. 1889) Where a cashier of a bank testifies that the bank had not disposed of certain collaterals held by it to secure a note of one A., as alleged by defendant, in violation of its agreement with him, the sworn answer of the bank by the cashier in a garnishment suit against A., that at the time alleged it held none of his property or effects, is admissible to impeach the witness.—Smith v. Traders' Nat. Bank, 74 Tex. 457, 12 S. W. 113.

[p] (Tex. 1895) When evidence that a certain witness had made an affidavit in behalf of the defendant for a change of venue had been admitted without objection, it was not reversible error to admit the affidavit in evidence afterwards, to affect his credibility.—Trinity County Lumber Co. v. Denham, 88 Tex. 203, 30 S. W. 856, affirming (Civ. App. 1894) 29 S. W. 553.

§ 1252. Former testimony of witness.

Best and secondary evidence of former testimony in general, see "Evidence," vol. 20, cc. 803, 804, § 539.

[a] (U. S. 1845) An attempt was made to overturn the testimony of one of the plaintiff's witnesses, in a suit in equity, by showing that his testimony before the master contradicted his statements in his original examination. Held, that as his examination before the master, as to matters previously testified to by him, without a special order from the court, was improper, it could not be admitted.—Jenkins v. Eldredge, Fed. Cas. No. 7,267 [3 Story, 299].

[b] (U. S. 1891) Rev. St. § 860 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 661] providing that "no discovery or evidence obtained from a party or witness by means of a judicial proceeding in this or any foreign country shall be given in evidence or in any manner used against him, or his property or estate, in any court of the United States in any criminal proceeding," does not render it incompetent to contradict a party who testifies in his own behalf, by showing that, in a prosecution against another, he voluntarily appeared as a witness, and testified differently, where such testimony of itself has no tendency to criminate the witness, but rather to place the responsibility wholly upon the other.—United States v. Smith (C. C.) 47 Fed. 501, following State v. Broughton (1850) 29 N. C. (7 Ired.) 96, 45 Am. Dec. 507.

[c] (Ala. 1846) Where an impeaching witness, testifying as to what another witness had stated on a former trial, admitted taking a memorandum of such statement, which was produced, such memorandum was not admissible as part of his testimony, though substantially different from what he swore to.—Olds v. Powell, 10 Ala. 393.

[d] (Ark. 1847) A party may prove that a witness has sworn differently on a former trial of the same case after first interrogating him as to the points of difference in his testimony.—Beebe v. De Baun, 8 Ark. (3 Eng.) 510.

[e] (Ga. 1859) A copy of the brief of evidence retained in the lower court, according to the provisions of law when the original is sent up, is available at a second trial for the purpose of impeaching the state witnesses below, when the original is properly retained on the files of the appellate court.—Smith v. State, 28 Ga. 19.

[f] (Ga. 1871) The testimony of a witness, taken down in writing on a former trial, may be offered in evidence to discredit him in whole or in part—in whole to show the negative of something stated, not testified to on former examination, or in part to contradict the witness; and such evidence may be read to the jury, who are to judge the question of its conflict or materiality under the charge of the court.—Pound v. State, 43 Ga. 88.

[g, h] (Ga. 1893) Where a prisoner has been previously tried for the same offense, his statement then made, conflicting with the statement made on the subsequent trial, is admissible in evidence against him for the purpose of contradicting the latter.—Lewis v. State, 91 Ga. 168, 16 S. E. 986.

[i] (Iowa, 1856) Evidence of a witness who swears that he was present at two former trials of the case is admissible to contradict a witness as to what the latter testified at a former trial.—Glenn v. Carson, 3 G. Greene, 529.

[j] (Iowa, 1889) It is not error to show by other witnesses what a witness testified on a former trial for the purpose of impeachment.—Wacha v. Brown, 78 Iowa, 432, 43 N. W. 269.

[k] (Iowa, 1895) Where, in replevin against a sheriff, for attached property, by a purchaser before levy of the attachment, the original owner is plaintiff's witness to show the bona fides of the sale, evidence given by him on a previous examination as to the property is admissible to contradict the witness when proper foundation has been laid.—Klotz v. James, 96 Iowa, 1, 64 N. W. 648, 59 Am. St. Rep. 348.

[l] (Ky. 1824) A bill, containing the testimony of a witness on a former trial, is competent evidence to discredit him if he testify again.—Baylor v. Smithers, 17 Ky. (1 T. B. Mon.) 6.

[m] (La. 1842) Statements of witnesses in a suit with the former plaintiff as defendant, but another party as plaintiff, are admissible to discredit them.—Wells v. Compton, 3 Rob. 171.

[n] (Me. 1867) The report of evidence, though signed by the presiding judge, is not admissible to show what the witness testified on the former trial, for the purpose of contradicting him.—Webster v. Calden, 55 Me. 165.

[o] (Me. 1876) A witness may be impeached by showing that he testified differently at a former trial.—State v. McDonald, 65 Me. 466.

[oo] (Mass. 1870) Answers made by a party before a register in bankruptcy, and at his own dictation taken down by his attorney, but not signed, held to be admissible to contradict his testimony in a collateral proceeding.—Knowlton v. Moseley, 105 Mass. 136.

[p] (Mass. 1887) At the trial of a case in the superior court, it is competent for the auditor who heard the case to testify that a witness who testified at the trial, made statements, at the hearing before him, contradictory of those made at the trial, where the auditor has not set out the testimony of the witness in his report, and where the effect of the auditor's testimony is not to add to or control his report.—Tobin v. Jones, 143 Mass. 448, 9 N. E. 804.

[pp] (Mass. 1891) Where, in an action for slander, a witness testified that the words were spoken of plaintiff's business, in consequence of which an employé left the service, but that he could not fix the time the words were uttered, it was competent to show, for the purpose of contradiction, that on a former trial he had testified that the words were spoken before the employé left.—Elmer v. Fessenden, 154 Mass. 427, 28 N. E. 299.

[q] (Mich. 1873) The minutes of the testimony of witnesses taken by an attorney on a former trial, when properly proved, may be read in evidence to impeach the same witnesses on a second trial.—Fisher v. Kyle, 27 Mich. 454.

[qq] (Mich. 1880) Where proper foundation is laid for it, it is not error, for the purpose of contradicting a witness, to show that he testified differently upon a former trial.—Doty v. Gillett, 43 Mich. 203, 5 N. W. 89.

[r] (Mich. 1893) Where a witness' testimony on a second trial varies materially from that on a former trial, and, for the purpose of impeachment, on cross-examination his attention is called to the variance, and he is asked whether he made certain statements in conversation with a certain person at a specified time, which he denies having made, such person may then testify to the whole conversation, both questions and answers, where the latter can only be understood by the former.—Langworthy v. Green Tp., 95 Mich. 93, 54 N. W. 697.

[rr] (Miss. 1844) In order to impeach a witness, it is competent to show that he testified differently at a former trial of the case before a justice of the peace; and, if the minutes of the justice of the testimony before him have been lost, the contents of the minutes may be shown by parol.—Pearce v. Furr, 10 Miss. (2 Smedes & M.) 54.

[s] (Miss. 1850) It is incompetent to introduce the statement of a witness, made at a hearing for a habeas corpus as taken down by the vice chancellor, for the purpose of contradicting such witness at the trial, because the vice chancellor is not required to take full notes of such statements.—Nelms v. State, 21 Miss. (13 Smedes & M.) 500.

[ss] (Miss. 1879) While a conflicting statement made at a former trial may be proved to discredit a witness, comments of counsel upon said statement are inadmissible.—Cannon v. State, 57 Miss. 147.

[t] (Mo. 1887) The state may, in rebuttal, read in evidence the testimony of defendant given on a former trial for the same offense.—State v. Rose, 92 Mo. 201, 4 S. W. 733.

[tt] (N. H. 1858) Evidence of what a witness testified before trial commissioners may be introduced for the purpose of impeaching his testimony before the jury, although the report made by the commissioners of the evidence given before them contains no statement of such conflicting testimony.—Chesley v. Chesley, 37 N. H. 229.

[u] (N. H. 1874) Any one who heard an accused testify on a former hearing may testify to his statements at that time, for the purpose of contradicting his present testimony; such impeaching testimony not being limited to such witnesses only as took minutes of his former testimony.—State v. Archer, 54 N. H. 465.

[uu] (N. J. 1859) Parol evidence having been, by order of the court, admitted as to what was testified by a witness on a former examination, the same class of evidence is admissible on the other side to show that the witness had made conflicting statements.—Tyrrel v. Overseers of Poor of Woodbridge Tp., 27 N. J. Law (3 Dutch.) 416.

[v] (N. Y. 1874) To contradict a witness by showing that he had sworn differently on some former occasion, the original affidavit or other document must be produced. A copy will not do.—Pratt v. Norton, 5 Thomp. & C. 8, 2 Hun, 517.

[w] (N. Y. 1894) Where witness testifies that plaintiff swore to certain facts on a former trial, the minutes of such former trial are admissible for the purpose of impeaching the witness.—Birnbaum v. Lord (City Ct. N. Y.) 6 Misc. Rep. 535, 27 N. Y. Supp. 135, judgment affirmed (Com. Pl. 1894) 7 Misc. Rep. 493, 28 N. Y. Supp. 17.

[ww] (N. C. 1858) Counsel, in the conduct of a suit, have no right to read a statement of facts contained in the report of a former trial of the same case in the supreme court, for the purpose of contrasting such statement with the statement of the witnesses in the trial pending.—State v. Whit, 50 N. C. 224, 72 Am. Dec. 533.

[x] (N. C. 1886) On the trial of an issue of devisavit vel non, the propounders may contradict a witness of the caveators by a memorandum of the testimony of the witness below; the maker of the memorandum swearing to its accuracy.—Bryan v. Moring, 94 N. C. 687.

[xx] (Pa. 1825) Evidence may be given that a witness swore directly the opposite at a former trial, in order to discredit him.—Cowden v. Reynolds, 12 Serg. & R. 281.

[y] (Pa. 1891) The testimony of a party given in another suit, to which he was not a party, is admissible in evidence for the purpose of contradicting him.—Tisch v. Utz, 142 Pa. 186, 21 Atl. 808, 28 Wkly. Notes Cas. 55.

[yy] (S. C. 1888) It is competent for the coroner, who had taken in writing testimony at the inquest, to prove what a witness then said by reading what he had then taken down, or so much of it as the witness denies saying.—State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 201, 7 S. E. 296.

[z] (Vt. 1886) Where a party testified differently from what he testified in a former trial, and stated in his petition for a new trial, such petition is admissible to impeach him.—Bellows v. Sowles, 59 Vt. 63, 7 Atl. 542.

§ 1253. —— Stenographer's notes or transcript.

[a] (Ala. 1846) Where an impeaching witness, testifying to what another witness had stated on a former trial, produces a memorandum of such statement taken by him, which is claimed to differ from what he testifies to, the memorandum may be looked to by the witness to refresh his memory, or it may be used by the opposite party, as a written declaration by him of the facts, to impeach his recollection.—Olds v. Powell, 10 Ala. 393.

[b] (Ill. 1885) A stenographer, who took notes at a trial, may refresh his memory with his notes, for the purpose of impeaching a witness. —Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Robinson, 16 Ill. App. (16 Bradw.) 229.

[c] (Ind. 1895) A stenographer who had taken down statements of a defendant may refresh his memory by his notes, and read the notes to show that such statements were contradictory of the evidence given by the defendant on the trial.—Miller v. Preble, 142 Ind. 632, 42 N. E. 220.

[d] (Iowa, 1880) A shorthand reporter's transcript of his notes of testimony in a prior case was offered to impeach a witness by showing a conflict in his testimony in the two cases. Held, that the notes were inadmissible, where the evidence was not identified as testimony to the same fact in both cases.—Case v. Burrows, 54 Iowa, 679, 7 N. W. 130.

[e] (Iowa, 1889) After defendant's counsel had called the attention of witnesses for the state to the minutes of their evidence taken by a shorthand reporter at the preliminary examination, and to certain discrepancies between them and their testimony on the trial, he offered to read the minutes to the jury, for the purpose of impeaching the witnesses. Held properly refused; defendant having full opportunity to call the shorthand reporter, and to use his minutes to show what they contained.—State v. Adams, 78 Iowa, 292, 43 N. W. 194.

[f] (Iowa, 1891) Under Acts 18th Gen. Assem. c. 195, § 2, providing that a duly certified transcript of the shorthand notes of the evidence in a case "shall be admissible in any case in which the same are material and competent to the issue," such transcript may be introduced on a second trial of the same case in order to impeach a witness.—Hibbard v. Zenor, 82 Iowa, 505, 49 N. W. 63.

[g] (Mich. 1881) The unauthenticated notes of a stenographer's testimony in a civil case cannot be introduced to contradict him on a subsequent trial of the same case, unless by consent.—Edwards v. Heuer, 46 Mich. 95, 8 N. W. 717.

[h] (Mich. 1882) A copy by one stenographer of the notes of another stenographer, the copy having neither been compared with the original, nor read over to the witness, is not admissible for the purpose of impeaching one of the people's witnesses.—People v. McKinney, 49 Mich. 334, 13 N. W. 619.

[i] (Mich. 1888) The reporter's notes of defendant's testimony on a former trial, which have not been certified by the reporter, or signed by defendant as being correct, will afford no ground on which his subsequent testimony can be impeached, and detached portions of such notes may be used in examining defendant as to his former testimony without necessitating the reading of the whole of his testimony to him before such examination.—Toohey v. Plummer, 69 Mich. 345, 37 N. W. 297.

[j] (Mich. 1895) After having called the attention of a witness for the people to his evidence on a former trial, and having asked him if he made certain statements, the defense sought to impeach him by having read the stenographer's minutes of the former trial, but the stenographer was not asked the same question as the witness sought to be impeached. Held, the evidence was properly excluded.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149, 63 N. W. 196.

[k] (Mich. 1895) For the purpose of showing inconsistent testimony at the preliminary examination, the clerk of the court, who wrote the testimony of the complaining witness on a preliminary examination for assault, may refresh his memory therefrom.—People v. Kennedy, 105 Mich. 434, 63 N. W. 405.

[l] (Minn. 1890) The official stenographer's notes of the testimony of a witness at a former trial, recognized by such witness as correct, are admissible to show that he has changed or added to his testimony at the present trial.—Bennet v. Syndicate Ins. Co., 43 Minn. 45, 44 N W. 794.

[m] (Ohio, 1896) The notes taken by the official court stenographer of the testimony of a witness at a former trial may be read in evidence for the purpose of impeaching such witness.—Pennsylvania Co. v. Trainer, 12 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 66.

[n] (Wash. 1892) The stenographer's notes taken on the first trial are not admissible on the second to contradict testimony then given, but may only be referred to by the stenographer to refresh his memory.—State v. Freidrich, 4 Wash. St. 204, 29 Pac. 1055, 30 Pac. 328, 31 Pac. 332.

[o] (Wash. 1894) A stenographer who has shown that he took notes of the testimony of a witness on a former trial, and that such notes were correct, may read his notes, to impeach such witness, though, aside from the notes, he has no recollection of what the witness said.—Klepsch v. Donald, 8 Wash. 162, 35 Pac. 621.

[p] (Wis. 1892) In an action for personal injuries caused by a collision of trains, a medical witness, who had testified in plaintiff's behalf at a former trial and was now called by defendant as to the cause and nature of plaintiff's diseased condition, was cross-examined by plaintiff's counsel, in order to show, as test of credit, that his present evidence was inconsistent with his former evidence, and asked whether he had not made certain answers to certain specific questions at the former trial in relation to a specific disease, its causes, etc., which he applied to the plaintiff's condition. Counsel then called a stenographer present at the former trial, who proved from his minutes the witness' former evidence. Held, that the questions and evidence were relevant, as relating directly to a material part of defendant's case.—Waterman v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 82 Wis. 613, 52 N. W. 247, 1136.

§ 1254. —— Testimony before grand jury or at preliminary investigation or coroner's inquest.

[a] The deposition of a witness, given before a coroner's jury, and certified and returned by the coroner to the district court as required by the statute, is admissible for the purpose of contradicting the statement of the witness, made under oath, on the trial of the person accused of having murdered the deceased.
—(Cal. 1872) People v. Devine, 44 Cal. 452;
(N. Y. 1859) Stephens v. People, 19 N. Y. 549.

[b] (Ala. 1888) The testimony of a witness taken before the magistrate on the preliminary investigation having been reduced to writing, the court did not err in refusing to allow him to be cross-examined as to extracts taken from the writing, with a view to impeaching him, but properly required that the entire writing should be read to the jury.—Kennedy v. State, 85 Ala. 326, 5 South. 300.

[c] (Ark. 1866) If a witness who has testified before the examining court in a criminal case be asked on the trial if he did not, in his testimony before the examining court, make certain statements, the testimony of a witness before the examining court, when reduced to writing, is competent evidence to contradict him.—Milan v. State, 24 Ark. 346.

[d] (Ark. 1894) Where the state attempts to impeach the defendant's testimony by showing that he testified differently at the coroner's inquest, the coroner's record of his testimony should be produced if possible.—Cole v. State, 59 Ark. 50, 26 S. W. 377.

[e] (Cal. 1889) Where a witness for the prosecution, in a trial for murder, testifies inconsistently with his testimony at the coroner's inquest, it is not error to call his attention to what he had testified to before the coroner, and, upon his denial thereof, to read such testimony to the jury.—People v. Bushton, 80 Cal. 160, 22 Pac. 127, 549.

[f] (Cal. 1896) In a criminal trial a deposition of the defendant, taken on his preliminary examination, is admissible to impeach his testimony as to the same facts, his attention having been first called to it, notwithstanding Pen. Code, § 686, provides that depositions or preliminary examinations can only be read on the trial where the witness is dead, or insane, or absent from the state.—People v. Hawley, 111 Cal. 78, 43 Pac. 404.

[g] (Fla. 1895) The statement of a witness before a grand jury, reduced to writing, but not read to or signed by him, is inadmissible as independent evidence to contradict the witness on his trial on being subsequently indicted for the offense as to which he testified.—Jenkins v. State, 35 Fla. 737, 18 South. 182, 48 Am. St. Rep. 267.

[h] (Fla. 1895) Testimony given by defendant before the grand jury before he was arrested or indicted, and after he was cautioned that he could not be compelled to criminate himself, was admissible.—Jenkins v. State, 35 Fla. 737, 18 South. 182, 48 Am. St. Rep. 267.

[i] (Ga. 1879) The testimony of a witness at the coroner's inquest, preserved in the stenographer's notes and afterwards written out, is admissible on the principal trial to show contradictions between such testimony and that of the same witness on the trial; the attention of the witness having first been called to such contradictions.—Cox v. State, 64 Ga. 374, 37 Am. Rep. 76.

[j] (Ga. 1886) On trial of an indictment for rape, where witnesses for the state have been asked for purposes of impeachment whether they did not testify to certain material matters before the court of inquiry, contrary to their evidence at the trial in the superior court, it is error to refuse to allow the presiding justice in the former court to prove that the witnesses had so testified there.—Brown v. State, 76 Ga. 623.

[k] (Ill. 1886) Under 1 Starr & C. St. p. 859, par. 472, it is admissible to discredit a witness by proving, by a grand juror, that such witness testified differently before the grand jury.—Bressler v. People, 117 Ill. 422, 8 N. E. 62.

[ll] (Ind. 1877) Where an investigation by the grand jury resulted in an indictment, and on trial of the case a witness gives evidence who had formerly testified before the grand jury, the prosecuting attorney may testify on the trial as to the evidence given by such witness before the grand jury, for the purpose of impeaching him.—State v. Van Buskirk, 59 Ind. 384.

[m] (Iowa, 1876) The minutes of evidence given before the grand jury, or of that submitted upon preliminary examination, are not admissible upon the trial for the purpose of impeaching a witness.—State v. Hayden, 45 Iowa, 11.

[n] (La. 1861) The testimony of a witness before an inquest may be admitted to discredit his testimony at the time of trial.—State v. Mulholland, 16 La. Ann. 376.

[o] (Mass. 1858) The defendant, for the purpose of impeaching a witness for the commonwealth on the trial of an indictment, may prove that he testified differently before the grand jury.—Commonwealth v. Mead, 78 Mass. (12 Gray) 167.

[p] (Mass. 1870) The fact that evidence offered, in an action on a note, to impeach the testimony of a witness, related to what had been said by him before the grand jury, did not affect its admissibility on either side.—Way v. Butterworth, 106 Mass. 75.

[q] (Mo. 1889) Rev. St. 1879, § 1791, providing that grand jurors may be required to testify whether testimony of a witness is consistent with that given before them, and section 1780, providing that a grand jury may appoint a clerk "to preserve minutes of their proceedings, and of the evidence given before them, which minutes shall be given to the prosecuting attorney," do not render admissible the minutes of evidence before a grand jury, signed by the witness, to impeach the witness.—State v. Thomas, 99 Mo. 235, 12 S. W. 643.

[r] (Nev. 1878) The deposition of a witness taken on preliminary examination in a criminal case may be used to impeach the testimony given by him on the trial.—State v. Tickel, 13 Nev. 502.

[rr] (N. Y. 1822) Counsel for defendant may ask the prosecutor any proper question to show a variance between his examination taken before a committing magistrate and his evidence before the jury, but he has no right to read his examination for that purpose.—People v. Watts, 1 Wheeler, Cr. Cas. 52.

[s] (N. Y. 1832) An examination of a witness at a preliminary examination, reduced to writing, is inadmissible for the purpose of impeaching such witness on the trial, unless it is proved by competent testimony to be the same as when sworn to.—Bellinger v. People, 8 Wend. 595.

[t] (N. C. 1821) While the testimony taken down in writing by a magistrate cannot, on a trial of the same matter in court, be used as evidence in chief, it may be used to show contradictory statements by him.—State v. McLeod, 8 N. C. 344.

[tt] (N. C. 1884) A witness on a criminal trial may be contradicted by his sworn statement made on the preliminary examination of the prisoner.—State v. Pierce, 91 N. C. 606.

[u] (N. C. 1892) In a prosecution for rape, the committing magistrate testified that the proceedings on the preliminary examination were in his handwriting, and he was certain that what was there written was a true statement of the prosecutrix's evidence taken before him. Held, that such statement was admissible in evidence to contradict or discredit prosecutrix's evidence at the trial.—State v. Jordan, 110 N. C. 491, 14 S. E. 752.

[uu] (S. C. 1888) Where the testimony taken down by the coroner was signed by the witness, it may be received to show what he had previously stated in regard to the occurrence.—State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 201, 7 S. E. 296.

[v] (Tenn. 1874) A witness may be impeached by contradictory statements made by her on her examination before a committing magistrate, and identified by him as her testimony, and signed by him for her at her request, she being unable to write, although not shown to or read over by the witness at the time of its being offered.—Titus v. State, 66 Tenn. (7 Baxt.) 132.

[vv] (Tex. 1887) A witness may be impeached by showing that he made statements under oath before the grand jury inconsistent with his evidence on the trial.—Scott v. State, 23 Tex. App. 521, 5 S. W. 142.

[w] (Tex. 1890) To contradict a witness, the state read in evidence the record of his testimony on the examining trial of defendant. It was not objected that the impeachment was upon immaterial and collateral matter, nor was the identity of the record of the evidence duly and legally taken on the examining trial questioned. Held, that the evidence was properly admitted.—Hudson v. State, 28 Tex. App. 323, 13 S. W. 388.

[ww] (Tex. 1890) A witness may be impeached by showing that his statements at the trial contradict those he made before the grand jury.—Rippey v. State, 29 Tex. App. 37, 14 S. W. 448.

[x] (Tex. 1894) Testimony of a witness, taken in the examining court, wholly at variance with his testimony on the trial, is admissible to contradict him, though he states that the record offered is false; that he did not read it before signing, and would not have signed it, had it been read to him.—Jackson v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 281, 26 S. W. 194, 622, 47 Am. St. Rep. 30.

[xx] (Va. 1853) On a trial for murder, the deposition of a witness given before the inquest, taken down at the time by the coroner, and read to and signed by the witness, may be introduced to contradict him.—Wormeley v. Commonwealth, 10 Grat. 658.

[y] (Va. 1864) On a trial for murder, G., a witness, on his examination in chief, made a statement as to the action of a third person, and upon cross-examination was asked whether he had not made a certain statement before the examining court which was different from that made at the trial, to which G. replied that he did not remember. Held, that evidence was competent to show by one witness that only a single witness testified before the examining court, and that he made a different statement from that just given by G., and then to show by another witness that G. was the witness before the examining court.—Forde v. Commonwealth, 16 Grat. 547.

[yy] (Va. 1874) Defendant on a criminal trial may prove by a person who is present that a statement made before the grand jury by a witness for the commonwealth was altogether different from that made by him on the trial.—Little v. Commonwealth, 25 Grat. 921.

[z] (Va. 1887) Certain witnesses of defendant were asked whether they had made certain statements at the coroner's inquest, which they each denied. Plaintiff introduced, in rebuttal, their depositions taken at the inquest. Held, that the evidence thus introduced was properly admitted.—New York, P. & N. R. Co. v. Kellam's Adm'r, 83 Va. 851, 3 S. E. 703.

[zz] (Wis. 1883) Evidence of statements made by defendant on his preliminary examination, contradicting his evidence on the trial, are admissible by way of impeachment.—Rounds v. State, 57 Wis. 45, 14 N. W. 865.

§ 1255. —— Depositions.

[a] (Ala. 1847) Where the object is not to establish the facts stated by a witness, but to impeach his credit, a deposition made by him, in another suit and between other parties, is evidence to contradict him.—Holman's Heirs v. Bank of Norfolk, 12 Ala. 369.

[b] (Kan. 1894) Where plaintiff in an action for personal injuries makes statements on the witness stand, substantially different from those contained in a deposition which he admits having signed, but denies the entire correctness of, refusing to permit defendant to read in evidence those parts of the deposition tending to contradict his testimony is error, whether such deposition is admissible in evidence or not.—Southern Kansas Ry. Co. v. Painter, 53 Kan. 414, 36 Pac. 731.

[c] (Md. 1876) It is not necessary, to render a witness' answers to interrogatories admissible to contradict his testimony at the trial, that his answers should have been read to him before he signed his name thereto; it being sufficient to prove that he was the witness who was sworn and examined by the commissioner, and whose answers the commission and return purported to give.—Ecker v. McAllister, 45 Md. 290.

[d] (Pa. 1842) It is competent to contradict the verbal testimony of a witness by reading his deposition taken in the same case and filed in the court which directed the issue.—Bull v. Towson, 4 Watts & S. 557.

[e] (S. C. 1895) It is within the court's discretion to permit the reading of answers to cross-interrogatories showing what the witness swore to in another cause in regard to the same matters.—Bickley v. Commercial Bank, 43 S. C. 528, 21 S. E. 886.

[f] (Wis. 1861) A deposition which has been excluded on the ground that the witness is present in court at the time of trial may be used to contradict the testimony of the witness there given.—Thayer v. Gallup, 13 Wis. 539.

§ 1256. —— Bills of exceptions or statements of facts.

[a] A bill of exceptions taken at a former trial of the same cause is inadmissible in evidence for the purpose of impeaching a witness who testifies at both trials.
—(Ind. 1890) Pennsylvania Co. v. Marion, 123 Ind. 415, 23 N. E. 973, 18 Am. St. Rep. 330, 7 L. R. A. 687; (Md. 1880) Ecker v. McAllister, 54 Md. 362.

[b] (Ala. 1882) Statements in a bill of exceptions reserved on a former trial are not admissible to contradict witnesses.—South & North Alabama R. Co. v. Wood, 72 Ala. 451.

[c] (Ga. 1888) A bill of exceptions, showing testimony of a witness in another case, is not admissible to impeach him, though approved by the court; it not having been read or assented to by the witness.—Reid v. State, 81 Ga. 760, 8 S. E. 431.

[d] (Ind. 1884) Where a witness denies having testified differently at a former trial, he cannot be impeached by a bill of exceptions purporting to contain all the evidence in such trial; he not being a party to the action.—Terry v. Shively, 93 Ind. 413.

[e] (Iowa, 1868) A bill of exceptions, purporting to contain the evidence of a witness in a cause on a previous trial, is inadmissible in evidence for the purpose of contradicting on the second trial the same witness.—Boyd v. First Nat. Bank, 25 Iowa, 255.

[f] (Me. 1853) Where one witness testified that another witness, who testified on a former trial of the same case and on this trial also, swore differently on the two, it is not competent to introduce the bill of exceptions taken in the former trial, to show that the witness had contradicted himself.—State v. Bonney, 35 Me. 105.

[g] (N. Y. 1806) The evidence stated in a case made on a former trial cannot be admitted to impeach the testimony of the same witness, given on a second trial of the same cause.—Neilson v. Columbia Ins. Co., 1 Johns. 301.

[h] (Tex. 1891) A statement of facts made by the court and the charge of the court cannot be used on a subsequent trial for the purpose of impeaching a witness by showing how he testified at the first trial.—McCamant v. Roberts, 80 Tex. 316, 15 S. W. 580, 1054.

[i] (Tex. 1896) A statement of facts made up after a trial to be used on appeal is not admissible in a subsequent trial for the purpose of impeaching a witness.—Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Strycharski (Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 851.

§ 1257. Portion of writing or testimony.

Right to show whole statement, see post, § 1263.

[a] (U. S. 1887) A contradiction between the testimony of a witness at the trial and that given before the commissioner on preliminary examination tends to lessen its credibility; but where the commissioner testifies that he did not give a complete report of the evidence, and the testimony was not so full as at the trial, an omission from the examination of testimony given at the trial may be attributed to the incompleteness of the report.—United States v. Ford (D. C.) 33 Fed. 861.

[b] (Ala. 1887) On a trial for murder, a witness cannot be impeached by reading to him extracts from his testimony taken down by a magistrate, and signed by himself, as required by statute, on a preliminary trial of one accused of the murder.—Carden v. State, 84 Ala. 417, 4 South. 823.

[c] (Cal. 1890) Where the court refuses to allow portions of a deposition of plaintiff, taken before trial, to be read to plaintiff for the purpose of contradicting her statements on the trial, and afterwards the whole deposition is put in evidence, an objection that defendant was not allowed to contradict plaintiff in such way cannot be sustained.—White v. White, 82 Cal. 427, 23 Pac. 276, 7 L. R. A. 799.

[d] (Ind. 1895) Where a party undertakes to impeach a witness by a writing or deposition showing that he had made statements out of court different from those made on the trial, such party is not obliged to put all of such writing or deposition in evidence, but may introduce such parts only as tend to contradict or impeach the witness.—Miller v. Preble, 142 Ind. 632, 42 N. E. 220.

[e] (Ky. 1883) Where an attempt is made by the commonwealth to contradict one of defendant's witnesses, by showing that he testified differently on the examining trial, the defendant is entitled to all the evidence given by the witness on that trial that was relevant, and which tended to reconcile the apparent contradiction.—Galloway v. Commonwealth, 4 Ky. Law Rep. 720.

[f] (Ky. 1883) Where one of defendant's witnesses is shown to have testified differently on the preliminary examination from his evidence given on the trial, the defendant is not prejudiced by the refusal to admit all of the evidence of the witness on that occasion, for the purpose of reconciling the apparent contradiction, if it appears that what defendant avers he can prove thereby would throw no additional light upon the question.—Galloway v. Commonwealth, 4 Ky. Law Rep. 720.

[g] (Mich. 1885) Where it is sought to contradict a witness on re-examination, it is error to allow portions only of a written statement, as given by him to the prosecuting attorney and chief of police, to be read in evidence for that purpose. If the writing is contradictory, the whole of it should be introduced.—People v. Sweeney, 55 Mich. 586, 22 N. W. 50.

[h] (Mich. 1888) It is error to admit, for the purpose of impeaching defendant's testimony in his own behalf, part of his testimony on the same point in a former trial, and exclude another part which might explain the apparent discrepancies.—Dunbar v. McGill, 69 Mich. 297, 37 N. W. 285.

[i] (Mo. 1884) Where, on cross-examination, it is sought to impeach a witness by reading from her evidence as preserved in the bill of exceptions taken on a former trial, it is proper to permit only such part of the written evidence to be read as the witness denies having testified to on the former trial, and to exclude such part as she admits having testified to thereon.—State v. Cooper, 83 Mo. 698.

[j] (N. Y. 1889) Where, on cross-examination of a witness of defendant, it appeared that he had made an affidavit inconsistent with his direct testimony, and it did not appear whether he had adhered to or receded from his direct testimony, the entire affidavit was admissible to show the former statements of the witness, which were inconsistent with his testimony.—Hine v. Cushing, 53 Hun, 519, 6 N. Y. Supp. 859.

[k] (N. C. 1836) In impeaching the credibility of a witness, by proving that he swore differently as to a particular fact on a former trial, the impeaching witness need not state all the former testimony of the impeached witness; but it is sufficient if he is able to prove the repugnancy as to the particular fact.—Ingram v. Watkins, 18 N. C. 442.

[l] (N. C. 1848) Where it is sought to impeach the credibility of a witness, by showing that he had testified differently at a former trial, it is not necessary that the impeaching witness should swear to all his former testimony, but only to those facts which he has contradicted.—Edwards v. Sullivan, 30 N. C. 302.

[m] (Pa. 1840) Notes of the testimony given by a witness on a former trial, taken by the judge who tried the cause, were held not to be admissible for the purpose of contradicting the witness; the judge having testified that it was not his practice to take full notes of the testimony, except in cases where it was probable the cause would be reviewed, and it not appearing that full notes were taken by him on that trial.—Schall v. Miller, 5 Whart. 156.

[n] (Tex. 1894) On a prosecution for murder, where a witness testified as to the threatening attitude and language of deceased towards defendant just before the shooting, it was error to permit the state to impeach the witness by introducing a part of the testimony given by him on a previous trial, which part failed to corroborate him as to such threats, and to refuse to admit another part thereof which agreed with his evidence in that respect.—Jones v. State (Cr. App.) 25 S. W. 634.

[o] (Vt. 1886) Where a party testified differently from what he testified in a former trial and stated in his petition for a new trial, such part of the petition only as is pertinent to the issue need be offered in evidence for the purpose of impeaching him.—Bellows v. Sowles, 59 Vt. 63, 7 Atl. 542.

8. EVIDENCE TO SUSTAIN WITNESS OR REBUT EVIDENCE OF INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS.

REBUTTAL OF EVIDENCE OF INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS, § 1258.
PROOF OF GOOD CHARACTER OF WITNESS IMPEACHED, § 1259.
EVIDENCE AS TO STATEMENTS CONSISTENT WITH TESTIMONY, § 1260.
EXPLANATION OF INCONSISTENCY, § 1261.

§ 1258. Rebuttal of evidence of inconsistent statements.

[a] (Ala. 1884) Where, in a criminal case, the prosecutrix is cross-examined as to the particulars of her complaint, to lay the predicate for her impeachment by inconsistent statements, and other persons present at the time testify to facts tending to impeach her, she may examine other persons present for the purpose of supporting her statements.—Griffin v. State, 76 Ala. 29.

[b] (Ind. 1884) Where a witness was cross-examined as to certain admissions by him, so as to lay a foundation for his impeachment, and he denied such admissions, and thereafter testimony as to such admissions was given, it was proper to refuse to allow him to be recalled to again deny having made the admissions.—Hamm v. Romine, 98 Ind. 77.

[c] (Kan. 1882) Where an impeaching witness testified that a witness of plaintiff made certain statements at a particular time and place, held, that plaintiff might introduce evidence to show that the impeaching witness could not have been present at that time and place.—McClurg v. Van Zandt, 27 Kan. 113.

[d] (Kan. 1884) Where, for the purpose of impeaching a witness for the state, the defendant introduces witnesses who testify that at the preliminary examination they heard the former witness, and that he did not then mention the facts testified to by him on the trial, the state may in rebuttal, call other witnesses, also present at such examination, to testify that they heard the witness, and that he did then mention these facts.—State v. McKinney, 31 Kan. 570, 3 Pac. 356.

[e] (Ky. 1868) Where the committing magistrate was introduced to prove that the statements of one of the defendant's witnesses on the trial in the circuit court were different from those made by him on the examining trial, it was held that a statement of the evidence of such witness on the examining trial, signed by the magistrate, was competent as a test of the magistrate's memory, and to show the imperfection of his recollection.—Lanham v. Commonwealth, 66 Ky. (3 Bush) 528.

[f] (La. 1894) Defendant was charged with burglary alleged to have been committed between 9 and 10 o'clock at night. In support of an alibi, defendant's uncle testified that defendant came to his house, eight miles away, at 10 o'clock that night. Witnesses for the state then testified that the uncle had previously stated that it was 11 o'clock when defendant came to his house. Held, that it was not an abuse of the court's discretion to exclude the testimony of witnesses, who had not previously testified in the case, to rebut such witnesses for the state.—State v. Cady, 46 La. Ann. 1346, 16 South. 195.

[g] (Md. 1885) Where the characters of defendant's witnesses are impeached by proof of contradictory statements, it is a matter within the discretion of the trial court to permit them to again deny the contradictory statements after plaintiff has finally closed.—Stirling v. Stirling, 64 Md. 138, 21 Atl. 273.

[h] (Mass. 1890) A witness having denied on cross-examination that he admitted to V. that he was the father of the child, and V. having afterwards testified to such admission, it is competent to recall the witness, and ask him if he had heard the evidence of V., and if it was true.—Francis v. Rosa, 151 Mass. 532, 24 N. E. 1024.

[i] (Mich. 1871) The statement of a witness, put in writing at a time when he had no reason to misrepresent, is admissible in rebuttal of evidence introduced to impeach him and tending to show that he had made statements inconsistent with his testimony.—Stewart v. People, 23 Mich. 63, 9 Am. Rep. 78.

[j] (Mich. 1881) A witness who has denied making a statement properly identified cannot contradict impeaching testimony on this point by showing that he had no such idea as is expressed by such statement.—Patrick v. Howard, 47 Mich. 40, 10 N. W. 71.

[k] (Mich. 1889) A witness on the trial in the circuit court was asked if he did not give certain testimony on the trial of the case before the justice, and answered in the negative. The adverse party then offered several witnesses, who contradicted this testimony. Held, that it was proper in rebuttal to introduce one of the jurors at the trial before the justice, for the purpose of showing that the witness did not give such testimony before the justice.—Bronson v. Leach, 74 Mich. 713, 42 N. W. 174.

[l] (N. H. 1855) If a witness has made statements conflicting with his testimony, his credit cannot be supported by evidence showing how the truth is as to particulars not material to the case.—Wiggin v. Plumer, 31 N. H. (11 Fost.) 251.

[m] (N. H. 1858) C., a witness, testified that he saw certain notes given up by one G. as the consideration of a deed. To impeach his testimony, A. testified that the witness told her that he did not see the notes given up, and added that G. subsequently told him that he had the notes at home in his desk. Held, that although C. might be recalled to testify whether he made the last statement to A., yet it was not competent to call G. to testify whether he made it to C.; the point being whether C. had given different accounts of the matter.—Gerrish v. Pike, 36 N. H. 510.

[n] (N. Y. 1836) Where the testimony of a witness is impeached by evidence of inconsistent statements made before a magistrate, in a prosecution for a criminal offense against another person, such examination, taken by the magistrate, may be read to invalidate the testimony of the magistrate in the account given by him of the facts testified to by the witness on such examination.—People v. Moore, 15 Wend. 419.

[o] (N. Y. 1889) After a witness has denied making certain statements relative to the matters testified to by him, and evidence is introduced tending to prove that he did make them, it is not error to refuse to allow the witness to repeat his denial.—Bick v. Reese, 51 Hun, 639, 3 N. Y. Supp. 757.

[p] (N. C. 1848) Where it is sought to discredit a witness by showing that he had formerly testified differently from what he had sworn to at the trial, confirmatory evidence of his testimony may be introduced, and the witness himself may be examined to confirm his own testimony.—State v. George, 30 N. C. 324, 49 Am. Dec. 392.

[q] (Tex. 1888) In a trial for murder defendant's wife testified that deceased made indecent proposals to her a short time before the homicide; that she never told any one about it, except her husband and a third person. Held error to exclude the testimony of the third person, introduced to rebut impeaching testimony, that the witness had made such statements to him, and that he advised her not to tell any one else about it then.—Williams v. State, 24 Tex. App. 637, 7 S. W. 333.

[r] (Wash. 1894) On trial for murder, where the defendant attempted to show that one of his own witnesses had made a different statement after the homicide than on the trial, the state may show that such statement was substantially as given in his testimony.—State v. Manville, 8 Wash. 523, 36 Pac. 470.

[s] (Wash. 1894) Where it is sought to impeach a witness by proving that he made statements out of court contrary to those in court it is not proper to allow a witness, in rebuttal, to state that the statements out of court were the same as his testimony in court, without calling for the statements made out of court; the proper method being to prove the statements made out of court, and allow the jury to decide whether they are the same as the testimony given in court.—State v. Murphy, 9 Wash. 204, 37 Pac. 420.

§ 1259. Proof of good character of witness impeached.

[a] Where the credibility of a witness has been impeached by evidence of contradictory statements made out of court, evidence of a good reputation for truth and veracity is admissible to sustain it.

—(Ala. 1895) Holley v. State, 105 Ala. 100, 17 South. 102;

(Ind. 1868) Harris v. State, 30 Ind. 131; (1886) Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Frawley, 110 Ind. 18, 9 N. E. 594; (1893) Carroll County Com'rs v. O'Conner, 137 Ind. 622, 35 N. E. 1006;

(Tex. 1857) Burrell v. State, 18 Tex. 713; (1895) Ledbetter v. Same, (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 479.

[b] Where the veracity of a witness is attacked, and he is sought to be impeached only by proof of contradictory statements made by him on other occasions in respect to the same matter, or by proof of particular facts stated by such witness against himself on his examination, evidence of general good character, or of good character for truth and veracity, in support of the witness, is incompetent.

—(Ky. 1859) Vance v. Vance, 59 Ky. (2 Metc.) 581;

(N. Y. 1859) Frost v. McCargar, 29 Barb. 617;

(S. C. 1860) Chapman v. Cooley, 12 Rich. Law, 654.

[c] (Ala. 1848) Where evidence has been adduced to show that a witness has made statements contradictory to his testimony, evidence may be given of his general character for veracity.—Hadjo v. Gooden, 13 Ala. 718.

[d] (Ala. 1879) The credibility of a witness who has been impeached by evidence of prior contradictory statements may be sustained by proof of his general good character.—Haley v. State, 63 Ala. 83.

[e] (Ala. 1895) Evidence that a witness made conflicting statements as to the persons engaged in the burglary of her premises having been introduced, it was competent to admit evidence of the reputation of the witness for veracity, and to instruct that in weighing her testimony the jury could consider the same.—Towns v. State, 111 Ala. 1, 20 South. 598.

[f] (Ga. 1853) If a witness has been discredited by proof of contradictory statements made by him, it is not competent to support his testimony by proof of general good character for truth and veracity. Evidence as to general character is only admissible when that character has been impeached.—Stamper v. Griffin, 12 Ga. 450.

[g] (Ga. 1879) A witness, impeached by contradictory statements, may be sustained by proof of general good character, the effect of the evidence to be determined by the jury; and where the testimony of a witness in a criminal case was material as to the participation of the defendant in the commission of the crime, and it was sought to impeach him by proof of contradictory statements, it was error to charge that, "if the fact or facts testified to by the witness be disproved to the satisfaction of the jury, then the evidence of general good character should not be treated as re-establishing such disproved facts."—McEwen v. Springfield, 64 Ga. 159.

[h] (Ga. 1884) Where the character of a witness is attacked by a showing of contradictory statements made by him, proof of his general good character for truth, and of his social standing, may be given in rebuttal.—Price v. State, 72 Ga. 441.

[i] (Ind. 1866) A contradiction of a witness to amount to an impeachment, so as to let in evidence of the witness' good character, must be by statements of the witness inconsistent with material evidence given by him in the body of his testimony, and which statements he does not admit that he made.—Paxton v. Dye, 26 Ind. 393.

[j] (Ind. 1868) Evidence in support of the good character of a witness for truth is admissible in rebuttal of evidence, tending to impeach him, that he had previously made statements inconsistent with his testimony.—Clark v. Bond, 29 Ind. 555.

[jj] (Ind. 1894) Where the wife of a defendant in replevin brought cross-suit for certain articles taken under the writ, and the actions were tried together, said wife having testified for herself, plaintiff introduced proof that, when his writ was served, she admitted her husband's ownership of all but one item. She was thereupon recalled, and denied such admissions, and others swore to her repute for veracity. Held, that such evidence of her repute was admissible, since she was not a party to the main suit, and no motion was made to confine it to her cross-suit.—Garr, Scott & Co. v. Shaffer (Sup.) 36 N. E. 208.

[k] (Iowa, 1887) The state introduced testimony showing that defendant and his wife had made statements contradictory to their evidence. The defendant offered to prove their general reputation for truth. Held, that the offer was properly refused.—State v. Archer, 73 Iowa, 320, 35 N. W. 241.

[l] (Mass. 1829) Where a witness, on cross-examination, contradicted a deposition he had previously given in the same case, the party calling him was not permitted to call other witnesses in support of his general character for truth.—Russell v. Coffin, 25 Mass. (8 Pick.) 143.

[m] (N. C. 1874) To rebut evidence, adduced to impeach a witness, that he has made statements contradictory to his testimony, the party by whom he was called may introduce general evidence that he is a person of good character for truthfulness and integrity. So held, although the impeaching counsel declared he did not impeach the witness' character, but only his integrity.—Isler v. Dewey, 71 N. C. 14.

[n] (Ohio, 1876) The impeachment of the credit of a witness, by showing that he has made statements at other times contradictory of his testimony given on the trial, does not lay the foundation for sustaining him by proof of his reputation for truth.—Webb v. State, 29 Ohio St. 351.

[o] (Or. 1874) Testimony going to show that a witness has made at other times statements inconsistent with his testimony is an impeachment of his general character for truth and veracity, and in such a case evidence of general good character for truth and veracity may be offered in rebuttal. Evidence of good character is admissible whenever the character of a witness has been impeached in any of the ways permitted by the statute.—Glaze v. Whitley, 5 Or. 164.

[p] (Or. 1882) A witness was impeached by evidence that he had at other times made statements inconsistent with his testimony as given on the trial. Held, that it was not competent to show in rebuttal that his general reputation for truth and veracity was good.—Sheppard v. Yocum, 10 Or. 402, overruling Glaze v. Whitley (1874) 5 Or. 164.

[q] (S. C. 1839) A witness who has been impeached by evidence of inconsistent statements improperly introduced by the party calling him may call witnesses to prove his good character.—Farr v. Thompson, Cheves, 37.

[r] (Tex. 1883) Proof of the general good character of an impeached witness is admissible when his testimony has been assailed merely by proof of conflicting statements previously made by him.—Dixon v. State, 15 Tex. App. 271.

[s] (Tex. 1889) Where the credibility of a witness for the state has been attacked by showing statements by him inconsistent with his testimony, and the witness is a stranger in the county, the state may show that his general reputation for truth and veracity is good.—Crook v. State, 27 Tex. App. 198, 11 S. W. 444.

[t] (Tex. 1891) Where, on a trial for incest, the testimony of the prosecuting witness as to the paternity of her child is contradicted by evidence of statements made by her to several witnesses, the prosecution may show her good reputation for veracity in the neighborhood where she lives.—Tipton v. State, 30 Tex. App. 530, 17 S. W. 1097.

[u] (Vt. 1848) Proof from other witnesses that the complainant in a prosecution for bastardy has made statements in reference to the paternity of the child inconsistent with her testimony upon the stand entitles her to call witnesses to sustain her general good character for truth.—Sweet v. Sherman, 21 Vt. 23.

§ 1260. Evidence as to statements consistent with testimony.

[a] If a witness is impeached by proof of his having previously made statements inconsistent with his testimony, he may be supported by proving other statements made by him in accordance with it.

[b] (U. S. 1850) After evidence that a witness has previously made a different statement of the transaction sworn to by him, evidence that since that statement he has given the same account as he now testifies to is inadmissible.—Conrad v. Griffey, 52 U. S. (11 How.) 480, 13 L. Ed. 779.

[c] (U. S. 1834) Where it is proved that a witness has at other times made statements different from his testimony, the party offering him cannot be allowed to support his testimony by proving statements at other times corroborative of such testimony.—Ellicott v. Pearl, Fed. Cas. No. 4,386 [1 McLean, 206], affirmed (1836) 35 U. S. (10 Pet.) 412, 9 L. Ed. 475.

[d] (U. S. 1854) A written protest, made by a captain and crew on the morning after a collision, which corresponds with their statements in court, is competent evidence to sustain the credit of the captain, impeached by proof of his having made different statements.—Ward v. The Fashion, Fed. Cas. No. 17,154 [Newb. Adm. 8].

[e] (U. S. 1858) Testimony is not admissible that the witness gave the same account out of court, although it has been proved in order to contradict him that he had given a different account.—United States v. Holmes, Fed. Cas. No. 15,382 [1 Cliff. 98].

[f] (Cal. 1874) As a general rule, a witness, impeached by proof of former statements made by him in conflict with his testimony, cannot be sustained by proof that he made to other persons, before being called as a witness, the same statement detailed in his testimony. To contradict evidence tending to show that the statement made by him under oath is a fabrication of a late date, such statements made by the witness may be admissible, if the statements were made before their effect could be foreseen.—People v. Doyell, 48 Cal. 85.

[g] (Cal. 1891) In an action against an officer for the value of property wrongfully levied on, in which plaintiff claims title by purchase from the execution debtor, evidence that the execution debtor, who was a witness for plaintiff, before the trial made statements consistent with his testimony, is not admissible in rebuttal of proof of inconsistent statements.—Mason v. Vestal, 88 Cal. 396, 26 Pac. 213, 22 Am. St. Rep. 310.

[h] (Colo. 1892) Where the testimony of plaintiff as to the manner of his injury has been discredited by testimony on behalf of defendant that plaintiff, shortly after his injury, made declarations that it had resulted from his own fault, it is not competent, for the purpose of sustaining plaintiff, to prove that at other times thereafter he made statements consistent with his testimony.—Davis v. Graham, 2 Colo. App. 210, 29 Pac. 1007.

[i] (Ind. 1853) On an indictment for receiving stolen goods, a state witness testified that he and others stole the goods, and the defendant, knowing them to be stolen, received them. Defendant proved by other witnesses that such state witness had stated out of court that he had made the charge against defendant with a hope of pardon, and that defendant had nothing to do with the matter. The state, to sustain its witness, offered a witness to prove that he had testified before the grand jury to the same statement that he had sworn at the trial. Held, that such evidence was properly admitted, as it was consistent with his testimony on the trial, admitted to repel the force of the evidence given to impeach his character for veracity.—Perkins v. State, 4 Ind. 222.

[j] (Ind. 1876) The rule that a witness, impeached by proof of his declarations out of court inconsistent with his testimony, may be corroborated by proving other declarations in harmony with it, is not limited to such declarations as were made before the impeaching declarations.—Brookbank v. State, 55 Ind. 169.

[k] (Ind. 1889) In an action for personal injuries, defendant having shown that plaintiff had made statements contrary to his testimony, which statements showed that the accident was due to his own carelessness, plaintiff cannot show that he had made other statements consistent with his testimony.—Logansport & P. G. Turnpike Co. v. Heil, 118 Ind. 135, 20 N. E. 703.

[l] (Ind. 1893) Where a witness has been impeached by proof of contradictory statements out of court, it is proper rebuttal for the party calling the witness to support him by proving that he had on other occasions stated the facts to be as he represented them in his testimony, and such corroborative statements may be shown by the testimony of the impeached witness.—Hobbs v. State, 133 Ind. 404, 32 N. E. 1019, 18 L. R. A. 774.

[m] (Iowa, 1888) A witness for the state, having testified to statements of defendant of a material character, the defense introduced evidence that the witness had denied defendant's making such statements. Held, that the state could not show in rebuttal, by witness' wife, that he told her, shortly after or before the crime, that defendant had made the statements.—State v. Porter, 74 Iowa, 623, 38 N. W. 514.

[n] (Kan. 1878) When a witness is assailed on the ground of a prior different narration by him, confirmatory statements made by him may be admitted, if clearly shown to have been made previous to such contradictory narration.—State v. Petty, 21 Kan. 54.

[nn] (La. 1887) An attack by the defense on the veracity or credibility of a state witness may be legally met in rebuttal by the state by testimony to sustain the assailed witness. If the attempt is to show that the witness had previously made statements or declarations contradictory to his testimony on the trial, it is competent for the state to show that, soon after the occurrences which he relates, he had made to persons other than the impeaching witness declarations in harmony with his testimony on the trial, although the particulars of his statements thus made are not admissible.—State v. Waggoner, 39 La. Ann. 919, 3 South. 119.

[o] (Md. 1803) The declarations and showings of the patentee of a tract of land as to the beginning of it, as located by the party claiming under him, are not legal evidence for the purpose of impeaching the credibility of testimony proving that the patentee had, at a different time, made different declarations and showed a different place, as no one can give evidence for himself.—Tolley's Lessee v. Ford, 1 Har. & J. 413.

[oo] (Mass. 1858) A witness, who has been impeached by evidence that he previously testified differently, cannot be corroborated by evidence that he had made still earlier statements, not under oath nor in the prisoner's presence, in accordance with his present testimony.—Commonwealth v. Jenkins, 76 Mass. (10 Gray) 485.

[p] (Mich. 1889) Evidence that plaintiff, soon after the injury, stated his case to an attorney substantially as given on the trial is not admissible to contradict defendants' witness, who said plaintiff told him he did not know how he was injured.—Kinney v. Folkerts, 78 Mich. 687, 44 N. W. 152.

[pp] (Mo. 1890) The uncertified minutes of the testimony of a witness taken down by the clerk of the grand jury, as provided by Rev. St. § 4075, who is not under oath to fully and correctly take down the evidence, are inadmissible on the trial in corroboration of the witness, whose testimony has been impeached by evidence of contradictory statements made before the trial.—State v. Whelehon, 102 Mo. 17, 14 S. W. 730, following State v. Thomas (1889) 99 Mo. 235, 12 S. W. 643.

[q] (Mo. 1896) Where the motives of defendant's mother-in-law, testifying in defendant's behalf, are not sought to be impugned, her testimony at the coroner's inquest is not admissible to corroborate her testimony, when attacked by evidence of contradictory statements on her part.—State v. Taylor, 134 Mo. 109, 35 S. W. 92.

[qq] (N. H. 1833) Where it was contended that the evidence of a witness was a new fabrication, and that he had previously given another account of the transaction, evidence that he had given the same account of the transaction immediately after it had happened was held admissible.—French v. Merrill, 6 N. H. 465.

[r] (N. H. 1860) Where a witness has been impeached by showing that he has made statements to several persons contradictory to those made on the stand, it is not competent to introduce the statements of the witness made to other persons, similar to those made upon the stand, for the purpose of sustaining him, even where such statements were made immediately after the transaction occurred which had been stated on the stand, unless it shall distinctly appear that there has been some change in the relation of the witness to the party or cause since such early statements were made.—Reed v. Spaulding, 42 N. H. 114.

[rr] (N. H. 1866) In an action against a town for injuries received, owing to an obstruction in the highway, the defendant put in evidence that the plaintiff, about the time of the accident, gave an account of it which contained no mention of the obstruction to which he testified. Held, that the plaintiff could not introduce evidence of other statements made by him about the same time in which he did speak of the obstruction.—Judd v. Brentwood, 46 N. H. 430.

[s] (N. Y. 1836) Where the testimony of a witness is impeached by evidence as to statements, previously made, inconsistent and different from his testimony, his examination taken by a magistrate on the institution of a prosecution for a criminal offense against another person, in which the statements were made, may be read in support of his testimony.—People v. Moore, 15 Wend. 419.

[ss] (N. Y. 1838) The examination of a witness, taken on the arrest of a criminal, is admissible in support of his testimony, where the witness is sought to be impeached on the ground of inconsistent relations of the matter in question.—People v. Rector, 19 Wend. 569.

[t] (N. Y. 1875) Statements made by a witness corroborating his evidence on the trial, made soon after the transaction to which it relates, or when he was not under the influence of any motive to relate the transaction untruthfully, are competent, when it is attempted to be shown that he had given a different relation of the occurrence, or that he testified under the influence of a motive calculated to induce him to testify falsely.—Hotchkiss v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 5 Hun, 90.

[tt] (Pa. 1847) If a witness contradicts statements made in his deposition, before taken in the case, his previous declarations may be proved to corroborate his first statements.—McKee v. Jones, 6 Pa. (6 Barr) 425.

[u] (S. C. 1892) On a murder trial, where a witness has been cross-examined as to a statement made by him, which he had not made at the inquest, it is competent in reply for him to refer to an affidavit made ex parte about the time defendant applied for bail, for the purpose of showing that his statements at all times had been consistent, although he might not at the inquest have remembered and stated the circumstances of the affair as fully as he did afterwards.—State v. Turner, 36 S. C. 534, 15

S. E. 602, distinguishing Davis v. Kirksey (1845) 2 Rich. Law, 176.

[uu] (Tenn. 1860) Evidence is not admissible of consistent statements for the purpose of giving support to the credit of a witness made after the contradictory representations by which it is sought to impeach him.—Queener v. Morrow, 41 Tenn. (1 Cold.) 123.

[vv] (Tenn. 1880) Where an attempt is made to injure the credit of a witness by proof of contradictory statements, evidence is admissible to show that he made the same statement as that testified to at a time when the facts were recent, and when no motive existed for misrepresentation.—Hayes v. Cheatham, 74 Tenn. (6 Lea) 1.

[ww] (Tex. 1888) Where, on cross-examination of plaintiff, defendants sought to leave the impression that plaintiff testified differently in a deposition taken by defendants to be used in the case, but not offered in evidence, plaintiff may read such deposition in rebuttal.—Schmick v. Noel, 72 Tex. 1, 8 S. W. 83.

[xx] (Tex. 1892) Where defendant, on a trial for robbery, in order to impeach the prosecuting witness, has introduced testimony that he had stated to others that he did not know who had robbed him, a witness for the state may testify that the prosecuting witness stated to him in defendant's presence that he did not know who had robbed him, but when defendant had gone stated that he had been done up by defendant.—Bell v. State (Cr. App.) 20 S. W. 362.

[yy] (Tex. 1893) Where a witness was impeached by proof of statements made out of court contradictory to his testimony on the trial, it is proper to prove by a third person that the witness had made the same statements as testified to on the night following the crime under investigation.—Goode v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 505, 24 S. W. 102.

[zz] (Tex. 1895) Proof that the prosecutrix told her mother the same story testified to by her on the day of the assault, and prior to alleged contradictory statements shown by the defense, is admissible to sustain her testimony.—Sentell v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 260, 30 S. W. 226.

[aaa] (Tex. 1895) The testimony of deceased, given at the preliminary trial, that defendant was his assailant, having been impeached by evidence that on one occasion deceased expressed doubts on the question, the state could properly introduce evidence of declarations as to defendant's guilt, made by deceased to his wife, to show that deceased always declared that defendant was his assailant.—Easterwood v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 400, 31 S. W. 294.

[bbb] (Tex. 1895) Where, on a prosecution for attempt to rape, the state attempted to impeach the alleged injured person, who testified for the defense, by showing declarations made by her after the alleged offense, it was error not to admit her testimony given on the preliminary examination in rebuttal.—Bozeman v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 503, 31 S. W. 389.

[ccc] (Tex. 1895) On a prosecution for murder, where there is evidence that a fight took place when the killing was done, in which the murderer would probably have been bruised, and defendant has testified that bruises seen on his face the day after the homicide were caused by being thrown from a horse, and a witness in rebuttal has testified that the defendant told him they were caused by being thrown from a mule, it is error to exclude evidence of another witness that defendant told him that the bruises were caused by his being thrown from a horse.—Campbell v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 160, 32 S. W. 774.

[ddd] (Tex. 1895) Where prosecutor swore that defendant was the person who robbed him, and defendant introduced evidence to show that he had made contradictory statements, and also that he had sued defendant for damages growing out of the robbery, it was proper for the state to support him by proof that, soon after the robbery he made statements similar to those made by him at the trial.—Kirk v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 224, 32 S. W. 1045.

[eee] (Tex. 1896) In a murder case, where there was evidence that a witness for the state had made statements out of court contrary to his testimony, it was proper to admit, in rebuttal, extracts from his testimony at the inquest which corresponded with his testimony on the trial.—Sims v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 154, 36 S. W. 256.

§ 1261. Explanation of inconsistency.

[a] (Ala. 1847) Where it is sought to contradict the testimony given by a witness in the taking of his deposition by proving counter declarations by him, the witness must have the opportunity of explaining.—Howell v. Reynolds, 12 Ala. 128.

[b] (Ala. 1851) A witness cannot be impeached by proof of contradictory statements previously made by him, whether oral or written, without first giving him an opportunity to explain such previous statements.—Powell v. State, 19 Ala. 577.

[c] (Ala. 1853) If a witness has been cross-examined respecting his former statements, with a view of impeaching him, he may be asked on re-examination in chief his motive in making those statements.—Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44.

[d] (Ala. 1893) Where a witness for defendant admits that he has said that he knew nothing of the difficulty out of which the killing arose, and as to which he is testifying, his response, in answer to a query as to his motive in so admitting, that "I did not want to talk about it at all," should be admitted to counteract the effect of the admission.—Johnson v. State, 102 Ala. 1, 16 South. 99.

[e] (Ala. 1893) Where, on cross-examination, a witness states that he made a certain statement before the justice, which tended to contradict his direct testimony, it is proper to allow him to explain the same.—Thomas v. State, 103 Ala. 18, 16 South. 4.

[f] (Ala. 1893) On a trial for seduction, to explain discrepancies between the testimony of the prosecutrix on such trial and that previously given by her before a justice she may testify that she was so scared and embarrassed before the justice that she did not remember the facts.—Anderson v. State, 104 Ala. 83, 16 South. 108.

[g] (Cal. 1893) On a prosecution for rape on a child 11 years old, where defendant has read her testimony given before the committing magistrate to contradict her evidence at the trial, she may be recalled to explain the discrepancies.—People v. Wessel, 98 Cal. 352, 33 Pac. 216.

[h] (Ga. 1859) A deposition is not to be impeached by proof of other statements, which the witness is not allowed to explain, not even if those statements be that the deposition is not true.—Mulligan v. Bailey, 28 Ga. 507.

[i] (Ga. 1884) Where a record of a homestead was introduced to impeach a witness by showing the omission from the schedule of the debt in suit, it was admissible for him to explain such omission.—Printup v. James, 73 Ga. 583.

[j] (Idaho, 1895) Where a letter written by a witness is introduced to discredit him, he is entitled to explain it.—Douglas v. Douglas, 4 Idaho, 293, 38 Pac. 934.

[k] (Ill. 1886) Where, on cross-examination, for the purpose of rebuttal and discrediting a witness, he is asked if he did not give certain different testimony on a former examination, he must answer categorically. If he wishes to explain what he did say, or any other matter touching his former testimony, he may be allowed to do so on the redirect examination.—Bressler v. People, 117 Ill. 422, 8 N. E. 62.

[l] (Ind. 1885) On examination before a justice of the peace, the prosecutrix testified that she was raped in a certain field, and in the circuit court she stated that it was in a barn, held, that evidence was admissible to show the motive for changing the place of the crime.—Bessette v. State, 101 Ind. 85.

[m] (Md. 1889) A witness who has made inconsistent statements on direct and cross-examination may be asked on redirect, by a leading question pointing out the inconsistency, to explain, such matter being discretionary with the trial court.—Stoner v. Devilbiss, 70 Md. 144, 16 Atl. 440.

[n] (Mich. 1885) Where a plaintiff, on appeal from a justice's judgment, swears that a much larger balance is due him than was claimed before the justice, which he explains by saying that he did not have his books before him on the former trial, this discrepancy should be considered by the jury in weighing his testimony.—Sinclair v. Hathaway, 57 Mich. 60, 23 N. W. 459, 58 Am. Rep. 327.

[o] (Mich. 1889) Every facility should be given a witness to explain alleged discrepancies in his testimony on former occasions.—Stoudt v. Shepherd, 73 Mich. 588, 41 N. W. 696.

[p] (Mich. 1893) Prosecutrix, in a trial for rape, and another witness, both of whom were members of a religious sect of which respondent was the leader, having disclosed on cross-examination certain statements relative to respondent's conduct inconsistent with their testimony, may be re-examined to show that they had been made while witnesses were under the influence of respondent, submission to whose desires they had been taught involved no wrong.—People v. Mills, 94 Mich. 630, 54 N. W. 488.

[q] (Mich. 1894) Where a defendant in an action alleges that his deed was delivered on a certain day, he may, when such statement is introduced to contradict him in a subsequent action, explain what he understood the term "delivery" to mean.—Jourdan v. Patterson, 102 Mich. 602, 61 N. W. 64.

[r] (Minn. 1869) Affidavits made by a witness some years previous, in another proceeding, were offered for purpose of impeachment. Held, that he might be allowed to explain the circumstances under which they were made.—Yale v. Edgerton, 14 Minn. 194 (Gil. 144).

[s] (Mo. 1896) A witness sought to be impeached by an affidavit previously made may explain an alleged alteration of it.—Sullivan v. Jefferson Ave. Ry. Co., 133 Mo. 1, 34 S. W. 566, 32 L. R. A. 167.

[ss] (Mont. 1896) Where, for the purpose of impeaching a witness, letters purporting to be written by him are introduced, it is both competent and material that he should be allowed to explain the circumstances under which and for what purpose the letters were written.—Kennelly v. Savage, 18 Mont. 119, 44 Pac. 400.

[t] (N. Y. 1860) Every witness, a party as well as any other, must be allowed to show that he was mistaken in previous admissions or statements which are used to discredit him.—Van Ness v. Bush, 14 Abb. Prac. 33, 22 How. Prac. 481.

[tt] (N. Y. 1872) Where a party proposes to impeach a witness by proving inconsistent written statements, it is not the right of such witness to explain the contents of such paper until it has been put in evidence.—Romertze v. East River Nat. Bank, 49 N. Y. 577, reversing (1869) 32 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sweeny) 82.

[u] (N. Y. 1892) Where there is a contradiction between an allegation in the verified answer and defendant's testimony, defendant, for the purpose of explaining the contradiction, may show that he was advised by his attorney that the legal effect of the allegation and of the testimony was the same.—Ferris v. Hard, 135 N. Y. 354, 32 N. E. 129.

[uu] (N. C. 1888) Defendant, a sheriff, levied on some property, but, instead of selling it, turned it over to a bank. The execution debtor testified that the property was his. Defendant introduced a bill of sale, absolute in form, to the bank, which the execution debtor admitted he had executed. Plaintiff asked witness "what was the purpose and object of giving said bill of sale." Held, that the witness had a right to explain the apparent contradiction between his statement and the bill of sale.—Peck v. Manning, 99 N. C. 157, 5 S. E. 743.

[v] (N. C. 1888) A witness who testifies that a stock of goods is worth a certain amount, larger than his estimate at a former trial, may explain the discrepancy by stating that what he heard the other witnesses testify at the former trial had caused him to change his mind as to the value of the goods.—Phifer v. Erwin, 100 N. C. 59, 6 S. E. 672.

[vv] (Tenn. 1891) A witness who, on cross-examination, admits having made statements impeaching her direct testimony, may explain why, how, and under what circumstances she made them.—Graham v. McReynolds, 90 Tenn. (6 Pickle) 673, 18 S. W. 272.

[w] (Tex. 1882) The fact that a witness' deposition was not read over to him by the examining court may be elicited to account for discrepancies between it and his testimony at the final trial of the accused.—Grosse v. State, 11 Tex. App. 364.

[ww] (Tex. 1886) Upon trial for murder, the state attempted to discredit the testimony of witnesses for the defense as to certain facts, by showing that, upon habeas corpus proceedings, these witnesses, though examined, had been silent concerning such facts. Held, that it was competent for the defense to introduce the evidence of the attorney of the accused at that trial, to show that, because of local prejudice at the time, the attorney did not expect to obtain bail, and did not undertake to develop the evidence in accused's behalf.—Kunde v. State, 22 Tex. App. 65, 3 S. W. 825.

[x] (Tex. 1891) Where plaintiff's cashier testified that plaintiff had not disposed of certain collaterals held by it to secure a note against defendant, in violation of an agreement with him, and on cross-examination testified to a sworn statement by him, in a garnishment suit against the investment company, that at the time alleged it had none of its property or effects, on re-examination plaintiff could explain the reason for making such statement.—Smith v. Traders' Nat. Bank, 82 Tex. 368, 17 S. W. 779.

[xx] (Tex. 1892) On the second trial of a criminal case, where the testimony of a witness is sought to be impeached by contradictory statements, the judge who tried the case may testify that the witness, from her want of familiarity with the English language, sometimes found it difficult to understand the question asked.—Gibbs v. State (Cr. App.) 20 S. W. 919.

[y] (Vt. 1886) It is not error to permit a witness to explain why he testified differently at the court of inquiry from his testimony on the trial.—State v. Lockwood, 58 Vt. 378, 3 Atl. 539.

[yy] (Vt. 1892) On a trial for rape, the person who was in the company of prosecutrix just before the alleged commission of the offense identified defendant as one of those who made the assault, and testified that on the following morning he saw defendant and one of the others, and then recognized them as two of the assailants. Some one then asked him if he recognized any of the assaulting party among the persons present, to which he replied, "No." Held that, where defendant claimed that such statement tended to discredit witness' testimony, it was proper to permit him to explain that he made it because he was afraid of putting defendant on his guard, and enabling him to escape.—State v. Bedard, 65 Vt. 278, 26 Atl. 719.

[z] (Vt. 1892) Prosecutrix's escort having on the next morning after the assault said that one of defendants was not among the assailants, it was permissible for him to state that he said so that he might not frighten him, and cause him to flee, and to show that he subsequently pointed such defendant out to the officers.—State v. Wilkins, 66 Vt. 1, 28 Atl. 323.

[zz] (Wis. 1895) In an action for personal injuries received while alighting from a street-car, plaintiff claimed that the car started before she had time to alight, and a witness for defendant testified that he saw the car coming down the street and thought it was coming too fast, and that it slowed up, and plaintiff got off before it stopped. Held, that it was proper to permit the witness to testify on cross-examination that he previously stated to a certain person that he considered it the most careless piece of business he ever saw, and to explain that he meant the speed of the car, since it was proper to ask him on cross-examination if he had not made a statement apparently in contradiction with his testimony, as bearing on his credibility as a witness.—Hardy v. Milwaukee St. Ry. Co., 89 Wis. 183, 61 N. W. 771.

§ 1262. —— Fear and intimidation.

[a] (Ala. 1860) It was proved on cross-examination that the witness had previously testified differently. He was thereupon allowed to state that on the previous occasion a witness on the other side had intimidated him.—Lewis v. State, 35 Ala. 380.

[b] (Ga. 1892) Since, under Code, § 4303, duress or fear, produced by threats or menaces, to excuse a crime, must be such as to put life or member in danger, or to induce a reasonable belief that there is such danger, fear of death or dismemberment at some future time, in the absence of all danger at the time of testifying, will not excuse the commission of perjury; but it may afford a moral explanation of perjury, sufficient to account to the jury for false testimony, and, where the explanation is satisfactory to them, the witness may be believed, with or without corroborating circumstances or supporting evidence, though he admits the falsehood of the testimony formerly given, and now deposes directly to the contrary of that testimony.—Burns v. State, 89 Ga. 527, 15 S. E. 748.

[c] (Ky. 1895) Though statements by co-conspirators after the crime are inadmissible against each other, their trials being separate, yet, where a witness for the state is impeached by showing that he had made a previous affidavit contrary to his testimony, it is not error to permit him, in explanation, to state that the affidavit was made on account of a threat from an alleged co-conspirator to kill him if he testified for the state.—Armstrong v. Commonwealth, 29 S. W. 342.

[d] (N. Y. 1890) A witness for the prosecution denied at the inquest knowledge of facts subsequently testified to by him. Another witness withheld a portion of his testimony when examined before the coroner. Both avowed fright at being brought into the affair as the explanation of their conduct, and neither were otherwise impeached. Held, that it was for the jury to pass upon their credibility.—People v. Chapleau, 121 N. Y. 266, 24 N. E. 469.

[e] (Tex. 1895) Where a witness, at the time of the robbery, identified defendants, but failed thereafter, when he had an opportunity to do so, evidence that his reason for not identifying them was fear of his personal safety is admissible to explain conduct.—Thompson v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 511, 34 S. W. 629.

§ 1263. Right to show whole statement.

Portion of inconsistent writing or testimony, see ante, § 1257.

[a] (Ala. 1883) A witness for the prosecution having been cross-examined as to a written statement made by him, such statement may be read to the jury in rebuttal in order to compare the statement with his testimony.—Wills v. State, 74 Ala. 21.

[b] (Ga. 1889) A witness who is interrogated as to a conversation with a view to impeaching him may give the whole conversation so far as it is pertinent.—Savannah, F. & W. Ry. Co. v. Holland, 9 S. E. 1040.

[c] (Ga. 1889) When, on cross-examination, a witness is interrogated as to a conversation with a view to laying the foundation for impeaching him, he has a right to give the whole conversation so far as it is pertinent.—Savannah, F. & W. Ry. Co. v. Holland, 82 Ga. 257, 10 S. E. 200, 14 Am. St. Rep. 158.

[d] (Me. 1880) When, for the purpose of contradicting a witness, one party offers extracts from the testimony of such witness at a former trial, the other party is entitled to put in so much of the remainder as is relevant, and for that purpose may call the stenographer and have him read his original minutes.—Noyes v. Gilman, 71 Me. 394.

[e] (N. H. 1885) Where a party reads portions of a witness' deposition to the jury for the purpose of contradicting his testimony on the stand, the other party may read other portions of it relating to the same subjects.—Whitman v. Morey, 63 N. H. 448, 2 Atl. 899.

[f] (Tex. 1896) Where it is attempted to lay a predicate for the impeachment of a witness by showing that she had made a statement previous to the trial inconsistent with her testimony on the trial, she may, in explanation, state all of the conversation in which the alleged contradictory statement was made.—Ball v. State (Cr. App.) 36 S. W. 448.

§ 1264. Right of impeached witness to give version of statement.

[a] (Ala. 1879) Where a witness denies, on cross-examination, that he made a certain statement, which varied from his testimony, at a certain time and place, to a given person, he may, in rebuttal, testify as to the statement he did make on that occasion.—Haley v. State, 63 Ala. 83.

[b] (Ala. 1881) A witness sought to be impeached by his prior statements at a designated time and place, and who denies making them in the words or form suggested, has the right, either on direct or cross-examination, to state what he did say on the occasion in question.—Henderson v. State, 70 Ala. 29.

[c] (Conn. 1880) A witness, having testified to certain facts, was asked on cross-examination if he had not made a certain different statement to A., to which he replied that he had not. A. then testified otherwise. The former witness was recalled, and stated what he did say. Held, that he could be interrogated by the party calling him as to the whole conversation upon the subject.—Appeal of Harrison, 48 Conn. 202.

[d] (Iowa, 1892) Where a party has introduced evidence to contradict the testimony of an adverse witness given on cross-examination, denying that he had made certain statements out of court, the other party may recall such witness to give his version of the conversation in which such statements were alleged to have been made.—Hoover v. Cary, 86 Iowa, 494, 53 N. W. 415.

[e] (Iowa, 1893) Where plaintiff's witness was asked on cross-examination if she did not make a certain statement before the grand jury, and she answered, "I think I will say that I did not," and the testimony of grand jurors called by defendant tended to show that she made the statement, the court properly allowed witness thereafter to explain what she did say before the grand jury.—McMurrin v. Rigby, 87 Iowa, 18, 53 N. W. 1079.

[f] (N. H. 1843) When a credit of a witness has been impeached by proof that in a certain conversation he has made statements inconsistent with the truth of his testimony, he may, on his re-examination, be asked, and may state, what that conversation was to which the impeaching witness referred.—State v. Winkley, 14 N. H. 480.

9. EFFECT OF IMPEACHMENT BY INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS.

IN GENERAL, § 1265.
EFFECT OF PREVIOUS STATEMENT AS AFFIRMATIVE EVIDENCE, § 1266.

Effect of mistake, or inaccurate or false testimony in general, see ante, §§ 1079–1083.

§ 1265. In general.

[a, b] (U. S. 1846) Loose declarations or admissions extracted from or freely made by portions of a crew directly after a wreck from collision will have but slight weight in invalidating their deliberate testimony to the facts.—The New Jersey, Fed. Cas. No. 10,161 [Olcott, 415].

[c] (U. S. 1854) The testimony of a witness should not be rejected because, in a hurried conversation immediately after the collision, he gave a different statement as to a particular fact from that positively sworn to in court.—Ward v. The Fashion, Fed. Cas. No. 17,154 [Newb. Adm. 8, 6 McLean, 152].

[d] (U. S. 1856) A witness supported by his previous deposition, though not on file, will be believed, rather than one whose previous deposition does not support his testimony.—Hall v. The Buffalo, Fed. Cas. No. 5,927 [Newb. Adm. 115].

[e] (U. S. 1859) Where the relation in which a witness stands to the cause makes it reasonable to suppose that he must labor under a strong bias to testify in favor of one of the parties, inconsistencies in his testimony may be taken into consideration to dispute his entire testimony as unworthy of credit, especially where it is not corroborated.—Sanders v. Parsons, Fed. Cas. No. 12,296.

[f] (U. S. 1863) But little credence can be given to the testimony of a sailor who contradicts statements deliberately made by him, in writing, immediately after the collision.—The Douglass, Fed. Cas. No. 4,031 [1 Brown, Adm. 105].

[g] (U. S. 1867) Very little reliance should be placed upon the testimony of a witness who has contradicted himself on cross-examination, whether the discrepancies arose from forgetfulness, disingenuousness or dullness.—The Carroll, Fed. Cas. No. 2,451 [1 Ben. 286].

[h] (U. S. 1868) Where defendant swears to a certain statement of facts in his answer, and swears in his deposition to a statement of facts which contradicts his answer, the statement of facts which bears most strongly against defendant will be considered as true.—Farrell v. Campbell, Fed. Cas. No. 4,681 [3 Ben. 8].

[i] (U. S. 1890) The question whether a witness is impeached or not is for the jury, and, though he swore differently on a former trial, if this was done under duress of bodily harm, it may not affect his credibility at the present trial.—United States v. Hall (D. C.) 44 Fed. 864, 10 L. R. A. 324.

[j] (Ark. 1848) Where a witness has made a different statement from the one made by him on trial, he is not thereby discredited, unless the discrepancy is willful.—Yoes v. State, 9 Ark. (4 Eng.) 42.

[k] (Ark. 1854) When the deposition of a witness, made nine years after the transaction deposed to, is inconsistent with his own letters, referring to the same transaction, written at the time, the jury is warranted in disregarding it entirely.—State Bank v. McGuire, 14 Ark. 530.

[l] (Ga. 1894) Where a witness testifying at different times and in different trials of the same case contradicts himself, the jury should not be instructed not to consider contradictions on immaterial matters, though it would be correct to instruct that for these matters alone the witness could not be discredited.—Evans v. State, 95 Ga. 468, 22 S. E. 298.

[ll] (Ill. 1862) Inconsistency in the statements of a witness may justify the jury in discrediting him, but if he is corroborated his testimony ought not to be rejected.—Hansell v. Erickson, 28 Ill. (18 Peck) 257.

[m] (Ill. 1891) Where testimony that a witness has made statements out of court contrary to what he has testified at the trial is admitted to impeach him, the jury should be told to consider it in determining what credit and force shall be given him; but they should not be instructed that they can rightfully disregard his entire testimony for that reason unless corroborated.—Kerr v. Hodge, 39 Ill. App. 546.

[n] (Ill. 1895) An instruction that, if plaintiff has on another occasion willfully sworn that he was the partner of defendant during the time for which he now seeks to recover wages as a servant, the jury are at liberty to disregard his testimony, is erroneous, as it omits the qualifications as to corroboration.—Schanzenbach v. Brough, 58 Ill. App. 526.

[o] (Iowa, 1894) It is not error to charge that if any witness has at another time and place made statements, material to the issues, at variance with his testimony, the jury may disregard all his testimony, except in so far as he is corroborated by other credible evidence.—Blotcky v. Caplan, 91 Iowa, 352, 59 N. W. 204.

[p] (Mass. 1890) In a proceeding in bastardy, V. having testified that A., a witness, had admitted to him that he was the father of the child, which admission A. denied, the instruction that A.'s declarations, if made as V. said, could be used to the extent of entirely destroying his evidence, but no further, is correct.—Francis v. Ross, 151 Mass. 532, 24 N. E. 1024.

[q] (Mass. 1896) Where a witness has testified to a material fact, and acts or declarations of hers are shown, inconsistent with her testimony, it is not error to charge that such acts or declarations, if true, would tend to show what degree of credit should be given to her testimony, and would tend to weaken it.—Handy v. Canning, 166 Mass. 107, 44 N. E. 118.

[qq] (Mich. 1895) A party is not conclusively bound by his testimony on a former trial, but his change of testimony is to be considered by the jury as affecting his credibility.—Pelton v. Schmidt, 104 Mich. 345, 62 N. W. 552, 53 Am. St. Rep. 462.

[r] (Mo. 1884) In an action against a railroad company for killing stock, the fact that a witness testifies that they were worth $140, but admits on cross-examination that he appraised them at $100, when he supposed the amount would be paid without litigation, goes to his credibility, and does not require the exclusion of his testimony.—Maberry v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 83 Mo. 664.

[rr] (Mo. 1893) Where the evidence is conflicting, and the testimony of one witness is essentially different in some respects from that given by him in a deposition previously taken, it is not error to charge that if the jury believed any witness had willfully sworn falsely as to any material fact in the case they may disregard the whole or any part of his testimony.—Church v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 119 Mo. 203, 23 S. W. 1056.

[s] (Mo. 1894) Where evidence of contradictory statements is received for the purpose of impeaching a witness, an instruction directing the jury that they are at liberty to consider the probability or improbability of the testimony of the impeached witness is not erroneous.—State v. Baldwin, 56 Mo. App. 423.

[ss] (N. Y. 1864) When it appears that a witness has sworn differently upon the same point on a former occasion, his testimony is not to be wholly excluded from consideration; but it should remain in the case to be considered in connection with the other evidence under such prudential instructions as may be given by the court.—Dunn v. People, 29 N. Y. 523, 86 Am. Dec. 319.

[t] (N. Y. 1872) When it appears upon a trial that a witness then examined has sworn differently upon the same point on a former occasion, he is not to be pronounced by the judge to be incompetent, and his testimony excluded from consideration by the jury; but his testimony should be submitted to the jury to be considered by them, in connection with the other evidence, under proper instructions.—Warren v. Haight, 62 Barb. 490.

[tt] (N. Y. 1882) A verdict supported only by the discredited testimony of one witness, he having made contradictory statements under oath as to the same material facts, should not be permitted to stand.—Molloy v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 10 Daly, 453.

[ttt] (N. Y. 1885) Where the testimony of a plaintiff in his own behalf is contradicted, not only by other witnesses, but also by his own writings, made long before the litigation began, and unexplained by him, his testimony should be disregarded; and a judgment in his favor supported only by such testimony must be reversed.—O'Brien v. McManus, 13 Daly, 37.

[u] (N. Y. 1887) The evidence of a witness for the state will not be excluded from the jury because he had sworn falsely as to the matter in question before a committee of the senate.—People v. Sharp, 45 Hun, 460.

[uu] (N. Y. 1888) Where a party gives testimony directly contradicting that given by her in a former action, showing that either in one or the other she testified falsely, her testimony should be carefully scrutinized, and when not satisfactorily corroborated should be disregarded.—Dickinson v. Ensign, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 65.

[v] (N. Y. 1891) Plaintiff testified that defendant agreed to pay him $9,000 if he would agree to a postponement of his appeal from a judgment in proceedings taken by defendant to acquire the right to build a railway in a street in front of plaintiff's premises, but afterwards admitted that for the $9,000 defendant should acquire plaintiff's easement in the street. Held, the evidence of plaintiff being contradictory, and unsupported except by that of his counsel, that a finding of the jury that the $9,000 was to be paid for the postponement of the appeal only was erroneous, and should have been set aside.—Nutting v. Kings County El. R. Co., 62 Hun, 621, 16 N. Y. Supp. 673.

[vv] (N. Y. 1892) The recollection of a train dispatcher that, some years previously, plaintiff, after the date of the alleged injury for which his action is brought, applied for easier work, on the ground that he had been injured at a place and in a manner different from that alleged, together with a denial thereof by plaintiff, does not compel the jury to discredit plaintiff's story.—Van Tassel v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (Com. Pl.) 1 Misc. Rep. 299, 20 N. Y. Supp. 708, judgment affirmed (1894) 142 N. Y. 634, 37 N. E. 566.

[w] (N. Y. 1895) A witness is not discredited, as of course, by the fact that he has contradicted himself on a point immaterial to the issue.—Kopetzky v. Metropolitan El. Ry. Co. (Com. Pl.) 14 Misc. Rep. 311, 35 N. Y. Supp. 766.

[ww] (Ohio, 1847) Where the different statements of a witness in chancery are inconsistent with each other, or he is directly contradicted in regard to material facts, his whole testimony will be disregarded.—Hargraves v. Miller's Adm'x, 16 Ohio, 338.

[x] (Pa. 1845) It is a rule of reason, and, therefore, of law, that where a witness varies in his statement of the same transaction, in material particulars, at different periods, his testimony is to be greatly doubted.—Commonwealth v. Sallager, 4 Pa. Law J. 512.

[xx] (Pa. 1849) Contradictory statements on different examinations go only to the credibility of the witness, and must be referred to the jury.—Miller v. Stem, 12 Pa. (2 Jones) 383.

[y] (Tex. 1881) Upon a trial for theft, the only evidence tending to criminate the accused was the testimony of a witness for the state, who, before the trial, had assured accused and his counsel that he knew nothing of the case and nothing against accused. Held, that a new trial should be granted.—Adams v. State, 10 Tex. App. 677.

[yy] (Tex. 1895) Where a witness charged with a murder twice denied any knowledge, her evidence incriminating accused, delivered under threats and the influence of intoxicants, was insufficient for conviction.—Dodson v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 566, 35 S. W. 151.

[z] (Va. 1891) The credibility of a witness, on whose testimony a conviction for murder rests, and who admitted having made different statements, is a matter for the determination of the jury.—Lyles v. Commonwealth, 88 Va. 396, 13 S. E. 802.

[zz] (Wis. 1879) The credibility of a witness is a question for the jury, under proper instructions and cautions from the court, though he may have made contradictory statements under oath.—Mack v. State, 48 Wis. 271, 4 N. W. 449.

§ 1266. Effect of previous statement as affirmative evidence.

[a] Inconsistent statements by which a witness is sought to be impeached cannot be considered for the purpose of establishing the truth of such statements as substantive testimony in the case.

[b] (U. S. 1893) Where witnesses deny that they made statements that attempts had been made to bribe them, evidence to contradict such denials simply goes to the credibility of the witnesses, and is incompetent as substantive evidence tending to show the fact of such bribery.—Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Rambo, 59 Fed. 75, 8 C. C. A. 6, 16 U. S. App. 277.

[c] (U. S. 1866) Evidence of conversations with the crew of the injured vessel, where inconsistent with their cotemporary act, and denied upon the stand, are entitled to but little weight.—Whitney v. The Empire State, Fed. Cas. No. 17,586 [1 Ben. 57].

[d] (U. S. 1879) Where, in a plenary cause of collision, the witness was regularly examined for libelants, and had been previously examined on oath in an investigation before the board of inspectors of steam vessels, under the authority of an act of congress, the respondents could not use his deposition before the inspectors as evidence of what the witness stated in it, but only for the purpose of contradicting him.—The Marietta Tilton v. The Harrisburg, Fed. Cas. No. 9,084.

[e] (Ga. 1890) Declarations by a witness out of court, admitted to impeach him, cannot be treated as substantive evidence of the facts which they affirm, and a charge which so treats them, either expressly or by necessary implication, is erroneous.—Watts v. Starr, 86 Ga. 392, 12 S. E. 585.

[f] (Ill. 1894) Declarations of a party to the record are admissible against the party making them, as direct evidence, and not merely as impeaching evidence.—Baker v. Hess, 53 Ill. App. 473.

[g] (Ind. 1881) The declarations of a witness not a party, though admissible to discredit his testimony, cannot be regarded as otherwise affecting any issue in the case.—Davis v. Hardy, 76 Ind. 272.

[h] (Ind. 1881) A witness having denied that she made a certain statement inconsistent with her testimony, the adverse party introduced a witness to testify to having heard her make such statement. Held, that in order that this contradictory evidence might show an admission involved in the statement as well as affect her credibility, it was not necessary that he should twice repeat the statement made by her.—Clark v. Rhoads, 79 Ind. 342.

[i] (Iowa, 1859) Statements made, not under oath, by a witness, relative to the subject-matter in controversy, may be admitted on the trial to discredit his testimony; but if such contradictory statements are not supported by other proof, they must yield to his evidence given under oath upon the trial of the cause. —Burrows v. Goodhue, 1 G. Greene, 48.

[j] (Me. 1862) Proof of declarations of an agent after his agency has ceased, if inconsistent with his testimony, may be admitted to affect its credibility, but is not to be regarded as evidence of facts to influence the jury in determining the point in issue, in an action by a third person against the principal.—Holmes v. Morse, 50 Me. 102.

[k] (Mich. 1894) Admissions by a party, inconsistent with his testimony, merely go to his credibility.—Eastman v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 101 Mich. 597, 60 N. W. 309.

[l] (Minn. 1889) Testimony tending to show that a witness not a party to the suit has made extrajudicial admissions to a third person in opposition to his evidence as a witness on the stand is not to be treated as affirmative proof of the truth of the statements involved in such alleged admissions.—Lundberg v. Northwestern Elevator Co., 42 Minn. 37, 43 N. W. 685.

[m] (Mo. 1893) Evidence of statements, made by a witness out of court, and received to impeach his contrary testimony in court, is not substantive evidence of the truth of such statements.—Shoninger v. Day, 53 Mo. App. 147.

[n] (N. Y. 1889) Where, on cross-examination of a witness of defendant, it appeared that he had made an affidavit inconsistent with his direct testimony, but it did not appear whether he adhered to or receded from his direct testimony, the defendant could not, by cross-examining him on the old affidavit, make direct testimony of any of the previous declarations made by the witness.—Hine v. Cushing, 53 Hun, 519, 6 N. Y. Supp. 850.

[o] (N. C. 1859) A statement made by a witness in pais contradicting that made on the trial, and brought in for the purpose of impeaching the integrity of such witness, cannot be treated as substantive evidence of the facts involved in the issue.—State v. Neville, 51 N. C. 423.

[p] (Or. 1890) Former declarations of a witness contained in an impeaching question, when contradicted, only tend to impeach the character of the witness attacked for truth and veracity, and are not evidence of the facts recited in such declarations.—State v. Jarvis, 18 Or. 360, 23 Pac. 251.

[q] (Tex. 1894) An instruction that the object of evidence of contradictory statements by a witness out of court is not to prove that what he says on the trial is untrue, but to show his unworthiness of belief, is ground for reversing a conviction.—Winn v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 37, 28 S. W. 807.

[r] (Vt. 1874) What a witness who is not a party states out of court is not evidence in chief to prove that the fact is as stated by him; but can only be shown to discredit his testimony at the trial, when contrary to such statements.—Law v. Town of Fairfield, 46 Vt. 425.

[s] (Va. 1847) Where a party who has introduced statements of a witness for the purpose of impeaching his credibility introduces further testimony to prove that the statements were not true, the other party is not authorized to introduce testimony to sustain such previous statements of the witness.—Charlton v. Unis, 4 Grat. 58.

[t] (Wis. 1854) The falsehood of a witness called to prove one side of an issue does not necessarily tend to prove the other side. Thus, where a witness falsely testified that he had not admitted the cutting of timber on plaintiff's land, this does not prove that defendant either cut it, or authorized it to be cut, on plaintiff's land.—Mercer v. Wright, 3 Wis. 645.

§ 1267. Right to contradict testimony in general.

[a] (Ind. 1859) A witness may not only be impeached by evidence of general bad reputation, but by being contradicted by other witnesses.—Terry v. State, 13 Ind. 70.

[b] (Kan. 1889) Where the state in a prosecution for rape introduced testimony showing that a sister of the prosecutrix saw the crime committed, and the defendant, in making his defense, asked the sister whether or not she was present and saw the offense, it was error to refuse to allow her to answer that question.—State v. Spidle, 42 Kan. 441, 22 Pac. 620.

[c] (Mass. 1884) Where, on the question of whether a sale was absolute or conditional, plaintiff's witness has testified to a universal custom, defendant may ask his witness a question calling for a contrary statement as to the custom.—Sears v. Le Better, 137 Mass. 374.

[d] (Tenn. 1859) Where a party avails himself of a statute authorizing him to prove his account by his own oath, he voluntarily places himself in the condition of a witness. His evidence may be contested or opposed by other legal evidence.—Johnson v. Price, 40 Tenn. (3 Head) 549.

[e] (Wis. 1887) If plaintiff offers evidence as to statements of defendant in a particular conversation, defendant may properly testify in rebuttal as to such conversation.—Plano Mfg. Co. v. Frawley, 68 Wis. 577, 32 N. W. 768.

§ 1268. Right to contradict testimony of one's own witness.

Impeachment of one's own witness in general, see ante, §§ 1094–1100.

[a] One may contradict his own witness by proving the facts to be otherwise than as testified by him.

[c] (U. S. 1870) A complainant in equity, who takes the deposition of the adverse party without a previous order of court specially reserving his rights, is not thereby estopped to deny the truth of his evidence.—Rison v. Cribbs, Fed. Cas. No. 11,860 [1 Dill. 181].

[d] (U. S. 1890) Where the law obliges a party to call a witness, the party calling him is not precluded from proving the truthfulness of any particular fact by any other competent testimony in direct contradiction to what such witness may have testified, and this is not only where it appears that the witness was innocently mistaken, but even where the evidence may collaterally have the effect of showing that he was generally unworthy of belief.—United States v. Hall (D. C.) 44 Fed. 864, 10 L. R. A. 324.

[e] (Ala. 1840) The deposition which is taken and read by a party on one trial is evidence, when used by the opposite party, for him, on a subsequent trial of the same action. But it will not conclude the party against whom it is offered; and he may show by the deponent that he was mistaken in the facts which it narrates, and, perhaps, may prove the truth as to the facts by other evidence.—Hallett v. O'Brien, 1 Ala. 585.

[f] (Ala. 1846) In an action on a note given for the purchase price of a horse, defendant, having sought to show by his own witness that the horse was older than represented and was unsound, and having received adverse testimony, was not thereby precluded from proving those facts, notwithstanding the rule that a party cannot discredit his own witness.—Bradford v. Bush, 10 Ala. 386.

[g] (Ala. 1895) It is competent for a party to show that her witness was mistaken in reference to a matter unfavorable to her, and to elicit from such witness the extent or character of his recollection.—Feibelman v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co., 108 Ala. 180, 19 South. 540.

[h] (Colo. 1892) A party may prove any material fact by evidence in direct contradiction to the testimony of his own witness, and this not only when it appears that the witness was innocently mistaken, but even when the evidence may collaterally show that he is generally unworthy of belief.—Moffatt v. Tenney, 17 Colo. 189, 30 Pac. 348.

[i] (Del. 1838) If a witness to the will denies his own attestation, the party calling him is not prohibited from contradicting or impeaching him.—Rash v. Purnel, 2 Har. 448.

[j] (Ill. 1889) When a witness testifies against the party calling him, and there is no attempt to impeach his character, but evidence is offered to contradict him, it is error to charge that, when a party calls a witness, he vouches for him, and cannot deny that he is worthy of belief.—McFarland v. Ford, 32 Ill. App. 173.

[k] (Ill. 1889) While a party may not impeach the character of his witness, he is not bound by his testimony, and may contradict him by other witnesses, though the evidence so offered may have the effect of showing the witness to be unworthy of credit; and where such evidence is introduced, and there is no impeaching testimony before the jury, an instruction that a party is not permitted, after putting a witness on the stand, to deny that he is worthy of belief, is erroneous, as calculated to mislead.—McFarland v. Ford, 32 Ill. App. 173.

[l] (La. 1881) In a suit upon a life insurance policy, defendant introduced in evidence, without qualification, the certificate of the physician by whom plaintiff's medical examination was made. Held, that defendant could not impeach its statements by other testimony.—Maclin v. New England Mut. Life Ins. Co., 33 La. Ann. 801.

[m] (Me. 1846) The right of a party to prove a fact to be different from the statement thereof by a witness introduced by him is not restricted to cases where he is surprised by the testimony in that particular.—Brown v. Osgood, 25 Me. (12 Shep.) 505.

[n] (Md. 1843) A party may show that his witness is mistaken; and he is not precluded from showing the truth by any testimony, oral or written, which he may produce.—Wolfe v. Hauver, 1 Gill, 84.

[o] (Md. 1878) Where a witness gives evidence against the party calling him, who was misled by the prior statements of the witness, the party is not bound by whatever the witness may say, but he is permitted to call other witnesses, not to impeach him, but to contradict him as to a fact material to the issue, in order to show how the fact really is.—Sewell v. Gardner, 48 Md. 178.

[p] (Mass. 1877) If a witness testifies without objection as to the valuation which the assessors of a town have put upon a parcel of land, it is within the discretion of the judge to allow the party calling the witness to put in the assessor's valuation for the purpose of contradicting the testimony of the witness.—Truro v. Freeman, 123 Mass. 187.

[q] (Mass. 1882) At the trial of a criminal case, an accomplice, who was a witness for the government, testified to the guilt of himself and of the defendant, and, on cross-examination, also testified that he made a confession of his guilt to the officer who arrested him; that such confession was induced by promises, on the part of the officer, of protection and favor; and that the confession was true. Held, that the government might show, by the testimony of the officer, that the confession was voluntary.—Commonwealth v. Ackert, 133 Mass. 402.

[r] (Mich. 1880) Where, on cross-examination of a child six years old, who had testified that defendant was the person who committed a robbery in his presence, he answers in the affirmative a question as to whether his father had not told him that defendant was the man, it is proper to allow the father to testify that he had not so told the boy, this not being an attempt to impeach the boy, but evidence to show that the boy had not made a conclusion of identity from improper data.—McGuire v. People, 44 Mich. 286, 6 N. W. 669, 38 Am. Rep. 265.

[s] (Mich. 1892) Where, after the court had erroneously ruled that certain facts could not be brought out on cross-examination of plaintiff's witness, defendant made the witness his own for the purpose of showing those facts, defendant can contradict the witness.—Pickard v. Bryant, 92 Mich. 430, 52 N. W. 788.

[t] (Mo. 1854) A party cannot introduce evidence merely to discredit his own witness; but if to establish a fact he introduces a witness who fails to prove it, he may prove the fact by another, though in so doing he may show the first witness guilty of perjury.—Brown v. Wood, 19 Mo. 475.

[tt] (N. Y. 1830) If a party calls a witness to prove a particular fact and fails in establishing it by him, he may prove the fact by another witness, or may show that the account given by the first witness is incorrect.—Lawrence v. Barker, 5 Wend. 301.

[u] (N. Y. 1848) A party cannot be allowed to insist that his own witness is not to be believed. He has the right, if surprised by his testimony, to show by other witnesses that the facts testified to are otherwise; but he cannot impeach him directly or indirectly.—Hunt v. Fish, 4 Barb. 324.

[uu] (N. Y. 1848) A party calling a witness may show by evidence that he was mistaken in some of his statements and conclusions, while in others he was correct.—Keutgen v. Parks, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 60.

[v] (N. Y. 1861) In an action in which the defendants had set up a counterclaim, one of them, being examined as a witness, testified that the demand had been assigned, among other things, to himself, by the other defendant. Held, the question arising upon objections to a referee's report, that defendants might prove by another witness that the demand was expressly excepted from the assignment, and that the defendant who had taken the assignment had agreed to defend the suit and enforce the counterclaim for the benefit of both defendants.—Platt v. Thorn, 21 N. Y. Super. Ct. (8 Bosw.) 574.

[vv] (N. Y. 1861) The rule that a party will not be permitted to impeach his own witness does not prevent him from proving material facts, though the effect is to contradict his own witness; but as to collateral matters, the party calling the witness is bound by his testimony.—Bok v. Vincent, 12 Abb. Prac. 137.

[w] (N. Y. 1867) A party is not permitted to assert or present evidence showing one state of facts to be true, and afterwards to assert or prove to the court that his prior evidence is untrue, or not to be relied on. But where a witness has given evidence against the side for the support of which he has been called, and the court can perceive good grounds for apprehending that the witness has testified under a mistake of the facts, or with intentional falsehood, and there is no bad faith on the part of the party producing the witness, he is allowed to give evidence explaining or even contradicting his own witness.—People v. Sheehan, 49 Barb. 217.

[ww] (N. Y. 1873) A party may be examined in his own behalf, to contradict a witness previously called and examined by him, where such party's testimony is not necessarily an impeachment of the witness.—Hildreth v. Shepard, 65 Barb. 265.

[x] (N. Y. 1892) Assuming, in an action for damages for failure to ship a car load of eggs on a particular day, that the broker through whom the sale was made was defendants' agent, they are not bound by his testimony as to the conversation between him and defendants at the time of the sale, and it is error to exclude evidence offered by the latter as to such conversation, though contradictory of the evidence of such broker.—Fitch v. Kennard (Com. Pl.) 2 Misc. Rep. 95, 20 N. Y. Supp. 845, reversing (City Ct. N. Y. 1892) 19 N. Y. Supp. 468.

[y] (N. C. 1840) Where a party's witness gave his opinion as to a fact, it was held that the party might show the fact to be different; this not being a discrediting of his own witness.—Spencer v. White, 23 N. C. 236.

[yy] (N. C. 1886) A party may show, by evidence aliunde, that his witness was mistaken in his statement of a fact.—McDonald v. Carson, 94 N. C. 497.

[z] (N. C. 1895) The fact that a witness testified in the negative on an issue whether a deed was delivered at its date did not preclude the party offering him from relying on the presumption to the contrary.—Kendrick v. Dellinger, 117 N. C. 491, 23 S. E. 438.

[zz] (Pa. 1782) Where a party calls a witness who is contradicted by another witness of his own, he cannot call the first to disprove what the second said.—Rapp v. Le Blanc, 1 Dall. 63, 1 L. Ed. 38.

[zzz] (Tex. 1884) The state may rebut a statement of the prosecuting witness that he was induced by the county attorney to make the affidavit on which the prosecution was based.—Gonzales v. State, 16 Tex. App. 152.

§ 1269. —— Party called as witness by adversary.

Impeachment in general, see ante, § 1097.
Matter brought out on cross-examination of party, see post, § 1270 [c].

[a] (U. S. 1885) Where a party is called by the opposite party, he stands in a different position from an ordinary witness; he is necessarily hostile to the party calling him, who is not bound by what he testifies. It may be that he cannot be directly impeached by the party who called him, but he may be freely contradicted, even though this may incidentally discredit him.—Dravo v. Fabel (D. C.) 25 Fed. 116.

[b] (Ill. 1893) Where a plaintiff calls the defendant as a witness, he is not bound by such statements of the witness as are mere conclusions.—Rindskoph v. Kuder, 145 Ill. 607, 34 N. E. 484.

[c] (Ind. 1857) Where plaintiff called defendant as a witness, and he testified to new matter pertinent to the issue, but not responsive to inquiries put to him, the plaintiff may testify in respect to such new matter; otherwise, if the matter about which he testifies be at once pertinent and also responsive to the inquiries put to him.—Thompson v. Shæffer, 9 Ind. 500.

[d] (Ind. 1858) Where one party, called by the other to testify as to who paid a note claimed as a set-off by such other, the latter alleging that he was a surety merely thereon, testifies that the alleged surety paid it, and then states certain arrangements amounting to a satisfaction, this is such an introduction of new matter as entitles the other party to testify concerning it.—Draggoo v. Draggoo, 10 Ind. 95.

[e] (Ind. 1890) The introduction by a plaintiff of the examination of the defendant as a witness, taken before the trial, under Rev. St. 1881, § 510, does not make the latter plaintiff's own witness, so as to preclude plaintiff from specifically negativing any statement contained in it.—Crocker v. Agenbroad, 122 Ind. 585, 24 N. E. 169.

[f] (Iowa, 1863) Where defendant was called as a witness by the plaintiff, under the provisions of the statutes, making the sworn admission of a party equivalent to a written contract, held that the plaintiff could not introduce other evidence, to impeach that of the defendant.—Hunt v. Coe, 15 Iowa, 197.

[g] (Iowa, 1866) Where plaintiffs call the defendant as a witness to prove that an indebtedness on an account still justly subsists, in order to defeat the bar of the statute (Revision, § 2742), and the defendant denies such indebtedness, then the plaintiffs are concluded thereon by such denial.—Thorn v. Moore, 21 Iowa, 285.

[h] (Iowa, 1888) Defendant alleged that plaintiff did not own the note sued on, and called her as a witness. She testified that she had contributed $200, earned by herself, to the purchase of the note, and that her father furnished the rest of the money. Held, that defendant was not bound by her statement, but could show that her husband owned the note.—Gardner v. Connelly, 75 Iowa, 205, 39 N. W. 650.

[i] (Ky. 1869) Under Civ. Code, § 673, a party may introduce his adversary and put to him particular questions, so as to establish particular facts, and if the party testifying shall confine his responses to those inquiries, the party calling on him cannot be heard to contradict them; but if the witness shall depart from a direct and simple response, by stating other or new matter not responsive to the questions, not being introduced for such purpose, but availing himself of such privilege as a witness to testify in his own behalf, his adversary can be heard on such new matter.—Hester v. Wallace, 69 Ky. (6 Bush) 182.

[j] (Md. 1875) Laws 1864, c. 104, § 4, does not alter the rules of evidence, except in so far as not to hold a party bound by the proof of the other party to the suit, when placed by him as a witness upon the stand; but he is permitted to rebut it by adverse testimony, or by proof of the admissions made by the party so examined.—Mason v. Poulson, 43 Md. 161.

[k] (Mich. 1890) Where plaintiff puts defendant on the stand for the purpose of showing his fraud, his testimony is to be judged according to its merits, and his denial of the fraud creates no estoppel.—Webber v. Jackson, 79 Mich. 175, 44 N. W. 591, 19 Am. St. Rep. 165.

[l] (Minn. 1892) One calling the opposite party to testify under Laws 1885, c. 193, is not concluded by any statement of fact he may make in testifying, but may show it false either by other evidence or by inferences or arguments drawn from the testimony of the witness himself.—Schmidt v. Durnam, 50 Minn. 96, 52 N. W. 277.

[m] (Mo. 1857) Where plaintiff is examined as a witness by defendant, and, in answering a question, gives the reason for his answer, which, if true, would warrant the answer, such reason cannot be considered new matter within Prac. Act, art. 24, § 9, authorizing defendant to answer to alleged new matter denying its truth.—Christy's Adm'r v. Horne, 24 Mo. 242.

[n] (Mo. 1892) In an action to set aside a judgment on a note as being fraudulent, and confessed with intent to delay and defraud the promisor's creditors, plaintiff must abide the results of having made the payee, who recovered the judgment, his witness as to the character of the transaction, who testified that it was an ordinary business transaction, and denied knowledge of the promisor's embarrassment.—Claflin v. Dodson, 111 Mo. 195, 19 S. W. 711.

[o] (N. Y. 1850) A party calling the adverse party as a witness may call witnesses to rebut the testimony given by such party.—Armstrong v. Clark, 2 Code Rep. 143.

[p] (N. Y. 1887) In an action for separation and alimony, defendant, called as a witness by plaintiff, testified that he did not abandon his wife, and that he sought in good faith to restore their marital relations. Held, that plaintiff might dispute specific facts sworn to by him, and the trial court had the right to confront his statements with all the facts and circumstances of his conduct.—Cross v. Cross, 108 N. Y. 628, 15 N. E. 333.

[q] (N. Y. 1889) A party who examines his adversary is not bound by his testimony.—Arms v. Arms, 113 N. Y. 646, 21 N. E. 147.

[r] (N. Y. 1890) The fact that defendant, when called as a witness for plaintiff, testified that he was a resident of Dresden, and had no intention to return to New York, and also contradicted plaintiff's evidence to the contrary, did not conclude plaintiff on the question of his residence.—De Meli v. De Meli, 120 N. Y. 485, 24 N. E. 996, 17 Am. St. Rep. 652.

[s] (N. C. 1890) Code, § 579, abolishes the action to obtain discovery under oath, and provides that "no examination of a party shall be had on behalf of the adverse party, except in the manner prescribed in this chapter." Section 580 provides that a party to an action may be compelled to testify at the instance of the adverse party. Section 583 provides that "the examination of the party thus taken may be rebutted, by adverse testimony." Held, that a party who puts his adversary on the stand may contradict him by testimony of other witnesses inconsistent with his.—Helms v. Green, 105 N. C. 251, 11 S. E. 470, 18 Am. St. Rep. 893.

Conclusiveness of answer on cross-examination as to character, see ante, § 1149.

—— as to interest and bias, see ante, § 1198.

Conclusiveness of denial of inconsistent statements, see ante, § 1244.

Impeachment in general, see ante, § 1098.

Right of cross-examiner to contradict answers elicited on cross-examination, see post, § 1275.

[a] (Iowa, 1876) Where a witness, after having been dismissed by the party who called him, testifies, upon examination by the other party, to new matter, he becomes the witness of the latter; and the party who first called him may contradict him in respect of the new matter.—Arts v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 44 Iowa, 284.

[b] (Miss. 1887) On a trial for burglary a witness for the state, indicted for the same offense, fully testified as to the guilt of defendant, and, on cross-examination, stated that he, while confined in jail, had sent for one of the prosecuting attorneys, and, being informed that the person divulging all the facts would not be prosecuted, he determined "to make a clean breast and come clear." To rebut this statement, the state proved by counsel referred to that no such promise had been made. Held error, as a party introducing a witness cannot, to support evidence given on direct examination, and discredit that drawn out on cross-examination, directly attack his credit by proving facts irrelevant to the issue.—Madden v. State, 65 Miss. 176, 3 South. 328.

[c] (N. Y. 1854) Where plaintiff calls defendant as a witness, and, on cross-examination, defendant presents a counterclaim, as set up in his answer, plaintiff may be examined in reference to the evidence given by defendant on the counterclaim.—Harpell v. Irwin, 1 Abb. Prac. 144, 3 E. D. Smith, 565.

[d] (N. Y. 1867) Where a witness for plaintiff, in cross-examination, testified that plaintiff had promised to reward him in the event of recovery, plaintiff was entitled to contradict the witness.—Bemis v. Kyle, 5 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 232.

[e] (Va. 1857) Evidence brought out in cross-examination explanatory or relative to the evidence in chief of the witness is as much the evidence of the party calling the witness as the examination in chief.—Horner v. Speed, 2 Pat. & H. 616.

§ 1271. Absent witnesses and stipulations as to testimony.

Right to impeach in general, see ante, § 1090.

[a] The district attorney, who admits that absent witnesses, to procure whose testimony an accused applied for a continuance, would swear to the facts stated if present, is not thereby precluded from contradicting or discrediting the facts stated, in the same way that the testimony of the witnesses could, if given, be contradicted or discredited.

—(Ky. 1821) Olds v. Commonwealth, 10 Ky. (3 A. K. Marsh.) 465;

(La. 1877) State v. Colbert, 29 La. Ann. 715.

[b] (U. S. 1888) Statements in writing of absent witnesses, introduced under an admission that the witnesses, if present, would testify to the facts therein stated, are equally subject to contradiction as if the witnesses had testified in open court.—United States v. Taylor (C. C.) 35 Fed. 484.

[c] (Ill. 1837) The admission, by consent, of an affidavit for a continuance on the ground of the absence of a material witness in evidence, is an admission of the facts which the affidavit states can be proved by the witness, and they cannot be contradicted.—Willis v. People, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 399.

[d] (Ill. 1871) If, upon application of defendant in a criminal case for a continuance on the ground of the absence of witnesses, the state's attorney will admit the truth of the statements which it is alleged the absent witnesses would testify to, there is no objection to the practice of requiring defendant, under such circumstances, to proceed to trial; but in such case the state cannot be permitted to contradict the statements admitted, as this would take from the accused the right to have his witnesses seen and heard by the jury.—Van Meter v. People, 60 Ill. 168.

[e] (Ind. 1882) Where the state admits, to avoid a continuance, that the testimony which would be given by defendant's absent witnesses is true, it is precluded from introducing evidence to contradict it, but it may introduce evidence, if competent for other purposes, which incidentally tends to contradict the facts admitted to be true.—Burchfield v. State, 82 Ind. 580.

[f] (Miss. 1886) Since a motion for a continuance because of the absence of a witness must be decided on the affidavit as made, where the court permits defendant to be examined by the prosecuting attorney as to the truth of his affidavit, and his answers proving contradictory, the prosecuting attorney agrees to admit the facts stated in the affidavit, as the evidence of the absent witness, and immediately, on the reading of the affidavit, has the counsel of accused sworn and proves by him the contradictory statements, a new trial will be granted.—Hubbard v. State, 64 Miss. 315, 1 South. 480.

[g] (Neb. 1896) An admission of plaintiff that proposed witnesses of defendant, if time applied for should be allowed to procure their evidence, would give certain testimony, is not equivalent to an admission that such proposed testimony is indisputable.—Burris v. Court, 48 Neb. 179, 66 N. W. 1131.

[h] (N. C. 1863) It is error for the court, in a capital case, to order that an affidavit, made by the defendant for the continuance of the cause, should be read as evidence for the affiant, with leave to the state to offer testimony in contradiction, the defendant objecting, and insisting on a continuance. If the statement of the witness is to be controverted, the party offering the testimony has the right to have his witnesses testify before the jury.—State v. Twiggs, 60 N. C. 142.

[i] (N. C. 1881) The admission by a party that the testimony of an absent witness would be the same as that set out in a certain statement of facts does not preclude him from introducing evidence impeaching said statement, such evidence tending to support the main issue, and not being collateral to it.—Rhea v. Deaver, 85 N. C. 337.

§ 1272. Testimony subject to contradiction.

[a] (U. S. 1895) A witness who testifies that he does not recollect hearing a certain person, not a witness, make a certain statement, cannot be impeached by testimony that such person made such a statement in the witness' presence.—Goldsby v. United States, 160 U. S. 70, 16 Sup. Ct. 216, 40 L. Ed. 343.

[b] (Conn. 1879) In an action for an injury from a defective bridge, where plaintiff testified that the load which had broken through the bridge was, in his opinion, a proper one, and that he had driven such loads through neighboring towns without breaking through the bridges, it was competent for defendants to show in rebuttal that the plaintiff had broken through the sluice bridges with such loads and injured the roads in one of the neighboring towns.—Wilson v. Town of Granby, 47 Conn. 59, 36 Am. Rep. 51.

[c] (Ga. 1888) The controlling question being whether defendant set fire to his own house, and thereby caused the damage complained of, and the plaintiff having testified that a third person stated in the hearing of defendant that he (defendant) did it, to which he made no response, and this third person, when examined in behalf of defendant, having denied making the statement, it was error not to allow plaintiff, in reply, to prove by another witness that he was present and heard the defendant's witness make the statement at the time and place mentioned by the plaintiff in her testimony.—Bray v. Latham, 81 Ga. 640, 8 S. E. 64.

[d] (Ga. 1891) In an action against a carrier for damages for failure to deliver peaches in time, whereby they were damaged, plaintiffs alleged that defendant contracted to deliver the peaches in New York, which was denied by defendant, which claimed that its agreement was to deliver to a connecting line. Held, that where statements of defendant's agent, in reply to plaintiffs' request for defendant's reason for not complying with the alleged contract, have been brought out by defendant's interrogatories to the agent, plaintiffs may testify in regard to them in rebuttal, and for the purpose of impeaching the agent.—Central Railroad & Banking Co. v. Skellie, 86 Ga. 686, 12 S. E. 1017.

[e] (Ill. 1893) Where a party testifies that he destroyed certain papers on the advice of other people, whom, on cross-examination, he names, the adverse party may show that such persons did not give such advice.—Butler v. Cornell, 148 Ill. 276, 35 N. E. 767.

[f] (Md. 1892) A witness testified voluntarily, and not in response to any question, that he had interviewed the father of defendants as to settling the case, and that the father acknowledged that the accident was the fault of defendants, saying that he had always feared an accident there, and that he desired to settle the case. Held, that it was error to refuse defendants' offer to prove by their father that he had made no such statements.—Wise v. Ackerman, 76 Md. 375, 25 Atl. 424.

[g] (Mass. 1891) In a prosecution for keeping intoxicating liquors with intent to illegally sell them, where a witness for defendant denies that he was found in an intoxicated condition on defendant's premises when searched by the officers, and further states that he had not drunk intoxicating liquors for the past two years, the prosecution was properly allowed to show what had been such witness' habits as to the use of intoxicating liquors within the time mentioned.—Commonwealth v. Goodnow, 154 Mass. 487, 28 N. E. 677.

[h] (Mass. 1895) Where one, in contradiction to evidence stating that he did certain acts as the agent of another, denies the acts, and also that he is agent, evidence contradicting his denial of agency is competent as affecting his credibility as a witness.—Commonwealth v. Smith, 163 Mass. 411, 40 N. E. 189.

[i] (Mich. 1866) After a witness had given certain testimony, and the case was closed, a dispute arose as to what he had testified, and he was recalled and asked by the judge to state what he had testified, and he so stated. Held, that testimony could not be admitted to contradict him, as his answer agreed with what the judge certified it to have been before the dispute arose.—People v. Sackett, 14 Mich. 320.

[j] (N. Y. 1882) Where a witness denies on cross-examination that he has attempted to suborn a witness to swear falsely in the cause in favor of the party calling him, the adverse party may give evidence to contradict him in that respect, on the ground that acts done by the witness touching the cause, which tend to discredit him, are not collateral merely in respect to which his answer is conclusive.—Gulerette v. McKinley, 27 Hun, 320.

[k] (N. Y. 1892) Where, in an action for the unlawful taking of goods which defendants justified on the ground that they had been induced to sell the goods to plaintiff's assignors by false statements as to their solvency, there is evidence that the agent of a board of trade had obtained information as to the standing of plaintiff's assignors, and one of the latter testifies that the agent at the time of obtaining such information stated that he wanted it only for a special purpose, it was error to exclude testimony of the agent in denial, as it was material as to the extent of the credibility to be given to such witness.—Rosellen v. Herzog, 64 Hun, 639, 19 N. Y. Supp. 314.

[l] (Pa. 1895) Where a defendant testified that he had not made threats against deceased, testimony relating to such threats is admissible on behalf of the state, after defendant's evidence is all in, to impair his credibility.—Commonwealth v. Weber, 167 Pa. 153, 31 Atl. 481, 36 Wkly. Notes Cas. 193.

[m] (S. C. 1831) Where the answer of a witness is in any wise material to the issue, he may be contradicted by the adverse party.—Smith v. Henry, 2 Bailey, 118.

[n] (S. C. 1886) It is not error to allow the prosecution, in the reply, to offer testimony for the purpose of contradicting a witness for the accused, although the subject-matter of the testimony formed a part of the direct case of the prosecution.—State v. Prater, 26 S. C. 198, 613, 2 S. E. 108.

[o] (Tex. 1887) On a prosecution for murder, the theory of the state, that the only witness for the defendant was not present at the homicide, is supported by evidence that the defendant's witness swore positively to the color of the coat worn by the deceased, and that in fact the deceased did not have on such a coat.—Gibson v. State, 23 Tex. App. 414, 5 S. W. 314.

[p] (Tex. 1890) On an issue as to the authority of an agent to make a sale between the purchaser and attaching creditors of the principal, the latter testified that he had not authorized the sale. On cross-examination he admitted that, after the levy, he signed a written ratification in which the agent's authority was acknowledged. Held that, the principal having admitted signing the writing, the ratification was not admissible for the purpose of impeaching him.—Conner v. Littlefield, 79 Tex. 76, 15 S. W. 217.

§ 1273. — Irrelevant, collateral, or immaterial matters in general.

[a] It is only as to matters relevant to the issue that a witness can be contradicted for the purpose of impeachment.

[b] (Ala. 1838) A witness cannot be examined as to any distinct collateral fact for the purpose of impeaching his testimony afterwards; but if the witness voluntarily swears falsely in relation to matters not within the issue, he may be impeached by contradicting him.—Dozier v. Joyce, 8 Port. 303.

[c] (Ala. 1879) Although evidence as to a dispute between the accused and a witness for the prosecution is admissible, the witnesses who furnished such evidence cannot be impeached by the contradictory testimony of other witnesses, if the dispute and its subject had no connection with the offense of which the defendant is accused.—Haley v. State, 63 Ala. 83.

[d] (Ala. 1887) A confession by defendant that he struck the blow, assigning as a reason that deceased had struck him on a former occasion, was given in evidence. Held, that evidence that it was not deceased who struck defendant on the occasion referred to was not admissible to impeach the credibility of the witness relating the confession, as it would raise an issue as to a collateral fact.—Lang v. State, 84 Ala. 1, 4 South. 193, 5 Am. St. Rep. 324.

[e] (Ala. 1888) In an action on an insurance policy, on the defense that the house was fraudulently burned, evidence was introduced that assured was about the house in the night when it burned, in a nightgown, saying that he had been nearly suffocated before he discovered the fire. Defendant introduced evidence that assured drew out his watch from his clothes under his nightgown, and told the time to bystanders. Assured denied this, and testified in rebuttal that he had no watch. Held, that proof by another witness that assured had no watch was not admissible, as it was only an attempt to impeach the opposing witness by attacking a part of his testimony which was not material.—Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Copeland, 86 Ala. 551, 6 South. 143, 4 L. R. A. 848.

[f] (Ariz. 1889) The affidavit of a prosecuting witness that he is a poor person, made to entitle him to his necessary expenses in attending, cannot be introduced by defendant to impeach his truthfulness, as the witness in making such affidavit was not swearing to any matter material to the issue, and he could be contradicted only on a material matter.—Territory v. Clanton, 20 Pac. 94.

[g] (Ark. 1894) Defendant was indicted for slandering prosecutrix, in charging that she committed fornication with his sons. The prosecutrix testified, on direct examination, that she never had sexual intercourse with defendant's sons, "or any one else." Held, that defendant could show, for the purpose of contradicting her, that she had committed fornication with others than defendant's sons, though section 2902, Mansf. Dig., provides that a witness shall not be impeached "by evidence of particular acts."—McArthur v. State, 59 Ark. 431, 27 S. W. 628.

[h] (Cal. 1895) On trial for cattle theft, where there was no direct evidence of a taking by defendant, and he testified that he obtained the animal by a trade made on a certain day in January, with one who testified that no such trade took place, and that defendant was not at his place during that month, defendant, after stating that he was at such place during that month, should be allowed to state whether such witness was then there, over objection that the question was irrelevant, since the statement would affect the credibility of such witness' testimony.—People v. Ward, 105 Cal. 652, 39 Pac. 33.

[i] (Cal. 1896) Where the defense is alibi, it is not error to allow the people, in rebuttal, to contradict the witnesses who testified to the alibi, by disproving the collateral facts testified to by them on their direct examination as a means of fixing the time when they saw defendant at the place distant from the scene of the crime.—People v. Evans, 41 Pac. 444.

[j] (Colo. 1891) A party, having introduced certain testimony tending to sustain his side of the issue, is precluded from denying the materiality of such testimony for the purpose of preventing its contradiction.—Grimes v. Hill, 15 Colo. 359, 25 Pac. 698.

[k] (Ga. 1890) On a trial for using abusive language, the accused having stated that he did not abuse the prosecutor, but that they met and parted friendly, it is competent, in rebuttal of his statement, to show that, on the same occasion, he used other abusive words in addition to those alleged in the indictment, and the witness may recite the words so used.—Porter v. State, 86 Ga. 362, 12 S. E. 583.

[l] (Ga. 1893) Where a witness, by way of accounting for his presence at the scene of the tort, states that just before going there he made a particular purchase at a certain store, the opposite party can show that he made no such purchase at that time.—East Tennessee, V. & G. Ry. Co. v. Daniel, 91 Ga. 768, 18 S. E. 22.

[m] (Ind. 1869) A witness on a criminal trial cannot be contradicted by other witnesses on a matter not affecting the cause on trial.—Fogleman v. State, 32 Ind. 145.

[n] (Kan. 1884) On a trial for murder, had more than a year after the homicide, a witness for defendant testified to certain material facts. The witness had resided in the immediate vicinity all the time, and was aware of the homicide and the consequent excitement, and of the arrest and commitment of defendant. The facts so testified to were the appearance of three strangers riding rapidly away from the place of the homicide right after the time it must have taken place. Held, that the witness having named certain persons to whom he told such facts, such persons might, in the discretion of the court, state that nothing of the kind was ever told them.—State v. McKinney, 31 Kan. 570, 3 Pac. 356.

[o] (Kan. 1890) On a trial for larceny, a witness for the state was asked what the offense was for which he was then in jail. On re-examination, in explaining this matter, the witness gave testimony implicating defendant in this offense, which was different from that for which he was on trial, but no objection was made to such testimony. Held, that his testimony as to such collateral matters cannot be contradicted by witnesses for the defense.—State v. Blakesley, 43 Kan. 250, 23 Pac. 570.

[p] (Me. 1845) Where a witness has been introduced and has testified, testimony to contradict him is not to be excluded as contradicting that which is collateral or irrelevant.—State v. Blake, 25 Me. (12 Shep.) 350.

[q] (Md. 1843) A party cannot introduce illegal testimony and then impeach the witness by discrediting the facts illegally established.—Wolfe v. Hauver, 1 Gill, 84.

[r] (Minn. 1861) Questions intended to impeach immaterial testimony may be properly excluded.—Derby v. Gallup, 5 Minn. 119 (Gil. 85).

[s] (Minn. 1869) Admitting that impeaching evidence is admissible on the trial of the preliminary question as to whether a confession was made voluntarily, the witness testifying to such confession may not be contradicted on facts not material to such issue.—State v. Staley, 14 Minn. 105 (Gil. 75).

[t] (N. Y. 1823) If a witness for the prosecution answer a question which is totally irrelevant, the opposite counsel may call witnesses to contradict him.—People v. Pentz, 1 Wheeler, Cr. Cas. 240.

[u] (N. Y. 1831) A witness cannot be examined as to a distinct collateral fact for the purpose of impeaching his testimony by contradicting him; but if a question relative to such fact be put and answered, evidence cannot afterwards be adduced for the purpose of contradiction.—Harris v. Wilson, 7 Wend. 57.

[v] (N. Y. 1887) On a trial for murder defendant was asked, on cross-examination, if he had entered a certain house at night. He denied this, and on redirect testified that he had never entered any house at night with intent to steal. Evidence was then introduced to contradict defendant in this regard. Held error, necessitating a new trial, when the evidence connecting the prisoner with the crime charged is entirely circumstantial, and the conviction is of murder in the first degree.—People v. Greenwall, 108 N. Y. 296, 15 N. E. 404, 2 Am. St. Rep. 415.

[w] (N. C. 1889) A witness testified for defendant as an expert that, in his opinion, defendant's culvert was sufficiently large for the size of the stream; that it was the largest culvert he ever built. Held, that plaintiff could show that a culvert built for another company, a short distance further down stream, was larger than defendant's.—Emery v. Raleigh & G. R. Co., 102 N. C. 209, 9 S. E. 139.

[ww] (Pa. 1861) Where a witness, when asked his reason for leaving a certain county, answers that he left to engage in his business elsewhere, the records of the court of quarter sessions of that county, showing the finding of two bills of indictments against him for misdemeanors, are not admissible to show that he gave a false reason, where he had not been asked whether such indictments had been found; for the question was about irrelevant matter, which could not be contradicted, and the records of the indictments, as offered, did not contradict the witness.—Wright v. Cumpsty, 41 Pa. (5 Wright) 102.

[x] (Tex. 1888) Where the issue is whether a certain wreck was caused by a loose wheel, and a witness has testified that he was not informed that the wreck was caused by a loose wheel, he cannot be contradicted or impeached on the collateral issue as to whether he was so informed or not.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Coon, 69 Tex. 730, 7 S. W. 492.

[xx] (Vt. 1854) Though it is not ordinarily allowable to contradict a witness on a matter wholly collateral, the court may, in its discretion, depart from the rule, and in such case the court, by submitting to the jury the question whether on the whole evidence they believe the main fact testified to by the witness, does all that the party offering the contradictory evidence is entitled to have him do.—Powers v. Leach, 26 Vt. 270.

[y] (Vt. 1868) In an action by a school-teacher to recover wages, her veracity cannot be attacked by evidence of what she told her scholars in reply to inquiries in respect to trouble she had had in a former school, and by evidence to show that this account was incorrect, where such evidence has no bearing on any point in issue.—Wells v. School Dist. No. 2 in Granby, 41 Vt. 353.

[yy] (Vt. 1878) The prosecution having given evidence tending to prove the adultery on the day alleged, defendant testified on his own behalf that neither on the day alleged, nor at any time after the alleged particeps was married, did he have intercourse with her, or solicit her, and, further, that never in his life did he have intercourse with her. Held, that evidence that defendant had intercourse with her before her marriage was admissible in rebuttal and to impeach defendant's credit.—State v. Arnold, 50 Vt. 731.

[z] (Vt. 1883) As to a collateral fact, a party to a suit is bound by the answer of his witness.—Lewis v. Barker, 55 Vt. 21.

[zz] (Va. 1895) It is proper to refuse to allow a witness for the defense to contradict a witness for the commonwealth who states that another witness for the commonwealth had not told him that he could not tell the same tale he had told before the justice, as this introduces a purely collateral issue.—Robertson v. Commonwealth, 22 S. E. 359.

§ 1274. Laying foundation for contradiction.

[a] A witness cannot be cross-examined as to collateral facts not brought out on the examination in chief, with the view of impeaching him by contradicting him.

[d] (Cal. 1896) It is not error to permit the people to rebut the circumstances called out on cross-examination of the witnesses to an alibi, though no foundation is laid for contradiction, where no objection is made on such ground.—People v. Evans, 41 Pac. 444.

[e] (Ga. 1850) Where there is a dispute as to localities, a diagram, drawn in accordance with the testimony of a witness, may be submitted to the jury without having been first exhibited to the witness whose evidence it contradicts.—Bishop v. State, 9 Ga. 121.

[f] (Ky. 1895) It is too late, after all but one of the arguments to the jury have been made, to lay the foundation for the contradiction of a witness.—Delaney v. Commonwealth, 35 S. W. 1037.

[g] (Md. 1843) Where a party desires to introduce hearsay evidence for the purpose of impeaching a witness, he must apprise the court of such design, as it is incompetent to introduce illegal testimony for the purpose of impeachment of the witness by disproving the facts thus illegally established.—Wolfe v. Hauver, 1 Gill, 84.

[h] (Md. 1896) It is proper to refuse to permit a witness to be cross-examined, to impeach her, on wholly irrelevant issues.—Hopper v. Beck, 83 Md. 647, 34 Atl. 474.

[i] (Mich. 1886) In assumpsit for breaking a log jam, a witness in defendant's behalf was asked on cross-examination if he did not tell certain men under him to roll logs in and to keep the channel of the creek full, and responded in the negative. On rebuttal two of the men working under him were permitted to testify that he did so instruct them. Held, that it was proper to ask such witness what he instructed his men to do, and to impeach his testimony if untrue as to what he said as well as to what he did.—Butterfield v. Gilchrist, 63 Mich. 155, 29 N. W. 682.

[j] (Mich. 1887) In a prosecution for seduction, a witness for defendant testified that he had had intercourse with the complaining witness at his brother-in-law's house, where she was at the time assisting him to take care of the brother-in-law's sister. The prosecution asked him if his brother-in-law had not sued him for board; and, upon objection, stated that he proposed to show that such suit had been brought, and witness had defended by claiming compensation for nursing plaintiff's sick sister, and had sworn that he had no assistance at such nursing. Held, that the question was legitimate cross-examination, and that the explanation of the prosecution was proper.—People v. Jensen, 66 Mich. 711, 33 N. W. 811.

[k] (Minn. 1893) In an action for a balance alleged to be due on a contract to build a mill, defendants set up a breach of the contract as a counterclaim, and alleged that instead of turning out from 50 to 70 barrels a day, as the contract provided, the mill only turned out 35 barrels a day. Held, where a miller who had been in defendants' employ testified that he had made a test of the mill, and that it turned out 60 barrels of first-class flour in a day, it was proper to ask him on cross-examination whose wheat he was grinding, in order to lay a foundation for showing that the flour was not first-class.—Pye v. Bakke, 54 Minn. 107, 55 N. W. 904.

[l] (N. Y. 1874) In an action to enjoin the defendant from surreptitiously obtaining and communicating to another foreign news dispatches sent by Atlantic cable exclusively to the plaintiff, the defendant, after testifying that the foreign news he so furnished was obtained by him several times each day directly by cable from London, and that the dispatches came to a banking house in New York, from whom he received them, was asked, "What banking house is that?" Held, that the question was proper and pertinent, as the plaintiff had a right to contradict the statement, and to test its accuracy in any legal manner. And that the question being material and competent, the defendant was in contempt for refusing to answer.—Kiernan v. Abbott, 3 Thomp. & C. 755, 1 Hun, 109.

[m] (N. Y. 1889) Where, in an action for selling liquor without a license, defendant denies all knowledge of the alleged offense, and a witness testifies that he saw two persons in defendant's saloon when he bought the liquor, it is competent to ask him, on cross-examination, who they were, so as to enable defendant to produce them in his own behalf, to impeach the credibility of the witness.—People v. Fitzgerald, 55 Hun, 605, 8 N. Y. Supp. 81.

[n] (Pa. 1853) There can be no ground of objection to a deposition that it purported to contradict a witness whose deposition had been previously taken on the other side, but who was not examined on the trial, and that the first witness had not been questioned as to the matter testified to in the second deposition.—McKelvy v. DeWolfe, 20 Pa. (8 Harris) 374.

[o] (Pa. 1879) Whether the attention of a witness must first be called to the contradictory matter with which it is proposed to discredit him rests in the discretion of the court, and unless the discretion is abused, its exercise is not ground for reversal.—Rothrock v. Gallaher, 91 Pa. 108.

[p] (Tex. 1889) In an action by an engineer against a railroad company for personal injuries received by the derailment of his engine, it is reversible error to permit the plaintiff to ask his witness if he did not observe a low joint where the accident occurred, and if he did not call the road master's attention to it at the time of the accident as the cause of the derailment, and make a certain remark to him, though the road master had testified on cross-examination that he did not remember that the witness called his attention to the joint, or what was said, as no proper predicate was laid for impeaching the road master.—Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Thompson, 75 Tex. 501, 12 S. W. 742.

Conclusiveness of answer on cross-examination as to character, see ante, § 1149.

—— as to interest and bias, see ante, § 1198.

Conclusiveness of denial of inconsistent statements, see ante, § 1244.

Impeachment in general, see ante, § 1098.

[a] If a witness be cross-examined upon a collateral matter, evidence will not be admitted to disprove that matter, in order to discredit the witness.

[b] (U. S. 1893) On the issue of contributory negligence plaintiff testified that at the time of the accident he was not intoxicated. On cross-examination he testified that he was not a drinking man, and had never been intoxicated while he lived in C. Held, that this was collateral matter, and, having been brought out on cross-examination, evidence was not admissible to contradict it.—Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Reese, 56 Fed. 288, 5 C. C. A. 510, 15 U. S. App 92.

[bb] (U. S. 1895) One who is alleged to have caused a loss by the negligent doing of certain work, and who testifies, in an action for such loss, that he did the work properly, and in the same manner that he did similar work at another place, may be cross-examined as to the way in which he did such other work, and contradicted by showing that he did it negligently.—Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Watts, 66 Fed. 460, 13 C. C. A. 579, 25 U. S. App. 214.

[c] (Ala. 1888) On an indictment for murder, witnesses were introduced to testify to the good reputation of deceased for peace and quiet, and were asked, on cross-examination, if they had heard of specified and notorious difficulties in which deceased had been involved, to which they replied that they had not. Held that, as the specific acts of the deceased were irrelevant, it was proper to refuse to permit the defendant to introduce witnesses to prove these specific difficulties, for the purpose of impeaching the state's witnesses.—Hussey v. State, 87 Ala. 121, 6 South. 420.

[cc] (Ala. 1889) Defendant and one C. being camped with their teams by the roadside, deceased and one M. came along and began cursing the parties in camp for leaving their wagons so that parties approaching would have to turn out of the beaten track. This was the commencement of the difficulty ending in the homicide. Defendant testified that his wagon was not left in the road. Held, that defendant having denied on cross-examination that it had been said in his presence and hearing that the difficulty occurred because deceased's wagon ran into defendant's, it was competent to show that such statement was made in a conversation in which defendant participated, and was not denied by him.—Kirby v. State, 89 Ala. 63, 8 South. 110.

[d] (Ark. 1879) Where a witness for the state, in a murder trial, testifies on cross-examination that she washed the defendant's bloody shirt by direction of her husband, the defendant cannot contradict her as to such collateral or immaterial matter by showing that she washed the shirt of her own accord.—Butler v. State, 34 Ark. 480.

[dd] (Cal. 1886) Where, in a criminal case, one of the witnesses of the defendant is, after examination or cross-examination, recalled by the prosecution for further cross-examination in order to lay a foundation for impeaching him, the prosecution is bound by the answers of the witness in regard to matters collateral and not relative to the issues being tried, and, as to such matters, he cannot be contradicted; and it would be error to allow, against the objections of the defendant, any evidence for such a purpose.—People v. Webb, 70 Cal. 120, 11 Pac. 509.

[e] (Cal. 1890) Defendant on his direct examination denied that he had procured a third person to set the fire, as testified to by a witness for the people. On his cross-examination, he was asked how long he had known such third person, and answered, only six or seven days before the fire. Held, that the people could not show in rebuttal that defendant had known the third person for a longer period, as a party cannot cross-examine his adversary's witnesses on irrelevant matters for the purpose of eliciting something to be contradicted.—People v. Tiley, 84 Cal. 651, 24 Pac. 290.

[ee] (Cal. 1890) In an action to quiet title, defendant claimed under a grant made by the Mexican governor of California in 1838, but plaintiff alleged that such grant was really made in 1848, after California had become subject to the United States. A witness for defendant having said that he had received a certain grant, and stated some particulars in regard to it, held, that it was proper, for the purpose of impeachment, although this was a collateral matter, to cross-examine him as to such grant, and then to show by another witness that there was no trace of it in the proper archives.—Davis v. California Powder Works, 84 Cal. 617, 24 Pac. 387.

[f] (Cal. 1890) In an action for slander, defendant justified by attempting to show that plaintiff was connected with the cattle stealing charged by defendant. On cross-examination of the thief, he testified that while he was under arrest one T. told him that the whole matter of the stealing had been settled, but nothing was said to connect plaintiff with such settlement. Held, that this statement was merely a collateral matter, and the witness could not be impeached by contradicting it.—Barkly v. Copeland, 86 Cal. 483, 25 Pac. 1.

[ff] (Cal. 1895) In a murder trial, evidence is not admissible to contradict a witness who has testified, on cross-examination, that he executed a bond for certain Chinamen under the internal revenue law, but denied that he had been paid for it.—People v. Collins, 105 Cal. 504, 39 Pac. 16.

[fff] (Cal. 1895) Where a witness for plaintiff has testified, on cross-examination, to facts not called for by anything in his examination in chief, he cannot be contradicted in regard thereto.—Redington v. Pacific Postal Tel. Cable Co., 107 Cal. 317, 40 Pac. 432, 48 Am. St. Rep. 132.

[g] (Ill. 1892) In an action by a passenger against a railroad company for personal injuries, where plaintiff states, on cross-examination, that he did not go on the platform while the train was at the station next to the one at which the accident occurred, testimony contradicting such statement is inadmissible; the matter sought to be contradicted being immaterial, and drawn out on cross-examination.—Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Moraln, 140 Ill. 117, 29 N. E. 869, affirming (1889) 36 Ill. App. 632.

[gg] (Ind. 1881) The provision of Prac. Act, § 244, that the party producing a witness may in all cases contradict him by other evidence, does not allow the cross-examination of a witness produced by the adverse party as to matters which are collateral and irrelevant to the issue, merely for the purpose of contradicting him.—Talburt v. Berkshire Life Ins. Co., 80 Ind. 434.

[ggg] (Ind. 1889) Where a witness, on cross-examination, is asked whether he had not drank with one of the adverse witnesses, and answers that he had on two occasions, and is asked whether he had not done so a third time, at a particular time and place, and states that he had not, evidence contradicting the latter statement is properly excluded as immaterial.—Simons v. Busby, 119 Ind. 13, 21 N. E. 451.

[h] (Ind. 1889) Where impeaching witnesses state, on cross-examination, the names of the persons from whom they have heard reports as to the reputation of the person to be impeached, such statement, being on a collateral issue, is conclusive.—Robbins v. Spencer, 121 Ind. 594, 22 N. E. 660.

[hh] (Ind. 1892) Where, on a bastardy trial, the relatrix testifies that defendant begot the child about a certain date in a certain city, and defendant testifies that, two weeks before, he went to a town 23 miles distant, and remained till after said date, and on cross-examination denies that a week before said date he accompanied another woman home from church in said city, the testimony of such woman that he did then accompany her is admissible in rebuttal.—State v. Taylor, 4 Ind. App. 296, 30 N. E. 628.

[hhh] (Iowa, 1876) In a suit for personal injury, a minister of the gospel was introduced by defendant, and testified that he visited the plaintiff shortly after he was injured; and narrated conversations he had with plaintiff in regard to the manner of the injury and the circumstances under which it was received, and other matters; and, on the direct examination, stated that he offered plaintiff the consolations of religion; and, on the cross-examination, was asked if he refused to pray with plaintiff, and replied that he did not. Plaintiff was permitted to testify, in rebuttal, that the witness was requested to pray for him, and refused.—Artz v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 44 Iowa, 284.

[i] (Iowa, 1887) The accused testified, on his second cross-examination, that he was not at the place of the homicide at the time it was committed. Held, that the prosecution could afterwards contradict the accused upon that point.—State v. Johnson, 72 Iowa, 393, 34 N. W. 177.

[ii] (Iowa, 1890) Where, in a suit aided by attachment in which defendant files counterclaims for unwarranted levy of the attachment, one of the plaintiffs starts to testify as to information he received before the levy, for the purpose of showing his reason for suing out the attachment, but is interrupted, and does not finish, defendant, who brings out for the first time, on cross-examination, that he got his information from a rating-book issued by a commercial agency, makes him his own witness as to such evidence, and cannot rebut it.—Deere v. Bagley, 80 Iowa, 197, 45 N. W. 557.

[iii] (Kan. 1890) In a prosecution for keeping and maintaining a common nuisance, where intoxicating liquors were unlawfully sold, on cross-examination defendant admitted that he gave intoxicating liquors to a witness who testified against him, but stated that he treated the witness at a drugstore, where he obtained the liquor, without making or giving any statement prescribed by the statute. Upon rebuttal, the prosecution proved that his evidence in regard to the statement was false. Held, that the admission of this evidence to contradict the defendant on a collateral matter was not sufficient cause for reversal.—State v. Rieck, 43 Kan. 635, 23 Pac. 1076.

[j] (Ky. 1882) A witness cannot be cross-examined as to facts which are collateral and irrelevant to the issue, for the purpose of contradicting him; his answers about such facts being conclusive against the party calling for them. Therefore, where, on the trial of an indictment for murder, a witness for defendant testified that soon after the killing he was in the room where deceased lay, and that J. came up to the body, and leaned over it, and seemed to be fumbling some little time, when he straightened up, and said, "Say nothing about this boys," and went into another room, but that he did not see the pistol to which another witness had testified was then taken from deceased, it was error to permit the prosecution to prove the declarations of witness out of court, that he knew nothing about a pistol on deceased.—Loving v. Commonwealth, 4 Ky. Law Rep. 457.

[jj] (Ky. 1886) Where one of the commonwealth's witnesses has been recalled by the defense, and foundation laid for contradicting him, it is error for the trial court to refuse to allow a witness for the defense to give evidence contradicting the first witness, and showing that the evidence which he gave, important and prejudicial to the defendant, was false.—Joseph v. Commonwealth, 1 S. W. 4.

[jjj] (Ky. 1887) On a trial for manslaughter, defendant, on cross-examination, was asked if the wife of deceased did not, just after her husband was shot, go to him and smear her hands and arms with his blood; and, an affirmative answer being given, the widow was introduced, who testified that she did not do so. Held, that this was an immaterial matter, and a witness cannot be examined upon a subject not relevant to the issue for the mere purpose of contradicting him.—Radford v. Commonwealth, 5 S. W. 343.

[k] (Ky. 1889) The theory of the state in a murder trial was that defendant had borrowed a penknife, with which the killing was done, for that purpose. Defendant claimed to have borrowed it to trim his nails, which his nephew, from whom he borrowed it, corroborated. The state, on cross-examination, asked the nephew if he had not borrowed a whetstone that morning to sharpen the knife, and if he had not said that his uncle was going to have a difficulty that day. He answered both questions in the negative. Held, that the state could not call witnesses to impeach the nephew on those points.—Randolph v. Commonwealth, 11 S. W. 813.

[kk] (La. 1893) On a trial for the murder of a policeman while engaged with two associates in making an arrest, after cross-examining one of such other officers with a view to showing that he might have accidentally shot deceased during the scuffle, defendant cannot contradict the answers of the witness given on such cross-examination, as they bear only on facts collateral to the issue.—State v. Donelon, 45 La. Ann. 744, 12 South. 922.

[kkk] (Me. 1893) On libel for liquors found in a certain room in claimant's hotel, a witness testified that she occupied the next room, and had heard claimant in the first room with different persons, talking about liquors and prices, and, on cross-examination, that A. was one of such persons. Claimant called A., and asked him if he was ever in said room. Held relevant to impeach the former witness, though on a matter brought out on cross-examination.—State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 85 Me. 304, 27 Atl. 178.

[l] (Md. 1888) Where defendant, on cross-examination, denies that he had been told a certain fact by B., it is competent to contradict him by the testimony of B. that he did tell him.—Turnbull v. Maddux, 68 Md. 579, 13 Atl. 334.

[ll] (Mass. 1835) In an action against a person as a partner, a witness testified in chief that he had given notice of the withdrawal of defendant, and of the general dissolution of the partnership, and that he was "confident that all the neighborhood were notified in two days." On his cross-examination, the plaintiff's counsel inquired whether he gave the same notice to the other creditors of the partnership as he had testified that he gave to the plaintiff; and the witness replied affirmatively, and gave the names of several to whom he had given notice. Held, that it was competent for the plaintiff to call the person so named to prove that the witness had not given them any such notice as he had stated.—Howe v. Thayer, 34 Mass. (17 Pick.) 91.

[lll] (Mass. 1843) Where a witness, on cross-examination, stated what he understood to be the meaning of a certain written contract, made jointly by himself and another with a third person, it was held that the party who cross-examined him could not be permitted to give evidence that, when such contract was made, all the parties thereto understood it to have a meaning different from that stated by the witness.—Brockett v. Bartholomew, 47 Mass. (6 Metc.) 396.

[m] (Mass. 1854) A witness, on cross-examination by the plaintiff, answered in the negative the following question: "Did you not say to W. [another witness], after he had left the stand, that if you had been upon the stand in his place, when cross-examined by the defendant's counsel, you would have said something, even if it had been untrue?" Held, that the plaintiff could not be allowed to contradict this answer by other evidence.—Harrington v. Inhabitants of Lincoln, 68 Mass. (2 Gray) 133.

[mm] (Mass. 1857) On the trial of an indictment for unlawful sales of intoxicating liquors, two witnesses testified that they drank such liquors together at the defendant's shop and other places; one of them testified that his object was to inform against the sellers; but both testified that the other did not know of this object, and he testified that his only object was to gratify his appetite. He was asked, on cross-examination, whether, on leaving one of these places, the other witness did not whistle for him, and answered in the negative. Held, that this answer was immaterial, and could not be contradicted.—Commonwealth v. Farrar, 76 Mass. (10 Gray) 6.

[mmm] (Mass. 1861) In a suit against a railroad company for personal injury from a collision, the defendants' station agent being called as a witness by the defendants, and being inquired of on cross-examination whether he ever asked the plaintiff, or the plaintiff's partner, for a bill of the damage done, or ever obtained more than one bill thereof, or ever said that a certain clerk of the defendants, who was on the train which caused the collision, was going away, and that he wished to take the amount of the bill out of the clerk's wages, and that the clerk was careless, no authority being proved in the agent to do or say these things, it was held that these matters were collateral, and that the answers of the witness could not be contradicted by other evidence.—Fletcher v. Boston & M. R. R., 83 Mass. (1 Allen) 9, 79 Am. Dec. 695.

[n] (Mass. 1867) On a trial for damages by the owners of land taken to extend a street in a city, witnesses for the petitioners testified that the land taken was well adapted to the erection of a large building with two large shops underneath, and that there was, and for several years had been, a large demand for such shops, of 25 feet front by 100 feet deep, in that neighborhood. On cross-examination the witnesses named one of that description in the neighborhood. Held, that the respondents in defense might introduce evidence to show that the dimensions of the shop were different from those testified to by petitioner's witnesses.—Whitney v. City of Boston, 98 Mass. 312.

[nn] (Mass. 1870) Where a mill laborer in an action for a personal injury, which occurred on Monday, testified that she worked that day and part of the next, and the defendant called the overseer, who testified that she worked until sometime Thursday, and on cross-examination said that she came to him Thursday, and said she could not attend to her work, and wanted to be let out, and he let her go, it was competent for plaintiff to testify in rebuttal that this conversation occurred Tuesday, and that she did not see or talk with him afterwards, since the overseer's cross-examination stated a new and material fact which plaintiff had a right to rebut by her own denial.—Sheren v. City of Lowell, 104 Mass. 24.

[nnn] (Mass. 1880) Where, on an indictment for manslaughter, the sister of the person killed, testifying for the government, stated on cross-examination where she and the deceased had lived, it was not improper to exclude evidence by defendant tending to show that the witness had falsely stated the residence of the deceased and herself, as such inquiry as to the residence was not material.—Commonwealth v. Dunan, 128 Mass. 422.

[o] (Mass. 1889) In an action on an account, three of the items of which were notes alleged to have been transferred by defendant to plaintiffs, one of the notes was withdrawn, and no recovery sought thereon. Defendant, on cross-examination, testified that he had never seen that note, and that the indorsement was a forgery. Held, that it was prejudicial error to permit plaintiffs to contradict him, as the matter was collateral, and immaterial.—Alexander v. Kaiser, 149 Mass. 321, 21 N. E. 376.

[oo] (Mass. 1892) Where defendant, on trial for violating the liquor laws, asks witnesses for the state if they were not drunk at another time than that respecting which they testified in chief, which they denied, evidence offered by defendant in rebuttal was properly excluded as immaterial.—Commonwealth v. Jones, 155 Mass. 170, 29 N. E. 467.

[ooo] (Mass. 1894) Where a witness for defendant testified in chief as to a certain conversation with deceased, and, on cross-examination concerning it, testified to another conversation of a later date, plaintiff may in rebuttal contradict the testimony in regard to the second conversation, if it was closely connected with the testimony in chief, was material, and a contradiction tending to discredit the witness.—Cloutier v. Grafton & U. R. Co., 162 Mass. 471, 39 N. E. 110.

[p] (Mass. 1895) In an action for injuries to an employé due to the breaking of a bolt in a paper machine, the manufacturer of the machine testified for defendant, as an expert, that all bolts used in such machines were made of steel, and, on cross-examination, stated that he had sent a new machine to defendant, but that it was improbable that he sent an iron bolt, because none were made at his establishment. Held, that the testimony on cross-examination was immaterial, but that plaintiff was bound thereby, and could not show that an iron bolt was sent with the new machine.—Chalmers v. Whitmore Mfg. Co., 164 Mass. 582, 42 N. E. 98.

[pp] (Mich. 1895) Where, in an action for injuries from a dog bite, a doctor, who was a witness for defendant, testified that he examined plaintiff's leg after he was bitten, and discovered from the scar that there had been an ulcer on the leg before plaintiff was bitten, and plaintiff's counsel showed the witness a scar on his leg, and asked what caused it, and the witness answered that he could not tell, but it was certain that the bone was not involved, and that the scar must have been the result of a flesh wound; that he could not say whether there had been an ulcer or running sore, but that it looked as if there was suppuration; that he could not state whether the bone was injured, but that it was not seriously injured—it was error to allow the counsel to testify that he received the wound from an ax, and that a piece of bone had been taken out, and that there was never any discharge or running sore.—Kennett v. Engle, 105 Mich. 698, 63 N. W. 1009.

[ppp] (Miss. 1896) Where the answer of a witness on cross-examination as to matters not brought out on direct examination would not be admissible if offered in evidence by the cross-examining party, the matter so elicited is collateral, and cannot be contradicted.—Williams v. State, 73 Miss. 820, 19 South. 826.

[q] (Mo. 1884) On a murder trial the father of deceased was asked on cross-examination whether he had not made a certain threat against defendant. And on his denial a witness was introduced to contradict him. Held, that the testimony as it did not raise a collateral issue should have been admitted.—State v. Cooper, 83 Mo. 698.

[qq] (Mo. 1894) A question, on cross-examination, to defendant, sued for the price of goods, who claims that before the sale he had sold out his business, and notified the plaintiff's salesman that he would not be responsible for any more goods purchased in his name, as to whether he had given like notice to salesmen for other houses, is collateral to the issue, and he cannot be contradicted by testimony that he had not given such notice as testified to by him.—

Scharff v. Grossman, 59 Mo. App. 199, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 11.

[qqq] (N. H. 1859) The rule is that any question which could not be proposed by the party calling the witness, because of its immateriality, is inadmissible when proposed on cross-examination by the other party; and if answered, the answer cannot be contradicted.—Combs v. Winchester, 39 N. H. 13, 75 Am. Dec. 203.

[r] (N. H. 1880) On a writ of entry, plaintiff claimed under a deed from a third person, and a witness testified for him that she saw such third person on the day of the deed, and he showed her his money, and stated how much he had received. She was asked on cross-examination, for the purpose of showing that she was not old enough to know anything of the transaction, when and by whom she was married, and she answered that she was married in 1864 by L. Defendants then introduced the widow of L., who testified that he died in 1857. The defendants then offered to show when the witness was married, but the evidence was rejected. Held, that if such testimony tended to weaken her evidence to any greater extent by showing the true date of her marriage, it would be contradicting her on a collateral issue, and to what extent that should be carried was a question for the trial court.—Perkins v. Towle, 59 N. H. 583.

[rr] (N. Y. 1847) In an action on a policy of insurance, where the defense was a fraudulent overestimate of the quantity and value of the property insured, the principal witness for the plaintiff was allowed to be asked, on cross-examination, for the purpose of affecting his credit, whether he had not made false representations as to the plaintiff's responsibility, but it was held that evidence was not admissible to contradict his answer thereto.—Howard v. City Fire Ins. Co., 4 Denio, 502.

[rrr] (N. Y. 1849) It is not collateral, but is relevant, to inquire into the motives which influenced a witness in giving his testimony; and a party cross-examining a witness in regard to them is not bound by his answers, but may contradict him.—People v. Austin, 2 Edm. Sel. Cas. 54.

[s] (N. Y. 1852) A witness cannot be examined as to a distinct collateral fact, for the purpose of impeaching his testimony by contradicting him; but where a witness denies, on his cross-examination, that he had attempted to suborn a witness to swear falsely in the cause, evidence may be given to contradict him in that respect.—Morgan v. Frees, 15 Barb. 352.

[ss] (N. Y. 1857) If upon a question regarding the validity and good faith of a transfer of property from A. to B., A., being called by the party alleging fraud, testifies upon cross-examination that C. was his partner, and was not informed of the sale, the party cross-examining is not estopped to prove that C. had no interest in the business.—Mills v. Carnly, 14 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Bosw.) 159.

[sss] (N. Y. 1868) In an action for damages for the seduction of the plaintiff's daughter, testimony was given by the daughter, on cross-examination by the defendant, concerning certain previous acts of unchastity on her part with other persons. Held, that the defendant might contradict such testimony by other witnesses.—Hogan v. Cregan, 29 N. Y. Super. Ct. (6 Rob.) 138.

[t] (N. Y. 1868) Where, upon cross-examination, a witness is asked how he knows facts testified to by him upon the direct examination and answers by repeating statements made to him by others, the party asking the question does not make such statements evidence against himself.—Monk v. Union Life Ins. Co., 29 N. Y. Super. Ct. (6 Rob.) 455.

[tt] (N. Y. 1887) On a trial for murder, defendant was asked, on cross-examination, if he had entered at night a certain house. He denied this, and swore on redirect examination that he had never entered any house in the night with intent to steal. Held error to allow evidence to contradict these statements, the evidence on cross-examination being collateral to the issue, and the evidence on redirect having been rendered competent by the course of the cross-examination.—People v. Greenwall, 108 N. Y. 296, 15 N. E. 404, 2 Am. St. Rep. 415.

[u] (N. Y. 1887) On prosecution for burglary, defendant sought to show that on the night in question he went home at about 1 o'clock, and for this purpose K. testified that S. left K.'s house about 12:30 on said night, going toward defendant's house near by, and S. testified that in going by he saw defendant entering his house. Held, that cross-examination of S. as to having seen defendant leave his house after having entered it about 1 o'clock was new matter, and the prosecution by going into it made S. their witness, and could not contradict her.—People v. Holfelder, 5 N. Y. St. Rep. 488.

[uu] (N. Y. 1889) Plaintiff may contradict the statement of a witness for defendant, even though such statement is made on plaintiff's cross-examination of the witness.—Darragh v. Ross, 55 Hun, 605, 7 N. Y. Supp. 864, judgment affirmed (1891) 130 N. Y. 641, 29 N. E. 1033.

[v] (N. Y. 1892) Where expert witnesses who have testified as to the handwriting of certain letters are shown other letters, and are asked on cross-examination whether they are in the same handwriting, the cross-examining party is bound by their answer, since it is a collateral issue.—People v. Murphy, 135 N. Y. 450, 32 N. E. 138, affirming (1892) 63 Hun, 624, 17 N. Y. Supp. 427.

[vv] (N. Y. 1892) In an action against a railway company for a personal injury, a physician testified for defendant that before the alleged injury he examined the plaintiff, and found him to be in a condition which with reasonable certainty would have resulted in the disabilities attributed to the injury, and that he was sure of the date, because he had entered it on his books at the time; on cross-examination he stated that he kept a record of his consultations in chronological order. A handwriting expert thereafter testified that in his opinion all the entries in the physician's record purporting to be of different dates were made at the same time. The competency of the expert was not questioned. Held, that this was admissible as going to disprove the alleged consultation, and not in violation of the rule that a party bringing out evidence as to collateral matter on cross-examination cannot thereafter contradict it.—Van Tassel v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. (Com. Pl.) 1 Misc. Rep. 299, 20 N. Y. Supp. 708, judgment affirmed (1894) 142 N. Y. 634, 37 N. E. 566, and distinguishing Gandolfs v. Appleton (1869) 40 N. Y. 533.

[vvv] (N. Y. 1893) Where plaintiff has drawn out of defendant, on cross-examination, that he spoke of plaintiff's claim as a blackmailing scheme, plaintiff may show by competent evidence that this did not correctly represent defendant's attitude when plaintiff's claim was urged upon him.—Chesebrough v. Conover, 66

Hun, 634, 21 N. Y. Supp. 566, 568, judgment affirmed (1893) 140 N. Y. 382, 35 N. E. 633.

[w] (N. Y. 1895) In an action to recover penalty from defendant for practicing medicine without registration as required by law, where it was admitted that defendant was not a registered physician, defendant's testimony on cross-examination that he had never practiced medicine relates, not to a collateral matter, but to a material issue, and therefore plaintiff may contradict it.—City of New York v. Roller (Com. Pl.) 11 Misc. Rep. 324, 32 N. Y. Supp. 139.

[ww] (N. C. 1879) Statements elicited on cross-examination, collateral to the issue, are conclusive, and the witness cannot be contradicted by proof of statements inconsistent therewith, unless they tend to show the temper, disposition, or conduct of the witness in relation to the cause or parties.—State v. Roberts, 81 N. C. 605.

[www] (N. C. 1887) On the trial of defendant for larceny, the prosecuting witness was asked on cross-examination if he had not gone to defendant's house, and finding him absent left a message with his wife. He denied leaving such message, and defendant's wife was called and asked if the witness had not left such a message, but she was not allowed to answer the question. Held, that the answer was properly excluded, as the examination, instead of being general, related to particulars, which were likely to distract the mind of the jury from the real issue.—State v. Ballard, 97 N. C. 443, 1 S. E. 685.

[x] (N. C. 1890) On a criminal trial a witness for the state was asked if he had not written a letter making a false charge against a young man. He answered that he had not, and the defense offered evidence that there was a general report that he had written the letter. Held, that the fact was collateral, and the answer conclusive, and if not, it could not be contradicted by general report.—State v. Hawn, 107 N. C. 810, 12 S. E. 455.

[xx] (N. C. 1895) Where, on prosecution for bastardy, the prosecuting witness testifies on cross-examination that she never had intercourse with any other man, evidence of intercourse with other men at about the time the child was begotten is admissible to impeach her.—State v. Perkins, 117 N. C. 698, 23 S. E. 274.

[xxx] (Ohio, 1879) Where, in an action for breach of warranty in the sale of a horse, defendant is cross-examined as to why he subpœnaed a certain witness, and under objection testifies that he subpœnaed him because he had stated to him that plaintiff said he had injured the horse in driving him across a railroad track, his answers are binding on the plaintiff, and plaintiff cannot call the person subpœnaed by defendant for purposes of contradiction.—Brown v. Hunkin, 2 Cleve. Law Rep. 281, 4 Ohio Dec. 502.

[y] (Pa. 1870) In ejectment defendant alleged that plaintiff concealed his title and encouraged him to buy, and evidence was admitted that defendant had been informed by a stranger of plaintiff's title, and defendant testified on cross-examination that he did not know whether the stranger had informed him. Held, such cross-examination did not relate to a collateral matter, and defendant might be contradicted.—Fehley v. Barr, 66 Pa. (16 P. F. Smith) 196.

[yy] (Pa. 1892) Evidence by defendant, on cross-examination, denying that he had received the proceeds of other notes, not in suit, which had been indorsed by him, and which had been negotiated by the maker, who also negotiated the one in suit, cannot be contradicted by plaintiff in rebuttal, since such cross-examination related to an irrelevant matter.—Second Nat. Bank v. Wentzel, 151 Pa. 142, 24 Atl. 1087, 31 Wkly. Notes Cas. 33.

[yyy] (Tex. 1880) On a trial for aiding a felon to escape from custody, the defendant having elicited from the state's witness a denial that the witness had proposed to certain persons to aid them in effecting the prisoner's release, held, that he should be allowed to contradict the denial by the testimony of those persons.—Butler v. State, 7 Tex. App. 635.

[z] (Tex. 1880) On trial for theft an accomplice testified that he aided defendant in carrying the goods to market, but on cross-examination denied that on the way defendant told T. that the accomplice owned the cotton and had employed defendant to sell it. Held, that the defense were entitled to prove by T. that the defendant did make such statement.—Turney v. State, 9 Tex. App. 192.

[zz] (Tex. 1889) The issue being as to defendant's identity, a witness was asked by the state on cross-examination if he had received a letter from defendant after the commission of the crime, asking if defendant was accused of it. Held, that as the witness denied receiving the letter the state could not call another witness to contradict the testimony.—Johnson v. State, 27 Tex. App. 168, 11 S. W. 106.

[zzz] (Vt. 1840) A witness may be cross-examined as to any collateral fact which has any tendency to test his accuracy or veracity, but the party must be bound by the answers of the witness, and cannot adduce proof in contradiction of such answers.—Stevens v. Beach, 12 Vt. 585, 36 Am. Dec. 359.

[zzzz] (Vt. 1862) Where a witness, on cross-examination, is inquired of regarding a new subject, not connected with any matter for which his evidence was offered by the other side, but for the benefit of the cross-examining party, the latter cannot contradict his reply to such inquiry.—Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398.

§ 1276. Competency of contradictory evidence.

Competency of husband or wife, see ante, § 135.

[a] (Ala. 1885) A witness cannot be impeached by proof of declarations of third persons, not made in his presence.—Clarke v. State, 78 Ala. 474, 56 Am. Rep. 45.

[b] (Cal. 1894) A writ of attachment, and the sheriff's return thereon, in a certain case between plaintiff and his vendor, and a memorandum furnished by the garnishee, are admissible in connection with a cross-examination of such garnishee when they tend to contradict statements made by him on direct examination.—Nichol v. Laumeister, 102 Cal. 658, 36 Pac. 925.

[c] (Colo. 1895) In an action for personal injuries, defendant offered to prove in rebuttal, by an insurance agent and the books of the company, that certain scars claimed by the plaintiff to be the result of the injury were in fact caused prior thereto. Held admissible to affect the character and credibility of the witness.—Globe Smelting & Refining Co. v. Spann, 6 Colo. App. 146, 40 Pac. 198.

[d] (Ga. 1871) On a criminal trial, a witness denied that one P. had sued the defendant in her name. The court permitted proof to be made that a suit was pending in her name by P. as her next friend, but refused to permit the declaration and accompanying papers to be read to the jury. Held, that this was not error; as the contents of the papers were not material to the issue, which was simply whether or not a suit had been brought by P. in the witness' name.—Powers v. State, 44 Ga. 209.

[e] (Me. 1845) When a witness has been introduced and has testified, testimony to contradict him is not to be excluded as hearsay.—State v. Blake, 25 Me. (12 Shep.) 350.

[b] (Cal. 1894) A writ of attachment, and the sheriff's return thereon, in a certain case between plaintiff and his vendor, and a memorandum furnished by the garnishee, are admissible in connection with a cross-examination of such garnishee when they tend to contradict statements made by him on direct examination.—Nichol v. Laumeister, 102 Cal. 658, 36 Pac. 925.

[c] (Colo. 1895) In an action for personal injuries, defendant offered to prove in rebuttal, by an insurance agent and the books of the company, that certain scars claimed by the plaintiff to be the result of the injury were in fact caused prior thereto. Held admissible to affect the character and credibility of the witness.—Globe Smelting & Refining Co. v. Spann, 6 Colo. App. 146, 40 Pac. 198.

[d] (Ga. 1871) On a criminal trial, a witness denied that one P. had sued the defendant in her name. The court permitted proof to be made that a suit was pending in her name by P. as her next friend, but refused to permit the declaration and accompanying papers to be read to the jury. Held, that this was not error; as the contents of the papers were not material to the issue, which was simply whether or not a suit had been brought by P. in the witness' name.—Powers v. State, 44 Ga. 209.

[e] (Me. 1845) When a witness has been introduced and has testified, testimony to contradict him is not to be excluded as hearsay.—State v. Blake, 25 Me. (12 Shep.) 350.

[f] (Md. 1843) The declarations of a person who is a competent witness cannot be offered in evidence merely because they are in reply to the testimony of other witnesses.—Whiteford v. Burckmyer, 1 Gill, 127, 39 Am. Dec. 640.

[g] (Md. 1883) Where a witness in a will contest had testified on cross-examination that he had been on friendly terms with the testator up to the time of the latter's death, evidence that the testator had used unfriendly language relative to such witness, out of his presence, was not admissible to impeach the witness, without proof that the witness had heard or knew of such language.—Layman v. Conrey, 60 Md. 286.

[h] (Mass. 1855) Where testimony to a fact is founded mainly on a written memorandum, which the witness testifies was made by himself at the time, and which was produced by him at a former trial, and since lost, the other party may show, for the purpose of discrediting the witness, that the memorandum then produced was not in his handwriting.—Commonwealth v. Hunt, 70 Mass. (4 Gray) 421.

[i] (Mass. 1863) If, in an action to recover for services as salesman, the plaintiff has testified on cross-examination that the defendants did not, at a particular time while he was in their employment, state to him the amount of his sales and of those by the other salesmen, the defendants, after contradicting him in this respect, cannot be allowed to testify what they stated to him that the amount of his sales was.—Greene v. Washburn, 89 Mass. (7 Allen) 390.

[j] (Mass. 1890) As it is not competent to show that the bell was usually rung at the crossing, for the purpose of showing that it was rung at the time of the accident, so it cannot be shown that it was not always rung, for the purpose of contradicting a witness whose cross-examination shows that he, in his statement that the bell was rung, relies largely, though not wholly, on the fact that it was usually rung.—Tuttle v. Fitchburg R. Co., 152 Mass. 42, 25 N. E. 19.

[k] (Mass. 1892) Since it is not admissible to impeach a defendant's testimony by showing that on a former trial for a like offense he raised a similar issue, and was contradicted, it is error to admit evidence of such former trial as preliminary to proof of such contradiction.—Commonwealth v. Lannan, 155 Mass. 168, 29 N. E. 467.

[l] (Mich. 1889) In an action for personal injuries caused to an employé by the giving way of a lumber dock on which he was at work, where one of defendant's employés, whose duty it was to inspect and repair the docks, testifies that he had no knowledge of any defect in them, it is competent, for the purpose of impeaching him, to prove that he was told before the accident that the dock was unsafe.—Van Dusen v. Letellier, 78 Mich. 492, 44 N. W. 572.

[m] (Mich. 1892) The testimony of a witness in regard to the mental condition of testatrix at the time testatrix was visiting her cannot be contradicted by letters written by witness' husband to the husband of testatrix at the time of the visit.—Prentis v. Bates, 93 Mich. 234, 53 N. W. 153, reversing (1891) 88 Mich. 567, 50 N. W. 637.

[n] (Mo. 1894) On trial for perjury committed on trial of defendant for assault, testimony showing that, after the assault, defendant's son had said, "T, looked so funny when pa drew the hatchet," and the reply of defendant's wife thereto, is admissible, though the son was not a witness, to contradict the testimony of the wife that no such conversation took place.—State v. Higgins, 124 Mo. 640, 28 S. W. 178.

[o] (N. Y. 1887) The credibility of a witness may be attacked by contradicting him by circumstances as well as by statements of others contrary to his own.—Griswold v. Learned, 9 N. Y. St. Rep. 242.

[p] (Pa. 1890) On a trial for an assault with intent to kill, the accused testified in his own behalf. Held, that a record of his conviction for a manslaughter was admissible in rebuttal to impeach his credibility; and that his testimony that he had lived at home continuously for two years might be contradicted by a record showing that, during part of the time, he was undergoing imprisonment for an assault and battery, the latter record being admitted to show this only, and not being rendered incompetent by the fact that it would be likely to prejudice his case.—Commonwealth v. Barry, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 216.

[q] (Tex. 1881) Where a witness testifies that he did not testify in a certain case, a transcript of the record in the case which contained a copy of witness' deposition is not admissible to show the unreliability of his memory.—Coleman v. Smith, 55 Tex. 254.

[r] (Tex. 1888) An agreed statement of facts prepared by counsel on a former appeal is inadmissible to contradict the evidence of a witness on a subsequent trial.—Sinclair v. Stanley, 69 Tex. 711, 7 S. W. 511.

[s] (Tex. 1891) In trespass to try title, where a witness has testified that he paid the taxes on land in controversy during certain years, the certificate of the comptroller showing the payment of such taxes by another person is admissible in evidence to contradict him.—McCamant v. Roberts, 80 Tex. 316, 15 S. W. 580.

[t] (Tex. 1892) An hotel register is admissible in rebuttal of testimony that one stopped there during certain months.—Gilmour v. Heinze, 85 Tex. 76, 19 S. W. 1075.

[u] (Tex. 1895) Defendant's witness testified on cross-examination that he never heard deceased positively accuse defendant of having assaulted him. Held, that the state, after laying the foundation therefor, could impeach the witness by showing that he was present on a former occasion, when deceased declared that he was sure defendant assaulted him.—Easterwood v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 400, 31 S. W. 294.

[v] (W. Va. 1888) A witness for the contestants testified that testator, in giving his evidence in an action in ejectment, was incoherent. On cross-examination he said he had the stenographer's notes of the evidence in the action; that the stenographer was not sworn, but that the notes were substantially correct. Held, that it was proper to allow the proponents, to contradict the witness, to read the notes to the jury.—Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 659, 8 S. E. 493, 2 L. R. A. 668.

[w] (Wis. 1872) Where witnesses examined as medical experts testified that certain books, recognized as standard authorities in the profession, laid down certain propositions, or sustained certain conclusions, held not error to admit in evidence the books themselves, for the purpose of discrediting the witnesses.—City of Ripon v. Bittel, 30 Wis. 614.

[x] (Wis. 1875) On trial in the circuit court of a case appealed from a justice's court, where the justice, on being examined for the purpose of showing what the evidence testified on the trial before him was, used his minutes to refresh his memory, such minutes are competent to impeach the testimony of the justice.—Zitske v. Goldberg, 38 Wis. 216.

[y] (Wis. 1883) Where plaintiff denies knowledge of the fact that a horse, given by him in exchange for cattle, was blind at the time, evidence of what a third party said to him just before the time of the exchange, as to the condition of the horse's eyes, is admissible.—Dowling v. Lawrence, 58 Wis. 282, 16 N. W. 552.

§ 1277. —— Tendency to contradict, and extent of inconsistency.

[a] (Ala. 1845) Where the vendor of a plantation and slaves, in giving testimony, with a view to support the sale, stated that he acted as the vendee's overseer, it was allowable for the adverse party to inquire of another witness whether he ever knew the vendor to act as an overseer of the vendee.—Borland v. Mayo, 8 Ala. 104.

[b] (Cal. 1890) In an action to quiet title, defendant claimed under a grant made by the Mexican governor of California in 1838, but plaintiff alleged that such grant was really made in 1848, after California had become subject to the United States. The scribe who testified as to a positive recollection that he wrote the petition for the grant in question on the day of its date, February 3, 1838, said on cross-examination that, while on his way to his brother's Rancho El Refugio, he had met the grantee, and that this was before he wrote the petition. Held proper to show by another witness that El Refugio was not granted to witness' brother until 1846.—Davis v. California Powder Works, 84 Cal. 617, 24 Pac. 387.

[c] (Cal. 1890) In an action to quiet title, defendant claimed under a grant made by the Mexican governor of California in 1838, but plaintiff alleged that such grant was really made in 1848, after California had become subject to the United States. One who was formerly a Mexican alcalde's assistant stated that in 1841 or 1842 he had seen in the archives the title papers of the grantee under whom defendant claims, and to give probability to the statement testified as to several matters tending to show his knowledge of the archives. On cross-examination as to the extent of his familiarity, he mentioned that he had seen a certain grant therein in 1836 or 1837. Held proper to show that such grant was not made until 1841.—Davis v. California Powder Works, 84 Cal. 617, 24 Pac. 387.

[d] (Cal. 1891) Where defendant in a murder trial testified that shortly before the time at which the crime was alleged to have been committed he and a witness for the state had a quarrel, and on a certain bridge he had knocked said witness down, it was proper to admit in rebuttal evidence that said bridge was muddy at that time, and that the clothes of said witness were free from mud when he reached the place where the alleged crime was committed.—People v. Freeman, 92 Cal. 359, 28 Pac. 261.

[e] (Cal. 1894) On a prosecution of a police officer for killing deceased, who was being pursued by a person shouting "Stop thief!" such person, having testified for defendant, may be impeached by evidence that, a few days before, he had a quarrel with deceased, he having testified that he never saw him before the time of the shooting.—People v. Kilvington, 36 Pac. 13.

[f] (Ga. 1858) Where a witness testified that he heard the parties to a note say that the consideration was the surrender of a certain draft, it was proper to show that the draft was in the possession of the plaintiff and not surrendered, as it tended to discredit the witness.—Cartright v. Clopton, 25 Ga. 85.

[g] (Ga. 1885) One of the payees of a note, who testifies that he advanced $1,000 to the maker to pay his sisters for their interest in certain lands, may be contradicted or impeached by introducing the deed from the sisters to the maker reciting $500 as its consideration, together with the testimony of the draftsman that he was the attorney of the payees, and upon examining the title found that it was necessary to put the title to the sister's interest in the maker in order that the deed securing the note might be good security, and that his recollection is that the maker conveyed other property to his sisters for their interest.—National Bank of Augusta v. Cunningham, 75 Ga. 366.

[h] (Ga. 1896) In an action against a railroad company for the death of a trespasser killed by a train, the engineer on the locomotive which drew the train stated that he gave his testimony concerning the speed of the train and regarding the location of the brakemen thereon partly from recollection and partly from the rules of the company as to what his and their duties were. Held, that evidence of the violation of one of said rules by the brakeman on the train was not admissible as going to reduce the strength of the witness' testimony, on the ground that he swore according to rule.—Fink v. Ash, 99 Ga. 106, 24 S. E. 976.

[i] (Ill. 1891) Where, in a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, the prosecuting witness had sworn that she had no acquaintance with the defendant, and a witness for the defense testifies that defendant had previously been in witness' room, evidence as to what was done on that occasion is irrelevant.—Crosby v. People, 137 Ill. 325, 27 N. E. 49.

[j] (Iowa, 1892) In an action for the purchase price of a reaper, a witness, who has testified as to defendant's admission when witness "went there to sell him" another machine, cannot be impeached by showing that the contract for the last machine was in the handwriting of some person other than the witness, as such fact is immaterial.—Hoover v. Cary, 86 Iowa, 494, 53 N. W. 415.

[jj] (Ky. 1889) Defendant testified that, about a year before the killing, deceased had applied to him as a physician; told him that he had seduced a certain girl, and had given her medicine, from which she was suffering, and wanted defendant to relieve her; that, on defendant's refusing, deceased became angry and threatened him. Held, that it was competent for the state to show, as tending to contradict this testimony, that at the time indicated there was nothing the matter with the girl.—Commonwealth v. Hourigan, 89 Ky. 305, 12 S. W. 550.

[k] (Md. 1853) In a petition for freedom, the petitioner offered in evidence the will under which he claimed his freedom, and the defendant proved that the testatrix, long before the execution of the will, gave and delivered the petitioner's mother to the witness as a slave for life, and that while the mother was so held in slavery by witness, the petitioner was born, and was afterwards sold to defendant. Held, that it was error to admit the will, inventory, and administration account, disposing of and treating the petitioner as part of the estate of the testatrix, for the purpose of impeaching this witness, there being nothing to show that he had any knowledge of the contents of the will when executed, or authorized or sanctioned the correctness of the inventory or accounts.—Steuart v. Williams, 3 Md. 425.

[kk] (Mass. 1848) A witness having testified that the defendant had told him "that there was a house in Lowell which had been his brother's, but that by some agreement the defendant could have a deed of it any day, and that he would place it in the hands of the witness as collateral security," the defendant, with a view to contradict the witness, offered the evidence of his brother to prove that the defendant had no interest in or control of the house alluded to. Held, that the evidence was inadmissible, on the ground that it did not tend to show what the defendant had or had not told the witness.—Commonwealth v. Parker, 56 Mass. (2 Cush.) 212.

[l] (Mass. 1850) The defendants, in an action on a policy of insurance against fire, having introduced evidence, under their specification of defense, that after the date of the policy the plaintiff's ashes had been deposited in wooden vessels contrary to a stipulation in his application for insurance, the plaintiff called witnesses, who testified that they had never known the plaintiff's ashes to be deposited in wooden vessels, and upon cross-examination by the defendants stated that they had never known the plaintiff's ashes to be so deposited since the house was built in 1838. Held, that the defendants could not thereupon introduce witnesses to prove that, in 1844, which was before the execution of the policy, wooden vessels were the ordinary places of deposit for the plaintiff's ashes.—Underhill v. Agawam Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 440.

[ll] (Mass. 1857) Testimony that certain statements were made to a witness cannot be contradicted by evidence that the statements to which he testifies were not true.—Collins v. Stephenson, 74 Mass. (8 Gray) 438.

[m] (Mass. 1857) In an action for breach of promise of marriage, the plaintiff testified that, after the intimacy between the parties was broken off, she boarded at the same house as the defendant and another woman, whom he afterwards married, and that she never knew or heard of any intimacy between them before the marriage. Held, that evidence that during that time the defendant was publicly attentive to his present wife, with the plaintiff's knowledge, was immaterial, and therefore inadmissible to contradict the plaintiff.—Ray v. Smith, 75 Mass. (9 Gray) 141.

[mm] (Mass. 1859) In an action by a mother against two sons for money paid to their use, one of the defendants contended that the money was paid to the sole use of the other, and testified that he asked his mother to give him a note for the amount which he feared he should have to pay for his brother, and she offered to give him a mortgage of part of her farm. Held, that evidence of her having in former years paid money for him, and given him the use of the farm, was incompetent to contradict his testimony.—Farnum v. Farnum, 79 Mass. (13 Gray) 508.

[n] (Mass. 1886) At the trial of a complaint charging the defendant with the illegal keeping of intoxicating liquor with intent to sell the same, the defendant having testified that the liquor found on his premises, which was a barrel of ale, was a present to him, it is competent for the government, for the purpose of contradicting the defendant, to introduce a receipted bill for a barrel of ale from the person alleged by the defendant to have given the liquor to him, the bill bearing a date nearly corresponding to the date of the seizure; and the fact that the bill was received and retained by the defendant as a voucher is in the nature of an admission by him that the ale was bought and paid for.—Commonwealth v. Carbin, 143 Mass. 124, 8 N. E. 896.

[nn] (Mass. 1886) On a trial for polygamy, the alleged first wife having testified that she was married to defendant, it is competent, for the purpose of contradicting her testimony, to introduce evidence tending to show the character of her associates on an occasion during the time when she was living with the defendant, when, upon being remonstrated with by defendant's sister for leaving home very late at night in company with a man and woman, and being asked to come back, she replied: "I will not; I have a right to do as I have a mind to,"—such an expression by the alleged wife being in itself ambiguous and capable of having any one of various shades of meaning.—Commonwealth v. Lee, 143 Mass. 100, 9 N. E. 11.

[o] (Mass. 1886) Upon a trial for polygamy, the alleged first wife having testified to a marriage between herself and defendant, evidence of lewd conduct on her part is not admissible to contradict her testimony as to the marriage.—Commonwealth v. Lee, 143 Mass. 100, 9 N. E. 11.

[oo] (Mass. 1888) In an action for injuries received by plaintiff while running defendants' machine, plaintiff admitted that it was not his regular duty to attend to the machine, but showed that there was a custom in defendants' mill that when the regular workman was obliged to absent himself temporarily, to call in other employés, and that the regular workman of this machine asked plaintiff to run it. Held, that it was proper to admit in rebuttal the evidence of another workman that the regular workman had asked him to run the machine on the same occasion.—Hoar v. Abbott, 146 Mass. 290, 15 N. E. 659.

[p] (Mass. 1895) In an action for personal injuries testimony as to plaintiff's habits of sobriety is not admissible to contradict evidence, brought out on cross-examination, that he had been seen several times intoxicated before the accident.—Carr v. West End St. Ry. Co., 163 Mass. 360, 40 N. E. 185.

[pp] (Mich. 1891) In a suit for attorney's fees, where an attorney testifies that his client authorized him to employ plaintiff to assist in the case, it is competent to show, as affecting his credibility, that he had agreed to conduct the case to a successful issue.—Fraser v. Haggerty, 86 Mich. 521, 49 N. W. 616.

[q] (Mich. 1893) Where testimony is taken by a court stenographer, the mere statement of the witness thereafter that he does not recollect giving such testimony will not impeach the stenographer's evidence, or justify a finding that he did not so testify.—Gillespie v. Beecher, 96 Mich. 486, 56 N. W. 69.

[qq] (Mich. 1895) On a trial for forgery committed November 23, 1891, at Kalamazoo, Mich., P., a witness for defendant, testified that on that date the accused was in Detroit, and that witness borrowed money of him, giving his note therefor, which he paid April 11, 1892, to the defendant personally, at Detroit. Held, that evidence that accused was in Minnesota on April 11, 1892, was competent, as bearing upon the credibility of P.'s evidence.—People v. De France, 104 Mich. 563, 62 N. W. 709, 28 L. R. A. 139.

[r] (Minn. 1871) When a witness testifies that he made a payment at a certain time, and, on cross-examination, that he knows he so made it because he "sold" a piece of land about that time, the record of the deed is not admissible to show that the sale was at a later time, since the deed could only show the date of the conveyance and not the date of the sale.—Goodell v. Ward, 17 Minn. 17 (Gil. 1).

[rr] (Minn. 1881) A witness for the state on a trial for murder stated that on the trial of one R. for the same homicide with which defendant was charged, the testimony given by her, which bore strongly against R. and in exculpation of defendant, was given under threats of personal violence made by defendant. Held, that an offer by defendant to prove by a justice of the peace that he and the county attorney before the trial of R. assured the witness officially that she would be protected in telling the truth, was properly excluded as not tending to disprove the duress.—State v. Lawlor, 28 Minn. 216, 9 N. W. 698.

[s] (Minn. 1895) The person whom it was alleged defendant procured to commit the murder testified that, after shooting deceased, she fell back in her seat in the buggy, in which she was riding with witness, and sat still. To contradict the witness, defendant offered expert evidence that a person shot as was deceased would instantly become limp. Held, that the evidence did not have a tendency to contradict the witness, and hence was properly excluded.—State v. Hayward, 62 Minn. 474, 65 N. W. 63.

[ss] (Miss. 1879) Where a witness stated in a former trial that deceased was in a certain position when shot, but on a subsequent trial an expert having stated that the wound was received while deceased was in a certain other position, and witness in her testimony in such subsequent action did not repeat the statement made by her on the former trial, it was inadmissible to prove that the expert was not examined in the former trial, as the proposed testimony was not contradictory of her testimony.—Cannon v. State, 57 Miss. 147.

[t] (N. H. 1884) Where a witness has testified that he does not remember a certain conversation, proof that he was specially requested to remember it does not tend to controvert his testimony.—Pinkham v. Benton, 63 N. H. 226.

[tt] (N. Y. 1861) Where, on the trial of an indictment for seduction under a promise of marriage, the prosecutrix testified that she had never had sexual intercourse with any other person than defendant, it was proper for the defense, as showing facts from which the jury could infer such intercourse, to prove by a witness that he had seen her commit wanton or lewd acts toward some other person than defendant.—People v. McArdle, 5 Parker, Cr. R. 180.

[u] (N. Y. 1880) On the trial of one charged as accessory to the crime of arson, evidence that the prisoner conferred with the principal after the fire was admissible, he having denied that he knew them.—Levy v. People, 80 N. Y. 327.

[uu] (N. Y. 1890) Where a witness incidentally stated that at the place where a boat was burned the distance between high and low water mark upon the beach was about 700 feet, the fact that another witness estimated it at only 200 feet was not such a contradiction as to impeach or cast discredit upon the former's testimony that a watchman was kept upon the boat, as required by an insurance policy.—Plyer v. German-American Ins. Co., 121 N. Y. 689, 24 N. E. 929, reversing (1888) 48 Hun, 618, 1 N. Y. Supp. 395.

[v] (N. Y. 1890) The same witness testified that when a surveyor came to make an examination of the boat for the purpose of insurance he said that if defendant insured the dredge he would want it to "lay at anchor, separate from this hulk" (referring to a storeship owned by the witness, at which the repairs had been made). Held, the fact that the surveyor testified that he "made no request to have the position of the dredge changed," was not a contradiction and had no tendency to discredit the witness' testimony as to the watchman.—Plyer v. German-American Ins. Co., 121 N. Y. 689, 24 N. E. 929, reversing (1888) 48 Hun, 618, 1 N. Y. Supp. 395.

[vv] (N. Y. 1890) Where the testimony of the owner of the repair ship and that of another witness, as to the presence of the watchman, was uncontradicted except as above stated, plaintiff was entitled to a charge that such presence was conclusively proved, and was not open to question by the jury.—Plyer v. German-American Ins. Co., 121 N. Y. 689, 24 N. E. 929, reversing (1888) 48 Hun, 618, 1 N. Y. Supp. 395.

[w] (N. Y. 1893) In an action for the contract price of thermometers manufactured by plaintiffs, at defendants' instance, for use as an advertising medium in defendants' brewing business, evidence that for a long time before the contract was entered into thermometers had been in general and notorious use as a medium of advertisement is admissible to impeach one of defendants' witnesses, who testified that he was induced to make the contract on the faith of plaintiffs' false representation that thermometers were a novel and original medium of advertising in the brewing business, and that plaintiffs had not theretofore supplied any brewers with them.—Pharo v. Beadleston (Com. Pl.) 2 Misc. Rep. 424, 21 N. Y. Supp. 989, affirming judgment (City Ct. N. Y. 1892) 19 N. Y. Supp. 816.

[ww] (Tex. 1863) In an action for goods sold by a firm, a clerk testified that he sold part of the goods, and that most of them were charged in the handwriting of W., one of the firm. W. testified that he kept the books, that the items of the account sued on were correct, and that he had no other proof of the account than the books, and the testimony of the former witness, and himself. Held, that evidence was admissible for the defense that there were other clerks in the establishment at the time of the alleged sales.—Hastings v. Bachelor, 27 Tex. 259.

[x] (Tex. 1892) On issues as to the right of property in a stock of dry goods between the claimant and attaching creditors of the debtors, the testimony of an experienced merchant in the town where claimant had the goods, that certain articles of the stock were not of the amount and character usually carried by a retail house there, was admissible in rebuttal of claimant's testimony that he bought the goods to establish a retail store.—Gilmour v. Heinze, 85 Tex. 76, 19 S. W. 1075.

[xx] (Tex. 1893) A witness for the prosecution having testified that, if he did make certain statements in the presence of W., it was because he thought W. was the attorney for defendant, evidence is admissible that at the time the conversation occurred W. was not defendant's attorney.—Smith v. State (Cr. App.) 20 S. W. 554.

[y] (Vt. 1867) A witness, who had been an attorney in a former suit, testified that he did not direct the sheriff to take M. and N. as receiptors for the property therein attached. To impeach him, N. was offered as a witness to testify that he was informed by the attorney that the plaintiff in that suit had told him (the attorney) to direct the sheriff to take M. as a receiptor. Held, that the evidence was inadmissible, as it did not contradict the attorney's statement.—Hine v. Pomeroy, 39 Vt. 211.

[yy] (Vt. 1888) Where defendant had told a man that he had not heard of the crime till a certain time, evidence that the matter was notorious in the community before that time is relevant.—State v. Flint, 60 Vt. 304, 14 Atl. 178.

[z] (Wis. 1871) In an action for the price of piling furnished by plaintiff to defendants, under a verbal contract, to be used in constructing a bridge for a railroad company, evidence as to the terms of another and entirely independent contract between defendants and a third party, another furnishing piling for the same bridge, is not admissible for the purpose of contradicting the answers of a witness for defendants to questions put to him on cross-examination relating to such independent contract in order to discredit him, nor for any other purpose.—Posey v. Rice, 29 Wis. 93.

[zz] (Wis. 1879) Plaintiff testified that he had stated that at the date a note fell due gold was falling. Held, that evidence that after the note was made, and before its maturity, gold advanced was incompetent to discredit plaintiff's testimony.—St. Maries v. Polleys, 47 Wis. 67; 1 N. W. 389.

§ 1278. Examination of contradicting witness.

[a] (U. S. 1816) The court will not permit plaintiff to put a question to a witness called by him to rebut defendant's testimony, which is not intended to contradict or discredit defendant's witnesses, and which question is not rendered necessary by evidence given by defendant.—Evans v. Eaton, Fed. Cas. No. 4,559 [Pet. C. C. 322; 1 Robb, Pat. Cas. 68].

[b] (U. S. 1881) A leading question is one which suggests or leads to the answer, and which embodies a material fact, and can be directly answered by yes or no. Such a question cannot be put on main examination even to contradict another witness.—United States v. Angell (C. C.) 11 Fed. 34.

[c] (U. S. 1869) Where a witness has sworn to a declaration made officially by a public officer, and the officer is called to contradict it, the question put to him must be limited to the precise statement of the former witness.—Cobb v. United States, 5 Ct. Cl. 176.

[d] (Colo. 1890) In an action in which the issue was as to whether a conveyance to plaintiff was in fraud of creditors, one who had contemplated associating himself with plaintiff in the purchase testified to statements made to him before the sale by one W., acting for the grantor, which showed fraudulent intent on the part of the latter. Held, that plaintiff could interrogate W. by direct questions for the purpose of contradicting such testimony.—Grimes v. Hill, 15 Colo. 359, 25 Pac. 698.

[e] (Ga. 1857) A witness may, in the discretion of the judge, be recalled and examined in a leading manner, to contradict a witness, introduced to attack his credit.—Thomasson v. State, 22 Ga. 499.

[f] (Ga. 1859) Leading questions are no more admissible in the case of an impeaching and contradicting witness, than in any other case.—Allen v. State, 28 Ga. 395, 73 Am. Dec. 760.

[g] (Ind. 1859) Unless the witnesses were ordered not to converse with the parties, it is no impropriety for a party to tell a witness called in rebuttal, or contradiction, what the testimony on the other side has been.—Horne v. Williams, 12 Ind. 324.

[h] (Iowa, 1895) Where a witness for the state testified that H., who was jointly indicted with defendant, said, in the presence of defendant and S., "Because we got the best of a railroad man, they want to drive us off the face of the earth," deceased having been a railroad man, it was not error, while S. was a witness for the defense, to exclude a question by defendant's counsel as to whether he heard H. say, in the presence of defendant and the other witness, "But, now we got the best of railroad men, they want to run us off the earth, or something like that;" it being too indefinite to establish a contradiction.—State v. Weems, 96 Iowa, 426, 65 N. W. 387.

[i] (Mich. 1892) In an action involving the issue as to whether a transfer of hogs and other chattels had been made by a debtor to his father-in-law to defraud creditors, or whether it had been made in good faith to pay the debtor's notes held by the father-in-law, the latter testified that, at the time the notes were made, the debtor agreed to pay them in the fall when he butchered his hogs. The debtor testified on cross-examination that the first talk he had with the father-in-law about letting him have the hogs in payment on the notes was about two weeks before the transfer. He was then asked: "Then it is not correct, as your father testified, that, when he let you have the money in the spring, the talk was that, when you killed your hogs in the fall, you would pay him? Have any such talk as that?" Held, that the clause, "as your father testified," had no proper place in the question, and that there was nothing to prevent a full inquiry without using it; and it was not error to exclude the question, unless such clause was left out.—Daniels v. Weeks, 90 Mich. 190, 51 N. W. 273.

[j] (N. Y. 1870) Where a plaintiff introduces testimony of an admission by the defendant, made in the course of a conversation, the defendant is entitled to meet the evidence given by testimony equally strong and emphatic, and a question put to him by his counsel, requiring a direct, categorical answer on that point, cannot be excluded as leading, since it involves a contradiction of the plaintiff's witness on a material point.—Potter v. Bissell, 3 Lans. 205.

[k] (N. Y. 1892) In an action by an accountant against an executor for services rendered him in preparing accounts of the estate, a question to defendant: "Mr. D. [plaintiff] has testified that in July, 1885, you requested him to write up the accounts of this estate for you. Is that true?"—does not suggest either an affirmative or negative answer, and is not leading.—Douglass v. Leonard (Com. Pl.) 17 N. Y. Supp. 591, reversing Douglas v. Same (City Ct. N. Y. 1891) 14 N. Y. Supp. 274.

[l] (N. C. 1857) One of the circumstances authorizing departure from the rule forbidding leading questions is where one witness is called to contradict another, in which case the interrogatory may be permitted to embrace the language proposed to be contradicted.—Gunter v. Watson, 49 N. C. 455.

[m] (N. C. 1887) An inquiry was put in the terms: "State whether or not the testimony of Fanny Turner, as to throwing a bucket of water upon Mrs. Crabtree, is true." Held, that the question was not allowable in that form, but that it should be so put as to disprove the statement of the witness, and not merely assail her veracity.—Scoggins v. Turner, 98 N. C. 135, 3 S. E. 719.

[n] (Ohio, 1894) When a witness testifies that certain language was used by another person, such person may be called and asked if he used that identical language, and he is not simply to be inquired of as to what he did say, nor is it necessary to ask the time and place where such statements were made.—Stribley v. Welz, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 571, 4 O. C. D. 520.

§ 1279. —— Recalling witness.

[a] (Ga. 1873) A plaintiff who has been examined may nevertheless be re-examined in rebuttal of defendant's testimony.—Rust v. Shackleford, 47 Ga. 538.

[b] (Md. 1883) Where a witness in an equity suit has been examined, he cannot be recalled without leave of court for the purpose of contradicting what a witness on the other side before testified to, the right of recall not having been reserved, and there being no agreement for a further examination.—Girault v. Adams, 61 Md. 1.

[c] (Mo. 1892) When the attending physician has testified fully as to the extent of plaintiff's injuries, and a physician called by defendant, who has examined plaintiff, testifies that the injuries are slighter than the other stated, and, on cross-examination, that he thinks attendance for two weeks after the injury would have been enough, the court may, in its discretion, refuse to allow the attending physician to testify as an expert whether plaintiff would have required medical attendance for a longer time, since such witness, having been fully examined previously, it is discretionary with the court to permit or deny his re-examination on such collateral matters.—Coppersmith v. Mound City Ry. Co., 51 Mo. App. 357.

[d] (Mo. 1893) It is discretionary with the trial court to permit the recall of a witness to impeach a statement of defendant, where no new matter, but a strict rebuttal of matter about which defendant had been fully examined, was elicited.—State v. Murphy, 118 Mo. 7, 25 S. W. 95.

[e] (N. J. 1881) The rule that a witness cannot, without leave of the court, be re-examined on a matter as to which he has been previously examined, does not prevent the recalling of a witness in rebuttal.—Osborne v. O'Reilly, 34 N. J. Eq. (7 Stew.) 60.

[f] (Pa. 1870) A witness for plaintiff testified that what he said was all that occurred in the making of an alleged contract, but defendant testified that he had required security before he would execute the contract. Held, that it was proper to examine the witness in rebuttal to contradict the defendant as to the security, since if what was testified to by the defendant did not take place, the fact that it did not could not have been drawn out in chief.—Brown v. Finney, 67 Pa. (17 P. F. Smith) 214.

[g] (Tex. 1860) Plaintiff may recall a witness for the purpose of rebutting defendant's testimony.—Dunham v. Forbes, 25 Tex. 23.

§ 1280. Rebuttal of contradiction.

[a] (La. 1889) A witness who has testified in a particular manner in his first examination, and who is sought to be contradicted by the defense, can be heard, in rebuttal, to testify as to a new matter brought out in the attempt to contradict or impeach him, where the witness had not testified on that subject when examined in chief.—State v. Claire, 41 La. Ann. 1067, 6 South. 806.

[b] (Neb. 1888) The plaintiff was cross-examined as to where he derived the money used in the purchase of property in litigation, and, having answered that a portion of it had been received in payment of a loan made to his father, an attempt having been made to discredit his statement, he was permitted to testify, in rebuttal, as to where he obtained the funds out of which said loan was made. Held no error.—Campbell v. Holland, 22 Neb. 587, 35 N. W. 871.

[c] (Pa. 1851) The object of an offer to rebut testimony must be stated with sufficient particularity to show whether it was entitled to be considered as rebutting.—Branch v. Johnson, 1 Phila. 206.

§ 1281. Explanation of contradiction.

[b] (Miss. 1882) After an attachment defendant has denied on cross-examination that he loaned certain sums of money to a claimant of the attached property, and plaintiff thereupon contradicts him by introducing checks and bank notes evidencing payment of such sums from defendant to the claimant, together with testimony that the sums were credited on the books to the claimant's account, it is error to refuse permission to the claimant to newly introduce the defendant to explain the transaction in which the checks were given and prove that they were not given for a loan to the claimant.—French v. Sale, 60 Miss. 516.

§ 1282. Evidence of good character of contradicted witness.

[a] Contradiction among witnesses is no ground for admitting evidence of the general character of either of them for truth and veracity, where their character has not been assailed.
—(Conn. 1881) State v. Ward, 49 Conn. 429;
(Fla. 1886) Saussey v. South Florida R. Co., 22 Fla. 327;
(Md. 1869) Vernon v. Tucker, 30 Md. 456;
(Vt. 1848) Sweet v. Sherman, 21 Vt. 23.

[b] The general good character of a witness cannot be proved, where his general character has not been impeached, though he has been contradicted by other witnesses.
—(U. S. 1849) Ray v. Donnell, Fed. Cas. No. 11,590 [4 McLean, 504];
(Ill. 1889) Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Fisher, 31 Ill. App. 36;
(Ind. 1863) Pruitt v. Cox, 21 Ind. 15; (1881) Presser v. State, 77 Ind. 274.

[c] (Ala. 1853) The statement of a witness on an immaterial point being contradicted by evidence, the party calling him may bring witnesses to testify to his general good character, although the opposite party disclaims the idea of discrediting him.—Newton v. Jackson, 23 Ala. 335.

[d] (Ala. 1856) Where both parties are examined as witnesses under the statute, and contradict each other in some particulars, and one of them introduces a witness which contradicts the other, the latter cannot be allowed to prove her good character in any manner.—Owens v. White, 28 Ala. 413.

[e] (Ala. 1860) One witness denied any intimidation of another as alleged in the testimony of the latter, but evidence was introduced to prove it; he was thereupon allowed to prove his general character for truth and veracity.—Lewis v. State, 35 Ala. 380.

[f] (Ala. 1875) The mere existence of a material conflict between the testimony of a witness and that of other witnesses does not justify the admission in evidence of his general good character, in the absence of any testimony to impeach his character.—Mobile & G. R. Co. v. Williams, 54 Ala. 168.

[g] (Ga. 1893) A witness who is not impeached otherwise than by disproving the truth of his testimony cannot be supported by proof of his general good character, as Code, § 3874, providing that a witness may be sustained by proof of character, refers only to witnesses whose "character" is sought to be impeached.—Miller v. Western & A. R. Co., 93 Ga. 480, 21 S. E. 52.

[h] (Ill. 1884) A party to a suit who has offered himself as a witness cannot introduce evidence of his character for truth and veracity, where such character has not been attacked except indirectly by a contradiction of his testimony by witnesses on the other side.—Tedens v. Schumers, 112 Ill. 263.

[i] (Ind. 1892) Where there is a mere contradiction on an issue in a case, the admission of evidence of the good character of one of the witnesses is reversible error, though the contradiction imputes to him moral turpitude, or the commission of a crime.—Diffenderfer v. Scott, 5 Ind. App. 243, 32 N. E. 87.

[j] (Ky. 1888) When the prosecuting witness was contradicted by the weight of evidence, it is error to allow a witness to testify to the moral character of the prosecutor, which had not been attacked, for the purpose of discrediting defendant's testimony.—Cupp v. Commonwealth, 87 Ky. 35, 7 S. W. 405.

[k] (Md. 1873) When, upon the trial of an indictment, witnesses, called on opposite sides, contradict each other on a material point, and the credit of such witnesses is fairly put in issue, either side may sustain its witness by proof of general character for veracity.—Davis v. State, 38 Md. 15.

[l] (Md. 1873) On the trial of an indictment for murder, a witness for the prisoner was contradicted on a material point; whereupon the defense introduced evidence to prove the character for truth and veracity of the witness so contradicted. Held, that the state might also prove the character for truth and veracity of the contradicting witness.—Davis v. State, 38 Md. 15.

[m] (Mass. 1856) Evidence tending to contradict a witness, and to show that he had conspired with one party to the action to cheat and defraud the other, does not authorize the introduction of evidence of the character of the witness for honesty and integrity.—Heywood v. Reed, 70 Mass. (4 Gray) 574.

[n] (Mo. 1883) On a trial for murder, where the testimony is conflicting, evidence is not admissible to support the character of a witness unless attacked.—State v. Thomas, 78 Mo. 327.

[o] (N. Y. 1847) A party is not entitled to give evidence of the general good character of his own witness, unless the character of the witness has been attacked by witnesses on the other side; and it is not enough to warrant proof of good character, that the witness had been discredited by proof contradicting portions of his testimony, and by evidence that he had made declarations hostile to the party against whom he was called, and that the witness in his testimony had denied making such statements.—Starks v. People, 5 Denio, 106.

[p] (N. Y. 1855) That the accuracy of a witness as to some particular facts has been discredited in the course of a trial, will not entitle the party calling him to go into evidence to support his general character for veracity.—Leonori v. Bishop, 11 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Duer) 420.

[q] (S. C. 1829) Where a party incidentally impeaches his own witness by contradictory evidence upon facts material to the issue, it does not let in evidence of good character in reply.—Farr v. Thompson, Cheves, 37.

[r] (Tex. 1886) Where there was conflict between the evidence of one of defendant's witnesses and a witness for the state, evidence of the good character of the former was properly excluded, where the facts about which there was conflict had no bearing upon the material facts of the case.—Britt v. State, 21 Tex. App. 215, 17 S. W. 255.

[s] (Tex. 1888) Evidence is not admissible to prove that the general reputation of a prosecuting witness for veracity is good, where his veracity has not been directly assailed, but there is simply a conflict between his testimony and that of witnesses for the defense.—Rushing v. State, 25 Tex. App. 607, 8 S. W. 807.

[t] (Tex. 1896) The fact that there is a conflict between defendant's testimony and that of witnesses for the state does not entitle defendant to introduce evidence of his reputation for veracity.—McGrath v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 413, 34 S. W. 127, 941.

§ 1283. Effect of contradiction.

Effect of contradiction of witness part of whose testimony was false, see ante, § 1083.

[a] (U. S. 1894) The fact that a witness has been successfully contradicted does not justify disregarding all his testimony that is not corroborated.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kelly, 63 Fed. 407, 11 C. C. A. 260, 24 U. S. App. 103.

[b] (U. S. 1858) In determining the question of priority of invention, contradictions between two witnesses, whose general character for veracity has not been questioned, should rather be reconciled without imputing improper motives than that their concurrent testimony on another point should be entirely rejected.—Davidson v. Lewis, Fed. Cas. No. 3,606 [1 MacArthur, Pat. Cas. 599].

[c] (U. S. 1885) Mere variance between the statements of two witnesses will not necessarily impeach or affect the credibility of either of them, as the contradiction may arise from mistake, or other cause consistent with their integrity.—Sharon v. Hill (C. C.) 26 Fed. 337.

[d] (Ill. 1868) The fact that testimony of a witness is contradicted by that of other witnesses does not constitute impeachment.—Baker v. Robinson, 49 Ill. 299.

[e] (Ill. 1896) A wife testified positively in proceedings for divorce that she resided in the county where the suit was brought, and gave the name of the street on which she lived, and it was not disputed, but her home when living with her husband was in Lake county. Her affirmative answer to a question, on cross-examination, as to whether her home was not in Lake county, where she lived with her husband, should not overbalance her other testimony as to her residence at the time she brought the suit.—Hill v. Hill, 63 Ill. App. 366, judgment affirmed (1893) 166 Ill. 54, 46 N. E. 751.

[f] (Ind. 1885) It is not a sufficient reason for wholly disregarding the testimony of a witness as to material facts that he is contradicted as to some merely immaterial or collateral matter.—Harper v. State, 101 Ind. 109.

[g] (Ky. 1894) Where one witness testifies positively as to the crime, a conviction will not be set aside though he is contradicted by two witnesses, relatives of defendant.—Gratz v. Commonwealth, 96 Ky. 162, 28 S. W. 159.

[h] (Miss. 1890) A conviction of petit larceny, resting on the unsupported testimony of one witness, which is contradicted in several material matters, which contradiction cannot reasonably be attributed to mistake on the part of such witness, cannot be sustained.—Day v. State, 7 South. 326.

[i] (N. Y. 1887) When a party is successfully impeached as to any part of his testimony which is material, other parts of his testimony, if contradicted, should be rejected.—Banta v. Naughton, 7 N. Y. St. Rep. 384.

[j] (N. Y. 1888) Though witnesses are contradicted, their testimony need not be absolutely rejected, but may be received and acted on, if, notwithstanding the contradictions, it appears not to have been intentionally false.—Blain v. Pool, 13 N. Y. St. Rep. 571.

§ 1284. Right to corroborate impeached or contradicted witness.

[a] (U. S. 1890) Evidence is admissible in confirmation of the testimony of a person who has been convicted of an infamous crime, in such and so many parts of his narrative as may satisfy the jury that he has told the truth, but should not, perhaps, be extended to such acts in the narrative as are generally well known.—United States v. Viebusch (C. C.) 1 Fed. 213, 1 McCrary, 42.

[b] (Cal. 1871) Where the plaintiff endeavors to impeach the defendant's witnesses by the introduction of rebutting evidence, it is competent for the defendant, after the plaintiff has rested, to introduce additional testimony in corroboration.—Wade v. Thayer, 40 Cal. 578.

[c] (Ga. 1854) Where the character of a witness is impeached, the state may introduce testimony to show that the facts, to which the impeached witness testified, are true.—John v. State, 16 Ga. 200.

[d] (Iowa, 1867) In a criminal trial, the whole of the defendant's testimony was directed against the reputation for truth of the principal witness for the prosecution. Held, that the government could not be permitted, in rebuttal, to prove by another witness, that the facts were substantially and in detail as the witness in chief had stated them.—State v. Parish, 22 Iowa, 284.

[e] (La. 1895) Where an attempt is made to impeach a witness on cross-examination, the witness may be corroborated, though not impeached by extraneous evidence.—State v. Johnson, 47 La. Ann. 1225, 17 South. 789.

[f] (La. 1896) A contradicted witness may be corroborated as to a matter material to the issue, though the adverse party, in introducing the contradictory evidence, stated that it was not the intention to impute fraud or fabrication, or in any manner to impeach the witness.—State v. Desforges, 48 La. Ann. 73, 18 South. 912.

[g] (Md. 1872) On the trial of an action the plaintiff was introduced as a witness, and testified positively that the defendant made certain representations. The defendant, upon being called, then testified in equally positive terms that he did not make such representations. But the defendant's counsel disclaimed all purpose of impeaching the integrity of the plaintiff, only desiring to show that he was mistaken. Held, that the testimony of the defendant amounted to a substantial impeachment of the credibility of the plaintiff, which could not be avoided by the disclaimer, and testimony corroborative of the plaintiff's was admissible.—McAleer v. Horsey, 35 Md. 439.

[h] (Mass. 1835) In an action against a person as a partner, a witness testified in chief that he had given notice of withdrawal of defendant and of the general dissolution of the partnership, and that he was confident that all the neighborhood were notified in two days. On his cross-examination the plaintiff's counsel inquired whether he gave the same notice to the other creditors of the partnership as he had testified that he gave to the plaintiff, and witness replied affirmatively, and gave the names of several persons to whom he had given notice. Held, that it was not competent for the defendant to call any of the person's names in order to prove that he had received such notice from the witness, as it could have no tendency to sustain the credit of the witness to prove by other evidence a fact stated by him in regard to which there was no contradiction.—Howe v. Thayer, 34 Mass. (17 Pick.) 91.

[i] (Mass. 1862) No exception lies to the admission of evidence in corroboration of a witness who has been contradicted.—Green v. Gould, 85 Mass. (3 Allen) 465.

[j] (Minn. 1894) In ejectment, the plaintiff testified that he never signed or made the alleged assignments of a certain certificate to B. On cross-examination he admitted he forged an indorsement on the certificate in the name of his father, to whom B. had transferred, purporting to transfer it back to plaintiff. Plaintiff also introduced his brother, who testified that he forged two assignments from plaintiff to B., and signed plaintiff's name, and procured the signature of the witnesses to them. Defendant offered in evidence the alleged forged assignments from plaintiff to B. as part of his chain of title, and it was excluded on the ground that it was completely established by the evidence that the assignments were forgeries and could not be received in evidence. Held, that the exclusion of such assignments was error, as the evidence, offered to show they were forgeries, was itself of such a suspicious character that, though uncontradicted, the jury would be entitled to disbelieve it.—Kennedy v. McQuaid, 56 Minn. 450, 58 N. W. 35.

[k] (N. Y. 1848) Where the great delay in instituting a criminal prosecution tends to excite suspicion as to the truth of the charge and to lead to an impression unfavorable to the principal witness, the prosecutor may prove any circumstances calculated to remove such presumptions.—People v. Lohman, 2 Barb. 216.

[l] (N. Y. 1896) It appeared that deceased had asked defendant to marry him; that, about a month prior to the homicide, deceased had enticed defendant into rooms, on pretense of looking for apartments, and had forced her; that, on a promise of immediate marriage, defendant then cohabited with deceased, begging him every day to marry her, and he promising to do so "on the next day"; that, on the morning of the crime, deceased absolutely refused to marry; that shortly afterwards defendant followed him to a saloon and urged him to fulfill his promises; that defendant left the saloon, and, on returning, demanded that deceased marry her that day; that on the latter again refusing, defendant cut his throat. Held, that it was error to exclude corroborating testimony on the ground that no corroboration was necessary, and then submit the question of defendant's credibility to the jury, leaving it for them to determine how far her statements of her relations with deceased should be accepted as true.—People v. Barberi, 149 N. Y. 256, 43 N. E. 635, 52 Am. St. Rep. 717.

[m] (N. C. 1880) Where there is a conflict between two witnesses as to the terms of a deed and its legal effect and operation, the defendant, to sustain the credit of his witness, may show by another person that on the day when such witness saw the deed he made a statement of its provisions conforming to his testimony as given at the trial.—Roberts v. Roberts, 82 N. C. 29.

[n] (Pa. 1866) Where a pardoned convict has testified, in a criminal trial, to communications in the penitentiary between the prisoners at the bar and others, it is proper to allow him to corroborate himself by evidence that he had shown visitors how communication between the cells was possible; and that no inducements had been held out to him to testify against the defendants.—Howser v. Commonwealth, 51 Pa. (1 P. F. Smith) 332.

[o] (Tenn. 1837) A witness may be impeached as well by cross-examination as by the testimony of other witnesses; and in such case, evidence is admissible to sustain his credit.—Richmond v. Richmond, 18 Tenn. (10 Yerg.) 343.

[p] (Tex. 1885) One who, as a witness, is in the position of a stranger testifying to isolated facts, may, if his testimony is discredited on cross-examination, fortify it by sustaining testimony.—Phillips v. State, 19 Tex. App. 158.

[q] (Wash. 1896) Where the state introduces evidence to show a different state of facts from that testified to by a witness for defendant, defendant cannot put in additional testimony in support of the statements of his witness, on the ground that the state by its testimony had impeached his witness, and on that account he was entitled to support him, as evidence merely tending to establish a different state of facts from that testified to by the witness was not impeaching testimony, within the rule which allows a party to sustain a witness who has been impeached.—State v. Nelson, 13 Wash. 532, 43 Pac. 637.

§ 1285. Testimony subject to corroboration.

[a] (La. 1896) Defendant testified without objection that while confined in jail B., a friend of the prosecution, declared to him that he would make M. swear to whatever he chose against defendant. It did not appear that M. was a witness, nor that B. took part in the prosecution. Held, that the fact that defendant was cross-examined as to the testimony did not entitle him to introduce in corroboration testimony of one who heard B.'s threat.—State v. Monceaux, 48 La. Ann. 101, 18 South. 896.

[b] (Mass. 1890) In tort for the conversion of a horse which defendant had attached as the property of plaintiff's husband, in order to discredit the husband's testimony that he was not the owner it was shown on his cross-examination that he had included it in a mortgage given by him; but he added, without objection from defendant, that he did not know the horse was included in the mortgage, and that, as soon as he found that it was, he told the mortgagee the horse did not belong to him, and should not have been embraced in the mortgage. This was before the attachment by defendant. Held, that the mortgagee was properly allowed to testify in confirmation of the husband's explanation.—Hewitt v. Corey, 150 Mass. 445, 23 N. E. 223.

§ 1286. —— Irrelevant, collateral, or immaterial matters.

[a] (Mass. 1839) Where accused, for the purpose of impeaching the testimony of an accomplice, introduced a letter from him, admitting that his testimony in regard to the transaction, upon a former occasion, was false, and the attorney for the commonwealth, in order to show that the letter had been obtained unfairly, asked the accomplice certain questions, in answer to which he testified that the letter was part of a correspondence which had been carried on in jail, and stated the means by which the correspondence had been carried on, the relative position of the several rooms, and the arrangement of the prisoners therein, it was not competent to call witnesses to prove that the position of the rooms and the arrangement of the prisoners therein corresponded with the account given by the accomplice, in order to support his general credit.—Commonwealth v. Bosworth, 39 Mass. (22 Pick.) 397.

[b] (Mass. 1853) Where, in an action for damages occasioned by the overflow of plaintiff's land, a witness, testifying to the existence of a certain water course, stated that many years previous, as he was putting in a water wheel, the plaintiff's father struck him, and he still bore the marks on his arm, it was proper to refuse to permit the party calling him to show such marks to the jury, as such marks were wholly immaterial and had no tendency to confirm the witness in the matter in issue.—Ashley v. Wolcott, 65 Mass. (11 Cush.) 192.

[c] (Mo. 1885) The admission of irrelevant testimony which has a tendency to corroborate the testimony of one of the parties to the action in an immaterial and unimportant particular is error.—Brown v. Hartzell, 87 Mo. 564.

[d] (N. Y. 1863) A corroboration, to be of any avail, should be as to some matter material to the issue.—Frazer v. People, 54 Barb. 306.

[e] (N. C. 1869) Where a defendant calls for a statement from a witness for the prosecution, and then attacks him with an impeaching witness, if the prosecution attempts to corroborate the first witness, the defendant cannot object on the ground that the matter called out is collateral matter.—State v. Kirkman, 63 N. C. 246.

[f] (Vt. 1840) A witness may be cross-examined as to any collateral fact which has any tendency to test either his accuracy or veracity, but the party will be bound by the answers of the witness; but, if testimony be given without objection tending to contradict such answers, it is not then competent for the party offering the first witness to give independent proof tending to corroborate the witness as to such collateral matters.—Stevens v. Beach, 12 Vt. 585, 36 Am. Dec. 359.

§ 1287. Competency of corroborative evidence.

Admissibility of memorandum to corroborate oral testimony in general, see "Evidence," vol. 20, cc. 2108–2110, § 1489.

[a] (Ala. 1856) The testimony of a witness for the prosecution, who is shown to be unworthy of credit, is not sufficient to justify a conviction, without corroborating evidence; and such corroborating evidence, to avail anything, must be of a fact tending to show the guilt of one or both of the defendants.—Martin v. State, 28 Ala. 71.

[b] (Ala. 1876) The uncorroborated testimony of a witness in a criminal case, who is shown to be unworthy of credit, is not sufficient to justify conviction; and evidence to corroborate his testimony must be a fact tending to show defendant's guilt.—Porter v. State, 55 Ala. 95.

[c] (Ala. 1878) It is error to allow a witness, who confesses having written the forged instrument under the direction and at the request of the prisoner, after he has been impeached, to write in the presence of the court and jury a similar instrument, for the purpose, by comparison between the two, of sustaining such witness.—Williams v. State, 61 Ala. 33.

[d] (Ala. 1892) The statement of a witness that another had shown him the place where deceased's body had been found is not admissible, on a trial for the murder, merely to corroborate the testimony given by such other; nor is the error cured by the exclusion afterwards of the statement at the request of the prosecution, accompanied by the remark that the court still regarded it as proper, although, had the witness first stated the indications of the murder, or concealment of the body observed by him, it would then have been competent for him to have stated for the purpose of identification that the person mentioned had pointed the place out to him.—Green v. State, 96 Ala. 29, 11 South. 478.

[e] (Ga. 1894) Where one of the state's witnesses testified that he was induced by the father of defendant to testify falsely at the inquest, and the father contradicted him, a conversation between the two witnesses after the inquest is not admissible merely to corroborate the state's witness.—Evans v. State, 95 Ga. 468, 22 S. E. 298.

[f] (Mass. 1833) Where one act of adultery was proved by a witness whose credibility the defendant attempted to impeach, it was held that other instances of improper familiarity between the defendant and the same woman, not long before the time of the adultery so proved, might be given in evidence to corroborate the witness.—Commonwealth v. Merriam, 31 Mass. (14 Pick.) 518, 25 Am. Dec. 420.

[g] (Mass. 1856) Where a witness denies that he stated a fact as another witness has testified that he did, and testifies that he stated a different fact, evidence that the fact existed, which he has testified that he stated, is inadmissible to corroborate him.—Edgerton v. Wolf, 72 Mass. (6 Gray) 453.

[h] (Mich. 1871) The fact that evidence of a distinct offense, but of the same kind with that charged, tends to corroborate a witness who has testified to confessions of the defendant, does not render it admissible.—People v. Schweitzer, 23 Mich. 301.

[i] (Mich. 1876) A party cannot support his positive testimony of facts stated upon his own knowledge, by testifying, himself, to other consistent or corroborative facts that are immaterial in themselves, and which, like the facts sought to be corroborated, must rest entirely upon his own oath.—Anderson v. Russell, 34 Mich. 109.

[j] (Mich. 1891) Where the evidence is conflicting as to the condition of a blower in a mill at the time of an accident alleged to have happened in its use, evidence as to its condition a week afterwards is not admissible in corroboration.—Kinney v. Folkerts, 84 Mich. 616, 48 N. W. 283.

[k] (Minn. 1895) The person whom it was charged defendant induced to commit the murder testified that, shortly before the commission of the crime, defendant gave him part of the contents of a bottle of whisky, but kept the bottle, and the state showed that defendant purchased such a bottle on the day of the crime. Defendant admitted the purchase of whisky, but denied that he gave any to witness, and stated that he left the bottle in the bathroom at his home, where he believed it then to be. Thereafter the defense offered to prove, by a witness who visited the bathroom after defendant testified, that a similar bottle of whisky was found in the place mentioned by defendant. Held, that the offer was properly rejected.—State v. Hayward, 62 Minn. 474, 65 N. W. 63.

[l] (Minn. 1895) A witness for the state, who knew of defendant's intention to commit the crime, testified that he told defendant on a certain day that if he did not abandon his intention witness would report him; that thereupon defendant assaulted witness, and threatened him with harm; and that witness then went home, and got his revolver. Held, that it was proper to admit, in corroboration of that testimony, evidence of witness' wife that on the day mentioned her husband came home and got his revolver.—State v. Hayward, 62 Minn. 474, 65 N. W. 63.

[m] (N. Y. 1848) Where, in assumpsit for work, labor, and materials, a witness for the defendant had testified to the statements of the parties that the work could be done for less than the amount claimed by the plaintiff, and the plaintiff introduced evidence to discredit him, it was held that the defendant, for the purpose of sustaining his witness, might introduce testimony to show that the work might have been done for the amount named by the witness.—Clapp v. Wilson, 5 Denio, 285.

[n] (N. Y. 1892) Where, in an action for divorce, the co-respondent testified that she had directly charged defendant with adultery in a letter to plaintiff, the court properly admitted in evidence a subsequent letter of the co-respondent to another person, stating that she did not intend to make such charge in the letter to plaintiff, as it was proper to admit it to show that her testimony that she had charged the crime directly was true.—Crary v. Crary (City Ct. Brook.) 18 N. Y. Supp. 753.

[o] (N. Y. 1893) On a trial for murder, where a witness was called to identify watches found on defendant as the property of deceased, it was proper to ask him whether he and deceased belonged to the same post in the G. A. R., and whether he served with him in the war in the same regiment, since the evidence tended to show witness' opportunities to become acquainted with deceased's affairs, and furnished a basis on which the jury might estimate the weight to be given to his testimony.—People v. Rohl, 138 N. Y. 616, 33 N. E. 933.

[p] (N. C. 1852) A witness who was impeached, having sworn that the plaintiff had agreed to give him credit for $30, the books of the plaintiff were admitted as evidence, in corroboration of the witness, to show that the credit was given.—Fain v. Edwards, 44 N. C. 64.

[q] (N. C. 1876) In an action to recover real estate, it is not error to allow a deed for other land than that in controversy to be read in evidence to corroborate statements of witnesses.—Buie v. Carver, 75 N. C. 559.

[r] (N. C. 1887) In an action to recover possession of land, with damages for its retention, a statement of account between defendant and plaintiff bearing the signature of the former is admissible in evidence to corroborate plaintiff's testimony as to the rents and receipts from the land.—McMillan v. Baker, 97 N. C. 197, 2 S. E. 164.

[s] (N. C. 1888) In an action to recover for lumber used in defendant's house, which plaintiff alleged he sold to the builder for defendant's use, plaintiff was asked on cross-examination why he had charged the lumber to the builder, and stated that the builder gave orders on defendant for the money. Held, that plaintiff had a right to sustain his statement by introducing such an order as a part of his explanation.—Wiggins v. Guthrie, 101 N. C. 661, 7 S. E. 761.

[t] (N. C. 1890) On a murder trial, a witness testified that a few weeks before the homicide he received an anonymous letter containing threats against deceased, and showing that the writer was jealous of deceased. Witness testified that defendant afterwards told him that she wrote it, and sent it to the post-office by a colored boy. The cross-examination of witness showed a purpose to impeach him, particularly to question the accuracy of his statements concerning the letter. Held, that the testimony of a negro boy that he took a letter for defendant to the post-office, which she told him not to let any one but a certain person see, and that this was about a month before the time testified to by the first witness, was properly submitted to the jury to corroborate the first witness.—State v. Morton, 107 N. C. 890, 12 S. E. 112, 10 L. R. A. 527.

[u] (Pa. 1811) A deed given by defendant in ejectment, after the commencement of the suit, is admissible to support a witness whose testimony had been impeached.—Richardson v. Stewart's Lessee, 4 Bin. 198.

[uu] (Pa. 1845) In a suit against the owner of a wagon to recover damages for an alleged nondelivery by his carter of certain wadding to W. & R., after the carter had proved that the wadding was consigned to C. & J. R., to whom he had delivered it, it was held that C. R., one of the firm, to corroborate the carter's testimony, might prove that the plaintiff was indebted to him and his partner, and that he had promised to send them wadding for the amount due them, about the time it was delivered to them.—Myre v. Ludwig, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 47.

[v] (Pa. 1866) It is always competent for a witness to refresh his memory by memoranda made at the time of the transaction of which he speaks, and where the memorandum has been received in evidence without objection, and it recites the substance of the very transaction testified to, it is not error for the court to say that it corroborates the witness.—Selover v. Rexford's Ex'r, 52 Pa. (2 P. F. Smith) 308.

[vv] (Pa. 1896) In an action for the price of lumber sold defendant through M., a member of plaintiff firm, defendant alleged that the lumber was obtained by him from another firm, of which M. was also a member, under a special contract for its delivery in payment of a balance due to defendant from this latter firm. Held, that it was proper, in order to corroborate defendant's account of the transaction, to admit evidence as to the state of accounts between defendant and such firm, as well as to a previous contract for the sale of lumber by it to defendant out of which the alleged debt arose, and also of the extent to which this contract had been performed.—Hamilton v. Hastings, 172 Pa. 308, 34 Atl. 43.

[w] (S. C. 1878) Where an accomplice testified that he had paid a bribe to defendant by giving him a check on a certain bank, which had afterwards been returned by such bank to witness, it was competent for the state in corroboration to show by the books and business memoranda of the same bank a credit to defendant for like amount deposited by check two days after the alleged bribery.—State v. Smalls, 11 S. C. 263.

[ww] (Tex. 1858) It is always permissible to strengthen a witness' testimony by connected incidents showing its consistency and reasonableness.—Bruton v. State, 21 Tex. 337.

[x] (Tex. 1887) In a contest involving the identity of the grantee in a land certificate, issued by a board of land commissioners, where one of the claimants testifies that the certificate remained in his possession until the year 1867, when he sent it to a land agent in Austin, Texas, held, that a letter from the land agent acknowledging the receipt of the certificate is admissible as corroborative of such testimony.—Baker v. Maloney (Sup.) 4 S. W. 469.

[xx] (Tex. 1894) Testimony of an accomplice as to the details of his confession to the sheriff; that he had told him everything just as he had told it to the jury; that he had taken the sheriff to a hotel where he and defendants had stopped, and shown him the register—is an attempt to corroborate the witness, and is inadmissible on his examination in chief.—Conway v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 327, 26 S. W. 401.

[y] (Tex. 1895) A check executed by plaintiff to one from whom his vendor purchased goods is admissible to corroborate plaintiff's testimony that he executed a check to the one from whom his vendor purchased, as part of the consideration of his own purchase.—Kean v. Zundelowitz, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 350, 29 S. W. 930.

[yy] (Vt. 1860) Plaintiff having testified that a certain agreement was made in the presence of H., and that H. at the time made a written statement of the mode of settlement of the parties' accounts, on the basis of which such agreement was made, it was held that it was competent for plaintiff to introduce in evidence, as corroborative of his own testimony, such written statement.—Norton v. Downer, 33 Vt. 26.

[z] (Vt. 1864) If the question at issue on a trial is whether there was a copartnership existing between A. and B., the plaintiff and defendant in the suit, a letter written by A. containing a statement implying the existence of such copartnership is admissible in evidence, to corroborate the testimony of A. that B. directed him to write such statement, although B. did not read the letter.—Soules v. Burton, 36 Vt. 652.

[zz] (Wis. 1881) A witness for the purpose of corroborating his testimony that he did not agree to meet defendant's agent at a certain time cannot be asked whether he made an appointment to meet other persons at that time.—Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Badger, 53 Wis. 283, 10 N. W. 504.

§ 1288. —— Former statements corresponding with testimony.

Witness impeached by evidence of inconsistent statements, see ante, § 1260.

[a] Declarations, verbal or written, made by a witness out of court, are not admissible in corroboration of his testimony on the trial.
—(Ala. 1876) Childs v. State, 55 Ala. 25;
(N. Y. 1869) Butler v. Truslow, 55 Barb. 293;
(Pa. 1868) Commonwealth v. Carey, 2 Brewst. 404.

[aa] (Ala. 1852) Proof of declarations, verbal or written, made by a witness out of court, is, as a general rule, inadmissible in corroboration of testimony given by him on the trial of a cause.—Nichols v. Stewart, 20 Ala. 358.

[b] (Ala. 1887) A witness cannot be corroborated by showing that he had made similar statements on a former occasion.—Fallin v. State, 83 Ala. 5, 3 South. 525.

[bb] (Ala. 1893) It is not competent to ask a witness if she had not made the same statements as now at the preliminary hearing.—Smith v. State, 103 Ala. 40, 16 South. 12.

[c] (Ala. 1894) The state's witnesses testified that at a former term of the court they were convicted for participating in the same offense, and that they disclosed to the presiding judge defendant's participation in the crime. Such disclosure, as to defendant, was contradicted by the trial judge. Held, that evidence that such witnesses made statements out of court to the solicitor, who bore the title of "Judge," and who resembled the trial judge in personal appearance, was inadmissible to corroborate or fortify their testimony.—Jones v. State, 107 Ala. 93, 18 South. 237.

[cc] (Cal. 1887) It is no ground for reversal that prior declarations of the witness were given in evidence to support his testimony before it was impeached, when the record shows that evidence was subsequently introduced, which, if offered before the declarations were testified to, would have made them competent.—Barkly v. Copeland, 74 Cal. 1, 15 Pac. 307, 5 Am. St. Rep. 413.

[d] (Cal. 1891) In an action against an officer for the value of property wrongfully levied on, in which plaintiff claims title by purchase from the execution debtor, evidence that the execution debtor, who was a witness for plaintiff, before the trial made statements consistent with his testimony, is not admissible in rebuttal of evidence of his bad reputation for veracity.—Mason v. Vestal, 88 Cal. 396, 26 Pac. 213, 22 Am. St. Rep. 310.

[dd] (Colo. 1893) In a criminal trial, the statements of a witness for the prosecution, made before the trial, in the absence of defendant, will not be admitted as evidence to confirm the testimony of such witness.—Connor v. People, 18 Colo. 373, 33 Pac. 159, 36 Am. St. Rep. 295, 25 L. R. A. 341.

[e] (Conn. 1830) On the trial of an indictment for an attempt to commit rape, after the person injured had testified, the prisoner, in cross-examination, asked her many questions which tended to discredit her testimony; before any other attempt, however, to discredit her, the prosecutor offered a witness to prove that the person injured had previously told to her the same story which she had just testified to. Held, that this testimony was admissible to show constancy in the declarations of the principal witness.—State v. De Wolf, 8 Conn. 93, 20 Am. Dec. 90.

[ee] (Ind. 1837) A witness cannot be corroborated by evidence of previously made statements in accordance with his testimony in the absence of any attempt to impeach him by evidence of inconsistent statements.—Coffin v. Anderson, 4 Blackf. 395.

[f] (Ind. 1885) The testimony of a witness, who has been contradicted as to an alleged fact, cannot be corroborated by showing that he related the same fact in the same way before; but if he had been impeached by showing that he had related the same fact differently, then it might have been shown in corroboration that he also related it consistently with his testimony.—Hodges v. Bales, 102 Ind. 494, 1 N. E. 692.

[ff] (Iowa, 1868) When the credibility of a witness is impeached by direct testimony of his want of reputation for truth, or of his general moral character, he cannot be supported by evidence that statements of the facts made by him before the trial correspond with his evidence.—State v. Vincent, 24 Iowa, 570, 95 Am. Dec. 753.

[g] (Iowa, 1868) A defendant proposed to show by a witness, who had testified to a material transaction, for the purpose of strengthening his testimony, that immediately after the transaction he gave to several persons an account of it, corresponding with his testimony, and then the defendant proposed to prove by such persons these statements. Held, that the evidence was inadmissible.—Boyd v. First Nat. Bank, 25 Iowa, 255.

[gg] (Iowa, 1868) A witness for the defendant testified to a conversation with the plaintiff in regard to the subject of the suit. The defendant then proposed to prove by the witness what he thought of the transactions related by the plaintiff, and what impression the conversation made on his mind, such opinion and impression being adverse to the plaintiff. The object of this testimony was stated to be to satisfy the jury that the witness was not mistaken in his testimony. Held to be inadmissible.—Boyd v. First Nat. Bank, 25 Iowa, 255.

[h] (Iowa, 1886) Plaintiff was examined as a witness in her own behalf, and testified that before a mortgage was given she obtained money for her husband from the bank on whose suit the attachment issued, on which defendant seized the property; that the cashier of the bank stated to her that her husband's credit was good for a certain amount. Defendant introduced the cashier, who denied having made the statement attributed to him. Plaintiff's husband was examined in rebuttal, and was permitted to state that on her return from the bank she told him that the cashier had made the statement which she attributed to him in her testimony. Held, that the testimony of such husband was inadmissible, since the plaintiff testified that the cashier made the statement, and it could add nothing to her testimony that she had made the statement when not under oath.—Rhutasel v. Stephens, 68 Iowa, 627, 27 N. W. 786.

[hh] (Kan. 1884) Statements of a witness made out of court cannot be shown by another witness to support his testimony.—Chapman v. Blakeman, 31 Kan. 684, 3 Pac. 277.

[i] (La. 1895) Where the testimony of a witness was assailed as to a particular fact, similar prior statements made at an unsuspicious time were admissible to corroborate him.—State v. Dudoussat, 47 La. Ann. 977, 17 South. 685.

[ii] (Me. 1853) It is inadmissible to corroborate a witness' deposition by means of his disclosure made and sworn to before two justices.—Smith v. Morgan, 38 Me. 468.

[j] (Md. 1823) Where a witness swears to a fact, and the opposite party introduces evidence which tends substantially to defeat the credit of the witness, his testimony may be corroborated by proof of his prior declarations.—Cooke v. Curtis, 6 Har. & J. 93.

[jj] (Md. 1878) Where, on cross-examination of a state's witness, evidence is elicited tending to contradict and discredit him, statements by him substantially the same as his testimony in chief are admissible for the purpose of corroborating his testimony.—Bloomer v. State, 48 Md. 521.

[k] (Md. 1890) In an action for breach of contract, defendant and his foreman testified that it was agreed that, if plaintiff got drunk and neglected his work, he should be discharged; that he did get drunk, and was so discharged. Both these statements were contradicted, and to corroborate them defendant offered evidence that both he and the foreman had made the same declarations to another person before plaintiff's discharge. Held, that evidence of the foreman's declarations was admissible in support of his credibility.—Mallonee v. Duff, 72 Md. 283, 19 Atl. 708.

[kk] (Md. 1896) Where evidence has been introduced showing that a witness has fabricated his testimony to meet the exigencies of the case, the fact that he uttered the same statement shortly after the transaction, and before the motive to fabricate existed, may be shown, to support his credibility and the accuracy of his recollection.—Baltimore City Pass. Ry. Co. v. Knee, 83 Md. 77, 34 Atl. 252.

[l] (Mass. 1863) In an indictment for libel in charging the prosecutor with being licentious, if the defendant has introduced the testimony of a married woman that the prosecutor once sought illicit intercourse with her, he cannot be allowed to prove in addition that she immediately complained thereof to her husband.—Commonwealth v. Harper, 89 Mass. (7 Allen) 539.

[ll] (Mass. 1889) Evidence of a stenographer that defendant had testified the same way in a similar suit is not competent to corroborate defendant.—Chase v. Perley, 148 Mass. 289, 19 N. E. 398.

[m] (Mass. 1893) After witnesses have testified, affidavits previously made by them, stating the same matters as those testified to by them, are not admissible in corroboration of their testimony.—Loomis v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 159 Mass. 39, 34 N. E. 82.

[mm] (Mich. 1895) An answer by a witness, in response to a question as to how he remembered that the wind was blowing hard at the time of the fire, that he and another spoke about it, is admissible.—Cole v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 105 Mich. 549, 63 N. W. 647.

[n] (Mo. 1846) The declarations of a witness when not under oath, are not admissible to corroborate his testimony under oath.—Riney v. Vanlandingham, 9 Mo. 816.

[nn] (Mo. 1883) Where a witness' testimony is impeached by an attack made on his character, it is admissible to prove that the witness has made statements consistent with those made as a witness.—State v. Grant, 79 Mo. 113, 49 Am. Rep. 218.

[nnn] (N. Y. 1834) Evidence that a witness has on previous occasions given the same relation of facts to which he testifies on the trial of a cause is admissible where the witness is impeached either by testimony of adversaries or on cross-examination, or even on direct examination, as where he admits that he was an accomplice in the crime as to which he testifies.—People v. Vane, 12 Wend. 78.

[o] (N. Y. 1840) Proof of declarations made by a witness out of court, in corroboration of testimony given by him on the trial of a cause, is, as an almost universal rule, inadmissible.—Robb v. Hackley, 23 Wend. 50; Dudley v. Bolles, 24 Wend. 465.

[oo] (N. Y. 1878) Where an attempt is made to discredit a witness on the ground that when his testimony is given his interest prompts him to make a false statement, he may show that he made similar statements before he had acquired any interest.—Herrick v. Smith, 13 Hun, 446.

[p] (N. Y. 1883) Where, on a trial, the issue of an attempt by plaintiff to suborn a witness has been gone into on both sides, the plaintiff is properly allowed to show that the very matters which the witness charged plaintiff with trying to suborn witness to testify falsely to, were what witness had himself voluntarily stated to plaintiff as the actual facts of the case.—Homer v. Everett, 91 N. Y. 641.

[pp] (N. Y. 1889) Plaintiff cannot give evidence of declarations, made by one of his witnesses before trial, in corroboration of his testimony at the trial, on the ground that certain evidence has been given to show that the witness is actuated by anger against the defendants, where it appears that such evidence was not in fact given, though defendants do not disclaim having offered it, and where it further appears that the witness has stated on the trial that he has never communicated to any one the subject-matter of his testimony.—Train v. Taylor, 51 Hun, 215, 4 N. Y. Supp. 492.

[ppp] (N. Y. 1894) Declarations made by a witness out of court are admissible to corroborate his testimony on the trial where it is charged that the witness had a motive in testifying falsely, or to contradict evidence showing that his testimony was a recent fabrication.—Baber v. Broadway & S. A. R. Co. (Com. Pl.) 9 Misc. Rep. 20, 29 N. Y. Supp. 40.

[q] (N. Y. 1895) A witness cannot be corroborated by entries in his own books.—In re Smith, 85 Hun, 359, 32 N. Y. Supp. 943.

[qq] (N. Y. 1896) A witness may, to rebut an inference sought to be drawn, that his testimony at the trial is an afterthought and a fabrication, be allowed to testify to unsworn statements of similar import made previously out of court—McLain v. British & Foreign Marine Ins. Co. (Sup.) 16 Misc. Rep. 336, 38 N. Y. Supp. 77.

[qqq] (N. C.) Where a witness is impeached on the ground of bad character, evidence may be given of previous statements made by the witness consistent with his testimony on the trial.—(1849) State v. Dove, 32 N. C. 469; (1894) Same v. Staton, 114 N. C. 813, 19 S. E. 96.

[r] (N. C. 1854) When the credibility of a witness has been attacked, from the nature of his evidence, from his situation, from bad character, or from imputations directed against him in cross-examination, the party introducing him may prove other consistent statements, for the purpose of corroborating him.—March v. Harrell, 46 N. C. 329.

[rr] (N. C. 1881) Where a witness has expressed an admissible opinion, he may state in corroboration that he previously gave the same opinion to another, and especially where it is elicited on cross-examination.—Godfrey v. Maberry, 84 N. C. 255.

[rrr] (N. C.) A statement made by a witness before trial may be shown to corroborate his testimony, where an attempt is made to impeach him.—(1885) Davis v. Council, 92 N. C. 725; (1885) State v. Whitfield, Id. 831; (1887) Same v. Brewer, 98 N. C. 607, 3 S. E. 819; (1889) Same v. Ward, 103 N. C. 419, 8 S. E. 814; (1890) Same v. Jacobs, 107 N. C. 873, 12 S. E. 248; (1894) Wallace v. Grizzard, 114 N. C. 488, 19 S. E. 760.

[s] (N. C. 1887) Evidence of a previous statement by a county treasurer to another county official was admissible, as corroborative of the sworn testimony of the treasurer to the same effect.—Davenport v. McKee, 98 N. C. 500, 4 S. E. 545.

[ss] (N. C. 1892) Witnesses for the state in a trial for murder may be corroborated by showing that they made the same statements soon after the homicide that they made on the trial.—State v. McKinney, 111 N. C. 683, 16 S. E. 235.

[sss] (Ohio, 1896) The recollection of a witness concerning a fact in issue cannot be corroborated by the contents of a memorandum made by himself, long after the circumstances, showing his recollection at a former date.—Jones v. State, 54 Ohio St. 1, 42 N. E. 699.

[t] (Pa. 1823) Where a witness is impeached, evidence may be given of what he swore on a former trial of the cause to corroborate him.—Henderson v. Jones, 10 Serg. & R. 322, 13 Am. Dec. 676.

[tt] (Pa. 1887) Where it is important to know whether a statement made by a witness is of recent fabrication, it is competent to show that upon a former occasion, when there was no reason to suspect his motives, he stated the matter in the same way as upon the trial, but, where such declarations go to the substance of the action, and are made in such close connection with the bringing of a suit that they appear as if made for the purpose of accumulating testimony in support of plaintiff's claim, they cannot be given in evidence for any purpose.—Clever v. Hilberry, 116 Pa. 431, 9 Atl. 647.

[ttt] (S. C. 1817) The affidavit made by prosecutor in a criminal case of assault and battery before a magistrate may be used at the trial to support the testimony of the witness by showing what he said or swore at some other time on the same subject.—State v. Lazarus, 1 Mill, Const. 34.

[u] (S. C. 1848) Where no design to misrepresent is charged against a witness, in consequence of his relation to the party or to the cause, evidence of similar statements made by him on former occasions is not admissible to corroborate his testimony.—State v. Thomas, 3 Strob. 269.

[uu] (Tenn. 1842) Where the deposition of deceased was read against the prisoner charged with his murder, his declarations, made before the deposition and afterwards, are admissible to show that he had been consistent and uniform in his declarations.—Bostick v. State, 22 Tenn. (3 Humph.) 344.

[uuu] (Tenn. 1891) In an action against plaintiff's father-in-law and others for enticing away his wife and child, the wife testified that on one occasion she begged her husband to promise that he would not take her child away from her if she brought her home, and that he refused to so promise. The husband denied this statement in toto. Held, that it was competent to show by one who saw the occurrence that the wife made this same statement to the witness immediately after the occurrence.—Glass v. Bennett, 89 Tenn. (5 Pickle) 478, 14 S. W. 1085.

[v] (Tenn. 1896) Prior statements of witnesses, made in the presence of accused, though denied at the time and at the trial by accused, are admissible to support the credibility of such witnesses.—Green v. State, 97 Tenn. (13 Pickle) 50, 36 S. W. 700.

[vv] (Tex. 1880) An impeaching, but himself an unimpeached, witness, cannot be corroborated by proof of statements made by him corresponding with his testimony.—Bailey v. State, 9 Tex. App. 98.

[vvv] (Tex. 1886) A former statement of a witness to whom is imputed a design to misrepresent arising from some interested motive, made at a time when such supposed motive did not exist, is admissible for the purpose of corroborating his testimony.—Lewy v. Fischl, 65 Tex. 311.

[w] (Tex. 1889) Where the state attacks a witness' reputation for truth, defendant cannot show that the witness testified to the same facts on the examination and elsewhere as on the trial.—Thurmond v. State, 27 Tex. App. 347, 11 S. W. 451.

[ww] (Tex. 1893) Where a witness is impeached, it is proper to allow him, in corroboration of his testimony before the jury, to testify that he had made similar statements before the grand jury.—Goode v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 505, 24 S. W. 102.

[www] (Tex. 1893) Statements as to the way in which an accident occurred, made by an injured person to his physician shortly after the accident, are not admissible to show that his account of the accident, as testified to by him, is not a recent fabrication, there being no pretense of a recent fabrication.—Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Stone (Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 808.

[x] (Tex. 1895) Where there is evidence that the general reputation for truth and veracity of a witness for the state is bad, testimony that such witness previously made statements corresponding with her testimony is inadmissible to sustain her testimony, in the absence of evidence by the defense that she made contradictory statements with reference to the facts to which she testified.—Stanford v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 271.

[xx] (Tex. 1895) Where defendant tried to show that the testimony of a state's witness was recently fabricated, the state could show that on the night of the homicide the witness gave a similar version of the facts.—English v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 190, 30 S. W. 233.

[xxx] (Utah, 1894) Prior statements of a party to an action are not admissible to corroborate his testimony when the circumstances surrounding him at the time the statements were made show that his own interests were being subserved thereby.—Silva v. Pickard, 10 Utah, 78, 37 Pac. 86.

[y] (Vt. 1839) The sayings of a witness out of court are not admissible to corroborate his testimony.—Munson v. Hastings, 12 Vt. 346, 36 Am. Dec. 345.

[yy] (Vt. 1841) Where a witness is discredited by testimony against his general character, testimony tending to show that he has formerly given the same statement as that to which he now testifies is not admissible.—Gibbs v. Linsley, 13 Vt. 208.

[yyy] (Vt. 1888) When an attempt is made to discredit a witness on the ground of his relation to the party or to the cause, it is proper to show that he made a similar statement before the relation existed.—State v. Flint, 60 Vt. 304, 14 Atl. 178.

[z] (Va. 1877) On trial for larceny from the person, it is not competent to corroborate the prosecuting witness' account of the larceny by proof that, immediately after its alleged occurrence, he reported the circumstances to other persons.—Haynes v. Commonwealth, 28 Grat. 942.

[zz] (Va. 1886) Where an attempt is made to discredit a witness by showing malice on his part, growing out of his arrest for an offense, it may be shown that before his arrest his statements conformed to his testimony.—Howard v. Commonwealth, 81 Va. 488.

[zzz] (Wis. 1887) Where a conversation between plaintiff and defendant was first drawn out by cross-examination of the witness of plaintiff by defendant, defendant cannot testify as to what he said in such conversation, as a party cannot give in evidence his own declarations made out of court to support his testimony given on the trial.—Plano Mfg. Co. v. Frawley, 68 Wis. 577, 32 N. W. 768.

§ 1289. Effect of corroboration.

Effect of corroboration of witness whose testimony is in part false, see ante, § 1083.

[a] (Ga. 1855) To restore the credit of impeached witnesses, much depends on the nature as well as the extent of the corroboration. Such credit is restored to a much greater extent when the witness is corroborated as to the main fact than as to immaterial facts.—Haynes v. State, 17 Ga. 465.

[b] (N. Y. 1892) In an action for conversion against a bona fide purchaser of stolen goods, a verdict against defendant was chiefly founded on the testimony of the thief. Held, that he was sufficiently corroborated by the fact that the box containing the property was empty, that he had an opportunity to steal the same, and that he was caught at defendant's place of business attempting to sell a portion of the property.—Lovell v. Shea, 60 N. Y. Super. Ct. (28 Jones & S.) 412, 18 N. Y. Supp. 193.

[c] (N. C. 1878) The rule admitting former statements of an impeached witness, not made under oath, to sustain his credibility, will not be extended to confirm his statement as to the facts sworn to by him, any more than any other hearsay evidence.—State v. Parish, 79 N. C. 610.

[b] (Mich. 1893) An interest in standing trees is an interest in the land.—Williams v. Hyde, 98 Mich. 152, 57 N. W. 98.

[c] (N. J. 1873) Trees, which are the natural and permanent growth of the soil, cannot be regarded as partaking of the character of emblements or "frustus industriales," but are a part of the inheritance, and can only become personalty by actual severance or by a severance in contemplation of law as the effect of a proper instrument of writing.—Slocum v. Seymour, 36 N. J. Law (7 Vroom) 138, 13 Am. Rep. 432.

§ 2. Ownership.

[a] The owners of adjoining tracts of land are tenants in common of trees growing on the boundary line between the tracts.

(N. Y. 1862) Dubois v. Beaver, 25 N. Y. 123, 82 Am. Dec. 326; (1866) Hoffman v. Armstrong, 46 Barb. 337.

[b] The ownership of a tree standing near the boundary between adjoining landowners is in the person on whose land the trunk of the tree stands, though the roots and branches extend beyond the boundary.

(N. Y. 1862) Dubois v. Beaver, 25 N. Y. 123, 82 Am. Dec. 326, affirming Relyea v. Same (1861) 34 Barb. 547; (1866) Hoffman v. Armstrong, 46 Barb. 337, affirmed (1872) 48 N. Y. 201, 8 Am. Rep. 537;

(Vt. 1865) Skinner v. Wilder, 38 Vt. 115, 88 Am. Dec. 645.

[c] (Cal. 1886) Branches of trees belong to the owner of the land over which they hang, though the trunks of the trees are on the land of another.—Grandona v. Lovdal, 78 Cal. 611, 21 Pac. 366, 12 Am. St. Rep. 121.

§ 3. Effect of sale or conveyance of land.

[a] (Kan. 1868) A deed of real estate carries with it, unless expressly reserved, all growing timber thereon, whether upright or prostrate.—Cockrill v. Downey, 4 Kan. 426.

§ 4. Power to protect and regulate.

[a] (Kan. 1881) A board of county commissioners have the power, under Comp. Laws 1879, pp. 453, 454, authorizing them to "order warrants to be issued upon the county treasurer for the bounty" to one who grows an Osage orange hedge, to pay a bounty out of the general county fund to one who has grown an Osage orange hedge, in accordance with the provisions of said laws.—Marion County Com'rs v. Hoch, 24 Kan. 778.

[b] (Mo. 1891) Rev. St. § 5697, providing that persons planting prairie land with forest trees, and cultivating the same for three years, shall receive a bounty for 15 years thereafter from the county, conflicts with Const. art. 4, § 47, providing that the general assembly shall have no power to authorize any county to grant public money to any individual, etc., and with article 10, § 3, declaring that taxes may be levied and collected for public purposes only, and is void.—Deal v. Mississippi County, 107 Mo. 464, 18 S. W. 24, 14 L. R. A. 622.

§ 5. Statutory provisions.

[a] (Kan. 1878) Laws 1867, p. 99, § 2, provided for the payment of an annual bounty for eight years to any one who should plant and cultivate an Osage orange or hawthorn fence. Laws 1871, pp. 211, 212, re-enacted section 2 of the former act, with the proviso that the bounty should not be allowed in any county until the people should decide by vote whether they desired such a bounty. Held, that the latter act cut off all claims for bounties earned after its enactment in counties that had not expressed a desire to have them continued.—Jefferson County v. Hudson, 20 Kan. 71.

[b] (Mass. 1867) Gen. St. c. 46, § 6, providing for the protection of trees standing in the public ways of any city or town, applies to trees which were standing at the time such statute took effect, and not merely to trees which were thereafter planted.—White v. Godfrey, 97 Mass. 472.

[c] (Minn. 1887) Laws 1871, c. 30, entitled "An act to encourage the planting and growing of timber and shade trees," provided for a bounty to be paid for planting and growing trees. Laws 1873, c. 19, of the same title, made a similar provision, and was almost identical with the former law. Held, that the law of 1873 was intended to supersede the law of 1871, and repealed it by implication.—Smith v. Nobles County, 37 Minn. 535, 35 N. W. 383.

Constituting trespass, see "Trespass," vol. 46, cc. 542–556, §§ 173–185.

[a] (Mass. 1861) Cutting trees on a public burial ground for purposes of private profit, without consent of the public authorities having charge of it, is a violation of Gen. St. c. 28, § 12, which imposes a penalty for destroying trees within the limits of a burial ground, although the person who cuts them is the owner of the fee of the land, and honestly believes that his acts are lawful.—Commonwealth v. Viall, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 512.

[b] (Mass. 1879) A. conveyed by warranty deed to a town a parcel of land within the limits of the town and contiguous to a county road. The town bought the land for the purpose of using it in straightening and grading the road and for obtaining the material to be used in the grading; but this purpose did not appear in the deed, and the purchase was not authorized by a vote of the town. The town constructed a road over the land, but did not legally lay out the road, nor was it so laid out by the county commissioners. Held, that an indictment under Gen. St. c. 161, § 82, against A. for cutting down a tree that stood on the land conveyed by him to the town, would lie; the deed from A. being valid, and passing the title to the land to the town.—Commonwealth v. Wilder, 127 Mass. 1.

[c] (Mo. 1881) Under a statute making it an offense to cut timber on land of another, there can be no conviction without proof of a criminal intent. One believing himself to have a right to cut cannot be punished.—State v. Kempf, 11 Mo. App. 88.

[d] (Pa. 1812) It is an indictable offense to deaden and destroy a tree standing on public ground.—Commonwealth v. Eckert, 2 Browne, 249.

[e] (Pa. 1886) Where parties have been arrested under Act March 31, 1860, for cutting timber, they will be discharged when it appears that an injunction restraining the prosecutors from cutting timber upon the same premises is still in force, since it cannot be said that defendants cut the timber, "knowing the same to be growing or standing upon the lands of another person."—Commonwealth v. Cornell, 4 Kulp, 81.

[ee] (S. C. 1839) An ordinance of the village of Moultrieville provides "that it shall not be lawful to cut down and make use of the cedars or other trees on the other end of the island, etc.; any person offending in the same shall forfeit and pay for each and every offense, etc., the sum of $5." Held that, if defendant cut 100 trees at one time, it is but one offense.—State v. Town Council of Moultrieville, Rice, 158.

[f] (Tex. 1875) Under Pen. Code, art. 717, providing that any person who shall knowingly cut down or destroy any tree or timber on land not his own, without the consent of the owner thereof, or shall carry away such timber, shall be punished, etc., an indictment will not lie for carrying away fence rails.—McCauley v. State, 43 Tex. 374.

§ 7. Criminal prosecutions.

[a] (Mass. 1856) A complaint on St. 1855, c. 457, for the malicious destruction of a tree, shrub or vine on the land of another, must aver an unlawful entry by the defendant on the land.—Commonwealth v. Dougherty, 72 Mass. (6 Gray) 349.

[b] (Neb. 1885) Cr. Code, § 88, makes it a crime for any one to willfully and maliciously, and without lawful authority, injure or destroy trees "standing or growing in any orchard, nursery, or grove, the property of another," to the amount in value of $35. Held, that a complaint and mittimus which alleged that "A. did * * * enter upon the farm of B., and cut down and destroy fruit and shade trees to the amount of $44. Said trees were grown on the farm of said B., in C. county, Neb."—were defective, because they did not allege that the trees were "the property of another."—Ex parte Eads, 17 Neb. 145, 22 N. W. 352.

[c] (N. H. 1882) In an indictment under Gen. Laws, c. 281, § 3, prohibiting the commission of "any act whereby any tree * * * shall be injured," an averment that defendant did "girdle a growing tree" does not allege an injury with sufficient certainty.—State v. Towle, 62 N. H. 373.

[d] (Tex. 1854) Under Hart's Dig. art. 493, providing that if any person shall willfully and knowingly cut down, carry away, or destroy any tree or timber on any land not his own, without first having the consent of the owner, an indictment charging defendant with having cut and carried away certain timber "on land not his own, but which was the property of R.," sufficiently describes the land from which the timber was cut.—State v. Warren, 13 Tex. 45.

§ 1. Services rendered in general.

[a] There can be no recovery for voluntary service rendered without an express promise to pay therefor, or circumstances from which a promise is implied by law.
—(Ind. 1883) Warring v. Hill, 89 Ind. 497; (Mo. 1867) Watkins v. Richmond College Trustees, 41 Mo. 302.

[b] (Ill. 1859) A party cannot force another to become his debtor by performing labor for him against his will or without his assent.—City of Alton v. Mulledy, 21 Ill. (11 Peck) 76.

[c] (Ill. 1879) Where the evidence fails to show that the work which is the foundation of the suit was done at the instance or request of the defendant, the plaintiff cannot recover.—Reed v. Baggott, 5 Ill. App. (5 Bradw.) 257.

[d] (Ky. 1895) Where a person voluntarily renders services, the law will not imply a promise to pay for them, unless the relation between the parties and the circumstances under which the services were performed are such as to show that they were for the benefit of the party receiving them, and that he knew, or had reasonable ground for believing, that the person rendering them expected to be paid therefor.—Viley v. Pettit, 96 Ky. 576, 29 S. W. 438, 16 Ky. Law Rep. 650.

[e] (La. 1827) No man shall profit by the labor of another without compensation. Neither error nor bad faith in the negotiorum gestor will prevent him from recovering the amount to which he has benefited another, if the work done were necessary and useful. "Jure naturæ æquum est, neminem cum alterius detrimento et injuria fieri locupletiorem."—Police Jury v. Hampton, 5 Mart. (N. S.) 389.

[f] (La. 1855) The equitable doctrine, that one at whose expense another is benefited must be indemnified, cannot be extended to a person who intrudes his services on another against his will and the policy of a statute.—Fox v. Sloo, 10 La. Ann. 11.

[g] (Mo. 1895) Plaintiff cannot recover for work done which defendant had not ordered, and had refused, during its progress and after its completion, to pay for.—Harnett v. Christopher, 61 Mo. App. 64, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 272.

[h] (N. J. 1840) An action will not lie to recover for services voluntarily rendered.—Force v. Haines, 17 N. J. Law (2 Har.) 385.

[i] (N. Y. 1850) A promise to pay for services will not be implied until they have been performed, in the absence of an express contract.—Wheeler v. Cropsey, 5 How. Prac. 288.

[j] (N. Y. 1873) An obligation to pay a compensation for services rendered will not be implied, unless the circumstances are such as to show, either that there must have been a mutual understanding to that effect, or, if rendered without the party's knowledge, that the service was an act of necessity, for which he was legally bound to provide, or where it may be assumed that, if he had known of the exigency, he would have required such a service to have been performed with the understanding that he was to pay for it.—Hewett v. Bronson, 5 Daly, 1.

[k] (Ohio, 1888) Where services are rendered by a person to another with his knowledge, but without any express contract between them, such rendition is not of itself sufficient to entitle the person rendering the service to recover therefor as on an implied contract, as it should appear that the services were such as were expected to be paid for.—Harrison v. Gotleif, 8 Ohio Cir Ct. R. 191.

[l] (Or. 1887) To render one liable for services rendered him by another, he must either have requested the performance of the service, or afterwards have promised to pay for it.—Glenn v. Savage, 14 Or. 567, 13 Pac. 442.

§ 2. Nature of services.

[a] (U. S. 1883) A., without authority from the District of Columbia, dumped earth, which he desired to deposit somewhere, in an old canal which the District wanted filled. Held that, the service being a voluntary one, no recovery therefor could be had.—Boston v. District of Columbia, 19 Ct. Cl. 31.

[b] (La.) Services rendered voluntarily to preserve another man's property from destruction by flood are presumed to be gratuitous, and give no cause of action.—(1853) Watson v. Ledoux, 8 La. Ann. 68; (1894) New Orleans, Ft. J. & G. I. R. Co. v. Turcan, 46 La. Ann. 155, 15 South. 187.

[c] (La. 1874) Defendant, while constructing a banquette in front of his property, was officiously interfered with by the plaintiff, who was doing similar work under contract with the city. Plaintiff completed the work in spite of defendant's opposition. Held, that plaintiff had no cause of action against the defendant.—O'Hara v. Krantz, 26 La. Ann. 504.

[d] (La. 1882) A workman, making repairs to a building against the will and directions of the owner, is not entitled to remuneration, and has not the legal rights of a negotiorum gestor.—Succession of Mulligan v. Kenny, 34 La. Ann. 50.

[e] (Me. 1848) A town is not liable to pay a physician for his services in attending upon persons sick with a contagious disease who have ability to make payment themselves, unless he has been employed by the selectmen of the town to attend upon such persons; and it is not sufficient that the selectmen have, under the provisions of Rev. St. c. 21, taken measures to prevent the access of others to the place, and have appointed a person to superintend the house and take care of its inmates, or that the services of the physician were performed with their knowledge and assent.—Kellogg v. Inhabitants of St. George, 28 Me. (15 Shep.) 255.

[f] (Me. 1858) A physician will not be entitled to recover of a town of which he is not a resident for medical services rendered to its inhabitants while sick with smallpox, unless there had been an express contract with him for such service by the proper officers in behalf of the town.—Childs v. Inhabitants of Phillips, 45 Me. 408.

[g] (Me. 1888) The owner of a lime quarry cannot bring assumpsit against the owner of another quarry adjacent, but not adjoining, to recover for pumping out water that accumulated in the latter, and ran through the intervening quarry into the former, no express promise of payment being proved.—Ulmer v. Farnsworth, 80 Me. 500, 15 Atl. 65.

[h] (Mass. 1823) A town kept in repair a turnpike road laid out over a former town road, without any agreement for so doing. Held, that such town could maintain no action therefor against the turnpike corporation, as it was a voluntary courtesy.—Inhabitants of Roxbury v. Worcester Turnpike Corp., 19 Mass. (2 Pick.) 41.

[i] (Mass. 1861) Where a person enters into possession of land under a verbal agreement for its purchase, and cuts grass thereon, and stores it in the owner's barn, without being requested by him to do so, and the owner afterwards refuses to fulfill the contract, no action lies for the expense of cutting grass.—Cook v. Doggett, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 439.

[j] (Mass. 1880) Plaintiff, who witnessed an accident on defendant's railway, was asked by an agent employed by defendant's superintendent to give a statement of what he knew. He replied that he must first go to the place of the accident and verify the facts, and the agent stated, "All right." Plaintiff's statement was made and used by defendant, and he sued for his services in going to the place of the accident and in making the statement. Held, that it was proper to charge the jury that if the plaintiff was authorized to go to the place, and believed it necessary to go there in order to make the correct statement, he was entitled to recover, though in fact it was not actually necessary.—Lovejoy v. Middlesex R. Co., 128 Mass. 480.

[k] (Mich. 1876) Where one has employed another to manufacture articles at an agreed price out of materials to be furnished by the former, the fact that he himself, without request, assists in the manufacture, will not raise an implied promise on the part of the other party to pay for such services.—Lange v. Kaiser, 34 Mich. 317.

[l] (Mich. 1877) Labor bestowed by one owner of logs afloat, in separating those of another owner which are mingled with them, and in caring for the latter's logs as incidental to the management of his own, does not give him a right of action against the other owner for compensation for the service, unless there has been a request or a promise to pay.—Peters v. Gallagher, 37 Mich. 407.

[m] (N. H. 1857) Where the value of the labor performed for a town by a pauper exceeds the amount expended for his relief, he cannot recover for the excess in an action against the town for work and labor.—Abbot v. Town of Fremont, 34 N. H. 432.

[n] (N. Y. 1822) Labor done and service rendered for one without his request or privity, however beneficial or meritorious, as in saving his property from fire, afford no ground of action.—Bartholomew v. Jackson, 20 Johns. 28, 11 Am. Dec. 237.

[o] (N. Y. 1858) A man is not entitled to a commission from the owner for informing a broker that certain lots are in the market, a purchaser for which is afterwards procured by the broker through such information. A right to a commission must be founded upon contract, express or implied.—Holley v. Townsend, 16 How. Prac. 125.

[p] (N. Y. 1889) Where an heir took decedent from the poorhouse, and cared for him before an offer by decedent's committee to pay her for caring for him was made, and she testified that she did not accept the offer, and the evidence of the price fixed for her services is indefinite, she is properly allowed for their true value, instead of a smaller sum offered to be paid by the committee.—Stephenson v. Cotter (Sup.) 5 N. Y. Supp. 749.

[q] (N. Y. 1892) An owner of a horse is not liable to one who shoes her horses without being requested to do so, or to whom no promise to pay is made.—Brennan v. Chapin (Com. Pl.) 19 N. Y. Supp. 237.

[r] (Ohio, 1859) One into whose custody a constable has placed goods seized under a writ of attachment, cannot maintain an action against the plaintiff in attachment for the care of said goods, where the services were not rendered at the request of said plaintiff in attachment.—Baker v. Campbell (Com. Pl.) 2 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 143.

[s] (Pa. 1858) An architect furnished a design for a structure at the request of H., who then employed defendants to make the structure in accordance with the design and according to his working drawings. H. paid plaintiff for the design, but gave him no compensation for the drawings, which formed no part of the contract between them, and defendants were not shown either to have made a request or promise to pay therefor. There was evidence that the architect usually furnishes the means of carrying his plans into execution, and that the obligation of paying for the whole ordinarily rests on the employer. Held, that the defendants were not liable for the drawings.—Webb v. School, 3 Phila. 125.

[t] (Pa. 1876) Work done by a private citizen on a road, before it is laid out according to law and ordered to be opened, though beneficial, affords no cause for compensation.—Bryant v. Spring Brook Tp., 5 Luz. Leg. Reg. 203.

[u] (Pa. 1890) Plaintiff, a commission merchant, who had six months before made a single sale of tobacco for defendants, and received the regular commission, received a letter of inquiry from one B. for tobacco. He went to defendants, told them of the inquiry, and, on their saying that they had tobacco for sale, wrote to B., who came to plaintiff's office. Plaintiff called one of the defendants, who was passing by, into the office, and told him B. had come to see the tobacco. Defendants sent B. where he could see the tobacco, and afterwards sold it to him. There was no express agreement that plaintiff should be paid. Held, in an action for commission, that the court properly charged that the mere fact that plaintiff was a commission merchant, and had made a single sale for defendants, would not authorize him to make a sale for them unless requested so to do, and that mere voluntary services performed without request would not raise an implied promise to pay.—Mayer v. Rhoades, 135 Pa. 601, 20 Atl. 158.

[v] (S. C. 1818) If one voluntarily put repairs to the house or fences of another without consulting the owner, he cannot afterwards charge him therefor.—Caldwell v. Eneas, 2 Mill, Const. 348, 12 Am. Dec. 681.

[w] (Tex. 1854) A clerk of a district court left some part of his records unfinished on his retirement from office, but had received full pay as if he had completed them, and his successor in office voluntarily made up the deficiencies. Held, in an action by the latter against the former for services thus rendered, that he was not entitled to recover.—Willis v. Jones, 11 Tex. 594.

§ 3. Acceptance of or assent to services.

Acceptance of work done under contract, see post, §§ 23–33.

[a] The performance and receipt of services generally raises an implied promise to compensate therefor; but this implication may be rebutted.

[b] (U. S. 1884) Whenever one person does work or service for another with his consent, and there is no agreement as to compensation, the law implies a contract to pay what the same is reasonably worth.—Hughes v. Dundee Mortgage & Trust Inv. Co. (C. C.) 21 Fed. 169.

[c] (Ala. 1891) Where one performs labor for another with the knowledge and consent of the latter, and the latter accepts it, it is not necessary that there should have been an express contract.—Joseph v. Southwark Foundry & Machine Co., 99 Ala. 47, 10 South. 327.

[d] (Ala. 1893) Where services are rendered by one person to another, and knowingly accepted, a promise to pay therefor is presumed, unless the relation of the parties, the nature of the services, or other circumstances, are such as to rebut this presumption.—Hood v. League, 102 Ala. 228, 14 South. 572.

[e] (Ark. 1840) A. agreed with B. to build for him a mill of a certain power, and, if not of such power, no price was to be paid. No price was agreed upon, and no time fixed when the mill was to be completed. The mill, when completed, was wholly valueless for the purpose for which it was built. Thereupon A. rebuilt the mill at his own expense, which was accepted by B., and it answered the purpose for which it was intended. Held, that A. might recover of B. for the rebuilding on a quantum meruit.—Simpson v. McDonald, 2 Ark. (2 Pike) 370.

[f] (Ark. 1848) Where an administrator is present and witnesses the attendance of a physician upon a sick slave belonging to his intestate, and makes no objection, he is liable for the physician's bill.—Belfour v. Raney, 8 Ark. (3 Eng.) 479.

[g, h] (Ark. 1858) If plaintiff proves that he worked on the plantation of defendant as an overseer with his knowledge and consent, the law implies a contract between the parties, and the plaintiff is entitled to recover a reasonable sum for his services.—McDaniel v. Parks, 19 Ark. 671.

[i] (Cal. 1862) To fix liability on the ground of an implied contract, where one has done work and another has taken the benefit, there must not only be no restrictions imposed by the law upon the party sought to be charged against directly making a similar contract to the one implied, but he must also be in a position where he may freely elect whether or not he will accept the work, and where his election may influence the other party in reference to the work itself. The mere retention and use of the benefit of the work without these circumstances does not constitute such evidence of acceptance that the law will imply therefrom a promise of payment.—Zottman v. City and County of San Francisco, 20 Cal. 96, 81 Am. Dec. 96.

[j] (Ill. 1861) Where a person stands by and permits another to do work necessary and useful for him, and appropriates it, he may become liable on an implied promise to pay the value of it.—De Wolf v. City of Chicago, 26 Ill. (16 Peck) 444.

[k] (Ill. 1879) One may accept the services of another without incurring any implied liability to pay for them, where he knows at the outset that the services are rendered because of an employment by a third person, and but for such knowledge would not have accepted said services.—Morrison v. Jones, 6 Ill. App. (6 Bradw.) 89.

[l] (Ky. 1881) Where a person receives the benefit of another's services, having knowledge of the service during the time of its performance, he should pay its reasonable value to the person performing the service.—Carter v. Orme, 3 Ky. Law Rep. 56.

[m] (Ky. 1890) Where a firm accepted the services of a clerk and acknowledged that his services were valuable, the law implies a contract to pay him a reasonable compensation for his services, though there was no express contract of employment.—Norris v. Philipot, 12 Ky. Law Rep. 557.

[n] (Me. 1830) Where a person accepts or knowingly avails himself of the benefit of services done for him without his authority, he may be held to pay a reasonable compensation for them.—Abbot v. Inhabitants of Third School Dist. in Hermon, 7 Me. (7 Greenl.) 118.

[o] (Me. 1844) Where one person performs services for the benefit and with the knowledge and tacit consent of another, the law implies a promise to pay a reasonable compensation for them. Such a promise, however, is implied only when there does not appear to have been an express agreement or employment.—Weston v. Davis, 24 Me. (11 Shep.) 374.

[p] (Me. 1857) Where a person performs labor for the benefit of another under his oversight and direction, the person receiving the benefit for the labor should pay for it, and his promise to do so may be inferred.—True v. McGilvery, 43 Me. 485.

[q] (Me. 1869) An action cannot be maintained for services rendered without the knowledge or request of the defendant, though he may have verbally promised to pay for them after their rendition.—Sanderson v. Brown, 57 Me. 308.

[r] (Mass. 1814) Where work is done for the benefit of another without his express request, yet if he, knowing of the work, tacitly assent to it, an implied promise arises to pay therefor, on which an action will lie.—James v. Bixby, 11 Mass. 34.

[s] (Mass. 1871) A promise to pay reasonable expenses of keeping and repairing a boat found adrift on the water is implied when the owner of the boat takes it from the person who found it.—Chase v. Corcoran, 106 Mass. 286.

[t] (Minn. 1885) Pending negotiations for the employment of plaintiff by defendants, he rendered services to them of the nature contemplated, but no agreement as to terms was arrived at between them. Held, that plaintiff could recover the reasonable value of the services so rendered while in expectation of an agreement for employment.—McKee v. Vincent, 33 Minn. 508, 24 N. W. 253.

[u] (Mo. 1867) Where defendant subsequently assents to the plaintiff's services voluntarily performed in his behalf, the jury will be authorized to infer a previous request, and such assent may be inferred from the defendant's knowledge of the plaintiff's acts or his silent acquiescence.—Watkins v. Trustees of Richmond College, 41 Mo. 302.

[v] (Mo. 1890) Where a person stands by and sees another render a service beneficial to him, and knows that he is rendering it under the expectation of being paid by him for it, and fails to speak, a request for the rendering of the service may be implied, if there are no circumstances which repel such implication.—Painter v. Ritchey, 43 Mo. App. 111.

[w] (Mo. 1891) If a person stands by and allows the work to be done by another, who is acting in good faith, and afterwards takes possession of the work, and converts it to his own use, he is liable on the quantum meruit.—Thomas v. Walnut Land & Coal Co., 43 Mo. App. 653.

[ww] (N. H. 1850) Beneficial services rendered, and the acknowledgment of them by the party benefited, together with a request by him for an account of what is due therefor, are sufficient to support assumpsit, although it appears that the services were, in the first instance, voluntary.—Hatch v. Purcell, 21 N. H. (1 Fost.) 544.

[x] (N. H. 1880) Where plaintiff performed certain services in nursing and caring for defendant's testate, held, that a promise to pay therefor might be inferred from the benefit received and other attendant circumstances.—Page v. Snell, 59 N. H. 531.

[xx] (N. Y. 1829) A promise to pay will be implied from an agreement of parties to abide by the decision of individuals named between them to appraise the value of certain work and services done and performed by one party for the other.—Efner v. Shaw, 2 Wend. 567.

[y] (N. Y. 1880) N., for 14 years preceding C.'s death, had charge of her business, and collected her interest and dividends, without asking or receiving compensation; but she often expressed gratitude therefor, and gave him articles of small value. Held, that there was an implied agreement on the part of C. to pay N. what his services were reasonably worth.—Burnett v. Noble, 5 Redf. Sur. 69.

[yy] (Or. 1896) As between strangers, where one performs services for the benefit and with the knowledge and tacit consent of another, under such circumstances as give the latter reason to believe that payment therefor is expected, a promise to pay a reasonable compensation will be implied.—Kiser v. Holladay, 29 Or. 338, 45 Pac. 759.

[z] (Pa. 1872) Where one who is not a relative and not an object of charity, but able to earn wages, is employed in the service of another for any period of time, the law implies a contract of hiring and a promise to pay.—Moreland Tp. v. Davidson Tp., 71 Pa. (21 P. F. Smith) 371.

[zz] (Tenn. 1849) It was in evidence that houses, part of the estate of a person deceased, were repaired by a carpenter, under the general superintendence of the widow of the deceased, during her occupancy thereof, which houses and real estate were subsequently assigned to her for dower; and upon presentment of such carpenter's bill to her for payment she neither disputed her liability therefor nor objected to the amount, but said "it would be paid when the administrator arrived." Upon verdict and judgment against her, held, that the jury might well have inferred an implied contract by her with the plaintiff for the work, and a promise to pay therefor, and that the judgment should be affirmed.—White v. Burton, 29 Tenn. (10 Humph.) 329.

§ 4. Implied request or promise to pay.

See post, § 8 [c, e].

Promise implied from relations of parties, see post, §§ 11–22.

—— to pay implied from acceptance of or assent to services, see ante, § 3.

[a] (Cal. 1890) In a suit to recover for work done on a public street upon an alleged parol contract, defendant, an abutting owner, testified that he never authorized the work. Held, that the fact that he saw the work going on upon the street without further protest raises no implied promise or liability to pay for it.—Nagle v. McMurray, 84 Cal. 539, 24 Pac. 107.

[b] (Cal. 1890) Nor can a promise be implied from the fact that defendant several times made suggestions to the workmen.—Nagle v. McMurray, 84 Cal. 539, 24 Pac. 107.

[c] (Ind. 1854) A precedent request, where work is done by one person for another, may be implied from circumstances, as where defendant completed plaintiff's canal under the direction of its engineer and his assurance that the work would be paid for, and the plaintiff accepted and is using the canal.—Trustees of Wabash & E. Canal v. Bledsoe, 5 Ind. 133.

[d] (Mo. 1853) In an action of assumpsit for services performed, a request on the part of defendant to plaintiff to perform the services must be shown.—Lynch v. Bogy, 19 Mo. 170.

[e] (Nev. 1865) Where an outgoing recorder received fees in advance for recording instruments, but the work of recordation was performed by his successor, the law raises an implied request by the former of the latter to perform the services, and an implied promise to pay him therefor.—Davis v. Thompson, 1 Nev. 17.

[f] (N. J. 1856) A law authorizing a city to do certain work upon failure of defendant to perform the same implies a request from him, sufficient to support assumpsit for the price of the work.—Treasurer of City of Camden v. Mulford, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 49.

[g] (N. Y. 1855) Where one person performs labor for another, the law presumes a request, and a promise to pay what such labor is reasonably worth, unless it is understood that it is to be performed gratuitously, or unless it is performed under circumstances which repel the presumption of a promise that compensation shall be made.—Lewis v. Trickey, 20 Barb. 387.

[h] (W. Va. 1882) For a service rendered the law ordinarily will imply a promise of reasonable compensation, in the absence of circumstances which should vary the rule.—Hurst's Adm'r v. Hite, 20 W. Va. 183.

§ 5. Effect of request or promise to pay.

Effect of promise to pay for work performed by mistake, see post, § 6 [h].

Performance of additional or extra work under contract, see post, § 28.

Persons liable, see post, § 38.

Promise as between relatives, see post, §§ 12, 13.

Sufficiency of consideration for promise to pay for services, see "Contracts," vol. 11, cc. 224–227, §§ 252, 253.

[a] (Del. 1891) One at whose instance another performs services is liable in assumpsit on an implied contract for their reasonable value.—Nichols v. Vinson, 9 Houst. 274, 32 Atl. 225.

[b] (Ill. 1894) An architect who gratuitously furnishes plans for the erection of a church, which are not satisfactory, can recover in an action for work and labor for plans subsequently furnished at the request of the church authorities, in the absence of any agreement that he was to do so without charge.—Central Park Presbyterian Church v. Hoskins, 50 Ill. App. 674.

[c] (Ind. 1883) One who promises to pay for work done on a drain by which he is benefited may be compelled to pay therefor, without regard to the question of whether the drain was legally established by the board of commissioners or not, where the promisee did the work on the faith of such promise.—Flora v. Cline, 89 Ind. 208.

[d] (Iowa, 1871) Where one performs services for another, at his request, without any agreement or understanding as to the pay, the law implies a promise to pay the reasonable value of the services, and the same may be recovered under a quantum meruit.—Rea v. Flathers, 31 Iowa, 545.

[e] (Ky. 1834) Where work is done at the request of another, the law will imply a promise to pay for the work whatever sum the laborer deserves to have, although no price was agreed on.—Coleman v. Simpson, 82 Ky. (2 Dana) 166.

[f] (La.) Where one renders services beneficial to another at his request, an implied contract is raised for remuneration.—(1839) Kenyon v. Berghel, 13 La. 133; (1867) Beall v. Van Bibber, 19 La. Ann. 434.

[g] (Mass. 1868) In an action on a general count with an account annexed, one mill owner may recover another's proportionate share of the cost of repairs of a reservoir dam owned in common, on his special promise to pay such share; it being for labor and materials.—Mullett v. Bemis, 100 Mass. 92.

[h] (Miss. 1873) Where the plaintiff in assumpsit proved that at the request of the defendant, though without any special contract for the amount of wages, he had been in defendant's employ for two years, the law raises an assumpsit upon the quantum meruit.—Jordan v. Foxworth, 48 Miss. 607.

[i] (Mo. 1860) Where one man at the request of another performs beneficial services for him, unless it is agreed, or it can be so inferred from the circumstances, that the services were to be rendered without compensation, the law, in the absence of any express contract, will imply a promise on the part of him for whom the services were rendered to pay for them what they are reasonably worth.—Dougherty v. Whitehead, 31 Mo. 255.

[j] (Mo. 1891) If a person requests another to perform work for him, without specifying the compensation, he is liable therefor on a quantum meruit.—Thomas v. Walnut Land & Coal Co., 43 Mo. App. 653.

[k] (N. Y. 1889) Where plaintiff sold a rocket gun to defendant, and attended a trial of the gun at the request of defendant, and there was no agreement that such service should be gratuitous, plaintiff was entitled to recover therefor.—Coston v. Morris, 51 Hun, 643, 4 N. Y. Supp. 89.

[l] (N. C. 1808) An action does not lie on a promise to pay for services which it was plaintiff's duty to perform without pay.—Sweany v. Hunter, 5 N. C. 181.

[m] (N. C. 1839) A subscription was raised for building a house for a religious society, and, on the letting of the building by certain commissioners, defendants, who were not shown to have any other concern with the transaction, declared that if, or when, the work was done according to certain specifications and accepted by the commissioners, they would pay the sum at which the building was bid off. Plaintiff became the contractor and performed the work, but it was rejected by the commissioners as failing to comply with the specifications. Held, that the plaintiff could not recover against the defendants for work and labor done, whatever might be their right to recover in equity in case the acceptance by the commissioners was rendered impossible by accident, or withheld through malice or fraud.—Young v. Jeffreys, 20 N. C. 357.

[n] (Pa. 1835) A father's request that a physician attend his son, then of full age, and sick at the father's house, raises no implied promise on the part of the father to pay for the services rendered.—Boyd v. Sappington, 4 Watts, 247.

[o] (Pa. 1873) Where a person performs services for another on his request, he may recover for them, no matter what his expectations were.—Thompson v. Stevens, 71 Pa. (21 P. F. Smith) 161.

§ 6. Effect of fraud, mistake, or compulsion.

[a] (Ind. 1859) One who has been convicted and sentenced to the state prison for an offense of which the court had no jurisdiction is entitled to recover from the lessee of the prison for services performed while in prison, as upon an implied contract for work and labor done.—Patterson v. Crawford, 12 Ind. 241.

[b] (Ind. 1862) Where a party has been imprisoned under a sentence of a court having no jurisdiction, he may, as to the keeper of the penitentiary who has received benefit from his labor during his confinement, maintain his suit in assumpsit; but not so in the case of parties to the confinement who have received no benefit from his labor, such as the warden.—Patterson v. Prior, 18 Ind. 440, 81 Am. Dec. 367.

[c] (Ky. 1882) Where work has been done under mutual mistake between the employer and employé, each supposing that there was a contract between them fixing the price, when in fact there was no such contract, the employé is entitled to recover what the work was reasonably worth.—Lanins v. Woods, 4 Ky. Law Rep. 865.

[d] (Mich. 1877) Plaintiff went upon the adjoining land of defendants by mistake as to boundaries, supposing he was on his own land, and cut and piled a quantity of cord wood, ready for market, which defendants afterwards took possession of and sold. Held, that plaintiff could not recover compensation for his labor; the identity of the trees not being destroyed nor their value greatly increased.—Isle Royal Min. Co. v. Hertin, 37 Mich. 332, 26 Am. Rep. 520.

[e] (Mo. 1891) A woman, born and raised a slave, was ignorant, unable to read, and for a series of years kept under strict surveillance, and in utter ignorance of her emancipation and right to her own labor, and taught to believe she was still the property of her old master, and continued to work for him, without intention to receive pay on her part, or to give on his part. Held, that her ignorance of her legal rights would not defeat her action for such work and labor brought after she learned of the fraudulent suppression, her right of action being founded on fraud, and not upon an implied contract.—Hickam v. Hickam, 46 Mo. App. 496.

[f] (N. Y. 1836) Where A., fraudulently representing himself to be the owner of land, induced B. to labor on it in expectation of becoming a joint owner, held that, on discovering the fraud, he might sue for and recover pay for his labor.—Rickard v. Stanton, 16 Wend. 25.

[g] (Or. 1886) A contractor having, by mistake, performed certain work upon a contract undertaken by another, cannot recover of the latter for the work performed unless he proves assent, either express or implied.—Rohr v. Baker, 13 Or. 350, 10 Pac. 627.

[h] (Or. 1892) Where defendant received the benefit of labor performed and materials furnished by plaintiff, and afterwards agreed to pay for the same, plaintiff may recover the value thereof, though performed by mistake, and without any request by defendant.—Forbis v. Inman, Paulson & Co., 23 Or. 68, 31 Pac. 204.

[i] (Pa. 1801) Where one does work for another by compulsion, whom he is under no legal or moral obligation to serve, the law raises a promise on the part of the person benefited to make him a reasonable recompense.—Peter v. Steel, 3 Yeates, 250.

§ 7. Services rendered under agreement with or direction of agent.

[a] (U. S. 1889) Where work is done under the direction of an agent, who has authority to direct its performance, it is immaterial whether he agrees to pay what it is reasonably worth, as the law will imply such a promise.—Henderson Bridge Co. v. McGrath, 134 U. S. 260, 10 Sup. Ct. 730, 33 L. Ed. 934.

[b] (Ill. 1870) Where plaintiff was employed by defendant's agent, and defendant, seeing him at work, notified him that he would not be employed longer than that day, but he returned on the following Monday, and performed some trivial services for the agent, and stayed about the premises during the day, he was not entitled to recover therefor.—Lake v. Newhoff, 56 Ill. 295.

[c] (Mass. 1814) If an owner of property employed some person to procure work to be done thereon, to whom the workmen engaged themselves and on whose credit they performed the work, the obligation to pay rests on the person to whom the credit was given.—James v. Bixby, 11 Mass. 34.

[d] (Mass. 1895) Where one of several subscribers to the purchase of a boat, to be owned by all in proportion to their subscriptions, at the request of the agents of the subscribers, superintends its construction and expends money therein, and afterwards it is agreed between him and the other subscribers that his interest in the boat shall cease, he can recover from the other subscribers at law for the value of his services and disbursements.—Nickerson v. Spindell, 164 Mass. 25, 41 N. E. 105.

§ 8. Consideration or purpose for which services were rendered.

Admissibility of evidence, see post, § 51.
Presumptions and burden of proof, see post, § 48.

[a] (Colo. 1882) Notwithstanding the general rule that the law implies a promise to pay for services rendered, if it clearly appears that the party rendering the service agreed to look to particular funds expected to be realized from certain undertakings, and not to the other party to the contract, he cannot enforce a personal liability.—Harkinson v. Dry Placer Amalgamating Co., 6 Colo. 269.

[b] (Mass. 1840) A. and B., tenants in common of land, sold the wood growing thereon, with the proviso that it should be taken from the land within two years. The purchaser of the wood transferred his right to C., who had no notice of the proviso as to the time of taking it away. C. cut the wood, but did not remove it within two years. Held, that C. could not recover of the tenants in common pay for cutting the wood, upon their refusal to allow it removed.—Kemble v. Dresser, 42 Mass. (1 Metc.) 271, 35 Am. Dec. 364.

[c] (Mass. 1868) There is no implied promise that an unsuccessful bidder, who enters proposals in accordance with the terms of an advertisement for constructing a town sewer, shall be paid for his time and trouble in making the proposals.—Palmer v. Inhabitants of Haverhill, 98 Mass. 487.

[d] (Mich. 1885) An architect who volunteers his services with the chances of future employment cannot recover for preliminary sketches, which are not accepted, on the basis of a percentage on the probable cost of the building.—Scott v. Maier, 56 Mich. 554, 23 N. W. 218, 56 Am. Rep. 402.

[e] (N. Y. 1885) An implied promise to pay for services will only be held to exist where it can be seen that the services were rendered under circumstances authorizing a reasonable expectation of payment, and such an implication will not arise in favor of a corporation against certain of its stockholders by reason of experiments made for its own benefit and with its own property by some of them in regard to patents used in branches of its business, in which patents such stockholders happened to be interested financially, even though the experiments were made at the suggestion of such stockholders.—Davidson v. Westchester Gaslight Co., 99 N. Y. 558, 2 N. E. 892.

§ 9. —— Gratuitous services.

Presumption from relations of parties that services are gratuitous, see post, §§ 11–22.
Consideration for promise to pay for past gratuitous services, see "Contracts," vol. 11, cc. 331, 332, § 372.

[a] Where services are rendered with the understanding that they are to be gratuitous, no implied contract to pay therefor can be raised.
—(Ark. 1878) Osier v. Hobbs, 33 Ark. 215;
(La. 1859) White v. Jones, 14 La. Ann. 681;
(Mo. 1865) Morris v. Barnes, 35 Mo. 412;
(N. J. 1861) Davison v. Davison, 13 N. J. Eq. (2 Beasl.) 246;
(S. C. 1797) James v. O'Driscoll, 2 Bay, 101, 1 Am. Dec. 632.

[b] Where two parties render services to one another, with no present design to make charges therefor, neither can recover for the value of the services so rendered.
—(Ill. 1883) Jared v. Vanvleet, 13 Ill. App. (13 Bradw.) 334;
(Wash. 1892) Gross v. Cadwell, 4 Wash. 670, 30 Pac. 1052.

[c] (U. S. 1884) When the circumstances clearly repel the idea that work or services performed for another with his consent were done with expectation of payment, no contract to pay will be implied.—Hughes v. Dundee Mortgage & Trust Inv. Co. (C. C.) 21 Fed. 169.

[d] (Ill. 1878) Where two persons understand that they are mutually rendering and receiving favors, with no present design to make any pecuniary charge therefor against each other, the relative value of their services is immaterial, and neither can recover against the other.—Dunlap v. Allen, 90 Ill. 108.

[e] (Ill. 1878) Where one, securing aid to induce the establishment of a foundry, went to an architect to solicit aid from him, and telling him that whatever was done by the citizens of the place was to be a voluntary contribution, got him to prepare plans for the proposed foundry, the latter could not recover of him for such work, without showing an express promise to pay therefor.—Dunton v. Chamberlain, 1 Ill. App. (1 Bradw.) 361.

[f] (La.) One who renders services through a long series of years to another, relying on his generosity, but without any view to compensation, cannot, if disappointed, recover wages.—(1812) Jacob v. Ursuline Nuns, 2 Mart. (O. S.) 268; (1835) Tilghman v. Lewis' Estate, 8 La. 105.

[g] (La. 1870) Services rendered a person during his last illness as nurse and housekeeper are not deemed gratuitous, but there is an implied contract to pay a reasonable compensation therefor.—Succession of Pereuilhet, 23 La. Ann. 294, 8 Am. Rep. 595.

[h] (La. 1871) A painter agreed as a matter of friendship, without charge on his part, to have the work of painting defendant's house done. On completion of the work he furnished defendant with a memorandum of the cost of the materials and the labor employed by him. Held, that the refusal of the defendant to pay the bill thus presented did not create an agreement or obligation to pay additional charges for the painter's services for supervision of the work he had undertaken gratuitously.—Ayland v. Rice, 23 La. Ann. 75.

[i] (Mich. 1886) The fact that services are rendered does not raise a liability on the part of the person for whom they are rendered, even though done at his request, if the circumstances are such as to repel the inference that compensation was intended; and when performed from kindly or charitable motives, the law will not imply a promise to pay for them.—Cicotte v. Church of St. Anne, 60 Mich. 552, 27 N. W. 682.

[j] (Mo. 1877) In order to raise an implied contract to pay for labor, an intention on the part of the laborer, during his service, to charge therefor, is not necessary, if there has been nothing to justify a belief on the part of the one for whom the labor has been done that it is gratuitous.—Hay v. Walker, 65 Mo. 17.

[k] (Mo. 1895) Plaintiff cannot recover for services which he rendered without any express contract, and without any intention to charge therefor.—Kerr v. Cusenbary, 60 Mo. App. 558, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 237.

[l] (N. Y. 1869) Where a person plays an organ for the church services in a village, such services will be presumed to have been gratuitous, and to authorize a recovery it must be clearly shown that there was an actual employment and a promise to pay therefor.—Van Buren v. Reformed Church of Gansevoort, 62 Barb. 495.

[m] (N. Y. 1879) Where parties having money transactions to a large amount are in the habit of rendering each other mutual services not intended to be brought into their accounts, no promise to pay for them will be implied. They will be regarded as matters of mutual gratuitous accommodation, although they may not be an equal set-off.—Potter v. Carpenter, 76 N. Y. 157.

[n] (Pa. 1858) A person rendering gratuitous services in the line of his legal duty does not thereby raise an implication that they are rendered at the request of the party benefited by them.—Accommodation Loan & Saving Fund Ass'n v. Stonemetz, 29 Pa. (5 Casey) 534.

[o] (Pa. 1875) Claims for services as a nurse of decedent will not be allowed, when there is no evidence of a contract, but it appears that the services rendered were performed because of the long acquaintance and mutual friendship of the parties.—In re Abercrombie's Estate, 32 Leg. Int. 58.

[p] (Pa. 1878) The claim against a decedent's estate for services will be rejected, where no demand was ever made for compensation for such services, and it appears to have been an afterthought of the plaintiff.—In re Clark's Estate, 35 Leg. Int. 421.

[q] (S. C. 1831) Board, intended as a gratuity when it was furnished, cannot afterwards be set up as a debt.—Schnell v. Schroder, Bailey, Eq. 334.

[r] (S. C. 1886) If one attorney renders services for another, there is an implied right to compensation, although such services are sometimes rendered gratuitously from courtesy.—Graydon v. Stokes, 24 S. C. 483.

§ 10. —— Expectation of legacy.

See post, §§ 12 [t], 30 [j].

Recovery for services on breach of contract to devise or bequeath, see "Wills," vol. 49, cc. 219–224, § 177.

[a] Where services are rendered merely in expectation of a legacy, without any contract, express or implied, but relying implicitly on the testator's generosity, an action for compensation of the services cannot be maintained against the executors.
—(Del. 1855) Kennard v. Whitson, 1 Houst. 36;
(Pa. 1791) Little v. Dawson, 4 Dall. 111, 1 L. Ed. 763.

[b] (D. C. 1889) The fact that the services performed by the plaintiff were in expectation of his receiving a legacy from the person benefited by them will not deprive him of the right to bring suit for such services against the estate of such person, failing the bequest.—Robeson v. Niles, 7 Mackey, 182.

[c] (Ky. 1869) Where a party performs services for another under the expectation of receiving a legacy, without any definite agreement as to the nature and amount of the legacy, no absolute obligation is thereby created.—Myles' Ex'rs v. Myles, 69 Ky. (6 Bush) 237.

[d] (N. J. 1855) No right of action accrues, after disappointment in receiving a legacy, for services rendered in expectation of the legacy; but equity will allow a reasonable compensation for the services, if satisfied that it is equitable under the circumstances.—Grandin v. Reading's Adm'r, 10 N. J. Eq. (2 Stockt.) 370.

[e] (N. J. 1861) For services rendered without any view to compensation, except the hope of a legacy or devise, no compensation can be recovered.—Davison v. Davison, 13 N. J. Eq. (2 Beasl.) 246.

[f] (N. Y. 1835) Where a party renders services for another in the hopes of a legacy and in sole reliance upon the testator's generosity, and the party for whom the services were rendered dies without making such provision, no action lies for the services.—Martin v. Wright's Adm'rs, 13 Wend. 460, 28 Am. Dec. 468.

[g] (N. Y. 1877) Where a person renders services in the expectation of receiving a legacy, without any contract that compensation shall be made therefor, and the person for whom the services are rendered dies without making any provision, no action will lie in favor of the person rendering the services.—Shakespeare v. Markham, 10 Hun, 311.

[h] (Pa. 1793) Although services may be rendered in expectation of a legacy, yet, if done at the request of the testator, an action of assumpsit may well be supported to recover a compensation.—Roberts v. Swift, 1 Yeates, 209, 1 Am. Dec. 295.

[i] (Pa. 1807) Where the person for whom the service was done promises to pay for it, an action may be supported, though the service was done in expectation of a legacy; and it is immaterial whether the promise was made before or after the service.—Snyder v. Castor's Adm'r, 4 Yeates, 353.

[j] (Pa. 1832) Where a son continued with his father after attaining his majority, without any contract to be paid for his services, but with a view to a provision by will, he cannot support a claim against his father's estate for compensation for his labor.—In re Walker's Estate, 3 Rawle, 243.

[k] (Pa. 1882) A nephew's claim for alleged services in working on decedent's farm will be disallowed, where there was no express contract made by the decedent for the employment of his nephew, and the services were not rendered with expectation of present payment, but in hope of being remembered in the future disposition of the estate.—In re Hunt's Estate, 39 Leg. Int. 12.

[l] (Pa. 1884) Where services are rendered gratuitously under the expectation of a legacy, there is no contract, and no recovery can be allowed.—In re Graulich's Estate, 31 Pittsb. Leg. J. 341.

[m] (Pa. 1885) Where a child seeks to recover for services rendered to a parent in her lifetime towards her support and maintenance in his family, it is not sufficient to prove that he expected to be remunerated by the will, or by mere gift in her lifetime.—Appeal of Wallace, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 403.

[a] When the relation of parties is such as to negative the idea that services were rendered in expectation of payment, compensation cannot be recovered.

—(N. Y. 1894) In re Cooper (Sur.) 6 Misc. Rep. 501, 27 N. Y. Supp. 425;

(Pa. 1859) Appeal of Hartman, 8 Grant, Cas. 271; (1875) Neal's Ex'rs v. Gilmore, 79 Pa. (29 P. F. Smith) 421; (1895) In re Heilman's Estate (Orph. Ct.) 4 Pa. Dist. R. 571.

[b] (N. Y. 1852) Where it appears, from the conduct, situation, and mutual relations of the parties, that the payment of wages was not intended nor expected, a promise to pay for work and labor will not be implied.—Maltby v. Harwood, 12 Barb. 473.

§ 11½. Relatives and persons in family relation in general.

Liability of decedent's estate, see "Executors and Administrators," vol. 22, cc. 1148–1154, § 733.

Persons in family relation, consideration for promissory note, see "Bills and Notes," vol. 7, cc. 269–273, § 166 [b, g, mm, ww].

[a] (Ill. 1891) The fact that a woman, on the death of her father, goes to live in the family of a relative, and there performs household duties for 16 years, without any payment or settlement for services, raises such a presumption that she lived there as a member of his family that she can only recover for services by showing an express or implied contract for wages.—Collar v. Patterson, 137 Ill. 403, 27 N. E. 604.

[b] (Ind. 1892) Where plaintiff, an orphan, was from the time she was 14 years of age until she married well taken care of by decedent, who, under contract with her guardian, received her into his family as a member thereof, and treated her as such, she was not entitled to pay for services while she so stayed with him.—Reeves' Estate v. Moore, 4 Ind. App. 492, 31 N. E. 44.

[c] (Iowa, 1876) A minor who resides, without paying board, in the family of persons not related to him, cannot recover for services rendered in the family without proof of an express promise to pay.—Smith v. Johnson, 45 Iowa, 308.

[d] (Iowa, 1887) In an action for labor performed, where the person rendering the service is a member of the family of the person served, and receives support therein as a child, a presumption arises that such services were gratuitous; and, before the person rendering such service can recover, the express promise of the party served must be shown, or such facts as will authorize the jury to find that the services were rendered in the expectation by one of receiving, and by the other of making, compensation therefor.—Cowan v. Musgrave, 73 Iowa, 384, 35 N. W. 496, following Scully v. Scully's Ex'r (1870) 28 Iowa, 548.

[e] (Iowa, 1896) Where a person rendering services is a member of the family of the person served, and is receiving support therein, before recovery can be had an expectation that compensation should be made must be shown.—Tank v. Rohweder, 98 Iowa, 154, 67 N. W. 106.

[f] (Kan. 1889) Plaintiff, a minor, resided with defendant as a son and one of the defendant's family from the time when he was 12 to the time when he was 19 years of age. He performed services for the defendant, and the defendant furnished food, clothing, lodging, schooling, expense money, etc., to plaintiff, and it was not understood that the plaintiff should receive any special compensation for his services, nor that defendant should receive any special compensation for anything furnished by him to plaintiff, nor that any account should be kept by either with respect to any of these things, and no account was in fact kept of the same. Held, that the plaintiff cannot recover compensation for services.—Wyley v. Bull, 41 Kan. 206, 20 Pac. 855.

[g] (La. 1835) A clerk cannot recover on a quantum meruit, when he has served under no contract, express or implied, but depended on the beneficence of his employer, who is his relative.—Tilghman v. Lewis' Estate, 8 La. 105.

[h] (Mich. 1879) Under an arrangement by C., O., and W. that they should live together, on C.'s land, as one family, putting in their property together, O. and W. to have the property when C. was done with it, W. cannot, on withdrawing from the arrangement, recover for services rendered or articles consumed while they were living together.—Coe v. Wager, 42 Mich. 49, 3 N. W. 248.

[i] (Mo. 1888) Services rendered by a member of a family, merely with a view to, or in expectation of, the generosity of the party for whom the services were rendered, will not support an implied assumpsit.—Woods v. Land, 30 Mo. App. 176.

[j] (Mo. 1888) Family membership in itself implies that services rendered in the family are gratuitous.—Koch v. Hebel, 32 Mo. App. 103.

[k] (N. J. 1860) The law implies no promise to pay for services rendered by members of a family to each other.—Updike v. Titus, 13 N. J. Eq. (2 Beasl.) 151.

[l] (N. Y. 1867) The law will not presume a promise to pay for services as between members of the same family living together as one household.—Wilcox v. Wilcox, 48 Barb. 327.

[m] (N. Y.) Compensation for work and labor performed by a minor taken into the defendant's family will not be allowed, where the evidence shows that the plaintiff lived with the testator, and was provided and cared for by him as a member of the family, without any idea of paying or receiving wages.—(1869) Shirley v. Vail, 3 Abb. Dec. 313, note; (1870) Id., 38 How. Prac. 406.

[n] (N. Y. 1871) A person cannot recover for services rendered, where he has lived with the one from whom the compensation is claimed as a member of his family, and has been brought up, provided for, and educated as such, and that relation has continued during all the time in which such services were rendered.—Shirley v. Bennett, 6 Lans. 512.

[o] (N. Y. 1876) Where members of the same family live together, an express bargain to pay wages must be clearly proved before such claim can be allowed.—Sullivan v. Sullivan, 6 Hun, 658.

[p] (N. Y. 1876) In the case of near relatives or members of the same family, the law regards services rendered as acts prompted by gratuitous kindness and affection.—Gallagher v. Vought, 8 Hun, 87.

[q] (N. Y. 1877) Where plaintiff frequently took the testatrix, who was boarding with his family, riding at her special request, for the benefit of her health, and it appeared that she intended to pay for the services, and directed by her will that the friends with whom she boarded be liberally paid for their services, plaintiff was entitled to receive a reasonable compensation for the services rendered.—Darling v. Halsey, 12 Hun, 90.

[r] (N. Y. 1889) While plaintiff was employed by defendant and others, as executors of a will, he performed for defendant individually, at his request, services of the same general nature as those he rendered the estate. The parties were related, but did not form one family. There was no evidence that the work was to be gratuitous. Held, that a verdict for plaintiff would not be disturbed.—Simonson v. Simonson, 53 Hun, 634, 6 N. Y. Supp. 130.

[s] (N. Y. 1893) Where persons live together as a family, and bear to each other a family relation, no promise to pay for services rendered by one to the other will be implied; and no action will lie unless the services were rendered at the request of the person receiving them under a promise to pay therefor, or under such circumstances as show that the party receiving them expected to pay and the other to receive pay therefor, or that the services were rendered with the understanding between the parties that compensation therefor would be made by will.—Marion v. Farnan, 68 Hun, 383, 22 N. Y. Supp. 946.

[t] (Pa.) Relationship, either by consanguinity or affinity, is a fact which tends to rebut the legal presumption of a promise to pay for personal services rendered, although, alone, it does not overcome that presumption, except in the case of parent and child.—(1862) Smith v. Milligan, 43 Pa. (7 Wright) 107; (1879) In re Hollowbush's Estate, 13 Phila. 217.

[u] (Pa. 1868) To warrant a recovery for services rendered a near relative, an express promise to pay therefor must be proved.—Neel's Adm'r v. Neel, 59 Pa. (9 P. F. Smith) 347.

[v] (Pa. 1868) One who resides with a relative, whether father, uncle, or even more remote, cannot recover for services rendered to such relative upon an implied promise to pay, such as would sustain an action between strangers. The services are presumed to have been rendered and received in consideration of the relationship.—Neel's Adm'r v. Neel, 59 Pa. (9 P. F. Smith) 347.

[w] (Pa. 1878) Where persons related by marriage live together as members of a family, there is no implied contract for wages.—In re Smith's Estate, 7 Lus. Leg. Reg. 219.

[x] (Pa. 1882) For services rendered between persons standing in family relations to each other, recovery may be had on a quantum meruit only upon proof of an actual promise to pay; but such promise may be general, specifying neither time, place, nor amount.—Appeal of Prizer, 3 Walk. 487.

[y] (Pa. 1883) The relationship between a guardian and a ward, which is so remote that the accountant is unable to define it, does not raise the presumption that the services for which compensation was claimed were voluntary.—In re Quinn's Estate, 40 Leg. Int. 120.

[yy] (Pa. 1886) Where the parties occupy toward each other a family relation, this will rebut the presumption of a contract and promise to pay for services rendered. Mere consanguinity, in the absence of a family relation, is insufficient to rebut the presumption.—Appeal of Moyer, 112 Pa. 290, 3 Atl. 811.

[z] (Pa. 1886) When the party rendering and the one accepting services are parent and child, or members of the same family, the relationship excludes the implication of a promise to pay therefor. Except in cases of parent and child, there must be evidence beyond the relationship that the creation of no debt was intended.—Curry v. Curry, 114 Pa. 367, 7 Atl. 61.

[zz] (Wis. 1888) It appeared that plaintiff, when a young girl, had entered defendant's home as a hired servant for a fixed period, and that for years after the termination of that period she remained in his family, and performed heavy work in the house and in the field without other compensation than board and clothing. Held, that the law will imply a promise by defendant to pay what her services were reasonably worth, in the absence of an express agreement that they were to be rendered in return for a home and support only.—McMillan v. Page, 71 Wis. 655, 38 N. W. 173.

Effect of request or promise to pay in general, see ante, § 5.

Implied request or promise to pay in general, see ante, § 4.

Promise or expectation of legacy, see ante, § 10.

[a] (Cal. 1873) Where a son remains with and performs services for his father after attaining his majority, and the circumstances show that it was the expectation of both parties that the son should receive compensation, he may recover for such services.—Friermuth v. Friermuth, 46 Cal. 42.

[b] (Ill. 1887) Where a father, by request, had acted as clerk for his son during several years, and was supported out of the earnings of the business, and there was a mutual understanding, though no express contract, that he was to be so supported until his death, he was entitled to recover upon quantum meruit against his son's estate for the time he had been so employed.—Killpatrick v. Helston, 25 Ill. App. 127.

[c] (Iowa, 1888) A mother and son lived with her other sons, who were farming in partnership, receiving their board, clothes, and spending money; the mother keeping house, and the son working on the farm. It was understood that they were to receive something besides, though there was no express contract. Held, that they were entitled to a fair compensation.—Magarrell v. Magarrell, 74 Iowa, 378, 37 N. W. 961.

[d] (Iowa, 1894) In an action by a son to establish a claim against his father's estate, it appeared that, for eight years prior to his death, deceased was afflicted with cancer, and during the last two years required constant care; that plaintiff had ceased to be a member of the family, but about the time his father's trouble began he returned, and, with his boy, lived with his parents, who were then unable to care for themselves; that he rented the farm, and paid the rent to his father; that his mother died two years before his father; and that thereafter he personally gave to his father the constant attention which he required. Held, that a finding that the services of plaintiff were rendered with the expectation of deceased and plaintiff that the latter should receive compensation therefor was authorized.—Marietta v. Marietta, 90 Iowa, 201, 57 N. W. 708.

[e] (Iowa, 1895) One suing for the value of services while a minor, and living with defendant, is entitled to recover on overcoming the presumption that his services were gratuitous by evidence that it was the understanding of the parties that compensation should be paid.—Resso v. Lehan, 96 Iowa, 45, 64 N. W. 689.

[f] (Mich. 1883) A son who, at the request of his father, works a farm, and cares for his father and mother, under a promise that he shall be paid for his services, and shall have the farm at the father's death, may recover from his father's estate the value of such services, if his father makes no disposition of the farm whereby it becomes the property of the son.—Dickerson v. Dickerson, 50 Mich. 37, 14 N. W. 691.

[g] (Mo. 1888) Though family membership implies that services rendered in the family are gratuitous, a promise to pay may be implied from any facts and circumstances which in their nature justify the inference of an actual contract of hiring or an actual understanding between the parties to that effect.—Koch v. Hebel, 32 Mo. App. 103.

[h] (Mo. 1893) An agreement for compensation for services rendered by plaintiff while a member of defendant's household cannot be implied from evidence of plaintiff that, outside of having a home, she relied only on defendant's promise to give her 40 acres of land if she married to suit him.—Bittrick v. Gilmore, 53 Mo. App. 53.

[i] (N. Y. 1876) The rule that a promise will not be implied to pay for board or services rendered by members of the same family does not apply, where the understanding on both sides was that compensation should be made therefor. —Van Schoyck v. Backus, 9 Hun, 68.

[j] (Or. 1871) Where a son, on coming of age, remains with his father and works for him as an ordinary laborer, under a parol agreement that he shall receive land for his pay, and he does not receive such land, he is entitled to recover the reasonable value of his labor.—Albee v. Albee, 3 Or. 321.

[k] (Or. 1880) Plaintiff, a cousin of defendant, entered his services as a member of his family with the understanding that she was not to have pay for her services; but subsequently she expressed dissatisfaction that she was not receiving pay for her services, and defendant stated to her that he would pay her for the work. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to recover the reasonable value of her services thereafter rendered, notwithstanding the agreement under which the services were originally begun. —Bennett v. Stephens, 8 Or. 444.

[l] (Pa. 1793) Where a son works for his father on an express promise that he shall be put on a footing with the other children, he may recover the value of his services to that extent.—Conrad v. Conrad, 4 Dall. 130, 1 L. Ed. 771.

[m] (Pa. 1868) A parol promise by an uncle to pay his nephew wages is sufficient, in an action of assumpsit.—Neel's Adm'r v. Neel, 59 Pa. (9 P. F. Smith) 347.

[n] (Pa. 1877) Where a sister accepted the services of her brother, and promised to compensate him, an allowance of his claim against her estate will not be disturbed.—In re Mayfield's Estate, 4 Wkly. Notes Cas. 154.

[o] (Pa. 1882) Recovery may be had on a quantum meruit for services rendered between parties standing in a family relation, when the party receiving them promises generally to pay for them.—Appeal of Prizer, 3 Walk. 487.

[p] (Pa. 1888) Decedent lived with her married sister until her death, and was nursed and cared for during her illness. She stated to her sister and her husband at different times that she had no money then, but they would be paid for the work. The decedent had stated to others, but not in her sister's presence, that she expected what she left would go to her sister. Held, that such sister could recover on a quantum meruit for her services.—Appeal of Lindsey, 15 Atl. 434, 1 Monag. 411.

[q] (S. C. 1839) Whether a son, who continues to labor with his father after becoming of age, with the expectation that a provision for his reward will be voluntarily made by his father, can claim a compensation for his services, upon the failure of his father to make such provision—quære.—Rainsford v. Rainsford, Rice, Eq. 343.

[r] (W. Va. 1896) Where a minor, residing with a near relative other than her parents, is led to believe by the conduct and conversations of such relative that she is to receive compensation for her future services rendered in promotion of his business, in some form, and, in expectation of such compensation, she faithfully performs such services, and he afterwards discharges her without compensating her in the manner in which he led her to believe he would do, she is entitled to recover the actual value of such services, in assumpsit, though such relative testifies that such promises were made in jest, and he had no intention of recompensing her for her services, but was only acting towards her in loco parentis.—Plate v. Durst, 42 W. Va. 63, 24 S. E. 580, 32 L. R. A. 404.

[s] (Wis. 1876) One who, having been received in infancy into a family not of kin to her, seeks to recover for services rendered to such family, has the burden of proof to show either an express contract or surrounding circumstances from which a contract can be implied; and, if it appears that she was received as a child, she must prove an express contract for wages. The mere expectation on the one part to pay, and on the other part to receive, wages, never expressed by the parties to each other, does not constitute an express contract, though, if established by competent evidence, such expectations of the parties may sometimes give color to circumstances tending to show that they entered into an express contract.—Tyler v. Burrington, 39 Wis. 376.

[t] (Wis. 1894) Claimant, a nephew of deceased, at her request, came over from Germany, and for nine years, and until her death, lived with her, and took care of her and her property, under a parol agreement that at her death she would leave him all her property. Claimant was at the time 21 years of age, and deceased had never occupied any quasi parental relation towards him. He testified that he expected to be paid for his services, and declarations of decedent showed that she expected to pay for them by leaving claimant all her property. Held that the presumption, if there was one, growing out of the relation of the parties, that no compensation was intended, was rebutted.—In re Kessler's Estate, 87 Wis. 660, 59 N. W. 129, 41 Am. St. Rep. 74.

§ 13. —— Declarations and statements as evidence of promise.

See post, §§ 17 [ll], 55 [uu].

[a] (Ga. 1893) Mere general expressions by a father that his son had waited on him well, and that he wanted him to be well compensated for it, are not sufficient evidence of a contract, either express or implied, to pay for the services.—O'Kelly v. Faulkner, 92 Ga. 521, 17 S. E. 847.

[b] (Ky. 1892) The mere fact that a parent told his child that she should be well paid for her services rendered the family after she became of age, does not entitle her to recover therefor.—Reynolds' Adm'rs v. Reynolds, 92 Ky. 556, 18 S. W. 517.

[c] (Mass. 1882) On an issue as to whether services of a son-in-law were rendered gratuitously, evidence that the parties lived together on the father-in-law's land, that the father-in-law had said that he expected to continue to live there, that the land was to be his daughter's when he died, and that he intended to pay his way, held sufficient to justify a verdict for the son-in-law.—James v. Cummings, 132 Mass. 78.

[d] (Mich. 1889) That the wife stated, in the presence of her husband, that a stepdaughter of her husband should be paid for her work, will not bind him, by his acquiescence, unless he knew that she continued her service in reliance upon it.—Harris v. Smith, 79 Mich. 54, 44 N. W. 169, 6 L. R. A. 702.

[e] (Mo. 1867) In an action by a child to recover compensation for services rendered his parents, the declarations of the parents in reference to the value and importance of the services are competent evidence to go to the jury. —Hart v. Hess, 41 Mo. 441.

[f] (Mo. 1888) A claim by a son against the estate of his father for seven years' wages for work done on the latter's farm cannot be sustained when the evidence of a contract offered by the claimant consists almost wholly of declarations by decedent, made after the termination of the services, to the effect that he intended to give claimant certain land for staying with and taking care of him, and that he intended to give him something for his services, and where it also appears that, though the services ceased three years before the father's death, no payment was made or settlement demanded. —Woods v. Land, 30 Mo. App. 176.

[g] (Mo. 1893) The services of a daughter living with her father for many years after her majority are presumed to be gratuitous, and loose declarations of affection or gratitude, and the expression of an intention by the father to leave the farm on which he resides to her, will not bind his estate for such services, unless there was an understanding that the daughter was to be paid for her services.—Louder v. Hart, 52 Mo. App. 377.

[h] (N. J. 1850) Where a daughter, who was of age, remained in her father's family as housekeeper for four years after her mother's death, and her father, after the daughter's marriage, said to third persons that "she had never been paid," and that "he meant to give her an outfit," but there was no evidence of a special contract before or during the service, or of a promise to the daughter after the service, it was held that, in the absence of all proof of a contract, it was to be presumed that the daughter had remained an unemancipated child, and therefore not entitled to wages, and that the declarations of the father, as they referred to no precedent debt, nor period of service, did not amount to a promise to pay on an implied contract.—Ridgway v. English's Ex'rs, 22 N. J. Law (2 Zab.) 409.

[i] (N. Y. 1874) Where defendant's intestate, who was plaintiff's brother, came to plaintiff's house, and, being sick, was cared for until he died, and during his illness he spoke warmly of the plaintiff's care and of paying her for it, the plaintiff was entitled to recover for her services, without proving an express promise to pay.—Woodward v. Bugsbee, 2 Hun, 128.

[j] (N. Y. 1877) Defendant's testatrix sent for her daughter, who had a family of her own, to come and care for her. Plaintiff accordingly left her home and took care of decedent for nearly four years, during which time decedent frequently stated that plaintiff should be well rewarded therefor. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to recover for her services, as it was not an ordinary case of services rendered by a member of a family to another.—Markey v. Brewster, 10 Hun, 16, 70 N. Y. 607.

[k] (N. Y. 1893) In an action by an adult child for services rendered to her deceased mother, declarations by the mother showing an intention to compensate plaintiff for such services at her death, followed by a will, subsequently revoked, devising to plaintiff one-third of the property, warrant the submission to the jury of the question whether or not there was an understanding between the parties that plaintiff should be compensated for her services by will or otherwise.—Marion v. Farnan, 68 Hun, 383, 22 N. Y. Supp. 946.

[l] (N. Y. 1894) The presumption that services rendered by a daughter to her father were gratuitous is not overcome by proof of declarations by the father that claimant "ought to be paid," and that "she should be paid for what she did for him."—In re Dusenberry (Sur.) 10 Misc. Rep. 633, 32 N. Y. Supp. 820.

[m] (Ohio, 1889) Where a stepdaughter lives with her stepfather as a member of his family, and renders services for him, statements made by him to a third person, but not communicated to her, that she should be well paid and provided for in his will, are insufficient to support an inference that her services were rendered with the expectation of being paid therefor.—Hawthorne v. McClure, 2 O. C. D. 390.

[n] (Pa. 1864) In an action by a daughter to recover from her father's estate for services rendered after she became of age, declarations of the testator that his daughter should be paid for what she had worked over age are not sufficient evidence of a contract, such as will enable her to recover.—Leidig v. Coover's Ex'rs, 47 Pa. (11 Wright) 534.

[o] (Pa. 1879) Where a son seeks to recover of his father's estate for his services in nursing decedent, evidence that the decedent requested the son to be sent for, and had remarked that he should be paid for his labor, without any evidence as to the time, and price to be paid, is insufficient to show a contract by the decedent to pay for the services.—In re Hollowbush's Estate, 36 Leg. Int. 149.

[p] (Pa. 1879) Where there is no evidence of an express contract between the decedent and his son for the payment of wages, and nothing but the declarations of the decedent that he intended in the future to compensate his son by an appropriation at his death, the claim by the son for wages cannot be allowed.—In re Hess' Estate, 36 Leg. Int. 451.

[q] (Pa. 1894) A father's declaration of appreciation of the housekeeping services of his daughter, who, with her children, lived with him up to the time of his second marriage, and of an intention that she should be paid after his death, in answer to a neighbor's suggestion that he should pay her wages, are not evidence of an express contract, such as to support a claim against his estate, when said daughter has successfully objected to production of his will to show what provision he made for her.—Murphy v. Corrigan, 161 Pa. 59, 28 Atl. 947, 34 Wkly. Notes Cas. 233.

[r] (S. C. 1891) On a trial to recover for services rendered for defendant's decedent by his daughter, two witnesses testified that they had heard the father say the daughter ought to be paid for her services. Another testified that she had heard him say that she ought to have "extra pay for her services to him." Held insufficient to create a legal obligation, as in such cases the presumption is that the services were gratuitous, which must be overcome by proof of an express agreement to pay.—Kirkpatrick v. Gallagher, 34 S. C. 255, 13 S. E. 450.

§ 14. Particular relations and services.

[a] (Ill. 1893) Where the president of a corporation has general control of its business and affairs, he cannot recover upon an implied contract for services rendered.—Barry v. Coffeen Coal & Copper Co., 52 Ill. App. 183.

[b] (Ky. 1892) In an action against an executor to recover for attention to testator during his illness, the plaintiff and the testator being neighbors, the former is not entitled to recover, where the circumstances, instead of being such as to imply a promise to pay for the services, wholly negatived that presumption.—Davis v. Wilson's Ex'x, 14 Ky. Law Rep. 301.

[c] (Mich. 1875) No promise to pay for services will be implied where the circumstances not only fail to indicate that they were rendered or received for compensation, but clearly repel the idea that payment was to be made or asked for; and the allowance of a claim for services as sexton of one who at the time was vestryman and some of the time a senior warden and treasurer of the society, where the evidence clearly showed that the performance of the duty was voluntary, and that it was supposed on both sides that his service was something he was spontaneously giving, from a desire to promote a cause he had at heart, and not with any intent to get money, is erroneous.—St. Jude's Church v. Van Denberg, 31 Mich. 287.

[d] (N. Y. 1848) Where the plaintiff was bound as an apprentice until his majority, and the indentures were assigned to defendant with the assent of the apprentice, who went to live with the defendant and continued to reside with him until his majority, he could not recover under the common counts for work and labor on an implied assumpsit of defendant to pay him therefor.—Williams v. Finch, 2 Barb. 208.

[e] (N. Y. 1852) Where a minor, indentured as an apprentice, serves his master until it is discovered that the indentures are void, and the apprentice is discharged, the master is not liable under any implied promise to make compensation for the services so rendered.—Maltby v. Harwood, 12 Barb. 473.

[f] (N. Y. 1890) A servant cannot recover against his master's brother for services rendered the latter while staying at his master's house, where he was employed to serve the master's family generally, and the services were trivial, and there is only vague evidence that the brother promised to pay therefor.—Reynolds v. Roosevelt, 55 Hun, 610, 8 N. Y. Supp. 749.

[g] (Pa. 1831) A child of a person, who was a registered servant, and claimed as such, and sold for a full price, cannot, after he has been discharged from servitude, recover, in assumpsit on a quantum meruit, from the person who received his services, compensation for his services.—Urie v. Johnston, 3 Pen. & W. 212.

[h] (Pa. 1878) At the age of 5, A. was indentured to B., with whom she remained as a servant for 34 years, when B. died. A. received no compensation for her services, except food, shelter, and clothing. At one time B. promised to put $3 per week away for her. B. left her legacy of $100. Held, that A. could not recover the value of her services for 6 years prior to B.'s death.—In re Cousty's Estate, 12 Phila. 98.

[i] (Pa. 1884) Where a neighbor renders services to another, greater than are ordinarily rendered, but makes no demand for compensation until three years after they terminated, the presumption is that they were gratuitous.—In re Graulich's Estate, 31 Pittsb. Leg. J. 341.

[j] (Pa. 1886) An apprenticed servant, remaining in the employ of her master after the term of apprenticeship has passed, does not sustain such a family relationship toward him as will rebut the presumption of a promise to pay for services rendered.—In re Ennis' Estate, 2 Del. Co. R. 498.

[k] (R. I. 1886) Plaintiff, while a minor in the reform school, was taken by defendant as an apprentice, under an invalid agreement of apprenticeship, and remained several years in defendant's service, when he absconded, was rearrested, recommitted to the reform school, and at his own request remitted to defendant's service. Sentences to the reform school were limited by law to minority. Held, that plaintiff could not recover for services rendered after he had reached his majority if he continued to work for defendant after arriving at 21 years of age without a specific contract, or without notice to defendant that he should expect wages.—Burrows v. Ward, 15 R. I. 346, 5 Atl. 500.

§ 15. Relatives and services in general.

Expectation of legacy, see ante, § 10.

Promise or expectation of remuneration, see ante, §§ 12, 13.

[a] (Ill. 1871) In an action to recover for work and labor, it appeared that the plaintiff was the sister-in-law of the defendant, and that she made her home at his house. Held, that if plaintiff did not intend to charge for the services rendered by her in the family, but regarded them as a donation or a payment for her living at the defendant's house, she could not recover.—Broughton v. Smart, 59 Ill. 440.

[b] (Kan. 1883) A. became old and infirm, and his step-granddaughter and her husband came to live with him, under an arrangement not disclosed, but not as members of his family. Thereafter, until his death, she cared for and waited on him exclusively. After his death she presented a claim for services under an implied contract. Held, that she was entitled to recover.—Ensey v. Hines, 30 Kan. 704, 2 Pac. 861.

[c] (N. Y. 1873) Where a relative of plaintiff's wife died suddenly in the street, and plaintiff made a search for the remains, and took them from the custody of the public authorities, and held the funeral ceremonies at his own house, he was not entitled to recover from the executor for services rendered in making the search, and in writing advertisements for the funeral, and in procuring a clergyman to officiate, but such services must be deemed to have been rendered gratuitously.—Hewett v. Bronson, 5 Daly, 1.

[d] (N. Y. 1876) Where plaintiff's mother and the defendant's wife were cousins, their relation was not such as would prevent the law from implying an agreement to pay for services rendered by the plaintiff for the defendant.—Gallaher v. Vought, 8 Hun, 87.

[e] (Pa. 1868) Where decedent was in a sick and helpless condition during the time he remained at his brother's house, his estate was liable to the claim of his brother's wife for services in caring for him during his sickness.—In re Russell's Estate, 7 Phila. 64.

[f] (Pa. 1873) The relationship of a sister-in-law to a decedent does not raise any presumption against her claim for services as housekeeper.—In re McCarty's Estate, 9 Phila. 318.

[g] (Pa. 1876) The relationship of first cousins is not such as of itself to rebut the presumption of an implied contract arising from services rendered and accepted.—Neal's Ex'rs v. Gilmore, 79 Pa. (29 P. F. Smith) 421.

[h] (Pa. 1888) The relationship of a grandnephew to a decedent is not such a relationship as will rebut the presumption of a promise to pay for services rendered the decedent.—In re Michael's Estate, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 321.

§ 16. Grandparent and grandchild.

[a] (Ill. 1892) Evidence that plaintiff, defendant's wife's grandmother, who had filled the place of said wife's mother, came to live in the family at her request, sewed, washed, nursed, cared for the children, did housework, and moved from place to place with the family for 10 years, without any talk of debt between them, except money advanced by her on defendant's notes, sufficiently shows that she was regarded as a member of the family, not entitled to wages.—Teeter v. Poe, 48 Ill. App. 158.

[b] (N. Y. 1886) Where a granddaughter leaves her husband to keep house for her grandfather, and performs domestic services for him, she does not form one of the family, but is entitled to compensation for services rendered.—In re Wells, 4 N. Y. St. Rep. 878.

[c] (N. C. 1876) Relationship of granddaughter and grandfather does not of itself rebut the implication of his obligation to pay her what her services rendered to him in his household, where she resides, are fairly worth.—Hauser v. Sain, 74 N. C. 552.

[d] (N. C. 1887) Where a grandfather takes his granddaughter into his family, and treats her in all respects as one of his own children, a presumption arises against a promise on the part of the grandfather to pay the grandchild for services performed.—Dodson v. McAdams, 96 N. C. 149, 2 S. E. 453, 60 Am. Rep. 408.

[e] (N. C. 1887) A refusal to instruct the jury that if a granddaughter was simply a member of her grandfather's family, and so treated, she could not recover for work performed, where there was no agreement for pay, is error.—Dodson v. McAdams, 96 N. C. 149, 2 S. E. 453, 60 Am. Rep. 408.

[f] (Pa. 1853) Where a female ward lives with her grandfather, receiving her board and clothing and performing services as a domestic, there is no implied contract on which she can recover wages for her services, and the presumption is that she has received all that her services were worth.—Appeal of Grove, 10 Leg. Int. 46.

[g] (Pa. 1865) A granddaughter cannot recover wages for service against her grandfather, in whose family she has lived in that relation, in the absence of an express contract.—Butler v. Slam, 50 Pa. (14 Wright) 456.

[h] (Pa. 1884) Where a child lives with her grandfather as a member of the family, there is no implied promise that anything was to be paid for labor, unless a previous contract was shown.—In re Tubb's Estate, 3 Kulp, 418.

[i] (Pa. 1886) Decedent and his wife were aged, respectively, 85 and 75 years, and required considerable care and attention. Their children could not spare the time necessary for their comfort, and held consultations among themselves respecting the feasibility of employing some suitable person to take care of them. They finally came to the conclusion that they could themselves attend to their wants during the daytime, and that the grandson of decedent should remain with them during the nights. This understanding was carried out for four years. Held, that the children had not such authority to make this arrangement as would give the grandson a claim against decedent's estate, there being no evidence of a contract, either express or implied, between decedent and his grandson, and none could arise out of his acceptance of the services.—Appeal of Moyer, 112 Pa. 290, 3 Atl. 811.

[j] (Pa. 1889) Testator's granddaughter lived with him, at his request, for nine years before his death, making her home with him, and keeping his house. He maintained her, but there was no evidence that there was any express agreement as to compensation for her services, or that he ever paid her any wages. Held, that the granddaughter was not entitled to compensation for her household services, or for services in assisting testator about his accounts and papers, though there was evidence that testator had said that she was useful to him, and should be paid for her services, and testator's executor, who was the granddaughter's father, having paid her claim, was properly surcharged therewith.—Appeal of Barhite, 126 Pa. 404, 17 Atl. 617, 24 Wkly. Notes Cas. 64.

[k] (Vt. 1855) A granddaughter living, rather as a daughter than as a servant, with her grandfather, who supported her, and for whom she worked, must show satisfactorily, in order to recover for her services, that it was the expectation of both parties that the services created a debt.—Davis v. Goodenow, 27 Vt. (1 Williams) 715.

§ 17. Parent and child.

See ante, § 11½ [v, z].

Liability of father for services of physician attending adult son at father's request, see ante, § 5 [n].

Promise or expectation of remuneration, see ante, §§ 12, 13.

Services of daughter and son-in-law, see post, § 18.

Rights of persons in loco parentis as to services and earnings of child, see "Parent and Child," vol. 37, cc. 2258, 2259, § 162.

Services of child in general, see "Parent and Child," vol. 37, cc. 2167–2176, §§ 70–76.

[a] When a child renders service to a parent after the child is of age, but while he is a member of the parent's family, and no arrangement or agreement has been made as to payment for such services, and no circumstances are shown from which such understanding can be fairly inferred, the child cannot recover compensation for such services.
